

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2007 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

The Academy,

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE AND LIFE.

---

JANUARY-JUNE.

1900.

---

49882
1901

VOLUME LVIII.

PUBLISHING OFFICE: 43, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON, W.C.

1900.

LONDON :

PRINTED BY ALEXANDER AND SHEPHEARD, LTD.,
LONSDALE BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME LVIII.

LITERATURE.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Abbott's (Dr. Evelyn) History of Greece ...	388
Aberdeen's (Countess of) edition of The International Congress of Women ...	403
Affleck's (William) translation of Godet's Introduction to the New Testament ...	79
Alderson's (Lieut.-Col.) Pink and Scarlet ...	498
Alexander's (Dr. P. Y.) Darwin and Darwinism ...	289
Arbuthnot's (F. P.) The Mysteries of Chronology ...	184
Archer's (William) America To-day ...	200
translation of Ibsen's Wheal We Deaf Awaken ...	307
Arnold-Foster's (H. O.) Our Great City; or, London, the Heart of the Empire ...	512
Arnold's (Thomas) Passages in a Wandering Life ...	251
Ashe's (E. Oliver) Besieged by the Boers ...	384
Atkins's (J. B.) The Relief of Ladysmith ...	384
Baden-Powell's (Lt. Col. B. S. S.) Aids to Scouting ...	127
Bailey's (J. C.) edition of English Elegies ...	8
Maille-Grohman's (Mr.) Sport and Life ...	185
Barb's (Louis A.) edition of Verne's Le Tour du Monde en Quatre-vingt Jours ...	16
Baring-Gould's (S.) In a Quiet Village ...	447
Barnes's (Dr. W. E.) The Cambridge Bible for Schools: Chronicles ...	56
Barr's (Robert) The Unchanging East ...	312
Bartholomew's (J. G.) edition of The Royal Atlas of England and Wales ...	511
Beeching's (Rev. H. C.) edition of The Poetical Works of John Milton ...	332
Belloe's (Hilaire) Paris ...	549
Bennett's (Richard) Two Million Civilian Soldiers of the Queen ...	163
Bent's (Theodore and Mrs.) Southern Arabia ...	290
Bentley's (Rev. W. Holman) Pioneering on the Congo ...	428
Bey's (A. F. Ingloft) Dictionary of English Homonyms ...	31
Bindloss's (Harold) A Wide Dominion ...	106
Birtrell's (Angustine) Collected Essays ...	149
Bishop's (Mrs. I. B.) The Yangtze Valley and Beyond ...	30
Black's (William) Narrative of Crimes in the Mediterranean ...	385
Black's Guide to London and its Environs ...	512
Blind, Mathilde, The Poetical Works of ...	473
Blunt's (Reginald) Historical Handbook to the Parish of Chelsea ...	529
Boer War, The History of the ...	201, 384
Borrow's (George) Lancashire ...	287
Bovill's (Rev. John H.) Natives under the Transvaal Flag ...	140
Boyd's (Mary Stuart) Our Stolen Summer ...	468
Brinton's (Selwyn) Corraggio ...	388
Brown's (Dr. John) Puritan Preaching in England ...	204
(Harold) War with the Boers ...	268
Brub's (Lucien Levy) Modern Philosophy in France ...	289
Brunker's (Lieut.-Col. H. M. E.) Boer War, 1899-1900 ...	140
Burger's (Gottfried August) Lenore ...	604
Burleigh's (Bennet) The Natal Campaign ...	288
Burton's (Lady Isabel) The Passion Play ...	288
(Sir Richard F.) The Kasidah of Hoyt Abd Al-Yazidi ...	485
Bury's (J. E.) edition of Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire ...	483
Butler's (Samuel) Shakespeare's Sonnets ...	13
(Howard Crosby) Scotland's Ruined Abbeys ...	272
Caddick's (Helen) A White Woman in Central Africa ...	144
Cand's (John) The Fundamental Ideas of Christianity ...	121
Callow's (E.) From King Ory to Queen Victoria ...	121
(Old London Taverns) ...	193
Campbell's (Dr. Colin) The First Three Gospels in Greek ...	79

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Carlyle's (R. M. and A. J.) Hugh Latimer ...	122
Carpenter's (J. E.) edition of Soldier Songs ...	313
(Edward) The Story of Eros and Psyche from Apuleius, and the First Book of the Iliad of Homer ...	530
Cassell's Guide to London ...	512
Castiglione's (Count Baldassare) The Book of the Courtier ...	182
"Chambers's (Stracey)" The Rhodesians ...	532
Charles's (Dr. R. H.) Critical History of a Future Life in Israel Judaism and in Christianity ...	248
Christian's (F. W.) The Caroline Islands ...	355
Churchill's (Winston Spencer) London to Ladysmith, via Pretoria ...	484
Clark's (Willis) Old Friends at Cambridge ...	164
Clodd's (ward) Grant Allen ...	547
Cobbold's (J. H. P.) Innermost Asia ...	182
Coleridge's (Ernest Hartley) edition of Byron's Poetry ...	548
Collingwood's (W. G.) The Life of John Ruskin ...	388
Collet's (Collet Dobson) Taxes on Knowledge ...	309
Conybeare's (Edward) Alfred and the Chroniclers ...	252
Counsell's (F. Norrey) How Soldiers Fight ...	12
Constantinople, Brda, and the Troad, Handbook for Travellers in ...	529
Conway's (Moncure D.) Solomon and Solomonic Literature ...	270
Cooke's (C. Kinloch) Memoir of Princess Mary Adelaide, Duchess of Teck ...	142
Cook's Historical and Literary Map of London ...	511
Coolidge's (W. A. B.) edition of Forbes's Travels Through the Alps ...	529
Cornish's (F. Warre) Sunningwell ...	310
Corson's (Hiram) An Introduction to John Milton ...	83
Cowper, The Letters of ...	349
Crump's (G. G.) edition of The History of the Life of Thomas Eakwood ...	161
Cuthbertson's (W.) By Shore and Wood ...	159
Cuvillier-Fleury's (J.) In Orleans Diary ...	489
Dale's (T. F.) Riding, Driving, and Kindred Sports ...	145
D'Annunzio's (Gabriele) The Dead City ...	464
D'Arey's (Rev. Charles F.) Idealism and Theology ...	79
Deamer's (Percy) Highways and Byways in Normandy ...	427
De Balzac's (Honore) Letters to Madame Honore de Balzac ...	423
De Conbertin's (Baron Pierre) France Since 1814 ...	533
De Lisle's (Edwin) edition of Puncell's Life and Letters of Ambrose Phillips de Lisle ...	139
Deniker's (J.) The Races of Man ...	104
Derbyshire Campaign Series, The ...	253
Devereux's (Roy) Sidelights on South Africa ...	104
De Vogüé's (Vicomte E. M.) Cours Russes ...	65
Dixon's (Charles) Among the Birds in Northern Shires ...	466
(W. Scarth) The Sport of Kings ...	488
Dowson's (Ernest) Decorations, in Verse and Prose ...	328
Drew's (Mary Frances) translation of The Passion-Play of Ober-Ammergau ...	288
Drummond and Berry's Charles A. Berry, D.D., a Memoir ...	48
Dunne's (F. P.) Mr. Dooley in the Hearts of his Countrymen ...	123
Dyde's (S. W.) translation of The Theatetus of Plato ...	56
Earle's (Alice Morse) Child Life in Colonial Days ...	101
Edgar's (Dr. R. M'Cheyne) The Genius of Protestantism ...	444
Edwards's (Neville) The Transvaal in War and Peace ...	268
Ellis & Godley's edition of Nova Anthologia Ozoniensis ...	162
Emerson's (Edwin) Pepys's Ghost ...	252
Euan-Smith's (A.) edition of Housaye's 1815: Waterloo ...	505
"European Literature, Periods of" ...	331

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Fairair's (Dean) The Life of Lives: Further Studies in the Life of Christ ...	496
Fenollosa's (Mary McNeil) Out of the Nest ...	169
Fisher's (J. R.) Finland and the Tsars ...	104
Fitchett's (W. H.) How England Saved Europe ...	49
FitzGerald's (E. A.) The Highest Andes ...	10
Flammarton's (Camille) The Unknown ...	503
Fleming's (Dr. D. Hay) edition of Dr. Mitchell's Scottish R. formation ...	330
Forbes's (James D.) Travels Through the Alps as a Study of Education ...	529
Fotheringham's (James) Wordsworth's "Prelude" ...	58
Frechette's (Louis) Christmas in French Canada ...	184
French & Osborn's Elementary Algebra ...	60
Funck-Bretano's (Frantz) Legends of the Bastille ...	12
Furness's (Horace Howard) edition of "Much Ado About Nothing" ...	223
Gaggin's (John) Among the Man-Eaters ...	222
Gardner's (George B.) translation of Cicero De Officiis ...	59
(S. R.) The First Dutch War ...	271
Gardner's (Prof. Percy) Exploratory Evangelical ...	220
Gasquet's (Francis Aiden) The Eve of the Reformation ...	47
Geddie's (John) Romantic Edinburgh ...	428
Geddie's (S. M.) Queen or President? An Indictment of Paul Kruger ...	288
Glyde's (John) Life of Edward Fitzgerald ...	327
Godet's (Dr. F.) Introduction to the New Testament ...	79
Gorst's (Harold E.) The Earl of Beaconsfield ...	164
Gower, John, The Complete Works of ...	190
Grant-Duff's (Sir M. E.) Notes from a Diary ...	223
Greece, Handbook for Travellers in ...	529
Greg's (Walter Wilson) List of English Plays Written before 1643 ...	388
Grein's (J. T.) Dramatic Criticism ...	144
Graser's (Horace G.) Field-Marshal Lord Roberts ...	201
Gudeman's (Alfred) selections of Latin Literature of the Empire ...	59
Gurnhill's (Rev. J.) The Morals of Suicide ...	312
Gwynn's (Stephen) edition of The Odes of Horace: Book IV ...	59
Hasan's (Dr. J. F.) The Life and Works of Dante Alighieri ...	9
Haunah's (J. C.) History of Eastern Asia ...	498
Hardy's (Rev. E. J.) Mr. Thomas Atkins ...	204
Harkness & Morley's Introduction to the Theory of Analytic Functions ...	60
Harris's (Frank) How to Beat the Boer ...	140
Harrison's (Frederic) Travelling, Ruskin, Mill, and other Literary Estimates ...	27
(J. A.) First Steps in Earth Knowledge ...	59
Hauptmann's (Gerhart) The Sunken Bell ...	148
Hayes's (Captain) Among Horses in Russia ...	424
(M. H.) Among Horses in South Africa ...	282
Henderson & Parker's Introduction to Analytical Chemistry ...	59
Hemley's (W. E.) edition of Castiglione's Book of the Courtier ...	182
Hertford's (C. H.) translation of Ibsen's Love's Comedy ...	531
Hewett's (Sarah) Nunmills and Crumhills ...	531
Hime's (Lieut.-Col. Henry W. L.) Lucien the Syrian Satirist ...	165
Hobson's (J. A.) The War in South Africa ...	163
Hoby's (Sir Thomas) translation of Castiglione's Book of the Courtier ...	182
Holland's (Bernard) edition of The Poems of George Crabbe ...	311
Hollingshead's (John) According to My Lights ...	103
Holmes's (T. Rice) Cosa's Conquest of Gaul ...	100
(Edmond) What is Poetry? ...	199
Hopper's (Nora) Songs of the Morning ...	250
Hort's (Dr. Fenton John Anthony) Village Sermons in Outline ...	444
Housman's (Laurence) Eue ...	103
Housaye's (Henry) 1815: Waterloo ...	505

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Hubert's (Philip G.) The Stage as a Career ...	487
Hudson's (W. W.) Nature in Downland ...	510
Hubert's (William) The English Church 1507-1603 ...	13
Ibsen's (Henrik) When We Dead Awaken ...	307
— Love's Comedy ...	527
Inge's (Dr. William Ralph) Christian Mysticism ...	79
Innes's (Arthur D.) Cranmer and the Reformation in England ...	414
Israel's (Jozef) Spain ...	105
Jack's (Adolphus Alfred) The Prince ...	221
Japp's (Dr. Alexander H.) Our Common Cuckoo, and other Cuckoos and Parasitical Birds ...	80
Jefferson's (Robert L.) A New Ride to Khiva ...	31
Jekyll's (Gertrude) Home and Garden ...	124
Jerome's (Jerome K.) Three Men on the Bummer ...	106
Jevons's (Frank B.) Evolution ...	351
Keane's (A. H.) The Boer States, Land, and People ...	201
Keith's (Dr. G. S.) Pea for a Simpler Life ...	205
Kelly's (E.) Government or Human Evolution ...	408
Kolsey's (Francis W.) translation of Mau's Pompeii ...	122
Kent, East, Guide to ...	512
King's (L. W.) Babylonian Religion and Mythology (Bolton) History of Italian Unity ...	141 350
Kingsley's (George H.) Notes on Sport and Travel ...	355
Kinnear's (Alfred) To Modder River with Methuen ...	163
Kipling's (Rudyard) From Sea to Sea ...	219
Kollman's (Lieut. Paul) Victoria Nyangai ...	105
Lake's, English, Guide to the ...	512
Lane's (Charles Henry) All about Dogs ...	553
Lang's (Andrew) History of Scotland from the Roman Occupation ...	404
Law without Lawyers. By Two Barristers-at-Law	253
Laycock, Samuel, Collected Writings of ...	209
Lazare's (Julius) Genius of Modern French Poetry ...	56
Le Bon's (Gustave) The Psychology of Socialism ...	353
Lees's (J. A.) Peaks and Pines ...	105
Le Gallienne's (Richard) The Worshipper of the Image ...	141
— Rudyard Kipling: A Criticism ...	427
Leland's (Charles Godfrey) The Unpublished Legends of Virgil ...	119
Lilly's (William Samuel) First Principles in Politics ...	180
Litchfield's (Frederick) Pottery and Porcelain ...	145
Lloyd's (A. B.) In Dwarf Land and Cannibal Country ...	82
Lomuel's (Eugene) Experimental Physics ...	59
Lowell's (James Russell) Impressions of Spain ...	124
Lyster's (A. E.) Mathematical Facts and Formulae ...	60
Macaulay's (G. C.) edition of Gower's French Works ...	180
Macdonald's (Dr. Alexander) Haunts and Homes of the Pilgrim Fathers ...	272
Macdonald's (James) History of Edward the Third ...	352
Macdonald's (Fiona) The Divine Adventure: Iona, &amp;c ...	443
Macpherson's (Hector) Herbert Spencer ...	424
Mahan's (Capt. Alfred T.) Lessons of the War with Spain, &amp;c. ...	407
Major & Seight's Stories from the Northern Sagas ...	56
Major's (Thomas) Leaves from a Squatter's Notebook ...	385
Mallock's (W. H.) Poctrine and Doctrinal Disruption ...	353
Mann's (Arthur Emile) translation of Housaye's 1815: Waterloo ...	505
Masterman's (C. F. G.) Tennyson as a Religious Teacher ...	354
Matheson & Mayle's Hampstead Annual ...	105
Mathew's (John) Engelshew and Crow ...	205
Mau's (August) Pompeii: its Life and Art ...	122
Maurice's (Major-General) The Franco-German War ...	81
Mellows's (Emma Salisbury) The Story of English Literature ...	183
Melzer's (Charles Henry) translation of Hauptmann's The Sunken Bell ...	448
Meynell's (Mrs.) John Evelyn ...	463
Miles's (Eustace H.) How to Learn Philology ...	55
Mitchell's (Dr. Alexander F.) The Scottish Reformation ...	350
— Molire, Œuvres Complètes de ...	249
Molteno's (P. A.) Life and Times of Sir John Charles Molteno ...	406
Moncreiff's (Hope) edition of Black's Guide to London and its Environs ...	512
Moore's (George) The Binding of the Bough: a Comedy ...	203
Morrish's (Herbert) edition of The Literary Year Book, 1900 ...	202
Monle's (Dr. Handley C. G.) Ephesian Studies ...	414
Muirhead's (J. F.) The Land of Contrasts ...	31
Munro's (Robert) Ramblings and Studies in Bosnia, Herzegovina, and Valerina ...	529
Murray's (Dr. James A. H.) New English Dictionary ...	48
— Gilbert's A. Louches ...	329
Muzzey's (David Saville) The Rise of the New Testament ...	414
Myers's (G. W.) translation of Lommel's Experimental Physics ...	59
Neville's (Prof. E.) The Universal Question ...	110
Ney's The Making of Europe ...	55
Neve's (Dr. Arthur) Picturesque Kashmir ...	105
Nevison's (H. W.) Indismissible, the Diary of a Siege ...	481
Ninet's (Marguerite) My First French Book ...	53
Northumberland, History of ...	272
Omond's (T. S.) The Romantic Triumph ...	331
O'Neill's (Moira) Songs of the Glens of Antrim ...	181
Orsi's (Prof. Pietro) Modern Italy ...	312

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Osborn's (E. B.) Greater Canada ...	468
Osborne's (Oliver) In the Land of the Boers ...	140
Owen's (E. C. Everard) Selections from Tennyson's Poems ...	56
Paris, Guide to ...	518
— Exhibition ...	518
Parry's (D. H.) The Death or Glory Boys ...	163
Parson's (George) Mrs. Delany (Mary Granville) ...	332
Pearse's (H. H.) Four Months Besieged: the Story of Ladysmith ...	481
Pellissier's (Eugene) edition of De Voglie's Cursus Russæ ...	56
Pemberton's (T. Edgar) The Keadals ...	312
Percival's (A. S.) Optics: a Manual for Students ...	59
Perowne's (Ven. T. T.) edition of The Cambridge Bible for Schools: Proverbs ...	53
Phibbs's (Miss) Visit to the Russians in Central Asia ...	105
Philip's Handy Volume Atlas of London ...	511
Pike's (Oliver G.) In Bird-land with Field-Glasses and Camera ...	553
Pinnington's (Edward) Sir David Wilkie ...	204
Pitcairn's (E. H.) Unwritten Laws and Ideas ...	54
Potocki's (Joseph) Sport in Somaliland ...	125
Prior's (Edward S.) History of Gothic Art in England ...	184
Pro Christo et Ecclesia ...	444
"Punch," An Evening with ...	537
Purelli's (Edmond Sheridan) Life and Letters of Ambrose Phillips de Lisle ...	139
Quiller-Couch's (A. T.) Historical Tales from Shakespeare ...	143
Rackham's (H.) edition of The Prometheus Bound of Æschylus ...	56
Ralph's (Julian) Towards Pretoria ...	265
Ramsay's (Prof. W. M.) Historical Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians ...	314
Rand's (Theodore H.) edition of A Treasury of Canadian Verse ...	555
Reeves's (William Pember) The Long White Cloud ...	32
Rehertson's (John M.) An Introduction to English Politics ...	549
Robinson's (Canon) Nigeria ...	164
Roscoe & Clergue's George Selwyn: His Letters and His Life ...	408
Rosberry's (Lord) Sir Robert Peel ...	28
Rossetti's (Dante Gabriel) translation of Bürger's Lenore ...	504
Rouse's (W. H. D.) Demonstrations in Greek Tragic Verse ...	59
Rules, Higher (Mathematics) ...	60
Rushforth's (G. McNeil) Carlo Crivelli ...	313
Ryland's (Frederick) edition of Pope's "Rape of the Lock" ...	56
Sabatier's (Paul) edition of Tractatus de Indulgencia S. Marci de Portinacola ...	488
Sayer's (Prof. A. H.) Babylonians and Assyrians ...	141
Schooling's (J. Holt) A Peep into "Punch" ...	537
Schuchburgh's (Evelyn S.) translation of The Letters of Cicero ...	7
Seaman's (Owen) In Cap and Bells ...	11
Sedgwick's (Lieut.-Col.) The Advance of Knowledge ...	299
Sense's (Rev. P. G.) A Free Inquiry into the Origin of the Fourth Gospel ...	79
Seton's (Monsignor) An Old Family ...	532
Sherwood's (Rev. W. E.) Oxford Rowing ...	533
Shore's (Arabella) First and Last Poems ...	405
Skeat's (Prof. Walter William) Malay Magic ...	203
— The Chaucer Canon ...	425
Smith's (Goldwin) The United Kingdom: a Political History ...	81
— (A. H.) Village Life in China ...	144
— (Alice Dew) The Diary of a Dreamer ...	447
— (Justin H.) The Troubadours at Home ...	467
Soames's (Laura) Introduction to English, French, and German Phonetics ...	55
Spencer's (Edward) The Great Game ...	354
Starbuck's (E. D.) The Psychology of Religion ...	162
St. Augustine, The Confessions of ...	528
Stebbing's (William) edition of Charles Henry Pearson: Memorials of Himself, his Wife, and his Friends ...	550
Stevens's (G. W.) From Cape Town to Ladysmith ...	187
Stephen's (Katharine) French History for Schools ...	56
Stevens's (F. B.) Robert Grosseteste, Bishop of Lincoln ...	251
"Story of the Nations" Series ...	312
Street's (G. S.) The Trials of the Bantocks ...	353
Sullivan's (James F.) Queer-Side Stories ...	165
Sutcliffe's (Halliwell) By Moor and Fell ...	223
Swift's (Lindsay) Brook Farm ...	516
Symons's (Arthur) The Symbolist Movement in Literature ...	247
— Images of Good and Evil ...	416
— translation of D'Annunzio's The Dead City ...	464
Taylor's (Benjamin) Storyology ...	351
Thompson's (Robert) The Gardener's Assistant ...	483
Thorold's (Algar) E say in Aid of the Better Appreciation of Catholic Mysticism ...	308
Thorp's (Ernest Hall) Outlines of Industrial Chemistry ...	59
Timmins's (H. Thornhill) Nooks and Corners of Shropshire ...	272
Tod's (A. H.) Charterhouse ...	148
Trail's (H. D.) The New Lucian ...	179
Travel, Sport, and Adventure, Pictures of, By "The Old Pioneer" ...	125
Taylor's (Louis) Follow Wayfarers ...	143
Underhill's (John Garrett) Spanish Literature in the England of the Tudors ...	105

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Verity's (A. W.) edition of Shakespeare's "As You Like It" ...	55
Verne's (Julius) Le Tour du Monde en Quatre-vingt Jours ...	56
Victor's (Prof. Wilhelm) edition of Soames's English, French, and German Phonetics ...	55
Vincent's (Dr. Martin R.) History of the Textual Criticism of the New Testament ...	329
Von Ka'senberg's (Moritz) Memoirs of the Baroness Coelle de Courtat ...	332
Wallace's (K.) History of Russian Literature ...	267
Walker's (James) Introduction to Physical Chemistry ...	50
Wallace & Smith's George Buchanan ...	120
Ware's (Fabian) Educational Reform ...	54
Warner's (G. T.) Brief Survey of British History ...	55
— P. F. Cricket in Many Olives ...	478
Warren's (Henry) How to Deal with your Banker ...	443
Watson's (William) edition of Thompson's Gardener's Assistant ...	483
Waugh's (Arthur) Robert Browning ...	552
Wells's (H. G.) The Time Machine ...	535
— The War of the Worlds ...	535
— The Wheels of Chance ...	535
— Love and Mr. Lewisham ...	535
Welton's (Prof. J.) The Logical Bases of Education ...	54
Wheeler's (Mrs. Crosby H.) Missions in India ...	332
White's (Catherine A.) Sweet Hampstead and its Associations ...	551
Who's Who at the War ...	201
Wile World Adventure ...	449
Wilkie's (W. H.) edition of Lady Burton's The Passion-Play ...	288
— The Love of an Uncrowned Queen ...	336
Willocock's (John) Sir Thomas L'equart of Cromarty ...	102
Wilson's (H. W.) The Downfall of Spain ...	270
Willson's (Beckles) The Great Company ...	357
— Without a God ...	189
Wood's (Charles W.) In the Valley of the Rhone ...	355
Woodberry's (George) Wild Eden ...	139
Woodward's (W. H.) The Expansion of the British Empire ...	55
Wormley's (Katharine Prescott) translation of Letters in Mme Honoré de Balzac ...	433
Woruld's (W. Basil) The Redemption of Egypt ...	30
Wright's (M. E. S.) Rhymes Old and New ...	271
Wurtzburg's (C. A.) selection of Readings in John Ruskin's "Fors Clavigera" ...	55
— Wye, Guide to the ...	512
Wythe's (John A.) An American General ...	272
Wylie's (Major H. C.) The XCVth Regiment in the Crimea ...	185
Wynn's (Rev. Walter) The Apostle Paul's Reply to Lord Halifax ...	79
Yeats's (W. B.) A Book of Irish Verse ...	235
Yorkshire, A Picturesque History of ...	512
Zangwill's (Israel) They that Walk in Darkness ...	99
Zurbriggen's (Matthias) From the Alps to the Andes ...	10

FICTION.

Barry's (Dr. William) Arden Massiter ...	333
— (John D.) The Acrobat ...	339
Bird's (M. Lao-Ti) The Celestial ...	206
Bramah's (Ernest) The Wallet of Kai-Lung ...	314
Brooke's (Emma) The Engraved Rose ...	273
Buchanan's (Robert) Andromeda: an Idyll of the Great River ...	254
Burgin's (G. B.) The Tiger's Claw ...	506
Burnett's (Frances Hodgson) In Connection with the de Willoughby Claim ...	83
Capes's (Bernard) From Door to Door ...	429
Castle's (Agnes and Egerton) The Bath Comedy ...	449
Chambers's (R. W.) The Cambric Mask ...	273
Chatterton's (G. G.) The Angel of Chance ...	538
Churchill's (Winston Spencer) Savrota: a Tale of the Revolution in Laurania ...	135
Cobb's (Thomas) The Judgment of Helen ...	50
— Scraples ...	273
Connor's (Ralph) The Sky-Pilot ...	333
Cornish's (J. F.) Sour Grapes ...	333
Crane's (Stephen) Active Service ...	13
Crockett's (S. R.) Joan of the Sward Hand ...	533
De Soissons's (S. C.) translation of Rodziewicz's Anima Villis ...	453
Diekloos's (Evelyn) Hearts Impertunate ...	506
Drummond's (Hamilton) A Man of his Age ...	313
Dudeney's (Mrs. Henry E.) Folly Corner ...	125
Evers'ey's (Wynton) The Dean of Darrendale ...	389
Grier's (Sydney C.) The Kings of the East ...	469
Hamilton's (Bernard) A Kiss for a Kingdom ...	83
Hardy's (Francis H.) To the Healing of the Sea ...	453
Harland's (Henry) The Cardinal's Snuff-Box ...	589
Hayes's (F. W.) A Kent Spire ...	409
Howells's (W. D.) Their Silver Wedding Journey ...	203
Hyne's (Cutcliffe) Further Adventures of Captain Kettle ...	146
Inehold's (A. C.) Princess Feather ...	14
Johnstone's (Mary) By Order of the Company ...	253
King's (K. Douglas) Ursula ...	533
Lefroy's (Ell Napier) The Man's Cause ...	120
Locke's (William J.) The White Dove ...	186
Lorimer's (Norma) Merry Ann ...	185
Macdonald's (Ronald) The Sward of the King ...	554
MacIlwaine's (Herbert C.) Fate the Fidler ...	481
Mason & Lang's Parson Kelly ...	145
Mather's (Elen) Becky ...	449

FICTION—continued.

Mathew's (Frank) One Queen Triumphant ...	PAGE 106
M'Anlay's (Allan) The Rhymer ...	355
Moore's (Frankfort) Nell Gwynn, Comedienne ...	554
Ouida's The Waters of Edera ...	513
Puxley's (Francis Lavallin) Maidland of Cortzia ...	291
Rawson's (Mrs. Stepany) A Lady of the Regency ...	459
Rodziewicz's (Marya) Anima Vitis: A Tale of the Great Siberian Steppe ...	450
Shiel's (M. P.) Cold Steel ...	34
Shipton's (Helen) The Strong God Circumstance ...	383
Silberrad's (U. L.) The Enchanter ...	34
Stutchfield's (Halliwell) Shameless Wayne ...	125
Tarkington's (Booth) The Gentleman from Indiana ...	469
Tolstoy's (Leo) Resurrection ...	224
Tynan's (Katharine) She Walks in Beauty ...	106
Watson's (H. B. Marriott) The Princess Xenia ...	185
Watson's (H. B. Marriott) The Rebel ...	201
Wedmore's (Frederick) The Collapse of the Penitent ...	429
Weyman's (Stanley) Sophia ...	409
White's (Percy) The Infatuation of the Countess ...	50
Wilson's (Mrs. J. Glenoy) Two Summers ...	356

SUPPLEMENTS.

Competition ...	357-358
Educational ...	51-6
Spring Announcements ...	225-234
Tourist ...	507-514

ARTICLES.

Art, Descriptive ...	36
"Authors, Disappearing" ...	317
Balzac Letters Controversy, The ...	391
Bible, Tinkering ...	431
Blind's (Mathilde) Poetry ...	473
Book of the Winter Season, The ...	427
Bookman, A ...	149
Books, "Crowded": Awards for 1899 ...	63
About places ...	569
for Children, The Best Hundred ...	515
Within Books ...	565
Canadian Muse, The ...	109
Comedy or Farce? ("She Stoops to Conquer") ...	16
Copyright, How Long Should it Last! ...	491
Crane, Stephen ...	491
Critic, The Amateur ...	37
On the Abuse of Dialect ...	37
The Topography of Reading ...	37
Inkhorn Terms ...	37
Superfine English ...	37
How I Think of Blackmore ...	88
Ruskin on War ...	89
An Articulate Colony ...	128
A Man and His Work ...	123
"Peg Woffington" ...	128
The Style-Maker's Style ...	168
A King of Men ...	168
Commemorative Verses ...	203
A Book that Hold Me ...	209
Dismal Fiction ...	509
"Dainty Editions," Doubts About ...	317
"Drudgery," A Pedigree of ...	558
Eaglet, The ...	255
I. M. Rostand, Swrah , and Paris ...	255
II. Which—the King of Rome, or Master ...	256
Experiment, A Famous ...	616
Farrington, The, The Author of ...	411
Fiction, The, of Popular Magazines ...	187
Historical, The Craze for, in America ...	275
Hardy, Thomas: an Enthusiasm ...	289
Hovey, Richard, The late ...	335
Huxley, The Bise of ...	315
Index Expurgatorius of Words, An ...	371
Irish Literary Movement, The ...	235
Journalism, The Revolution in ...	207
Kipling, Mr., and Mark Twain ...	237
Lanier, Sidney ...	147
Laurate's Battle, A ...	452
Lent, A Literary ...	277
Library, The Ideal Circulating ...	35
Literature, A Gap in ...	169
Maeterlinck, The A.B.C. of ...	471
Magazines, Popular, The Fiction of ...	167
Martineau, James ...	65
Meredith, George, and his Critics ...	393
Paris Letters ...	108, 189, 336, 413, 492
Places, Books about ...	599
Preacher, A Great (Dr. Joseph Parker) ...	293
Punch Books, Two ...	537
Puritan Drama ...	317
Pym, O. P. ...	68
Rabelais, The Words of ...	293
"Reminiscences," The Vogue of ...	451
Ruskin, The Making of ...	85
The Prose Style of ...	85
Scholars, The, and the Poet: a Parable ...	452
Spencer, Herbert, A Birthday Tribute to ...	339
Steevens, George Warrington ...	87
The Work of ...	88, 187

ARTICLES—continued.

Stevenson Looks In ...	PAGE 293
Text-Books, School, The Choice of ...	53
Twain, Mark, and Mr. Kipling ...	237
Unfinished ...	187
Unknown, A Novelist of the ...	535
Words, An Index Expurgatorius of ...	371
Writing, Made ...	15

CORRESPONDENCE.

Africa, South, An Inquiry from ...	PAGE 169
Ariel's Press Cutting Agency ...	129
Arnold's School Series ...	110
Balzac ...	474
Barrie's (J. M.) Better Dead ...	258
"Beagle," The Etymology of ...	373
Blind, Mathilde ...	517
Book-Titles ...	454
"Bulks largely" ...	38
"Cog" and "Mich" ...	210
Connell's (F. N.) How Soldiers Fight ...	39
Cuckoo, The Decadent ...	129
"Curate's Eyes" Epigram, The ...	338
Dowson, Ernest ...	558
"Drift" ...	538, 558
"Eggs, Her Sky-hine" ...	170
Eliot, George, at Richmond ...	518
"Esquire," The Appellation ...	395
Explanation, Personal (Anthony C. Deane) ...	210
Fiction, The Supremacy of ...	453
Flowers, The Chastity of ...	63, 89
Heine's Grave ...	110
Ibsen's Love's Comedy ...	89
Italian Affirmative, The ...	258
Johnson, Dr. The Thunder of ...	518
Journalism, A Revolution in ...	238
Lang, Mr. Andrew, on Fiction ...	433, 473
Lawson, Henry ...	433
Lettres à l'Etrangère ...	297
Lever, "Disappearing" ...	277
Maeterlinck and the Contemporary Review ...	277, 297, 318, 338
"Man, The, Who Tramped" ...	538
McClure (S. S.) Company, The ...	38
Misquotations ...	638
Mudie's ...	298
Novelist, The Name of the ...	414
Novels and Logie ...	494, 517
"Punch, Mr.": A Protest: An American View ...	558
Rhythm, Quintuple ...	38
Ruskin on War ...	129
Shakespeare in Fiction ...	414
Shakespeare Translations ...	68, 89, 110, 115
"Stevenson Looks In" ...	337
Stevenson's Beginnings ...	189, 209, 237
"Style, Contemporary" and "E. H." ...	18
Title to a Title, The ...	493
Urguhart, Sir Thomas ...	180
"Velvet, Soft as" ...	453
Watson's (Mr.) Parable on the Boer War ...	115, 149
Wishart, George ...	373
Word, The Missing ...	296, 318, 339, 372, 394, 414, 434, 454
Words Worth Reviving ...	110, 118
English Obsolete ...	235
Index Expurgatorius of ...	433
Worsfold's (W. B.) The Redemption of Egypt ...	65

THINGS SEEN.

After Many Days ...	PAGE 393
Age ...	148
Altruism ...	516
Augury ...	276
Automatic, The ...	432
Beasts, The King of ...	148
Beggar, The ...	472
Bill Distributor, The ...	557
Conductor, The ...	68
Conscience, A Case of ...	333
Criticism, The Lower ...	17
Dog, The ...	516
Door, At the ...	492
Educational ...	46
Erret-Lover, The ...	109
Flag, The ...	236
Flower, The ...	316
Gard, The ...	393
Harvest Home, A ...	536
Imperialism ...	188
Juggernaut ...	536
Lesson, The ...	233
Mercy, The Man with ...	257
Mongrel, The ...	412
Passengers ...	294
Preserve, The ...	333
"Priest, A Certain" ...	132
Rabbit, The ...	336
Real, All ...	17
Relief ...	276
Schooner, The ...	316
Sex-Gulls ...	118

THINGS SEEN—continued.

Shadows ...	PAGE 257
Solomon's Seal ...	412
Sower, The ...	557
Toy-Shop, In a ...	67
Volunteer, The ...	67
War Time, In ...	67
Well Deck, From the ...	472
Window, Lighted, The ...	188

POETRY.

Arrival, The New ...	PAGE 526
Autumn, Invocation to ...	846
Brontë, Anne and Emily, Verses by ...	326
Couple, Married, For the Bookplate of a ...	493
Dawn, The Mocking ...	359
Dobson, Mr. Austin, Verses to ...	347
Elegy, A Fine: "Death of Arnold Toynbee" ...	257
Hardy's (Thomas) "The Souls of the Slain" ...	263
Illic Jacet ...	169
Illusion ...	325, 345
In Memoriam: R. H. M. S. ...	370
Mallock's (W. H.) "Concerning the Nature of Things" ...	97
Phillips's (Stephen) "A Man" ...	115
Tragedy, The ...	83
Wind and City ...	472

THE LITERARY WEEK.

Academy of Letters, Russian ...	PAGE 175
of Immortals, American ...	178
Access, Open, Battle of, in the Library World ...	214
Allen's (James Lane) Story "The Two Gentle-men" ...	430
Apocrypha, Difficulty of obtaining the ...	304
Areher, Mr. William, on the Maser Bullet ...	116
Argyle, The Duke of, as a Writer and Poet ...	346
Arnold's (Sir Edwin) Article on Spring ...	461
"Authors, Disappearing" ...	245, 277, 325
Authors, The Society of ...	419
Baden-Powell's (Maj.-Gen.) The Downfall of Prema ...	524
Bellamy, Mr., and Mr. Edwin Markham, Parallel between ...	117
Bishopsgate Institute Library ...	381
Black (William) Memorial, The ...	293
Blackmore, Mr. R. D., Reminiscences of ...	76
Boethius' Consolations of Philosophy ...	400
Book-Buyer's Summary of Transatlantic Literature ...	44
Book-Plates Stolen from Harvard University Library ...	324
Production, Statistics of, for 1899 ...	25
Reviewing: A Chicago Writer on ...	461
Books, Favourite, in America ...	5, 285, 823, 401
Borrow, Fragment by Mr. Lowerison on ...	379
Character-sketch of ...	400
Bowler's (Miss) Charlotte Leighton ...	490
Brahmin, The Young, and Mr. W. B. Yeats ...	324
British Museum, Cataloguing at the ...	595
Annual Report (1899-1900) ...	543
"Superfluous" Literature at ...	544
Brodrick's (Hon. G. C.) Memories and Impressions ...	216
Brontë, Anne and Emily, Poetical Powers of, Compared ...	325
Mr. Letter by, to Mrs. Gaskell ...	381
Burton's (Sir Richard) Poem: Kastak of Hiji ...	421
Abd al-Yasdi ...	421
Cable's (Mr. George) Verses: "The New Arrival" ...	526
Carlyle Letters, The New ...	264
Censorship, Russian, of English Books ...	24
Churchill, Mr. Winston: "Ours" and "Theirs" ...	23
Clood's (Mr. Edward) Memoir of Mr. Grant Allen ...	490
Collins's (Churton) edition of the Early Poems of Alfred, Lord Tennyson ...	440
Copyright, Perpetual, Dr. Johnson's Opinion respecting ...	24
Mark Twain on ...	294
Correll's (Miss) Work outside the Limits of Fiction ...	402
Cowper's Characteristics ...	345
Life in London ...	346
Cowperiana, Unpublished ...	380
Crane, Mr. Stephen, A Critical Essay on ...	479
Crosland's (T. W. H.) Humorous Odes ...	524
Daily News Prize Competition ...	45
Daly's (Mr. Augustin) Books, Sale of ...	264
Daudet, Alphonse, Statue to ...	304
"Decadence" of Style ...	76
Dedications ...	23, 325, 380, 420, 482, 501
Diamond Fields Advertiser , The ...	245
"Dispatch," The Corrupted Spelling of ...	545
Donnelly, Mr., and Shakespeare ...	546
Dooley, Mr., on the War Expert ...	218
on the Paris Exhibition ...	421
Dorking, New Battle of ...	545
Dowson, Mr. Ernest Christopher, Career of ...	175, 400, 480
Echo de Paris and English Fiction ...	97

PRIZE COMPETITIONS.

PRIZE COMPETITIONS.
No. 15, New Series, Result of									PAGE
No. 16,	30	3'	000	000	00	000	0	18
No. 17,	31	39	000	000	000	000	000	18
No. 18,	32	39	000	000	000	000	000	70
No. 19,	33	39	000	000	000	000	000	91
No. 20,	34	00	000	000	000	000	000	111
No. 21,	35	39	000	000	000	000	000	129
No. 22,	36	31	000	000	000	000	000	151
No. 23,	37	3	000	000	000	000	000	171
No. 24,	38	37	000	000	000	000	000	190
No. 25,	39	00	000	000	000	000	000	211
No. 26,	35	39	000	000	000	000	000	234
No. 27,	36	37	000	000	000	000	000	250
No. 28,	39	39	000	000	000	000	000	278
No. 29,	35	39	000	000	000	000	000	298
No. 30,	36	39	000	000	000	000	000	319
No. 31,	37	39	000	000	000	000	000	340
No. 32,	38	39	000	000	000	000	000	363
No. 33,	39	39	000	000	000	000	000	385
No. 34,	35	39	000	000	000	000	000	415
No. 35,	36	39	000	000	000	000	000	438
No. 36,	37	39	000	000	000	000	000	455
No. 37,	38	39	000	000	000	000	000	475
No. 38,	39	39	000	000	000	000	000	495
No. 39,	35	39	000	000	000	000	000	519
No. 40,	36	39	000	000	000	000	000	539
Special Competitions	...	...	000	000	000	000	000	559
			...	...	...	...	...	585

Cover-Design for Prayers from the Poets .....	24
FitzGerald, Edward, Portrait of .....	327
Godkin, Mr. E. L., Po trait of .....	295
Johnstone Miss Mary, Portrait of .....	243
Parker, Dr. Joseph, Portrait of .....	286
Rama, The King of, Portrait of .....	256
Ruskin, Mr. John, Portrait of .....	85
" " Facsimile of MS. of .....	75
Steevens, George Warrington, Portrait of .....	87

"Midsummer Night's Dream, A," at Her Majesty's Theatre .....	65
"Samson Agonistes" at South Kensington Lecture Theatre .....	317
"She Stoops to Conquer," at the Haymarket Theatre .....	109

Argyll, The Duke of	... ..	346
Blackmore, Mr. R. D.	... ..	79
Crane, Stephen	... ..	480, 491
Dowson, Mr. Ernest Christopher	... ..	175
Forbes, Mr. Archibald	... ..	285, 286
Kingsley, Miss	... ..	479
Martineau, Dr. James	... ..	65
Mivart, Dr. St. George	... ..	284
Reynolds, Mrs. Richard	... ..	248
Ruskin, Mr. John	... ..	75, 85, 86
Stevens, Mr. George Warrington	... ..	76, 87, SS
Stevenson, Mr. R. A. M.	... ..
Traill, Mr. H. D.	... ..	32

THE LAST OF 10,000 SETS.

“Library of Famous Literature”

The UNPRECEDENTED SUCCESS of the Leaves less than 4,500 Sets to be sold at the Present Prices and Terms.

IF YOU WISH TO SECURE THE LIBRARY AT A REDUCTION OF ONE-HALF IN THE PRICE YOUR ORDER MUST BE SENT NOW.
(The entire 20 Handsome Volumes may be had now upon the Preliminary Payment of Half-a-Guinea.)

The success of The Standard's issue of THE LIBRARY OF FAMOUS LITERATURE has been the distinguishing feature of the year in books. Of such a work, indeed, much might naturally have been expected. Under the general editorial supervision of Dr. Garnett, C.B., and representing the collaboration of many of the most distinguished living men of letters, this remarkable attempt to compact the best of the World's literature into twenty handy and convenient volumes could not have resulted otherwise than in a most notable book. The astonishing number of advance subscriptions which have been received under the special offer made by The Standard revealed that it was a timely work as well. The more than 5,500 advance subscriptions represent a total of more than 110,000 large royal octavo volumes. It is certain that such an advance sale was never before known in England. The Standard can offer but 10,000 sets of The Library upon the present prices and terms. This means that less than 4,500 sets now remain, and in view of the heavy bookings of the last two weeks, it is clear that the entire number will be taken before another month is out. Readers of The Academy, therefore, who wish to take advantage of the present opportunity should send in their orders at once, accompanied either by cheque in full, or a preliminary payment of 10s. 6d. Meanwhile, intending subscribers will read with interest a few letters selected from the mail of the past few days.

WHAT SOME EARLY SUBSCRIBERS SAY.

Nothing but Praise.

Bank Hall, Burnley, Lancashire, Dec. 18th, 1899.
I have received the twenty volumes of the "International Library of Famous Literature." For the type, illustrations, and binding there can be nothing but praise—they are all one can wish. The chief value of the new issue to one who already possesses a fair library seems to me to be in the variety and clever selection of the literary fare. One reads a specimen of some hitherto neglected author with an admiration that prompts one to further study his work and style. Without such an introduction (so to speak) the acquaintance would never have been made.
J. O. S. TAUBSBY.

Its Comprehensive Range.

The Manse, Manchester, Dec. 15, 1899.
"The Library of Famous Literature" fulfils my most sanguine anticipations. In some directions I regard it as superior even to Mr. Charles D. Warner's splendid collection of masterpieces, and I observe throughout its volumes many signs of Dr. Garnett's unrivalled erudition and fine discrimination. I am especially impressed with the comprehensive range of the work. It contains many lesser literary stars too generally neglected, such as Jones Very, Miss Guitney, Runeberg, and that wonderful Hindoo poetess Tarn Dutt.
REV. WILLIAM A. SIM.

No Better Reading for the Young.

Parkhill House, Ewell, Epsom, Dec. 16, 1899.
On opening my volumes of this "Library of Famous Literature," I was extremely pleased and gratified at the sight of the handsome books, the beautiful paper, illustrations, fine large type, and very handsome binding. The subject matter being the chief thing, however, I can only say I should like to shake by the hand all those eminent men who—making it a labour of love—have succeeded in selecting choice gems from real literature since thinking and writing began.

To that parent who can afford it, what greater pleasure could be given than by presenting the set of books to a lad, telling him at the same time that, wherever he opens a volume, or whatever piece he reads, he may be assured he is reading choice matter and style that has stood the test of time or severe criticism, and to the originals of which he may come to gain after life.

A compilation such as this may also create a love of beautiful thought and expression, and at the same time counteract the reading of the crude and wretched stuff that is read by the majority now, I fear.
FRANK MARSHALL.

Of Wonderful Value.

Royston, Haseocks, Sussex, Dec. 13, 1899.
I am highly delighted with my books, which are undoubtedly of wonderful value. The immense variety of the contents, and the opportunity afforded of a glimpse of American and foreign literature, which the ordinary English reader would probably never obtain otherwise, are among the most striking features of the work to me. I am neither a bookworm nor a literary individual in any respect, but merely one of the ordinarily educated British public, and feel sure that others like me must take great enjoyment out of these books, and will never repent of their bargain if they get them.
W. F. JAMESON, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge.

An Aid to Literary Culture.

Minster National School, North Ramsgate.
I am delighted with the "Library of Famous Literature." It is just the kind of work that has long been wanted by persons possessing some literary culture, whose time is limited, and whose purses are light. The type is beautifully clear and soft to the eyes.
MONTAGUE HODGES.

Charmed with the Illustrations.

United College, Bradford, Dec. 15, 1899.
I expected great things of the "Library of Famous Literature," but the reality more than realises my expectations. I am particularly charmed with the illustrations. The Library will prove of immense value to those who do not enjoy the privilege of a large private library.
G. KYDD CUTHBERT.

Prefers the Half-Persian Calf.

Exmouth, Dec. 16, 1899.
My first intention was to purchase the "Library of Famous Literature" in its cheapest binding, but now I have the books, and am able to appreciate their special and peculiar value, I congratulate myself on possessing the work in durable and handsome half-Persian calf.
C. G. BAKER.

Far and Beyond my Expectations.

Hope Villa, Station Road, Portlady-by-Sea, Dec. 22.
I have received the volumes of "Library of Famous Literature," and am very pleased with them. I have from the published announcements anticipated something good. The result is far beyond my expectations.
R. R. Y. POWELL.

The Finest Anthology in Existence.

Junior Reform Club, Liverpool.
I have received the "International Library," and am very much pleased with it. The range is great, and being spread over many centuries and countries, brings to us messages from the wise and great of remote ages and of far-distant climes. The "International Library" is, in my opinion, the finest anthology in existence.

In my youth I was familiar with Charles Knight's "Half Hours with the Best Authors." I trust that I may not be considered ungrateful to Knight when I say that his anthology was solemn, stolid and dull. Afterwards I bought "Illustrated Readings," edited by Tom Hood (Secundus), and published by Cassell & Co., in the late sixties. This was a most helpful and interesting work, in two volumes, and it put me on the track of some really good literature. Then I became the possessor of the "Casquet of Literature" in six volumes. This was also a most excellent work, and, indeed, has not been eclipsed, except by the "International Library."

The General Index at the end of your twentieth volume is exceedingly useful. The books are handsomely bound, the paper and type clear and beautiful, and the price is very low. The reading public ought to be very grateful to Dr. Garnett and his colleagues.
THOMAS WHITE.

Will Prove Invaluable.

Iverhampton, Cammerton, Dec. 20.
I have looked over several of the volumes of the "Library of Famous Literature," and am more than pleased with them. I feel certain that to men who have little spare time for reading they will prove invaluable.
GEORGE D. MACKAY.

A Good Companion for a Leisure Hour.

105 and 106, Strand, London, W.C., Dec. 10.
Apart from its great value as a record of the literature of the world, it will certainly be a good companion for a leisure hour, more particularly because the examples of the various Authors' works selected are in themselves so very complete.
WALTER EDEMAN.

Fully Satisfied with the Library.

2, Rosesthorpe Road, Nunhead, Dec. 19.
We are fully satisfied with them, although our expectations were very high. Thank you very much.
JOHN J. THOMPSON.

THE SPECIAL BOOKCASE.

For the convenience of subscribers to the "Library of Famous Literature," and in response to many inquiries, "The Standard" has made arrangements to purchase, at a wholesale price, several thousand bookcases, specially made to contain the twenty volumes of the "Library." The bookcases will be twenty inches in width and about three feet in height, the twenty volumes of the Library being disposed on two shelves, the lower one raised about eight inches from the floor.

The bookcase will be sent to the subscriber flat, and can be put together in five minutes. Under this arrangement the cost of carriage is reduced to a minimum. By the purchase of several thousand of these bookcases to bulk, "The Standard" is enabled to offer them, to subscribers to the Library only, at the very low price of 18s. 6d., carriage to be paid by the purchaser. Subscribers on the monthly payment plan, who desire to pay for the bookcase when their payments for the Library are completed, may make arrangements to that effect by writing to "The Standard." As the number of bookcases is limited, application should be made at once, with cheque enclosed.

APPLICATION FOR PROSPECTUS.

If you wish to receive a Prospectus, cut this slip out, or carefully state that you read this notice in the ACADEMY.

W. M. JACKSON,

The Standard,

23, ST. BRIDE STREET, LONDON, E.C.

.....1900.
Having read in the ACADEMY your offer regarding the LIBRARY OF FAMOUS LITERATURE, I request that you send me your illustrated Prospectus.

Name.....

Address.....

Ac. 3.

Special Offer.

Those who subscribe now, in advance of publication, may obtain the Complete Work, Twenty Volumes, at a REDUCTION OF 50 PER CENT. FROM THE REGULAR PRICES. The entire Twenty Volumes will be sent, all at one time, upon a preliminary payment of but HALF-A-GUINEA; further payments, after the twenty volumes are in your home, to be at the rate of 9, 12, 15, or 21 shillings per month, according to the binding chosen.

A Handsomely Illustrated Prospectus Sent Free upon Application.

If you will state that you read this notice in "THE ACADEMY," "THE STANDARD" will send, post paid to any address, a large, illustrated Prospectus of the LIBRARY OF FAMOUS LITERATURE, together with specimen pages, from the index and the like. But those who prefer to file their subscriptions at once, and thus take advantage of the Special Prices, which are offered in advance of this day of publication, may examine the work, in the different styles of binding, at "The Standard" Office, 23, St. Bride Street, near Ludgate Circus; and at the establishment of Messrs. Chappell and Co., Pianoforte Manufacturers, 40, New Bond Street, where orders may be booked, both for Cash Payments and on Monthly Installments.

Showing the Handsome Three-quarter Red Levant Morocco Binding.

TASTEFUL, CONVENIENT, INEXPENSIVE.

W. THACKER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Now ready at the Libraries and Booksellers' in Town and Country

EDITION DE LUXE OF THE WORKS OF WHYTE-MELVILLE.

Illustrated by HUGH THOMSON, G. H. JALLAND, EDMUND CALDWELL, C. E. BROCK, BERNARD PARTRIDGE, and others. Edited by the Right Hon. Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P.

Demy 8vo, handsomely bound, with gilt tops. Printed from new type, on hand-made deckle-edged paper, specially made for this Edition. Price, Vols. I.-XIII., £8 16s. 6d.

* Each volume contains a Coloured Frontispiece on Japanese Vellum, and other Illustrations.

- I.—Riding Recollections. Illustrated by HUGH THOMSON.
- II.—Katerfolto. Illustrated by G. H. JALLAND.
- III.—Uncle John. Illustrated by E. CALDWELL and H. M. BROCK.
- IV.—Market Harborough. Illustrated by HUGH THOMSON and FINCH MASON.
- V.—Contraband. Illustrated by BERNARD PARTRIDGE.
- VI.—M. or N. Illustrated by C. E. BROCK.
- VII.—Tilbury-No-Go. Illustrated by E. CALDWELL.
- VIII.—Songs and Verses, and Bones and I. Illustrated by H. M. BROCK.
- IX.—Black, but Comely. Illustrated by H. M. BROCK.
- X.—The Brooks of Bridlemere. Illustrated by FRED ROE.
- XI.—The White Rose. Illustrated by H. BIRD.
- XII.—Roy's Wife. Illustrated by CECIL ALDEN.
- XIII.—Satanella. Illustrated by G. H. JALLAND.

Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, 30s. net.

THE IMPERIAL RUSSIAN NAVY.

By FRED. T. JANE,

Author of "All the World's Fighting Ships," &c.
With 160 Illustrations from Sketches and Drawings
by the Author, and from Photographs. [Shortly.]

Medium 8vo, cloth extra, 12s. 6d. net.

A SUMMER IN HIGH ASIA.

A Summer Ramble through Balistan and Ladakh.

By Captain F. E. S. ADAIR

(late Rifle Brigade),

Author of "Sport in Ladakh,"

With a Chapter on Central Asian Trade by Captain S. H. GODFREY, late Joint-Commissioner at Leh.

Illustrated from Photographs and Drawings, and a Map of the Route.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

BULLET and SHOT in INDIAN FOREST, PLAIN, and HILL.

By C. E. M. RUSSELL, M.R.A.C., late Senior Deputy Conservator of Forests, Mysore Service. [Shortly.]

SECOND EDITION, ILLUSTRATED.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The CARLSBAD TREATMENT And How to Carry it Out Anywhere.

By LOUIS TARLETON YOUNG, M.D.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

WITH SAMPSON THROUGH THE WAR.

By W. A. M. GOODE.

An Account of the Naval Operations during the Spanish War of 1898.

With Chapters specially Contributed by Rear-Admiral SAMPSON, Captain R. D. EVANS, and Commander C. C. TODD.

With Portraits of Naval Officers, Illustrations, and Maps.

London: W. THACKER & CO.,
2, Creed Lane, E.C.

MACMILLAN'S LIBRARY OF . . . ENGLISH CLASSICS

UNDER the above title Messrs. MACMILLAN & CO.,
LIMITED, propose to issue reprints of various

STANDARD WORKS OF ENGLISH LITERATURE

for which they believe there is a demand, printed from large type, in demy 8vo volumes, and sold in cloth at the uniform price of 3s. 6d. net per volume. The books will contain neither new Introductions nor new Notes, the idea being to present typographically perfect reprints of the best existing texts. In deciding the question as to which is the best edition to reproduce, the publishers have been fortunate in obtaining the assistance of Mr. A. W. POLLARD, Hon. Sec. of the Bibliographical Society, and beyond a bibliographical note to each book from his pen, the Series will contain no fresh editorial matter.

The aim of the publishers will be to give complete and accurate texts, so that lovers of English Literature may have the opportunity of possessing the works of their favourite writers in a form at once handsome and inexpensive, and printed in the demy 8vo size, which has always been regarded as most suitable for the study of a private gentleman, and for the shelves of a Public Library.

The publishers hope that if the Series meets with the support they anticipate for it, it may eventually run to a considerable number of volumes, but they do not pledge themselves to bring out more than the twenty-five volumes mentioned below, all of which, however, will appear during the year 1900.

The following is a list of the first twenty-five volumes of the Series:—

BACON'S ESSAYS; COLOURS of GOOD and EVIL; and ADVANCEMENT of LEARNING. 1 vol. [Ready.]

SHERIDAN'S PLAYS. 1 vol.
[Ready.]

TRAVELS of SIR JOHN MANDE-
VILLE. With Illustrative Narratives from Hakluyt. 1 vol.

MALORY'S MORTE D'ARTHUR.
2 vols.

DON QUIXOTE, Translated by Shelton. 3 vols.

WALTON'S LIVES and COM-
PLETE ANGLER. 1 vol.

THE WORKS of LAURENCE
STERNE. 2 vols.

FIELDING'S TOM JONES.
2 vols.

WHITE'S NATURAL HISTORY of SELBORNE. 1 vol.

BOSWELL'S LIFE of JOHN-
SON. 3 vols.

DE QUINCEY'S CONFESSIONS
of an ENGLISH OPIUM EATER; MURDER
as a FINE ART; THE ENGLISH MAIL
COACH, and other Essays. 1 vol.

LOCKHART'S LIFE of SCOTT
5 vols.

CARLYLE'S FRENCH REVO-
LUTION. 2 vols.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1444. Established 1869.

6 January, 1900.

Price Threepence.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

THE scheme for a Pension Fund for Authors put forth this week by the Society of Authors presents noble outlines. The proposed fund is intended to supplement the operations of the Royal Literary Fund, which grants only donations, and the Civil List pensions, which amount to only £400 a year and are still somewhat capriciously granted. The first thing to be noted about the Society of Authors' project is that it aims to establish a pension fund for authors, to be supported by authors themselves, not by appeals to the public. Other points are these:

The fund will be utilised for pensions only.

The pensions given will not be less than £30 or more than £100 per annum.

Candidates for pensions must have attained the age of sixty years.

For other details of this admirable scheme we refer our readers to the January number of the Author.

MEANWHILE, the support of authors is asked for, and the following subscriptions have been already promised:

Mr. George Meredith (President of the Society)...	£100
Mr. J. M. Barrie (if nine others subscribe the same amount) ... ..	100
Mr. A. W. à Beckett (per annum) ... ..	5
Sir Walter Besant ... ..	100
The Rev. T. G. Bonney (for present year, and continue same as long as existing circumstances also continue) ... ..	5
Mr. Austin Dobson (as much as possible per annum) ... ..	—
Dr. Conan Doyle (per annum, when the scheme assumes a practical basis) ... ..	10
Mr. Douglas Freshfield (if nine others subscribe the same amount)... ..	100
Mr. Anthony Hope Hawkins ... ..	200
Mr. Jerome K. Jerome (per annum, and perhaps more) ... ..	5
Mr. J. Scott Keltie (per annum for five years) ... ..	5
Mr. Rudyard Kipling ... ..	100
Mr. Gilbert Parker ... ..	100
Mrs. Humphry Ward (per annum) ... ..	10

IBSEN's new play, "When We who are Dead, Awaken," will be shortly issued in ten different languages. Meanwhile the Daily News explains that the play opens in the grounds of a sanatorium in the north of Norway. Prof. Rubek and his wife (Fru Maia) are discovered talking. They have been married five years, and the conversation discloses that they have grown tired of each other. He is elderly and distinguished: she young and lively. She complains that he has not fulfilled his promise "to take her with him up a high mountain and show her all the world's grandeur." To them enter a third character (there are only four in the play), a hunter of "eagles, wolves, women, elks, and reindeer." To him the professor's wife falls a prey. They go hunting together, which gives the professor an opportunity of renewing acquaintance with a lady who has been haunting the hotel grounds. That is the bare outline of the plot.

IN opening the new Free Library at Acton, on Wednesday, Mr. Choate, in a delightful speech, explained to his hearers how "travelling libraries" are worked in America. These libraries, each consisting of one hundred books, are sent round to outlying villages and into remote districts where stationary libraries do not exist. Mr. Choate added that he did not know whether any parts of Great Britain were so remote as to need such an institution, but he commended the utility of the system. Undoubtedly there are remote parts in England (some within thirty miles of London) which need the travelling library. What is more, some get it. Travelling libraries for English villages were organised six years ago by Mr. Stead, and have been made successful and self-supporting. Nor did Mr. Stead claim originality for his idea. Such libraries had already an existence in Hampshire and Yorkshire.

ARE WE IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY?

Oh, ask me not, one thing is plain:
To-day I see the sun,
But on my tomb will beat the rain
When men count Twenty-one!

MR. BERNARD SHAW sends us this genial remonstrance apropos the spelling of a certain name in his article, on page 16: "Why am I denied by the ACADEMY the common English right to spell Shakespear's name as I please? I refrain from striking out the final e so tyrannically forced on me in the proof because I shrink from giving trouble. But I protest all the same. The whole character of a man is in the way he spells Shakespear."

As to the merits of the play which amazed and delighted Sussex last week we must be silent. Nor are we allowed to mention the actors and actresses by name or to criticise their performance. But we have permission to print a facsimile of the first page of the programme, giving the title of the play and the names of the authors. It was called

THE GHOST.

Written by

MR. HENRY JAMES, MR. ROBERT BARR,
MR. GEORGE GISSING, MR. RIDER HAGGARD,
MR. JOSEPH CONRAD, MR. H. B. MARRIOTT-
WATSON, MR. H. G. WELLS, MR. EDWIN PUGH,
MR. A. E. W. MASON AND
MR. STEPHEN CRANE.

The play was in two acts: "I. Empty Room in Brede Place"; "II. Same as Before." The text of "The Ghost" will never be printed.

Mrs. M. L. GWYNN's Birthday Book, just published by Messrs. Methuen, unfortunately does not appear to be free from error. Last week we quoted four lines from Chaucer that Mrs. Gwynn has printed upon her title-page. The quotation, which our printer copied exactly as it is printed in the Birthday Book, has drawn the following remonstrance from Prof. Skeat:

"May I be allowed to draw attention to a quotation from Chaucer given in the ACADEMY, December 30, 1899, at p. 760? It appeared in the following form, as a quotation from some compilation:

Out of the oldē fieldēs, as men sayeth,
Cometh all this new corne from yere to yere;
And out of oldē bookēs, in good faithē,
Cometh all this new science that men lere.

It seems piteous that such fine lines should be so surprisingly misspelt. It would seem that Middle English is an unknown language; no one would dream of treating Latin or Greek or German after this sort. It is marvellous, moreover, how anyone could imagine that such lines can scan. The utterly shocking errors, ruining the metre, occur in the use of 'new' for the dissyllabic newe; 'corne' for the monosyllabic corn; 'yere' for the monosyllabic yeer in the former of the two instances; 'faithē' for the monosyllabic faith (better feith); and again, the form 'new' for newe, in the last line. Besides these, 'fieldēs' should be feldes, and 'sayeth' should be seith. And it must be borne in mind that 'Cometh' represents Com'th, a monosyllable. One thing to which Englishmen look forward with longing hope is the advent of a time when Middle English spelling shall be understood and duly respected."

WE must say that we sympathise with Mrs. Gwynn. Her Birthday-Book, which is by far the handsomest that we have seen, would not, we imagine, have been sent by any editor to Prof. Skeat for review. But because we used her Chaucerian motto to adorn a blank space, and because the text of that motto is not a good text, Mrs. Gwynn comes under the displeasure of the greatest living authority on Chaucer. The moral seems to be that compilers of Birthday Books should look to their Middle English.

It is a convenient provision of Nature that a hen, when she has laid an egg, clucks—thereby informing the world that she has laid an egg. A disposition to cluck, or, to use his own phrase, "advertise a little," would, in Mr. G. S. Street's opinion, add to the usefulness of the Historical MSS. Commission. Mr. Street has reason to feel a little sore about the Commission's humility. A while ago he read with some excitement a paragraph announcing that a large number of George Selwyn's Letters to the fifth Earl of Carlisle had been discovered at Castle Howard and would shortly be published. Mr. Street, being an authority on Selwyn, wrote in haste to the publisher for an advance copy of this book. He got it, and he tells his readers in the January Blackwood: "I was congratulating myself on the business-like promptitude with which my inevitable article would appear, when lo! I heard that these new letters and many others besides had been published by the Historical MSS. Commission more than a year ago." A splendid egg had been laid by the Commission and Mr. Street had not heard of it.

THE suggestion Mr. Street now makes, that the Historical MSS. Commission should issue its publications in a less official-looking form, in volumes easier to handle, and printed on better paper, that it should advertise, and send out paragraphs to "impenetrable editors," is doubtless only a part of his fun. Let the Commission do this, and we foresee a demand for illustrations and fancy bindings and gay prefaces. Moreover, the vigilant expert would then have no chance. Mr. Street overlooked a prize for a year, but, after all, he received his advance copy of Mr. Roscoe's and Miss Clergue's book, and is first in the field (the magazine field) with his criticism.

THE scruples which sensitive people felt in reading the Browning love letters have not been so acute in the case of Robert Louis Stevenson's letters. Yet the two publications must finally be cited together—doubtless along with others—in determining the rights of the dead and the duties of biographers. The world was glad—more than glad—to have these books. But we are not wholly out of sympathy with the writer in Macmillan who questions whether Stevenson's letters have not been too hastily and prodigally given to the world. Such misgivings are not inconsistent with a keen enjoyment of the gift, and a willingness to use it when given. As the writer points out, Stevenson has been dead only five years, and "he did not write those letters for the eye of whomsoever chooses to buy the book." At all events a new tradition has been started under which the dead are likely to be treated with as much freedom by biographers as the living already are by the gossippers of the press. The disturbing question is, Where will it end?

MR. ROBERT BUCHANAN's onslaught on Mr. Kipling in the December number of the Contemporary Review has brought forth a reply, in the same quarter, from Sir Walter Besant. Mr. Buchanan, it will be remembered, suggested that Mr. Kipling was a literary hooligan, who is leading this generation away from the humanitarian teaching of forty years ago. The term "hooligan" was most offensive, and we are not surprised that Sir Walter Besant's knightly solicitude for the dignity of literature has been stirred to its depths. His reply to Mr. Buchanan takes the form of a confession of his own love for the writings of Mr. Kipling, in whom he sees a fine "enthusiasm for humanity."

Always, in every character, he presents a man: not an actor: a man with the passions, emotions, weaknesses and instincts of humanity. It is perhaps one of the Soldiers Three: or it is the Man who went into the mountains because he would be a King: or the man who sat in the lonely lighthouse till he saw streaks: always the real man whom the reader sees beneath the uniform and behind the drink and the blackguardism. It is the humanity in the writer which makes his voice tremulous at times with unspoken pity and silent sympathy: it is the tremor of his voice which touches the heart of his audience.

OF course neither Mr. Buchanan's attack nor Sir Walter Besant's defence belong to the domain of cool literary criticism. Indeed, it seems to us that Sir Walter misunderstands the case when he treats it as an abhorrent attack of one author on another author. At bottom the quarrel is political rather than literary. Mr. Buchanan sees in Mr. Kipling a misleader of the nation, and in that character he attacks him with the rancour and fury which are still not wholly banished from political controversy. No doubt the literary element is bound up with the social. Still, Mr. Buchanan did not storm and rage on a question of style, or a school of fiction, or a point of academics; he made it a question of social politics and of religion—subjects on which strong feeling is natural. Mr. Buchanan may be wrong, but we have no doubt that he is sincere, and we are sure that he is courageous.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER has addressed a letter to the Westminster Gazette denying that Mr. Hector Macpherson's forthcoming monograph on himself has passed under his eye. Mr. Spencer writes:

In one of your issues last week was a paragraph referring to a preceding statement which had been made concerning Mr. Hector Macpherson's monograph on my works. Apparently the statement was that I had seen all the sheets of Mr. Macpherson's work before they went to press, and in the paragraph named it was said that this statement was incorrect. The rectification is an inadequate one. Incorrect may mean partially true but not wholly true—may mean that I have seen some proofs but not all. Instead of being called incorrect the statement should have been called entirely false. I have not seen, and I have declined to see, a single page of Mr. Macpherson's work in proof, in MS., or in any other shape.

A few years ago dialogue, as a literary form, became distinctly popular, and one reputation at least was founded on its practice. It was a fleeting fashion; but fashions travel, and the present home of Dialogue appears to be—Natal! A young British officer was endeavouring, a few weeks ago, to signal from General Buller's camp to Ladysmith, but he soon found that his messages were being read and answered by Boers. Thereupon the following conversation took place:

NATAL. Who are you?

BOERS. The Royal Irish Fusiliers.

N. What is the Number of your r-giment?

B. I am Corporal Stevens, 18th Hussars.

N. What are you doing?

B. Ladysmith was taken last night; I escaped.

N. You are Boers, aren't you?

B. Yes, and you're English. Where is Buller?

N. I don't know. Where is Joubert?

B. He has gone to Pretoria with General White as prisoner.

N. How is old Kruger?

B. All right, thank you.

N. Why won't you wait for us? We have plenty of cold steel for you, and our 100 rounds are getting rather heavy. God help you if you do.

B. Yes, He is sure to.

"A smart dialogue with a grim ending" says a contemporary. A grim dialogue with a smart ending would also describe it. Smart, however, is too poor a word to apply to the final Boer repartee, and it must be confessed that the dialogue is marred by the British officer's explicit bellicosity: but what a document!

A curious index to popular reading-taste in America is found in the May-to-December Cumulative Book Index, containing a classified list of American books published in that interval. From this it appears that the three writers most in vogue among readers and critics—as judged by mere number of publications—are

1. Kipling.
2. Shakespeare.
3. Omar Khayyám.

It is also gravely stated that though "it is manifestly unfair to Kipling to compare such a collection of authors as the Bible with him alone, yet the entries under 'Bible' are scarcely a third more in number." We infer that even here Mr. Kipling is "creeping up."

THE six "best selling" books in the States and Canada during December are named in the order of demand by the American Bookman:

Janice Meredith. By Leicester Ford.

Richard Carvel. By Winston Churchill.

When Knighthood was in Flower. By E. Caskoden.

David Harum. By E. N. Westcott.

Via Crucis. By Marion Crawford.

Mr. Dooley in the Hearts of his Countrymen. By F. P. Dunne.

Of these books, three—Nos. 2, 3, and 4—survive from the Bookman's September list. It is stated that Mr. E. Caskoden's novel, When Knighthood was in Flower, is in its 150th thousand. This is another illustration of the fact that whereas the large sale of a book in England is generally accompanied by a large sale in America, the converse is not always experienced. Quo Vadis, David Harum, and When Knighthood was in Flower have "boomed" in America; they have not "boomed" here.

"A GALLUS periodical" was the term applied recently by Harper's Weekly to our own quarterly Anglo-Saxon Review. Thereupon one of its readers applied for a definition of "gallus." Gallus is but old gallows writ decent, and it means "reckless, dashing, showy." Promoted from the hangman's vocabulary, it is still no better than slang. The Weekly quotes this snatch of an old song:

He was a gallus boy, boys, and he was mighty fine,
And he used to drive a mule team on the Denver City line.

The Weekly further expounds the word by saying: "If we should speak of District-Attorney Asa Bird Gardiner as a gallus jurist it would probably be an appropriate use of the word." And now we expect a letter asking us: "Who is District-Attorney Asa Bird Gardiner?"

MR. WALTER H. PAGE, formerly editor of the Atlantic Monthly, has become a partner in the S. S. McClure Company of New York, and will devote himself to the literary work of the firm. Mr. J. L. Thompson, Mr. Henry W. Lanier (son of the late Sidney Lanier), and Mr. S. A. Everitt, will all be admitted into partnership. Mr. James MacArthur, formerly editor of the Bookman, will represent the house in London. The name of the company, it is expected, will be changed eventually to Doubleday, Page & Co.

THE first number of the International Monthly, issued by the Macmillan Co., of New York, contains five articles, the place of honour being given to Mr. Edouard Rod, who writes on "Later Evolutions of French Criticism." In size the magazine is somewhat smaller than the Nineteenth Century, and the price is 25 cents. The editor is Mr. F. A. Richardson, of Vermont, who is assisted by an Advisory Board "composed of one person in America, representing each of the twelve departments of contemporary thought with which the magazine deals, who has to co-operate and associate with him one person residing in France, one in England, and one in Germany." The International Monthly will not languish for lack of advice.

THE new and enlarged series of Punch, with its extra pages, its story by Mr. Conan Doyle, its full-page pictures, its clean type and good paper, makes an attractive miscellany. All the contributions are now signed with initials, even down to a brief notice of a reference book which is signed by Mr. Lucy. Mr. Seaman contributes some capital parodies. But the supply of "fill column jokes" must have run very short when Mr. Punch was obliged to use this "Sad Case": "An eminent literary man, who for many years had invariably used quills, found himself without a single one; and so, in order to gain his livelihood by the sale of various articles, he was reduced to steel pens!!"

A Church Gazette interviewer has been talking to Mr. Wilson Barrett about the effect of the "Sign of the Cross" on its audiences. Said the interviewer:

"Rumours reached the outer world on the first presentation of wonderful 'conversions' wrought by its means. Do the 'conversions' still continue?"

"Yes. Letters still keep pouring in upon us. Only a few days ago we had a letter from a distinguished Parsee telling us that the 'Sign of the Cross' had given him quite a different conception of Christianity from the one he used to have. A clergyman, after telling us that he had never seen such a play in his life, winds up by saying: 'I have been preaching for twenty years, but I never preached such a sermon as you did to us the night before.'"

The replies of the distinguished Parsee and the clergyman were certainly guarded. This evangelical play-acting reminds us of Defoe's satire on an alliance between Church and Stage in his day: "Peggy Hughes sings, Monsieur Ramadan plays, Miss Santlow dances, Monsieur Cherrier teaches, and all for the Church! Here's heavenly doings! Here's harmony! Your singing Psalms is hurdy-gurdy to this Music; and all your preaching-Actors are Fools to these."

Heads and Hands is the title of a new illustrated art magazine, to be published monthly at the price of sixpence. The scheme the editor proposes is ambitious.

To the January number of the North American Review Mr. Henry James will contribute an article on the Letters of R. L. Stevenson, and Mr. Edmund Gosse a character study of Sir Redvers Buller.

On Saturday evening a dinner was given to Mr. Hugh Chisholm, on the occasion of his retirement from the editorship of the St. James's Gazette. A large number of Mr. Chisholm's friends and well-wishers were present, including seven editors, three artists, two publishers, and the staff of the St. James's Gazette. The chair was taken by Mr. Edmund Gosse, and the vice-chair by Mr. Theodore A. Cook, the new editor of the St. James's, who has the distinction of being the only editor who has rowed for his University in an Oxford and Cambridge boat-race.

THE sixty-first anniversary festival of the News-vendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution will take place at the Whitehall Rooms, on May 22. Mr. C. Arthur Pearson will preside.

Bibliographical.

PERHAPS the most notable of the "new departures" made by Mr. Punch this week is the initialling of most of the matter he prints. I think this a good move, because I believe it will attract to the "Fleet-street jester" a good deal of talent which hitherto, probably, has been withheld from him. Mr. Punch has never been unwilling—at any rate, of late years—to let his young men reveal their identity and proclaim their work; witness, for example, Mr. Warham St. Leger's Ballads from "Punch," issued in 1890; Mr. Punch's Music Hall Songs and Dramas, by Mr. Anstey (1892); Mr. Punch's Prize Novels, by Mr. Lehmann (1892 also), and so forth. Several other living writers, notably Mr. Seaman, have been allowed to identify themselves publicly with their contributions to Punch. In the same way with the pictorial artists. We had Mr. Reed's Prehistoric Peeps in book form in 1896, and Mr. Phil May's Songs and their Singers in 1898. On the volumes of cartoons by Tenniel and sketches by Du Maurier—to go no further back—I need not dwell. In truth, Mr. Punch has for some time been accumulating rapidly the material for an inevitable Bibliography.

For reasons of my own, I have not yet read any of the "notices" of Mr. Phillips's Paola and Francesca, and I do not know, therefore, whether any comparison has been instituted between it and Leigh Hunt's rhymed narrative on the same subject, published in 1816 under the title of The Story of Rimini. As a matter of fact, no comparison is possible, for Hunt's "poem" is written in the so-called easy, but actually slipshod, fashion which that well-meaning bard affected in such cases. The Story of Rimini is well known to all literary students; it is not so familiar a fact that a play on the subject of the famous love-story was written by the American G. H. Boker, and duly included in a volume of his Plays and Poems published in 1856. Moreover, Francesca di Rimini, as Boker called his work, was duly enacted in America in 1857, and revived there in 1882 and 1883. I have not read Boker's play, but it would be interesting to compare it with Mr. Phillips's, which, I feel sure, need not shrink from the comparison.

Says a correspondent, writing from Edgbaston, Birmingham: "On page 199 of Stevenson's Letters, Vol. I., reference is made to Penn's Fruits of Solitude. Stevenson sends a copy to Mr. H. F. Brown, with this remark: 'If ever in all my "human conduct" I have done a better thing to any fellow-creature than handing on to you this sweet, dignified, and wholesome book, I know I shall hear of it on the last day. To write a book like this were impossible; at least one can hand it on—with a wrench—one to another.' Can you tell me, through your Bibliographical page, if this book has been reprinted here? If not, can you get a publisher to take the hint?" To this I may reply, that Penn's Fruits of Solitude in Reflections and Maxims has been published more than once in England. The latest edition I can trace was one issued by Messrs. J. Clarke & Co. in 1886, at the small price of one shilling. Whether this, or the previous edition by Messrs. Groombridge (1881), is still in print I cannot say. Should the book really be out of print, it would be worth somebody's while, I think, to resuscitate it.

By way of supplement to what I wrote last week about a new and revised edition of Mr. Swinburne's poems, I may remind those of my contemporaries who have suggested a one-volume Selection from those poems, that such an anthology is already in existence—that which was published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus in 1887. I have some ground for thinking that this selection was made by the poet himself, or, at any rate, approved by him. To me—and, I should think, to most of his admirers—it was anything but an adequate work. Selections from a man's poetry should not be made by the man himself; he will choose according to personal preference, not according to the varied character of his output. Were I Messrs. Chatto & Windus I should try to get Mr. Swinburne's consent to the publication of an anthology of his verse, put together by an independent authority. Such a volume, really well done—with an eye to the tastes and distastes of the general public—would have been, and would still be, I believe, a popular success.

The first biographer of Lord Beaconsfield (if I remember rightly) was Mr. T. P. O'Connor, who published his somewhat personal attack on the unfortunate statesman (if my memory serves me) during his subject's lifetime. Then there was that portentously dull Public Life of Beaconsfield by Mr. Francis Hitchman, a sort of antidote to which (one may say) was produced by Mr. P. W. Clayden under the title of England under Beaconsfield. In 1881 came a little Life by Edward Walford, and the critical Study by George Brandes. After that, the topic lapsed till 1888, when Mr. T. E. Kebbel issued a sympathetic monograph on the Tory leader. Two years later came the admirably-written, but nevertheless unsatisfactory, memoir by J. A. Froude. Now we are told to expect in a few days yet another memoir, from the pen of Mr. Harold Gorst. For my part, I think the best account of Disraeli is that which he gave of himself in his Home Letters and Letters to his Sister, covering the ground between 1830 and 1852.

We are promised a collection of literary extracts, advocating toleration in religious matters, to which the compiler has given the title of The Wider View. It is not a bad title, and is certainly none the worse for recalling that of a little book written by Dr. Samuel Cox and published in 1883—The Larger Hope. This was a sequel to Salvator Mundi, by the same author, both being written in the interests of what was then called "Universalism."

THE BOOKWORM.

Reviews.

The Glory that was Rome.

The Letters of Cicero. Translated into English by Evelyn S. Shuckburgh, M.A. 4 vols. Vols. I. and II. (George Bell & Sons.)

MR. SHUCKBURGH has done a great service in giving to English readers the wholly admirable translation of Cicero's Letters, of which the first two volumes are now before us. To say it is scholarly would be inadequate. It is that and something more than that; it is an excellent piece of literary work. Fidelity to the original is combined with easy, idiomatic English in a really remarkable degree. He accomplishes the feat of making us forget that we are reading a translation. It is brilliant work.

It was time we should have a good translation of these letters. They are, perhaps, the most interesting letters in the world. They draw the curtain which hides from us the intimate life of antiquity, and show us breathing Rome—not the mere Rome of history, but a Rome which touches us as men! Here you have the people who conquered the world laughing, chatting, quarrelling, litigating, money-making, and behaving just as we behave. You hear the hum of the Forum, the latest gossip, the latest politics. You rub elbows with men of old renown; with Cato, the morally inflexible and very much of a prig; with Lucullus, the conqueror of Alithridates, but yet more celebrated for his dinners, a fine specimen of the patrician; nay, you come close to Cæsar and Pompey themselves. And the penetrating, urbane, cultivated, irresolute man who wrote them—greatest of Rome's orators and perhaps greatest of her prose-writers—is always chatty, observant, winning and human.

Thus you have delightful human little glimpses of domesticity, touching in these stern old Romans. A large portion of the letters are to the orator's old friend Atticus, and are full of allusions to his wife and his daughter—a child of twelve when the letters begin. Tullia is her name, but he uses generally the tender and musical diminutive, Tulliola. Atticus forgets to send her a promised present, and Cicero writes:

My pet Tulliola claims your present, and duns me as your security. I am resolved, however, to disown the obligation rather than pay up for you.

Turn another page and you find a sneer at Pompey's arbitrary ways and militarism. "I don't like his white boots and leggings." Turn yet again, and you come on a letter of advice to his brother as pro-consul, which might have been written to an English Governor-General.

Towards the middle of the second volume the correspondence is streaked by the red line of the great Civil War between Cæsar and Pompey; and Cicero appears as a war-correspondent. These "letters from the seat of war" would be valuable in any age, but in that age are priceless, for there is nothing like them in antiquity. One of the great crises of the world is unconsciously depicted for us by the greatest writer of his day. The tribunes, expelled from the Senate, had fled to Cæsar's camp on the Gallic border, and invoked his protection. The Senate had launched a decree against him; he had directed a menacing letter to the Senate and had crossed the famous Rubicon. It was the situation in the Transvaal. The Roman loyalists had been pushing matters to a fight, and when it came Cæsar overran Italy. Pompey's great plan, about which heads in Rome had been mysteriously wagging, proved to be non-existent. He left Rome, with the Senate and the consuls, to raise levies and prepare the defence of Italy; but the loyalists found themselves scattered and shut up in the Italian towns where they were captured in detachments. Pompey himself retreated to the sea-coast of Apulia, whence he ultimately fled to Greece, and the Senate with him. Most living and modern is Cicero's picture, from day to day, of the consternation and uncertainty during those opening weeks; when Cæsar was on the march, and everyone waiting for the development of Pompey's plans, Cicero is full of hesitation. He believes that Cæsar will turn out a monster of cruelty, and talks about him as some of us talked about the Boers at the outset. On the other hand, he realised before the rest of the loyalists that Pompey was a fraud, and had no idea of defending Italy. Thus he begins when the Senate has thrown down the gauntlet, and he is quitting Rome to take over the defence of the Capuan district—knowing only that Cæsar is on the march. He wrote to his dear Atticus, who quietly stays in the city to look after his private affairs:

I don't know, by heaven, what to do, now or in the future: such is the agitation into which I am thrown by the infatuation of our party's most insane decision. . . . What plan our Enæus (Pompey) has adopted or is adopting I don't know; as yet he is cooped up in the towns and in a state of lethargy. If he makes a stand in Italy, we shall all be together; if he abandons it, I shall have to reconsider the matter. Up to now, unless I am out of my senses, his proceedings are all fatuous and rash.

Two days later he breaks forth again, in a breathingly vivid picture of ancient Italy on the eve of invasion:

What in the world does it mean? What is going on? I am quite in the dark. "We are in occupation of Cingulum," says someone; "we have lost Ancona"; "Labienus has abandoned Cæsar." Are we talking of an imperator of the Roman people or of a Hannibal? Madman! Miserable wretch, that has never seen even a shadow of virtue! And he says he is doing all this to "support his honour!" How can there be any honour where there is no moral right? Can it be morally right to have an army without commission from the State? To seize cities abandoned by one's fellow citizens as a means of attacking one's own country? To be contriving abolition of debts, restoration of exiles, hundreds of other crimes?

Which Cæsar was perfectly guiltless of contriving. But Cicero is on his best oratorical platform for the moment, and very much frightened besides. He calms himself with a little philosophy, of the right Stoic pattern, and goes on:

In the name of fortune, what do you think of Pompey's plan? I mean in abandoning the city? For I am at a loss to explain it. Nothing, again, could be more irrational. Do you mean to abandon the city? Then you would have done the same if the Gauls were upon us. "The Republic," says he, "does not depend on brick and mortar." No, but it does depend on altars and hearths. . . . On the other hand, I gather from the indignation in the municipia, and the conversation of those whom I meet, that this plan is likely to prove successful in a way. There is an extraordinary outcry at the city being without magistrates or senate. In fact, there is a wonderfully strong feeling at Pompey's being in flight. Indeed, the point of view is quite changed; people are now for making no concessions to Cæsar. Expound to me what all this means.

It certainly meant that "concessions" no longer mattered, since Cæsar was coming to take them. But how swift he came they did not yet know, these good loyalists of Rome, though they were getting painfully conscious how slow was their own leader. You can see, in this letter, the agitated groups gossiping in the streets and in the market-place—that open-air club-room of ancient Italy—the catching at news and the questioning of couriers. You can feel the shock throughout Italy, when it was known that Rome was abandoned to the rebel soldier from Gaul. Three days later he is still waiting for news, and growing more doubtful of Pompey:

You ask me to be sure to let you know what Pompey is doing: I don't think he knows himself; certainly none of us do. I saw the consul Lentulus at Forniæ on the twenty-first; I have seen Libo. Nothing but terror and uncertainty everywhere! Pompey is on the road to Larinum; for there are some cohorts there, as also at Luceria and Teanum, and in the rest of Apulia. After that, nobody knows whether he means to make a stand anywhere, or to cross the sea. If he stays in Italy, I am afraid he cannot have a dependable army: but if he goes away, where I am to go or stay, or what I am to do, I don't know. For the man whose fury you dread will, I think, spare no form of brutality: nor will the suspension of business, nor the departure of senate and magistrates, nor the closing of the treasury, cause him to pause. But all this, as you say, we shall know before long. . . . It is all but certain that Labienus has abandoned him. . . . For myself, I am convinced that it is true. Pray, though you say you confine yourself to the limits of your own house, do give me a sketch of the city. Is Pompey missed? Is there any appearance of a feeling against Cæsar? What is your opinion as to Terentia and Tullia? Should they stay in Rome, or join me, or seek some place of safety?

Such is the terror inspired by the march of the ogre from Gaul. Cicero was soon to learn that Pompey, not Cæsar, was the man whose cruelty was to be feared. The desertion of Cæsar's great lieutenant, Labienus, is a gleam of hope to him:

Labienus [he writes] I regard as a demigod. There has been no political stroke this long time past more brilliant. . . . For us, however, where shall we be able to raise our heads, or when? How utterly incapable our general is you yourself observe. . . . and how devoid of any plan of campaign the facts are witness. . . . Everyone agrees that he is in a state of abject alarm and agitation. . . . His whole hope rests on the two legions somewhat treacherously obtained. . . . For as yet, indeed, those whom he is enlisting are men reluctant to serve, and averse from fighting.

But Pompey was not so panic-stricken, perhaps, as Cicero sweepingly asserts. He had "heard the East calling," and he could "heed nothing else." He was eager to get away to the scene of his early glories, and rouse the kings of the East against Italy, as Cicero soon came to penetrate. He had thrown a detachment into Corfinium, the Kimberley or Mafeking of the campaign; but he made no effort to relieve it. Cicero has a gleam of hope that Cæsar will accept terms; Labienus has assured Pompey that his ex-leader's army is weak, and Pompey, in much better spirits, writes that he will soon have a large army. But very quickly Cicero discovers that the peace proposals were a blind, that Cæsar has not halted a moment, and that he is rushing on the heels of the scattered and retreating loyalist detachments. City after city he has taken. Again poor Cicero rails at Pompey. Cæsar he can scarce bear to name, it is always "he" or "that man."

I can see that there is not a foot of ground in Italy which is not in his power. About Pompey I know nothing, and I think he will be caught unless he has already embarked. What incredible rapidity! Whereas our general—!

From Corfinium, Domitius Ahenobarbus cries for help—Shakespeare's "strong Enobarbo," but a poor enough ruffian in history. The next day comes word of the final blow, and Cicero sums up the inglorious campaign in disgusted language.

What a disgraceful, and for that reason what a miserable thing. He had fostered Cæsar, and then all of a sudden had begun to be afraid of him; he had declined any terms of peace; he had made no preparations for war; he had abandoned the city; he had lost Picenum by his own fault; he had blocked himself up in Apulia; he was preparing to go to Greece; he was going to leave us without a word, entirely uninformed of a movement on his part so important and unprecedented. Lo and behold, there is suddenly sprung on us a letter from Domitius to him. But our hero, bidding a long good-bye to honour, takes himself to Brundisium, while Domitius, they say, and those with him, on hearing of this, surrendered.

It is a just indictment. In about a month and a half Pompey had lost Italy, and embarked for Greece. How differently from cold history does it all read in these letters, palpitating with the passion of a partisan and a contemporary, lit up by the little personal details which give actuality to the drama! If history were properly written, these letters would be more copiously quoted than they are.

A Book of Tears.

English Elegies. ("Bodley Anthologies.") Edited by J. C. Bailey. (Lane. 5s.)

MR. BAILEY has woven a mortuary chaplet of elegiac verse, and offers it with a preface wherein he discusses, not merely the history of the elegy in England, but also, with both thoughtfulness and erudition, the precise nature and essence of this particular genre of poetry. Like most words in the vocabulary of criticism, the term "elegy" has been used in a variety of more or less related senses, which can hardly be brought within the boundaries of a common definition. Two attempts at such a definition Mr. Bailey quotes as at least approximately just. One is that of Coleridge: "Elegy is the form of poetry natural to the reflective mind. It may treat of any subject, but it must treat of no subject for itself, but always and exclusively with reference to the poet himself." The other is due to Shenstone: "Elegy in its true and genuine acceptation includes a tender and querulous idea, and so long as this is sustained it admits of a variety of subjects." And he adds that the subject of an elegy must be "treated so as to diffuse a pleasing melancholy." We do not think Mr. Bailey is much in love with either of these definitions. Certainly we are not. From one point of view they are too wide. They are applicable to elegiac poetry as a whole, while elegy, nowadays at least, generally bears a narrower connotation than elegiac. From another point of view they are too narrow, for the Elegiæ of Ovid's Amores, and the "Elegies" into which Marlowe translated these, and the "Elegies" of Donne and others, to which they served as models, are by no means always "tender and querulous," and not invariably even "reflective." Some of them are expanded epigrams; others are narratives of gay and gallant adventures. On the whole, it seems better to maintain the distinction between Elegy and Elegiac, and to confine the former to the notion of lament. Mr. Bailey gives yet another formal definition, which regards Elegy as "that form of poetry in which anything is described as at once desirable and not present." Even this is not quite satisfactory: to please us the closing words should be, instead of "not present," "no longer present." The notion of desiderium, or longing for what has been and is no more, is surely essential. Fitzgerald writes:

Ah, Love! could you and I with Him conspire
To grasp this sorry Scheme of Things Entire,
Would we not shatter it to bits—and then
Re-mould it nearer to the Heart's Desire?

This satisfies the definition just quoted. Omar's ideal is "at once desirable and not present." But clearly it is not elegy. Let us then insist on desiderium, and define elegy, if a definition is wanted, as "that form of lyric in which the dominant mood is the yearning for that which has been and is not." This definition allows a certain range of subject for elegy. It may include, if not, as Mr. Bailey suggests, laments for unrequited or unhappy love, at least complaints over absent or faithless or forgotten love. It may include the lament of the exile for the mother country, of the townsman perforce for the meadows of his childhood. Actually, of course, the subject is, nine times out of ten, death, and from this one class of funeral elegies, the whole of Mr. Bailey's own admirable collection is drawn. He says truly that the material for choice was ample:

My difficulty throughout has been not where to find matter for insertion, but how to find room for it. We English have time out of mind been a grave people, apt more than others to meditate on the transitoriness of human things, and in the midst of life to let our thoughts move in the direction of death. And our poets, from Anglo-Saxon times to our own, have in this matter been no ill representatives of the national character.

Mr. Bailey's choice amid so much wealth is a judicious and catholic one. His knowledge of the earlier writers is wide, and he has been fortunate enough to obtain leave to reprint much beautiful modern work which is still copyright. He has, for example, Arnold's "Thyrsis" and "Geist's Grave"; Lefroy's "Quem Di Diligunt"; several elegies by Mr. Swinburne, including the "Ave atque Vale" upon Baudelaire, and the "Lines upon Walter Savage Landor"; three by Mr. Bridges, of which one is the magnificent "Elegy on a Lady, whom Grief for the Death of her Betrothed Killed"; Mrs. Meynell's "To the Beloved Dead"; Mr. Watson's "Lachrymæ Musarum," which nobly stands the test of historic comparison; and Mr. Le Gallienne's "Robert Louis Stevenson."

Naturally, no two anthologists ever make the same selection; which is the excuse for multiplying anthologies; and while we could dispense with a few of Mr. Bailey's gatherings, there are some half-dozen poems which we could never have brought ourselves to exclude. Side by side with Drummond of Hawthornden's lines "To Sir William Alexander" we would have had the same writer's "Lament of Damon," with its exquisite couplet:

Bud doth the rose and daisy, winter done,
But we, once dead, no more do see the sun.

We would have had the charming scene in Ben Jonson's "Sad Shepherd," where Æglamour laments for Earine:

Earine,
Who had her very being and her name,
With the first knots or buddings of the spring,
Born with the primrose or the violet,
Or earliest roses blown.

From a later age we would have had Charles Lamb's "Hester" and, perhaps, "The Old Familiar Faces." And, finally, if Mr. Mackail would have permitted it, we would have had his beautiful poem "On the Death of Arnold Toynbee." We fancy this is not so well known as it deserves to be, but we count it second only to Mr. Bridges's "Elegy on a Lady" among the regrets of these latter days. Two stanzas we must find room for here:

Even in this English clime
The same sweet cry no circling seas can drown,
In melancholy cadence rose to swell
Some dirge of Lycidas or Astrophel,
When lovely souls and pure before their time
Into the dusk went down.

These Earth, the bounteous nurse,
Hath long ago lapped in deep peace divine.
Lips that made musical their old-world woe
Themselves have gone to silence long ago,
And left a weaker voice and wearier verse,
O royal soul, for thine.

The first of these stanzas might serve as a motto to such a collection as Mr. Bailey's.

And now a final word of reproach. Mr. Bailey's book is, unfortunately, a chaos. The elegies are not arranged chronologically—on the whole, the best method where the subject-matter of an anthology does not itself suggest any marked divisions. Nor are they, so far as we can ascertain, arranged in accordance with any other principle whatever.

The Man Dante.

The Life and Works of Dante Alighieri. By J. F. Hagan, D.D. (Longmans.)

YET one more of the many aids to the study of Dante which pour in a yearly increasing tide from the press. In the present case it deserves special commendation; not only because it is scholarly and thorough (for that is a quality happily not rare among Dante studies at this day), but for its unusual completeness as a survey of its subject. It consists of two parts. The first is a biography of Dante, as full as our limited knowledge of him will allow; the second is devoted to a detailed analysis of the Divine Comedy, together with the Vita Nuova and the prose works of Dante. The reader has thus, in a single volume, everything required to assist him in making the acquaintance of the great Florentine.

The greatest of Italy's writers was born in Florence in 1265; in that thirteenth century when the life of Italy, poetical, artistic, and political, was rising like a young tree, and the Tuscan which he was to give supremacy above all Italian dialects was plastic and waiting for a supreme shaper. His father, Folco Alighieri, was a professor of jurisprudence in Florence; and the family, though old and noble, held only a moderate position in the city. The very family of his mother, Bella, is unknown, and both his parents died while he was still young. His name, Dante, is an abbreviation of Durante. His parents' death left him under the guardianship and tuition of Brunetto Latini—a notable event for little Dante. Brunetto was not only a distinguished citizen, but one of the most learned men of his day. He unquestionably laid the foundations of that encyclopædic knowledge which is as marked a feature in the Divine Comedy as it is in Paradise Lost. The time was yet to come when a great poet might win his way to the Muses with "little Latin and less Greek"—or what ponderous old pedantic Ben considered little Latin, though it might be reckoned by us a tolerable ha'porth. Not content, moreover, with studying at Padua and Bologna, Dante "finished" at Paris, principally for the sake of philosophy and theology, as a young Englishman nowadays might finish at a German university. It was a wonderfully thorough education, the like of which no young man of fashion would dream of nowadays. But then it was possible to aim at universal knowledge, and pretty nearly to attain it. Besides his studies in what we should call science and general knowledge, his special knowledge of the arts and letters, Dante was as thorough a master as any cleric of the received philosophy and theology of the day—a fact of which his readers obtain painful and laborious assurance.

But no pedant was the future poet. The first thing on his return from Paris he fought at Campaldino for his native Florence against Arezzo. It was not the cause in which he was ultimately to suffer so much, for the Florentine army was Guelphic. Already, when he was but nine years old, he had begun that other discipline of love. Then, at a May party in the house of the Portinari, whither he went with his father, he met the little daughter of the house; Beatrice, one year younger than himself, and fell solemnly and precociously in love with her. Such is the story; and it is like enough with a child of his temperament. Back in Florence from the wars, Dante began the life of a brilliant young poet and politician. His associates, such as Guido Cavalcanti, his fellow-pupil with Brunetto, and his elder and predecessor in poetical fame, Cino da Pistoia, and Lapo Gianni, were all ultra-Ghibellines; poet and Ghibelline, indeed, were almost synonymous: and so it was inevitable he should take sides against the popular party of the Guelphs for which he had fought at Campaldino. The belief that the salvation of Florence and Italy lay in the submission of the country to the German emperors became the fixed creed of his life, and his abilities gradually made him conspicuous among the Ghibelline party.

Meanwhile he had met and renewed his passion for Beatrice Portinari; but it did not prosper. There are signs that young Dante, like young Shakespeare or young Donne, led rather a wild life; and once, at least, Beatrice refused to salute him in the street. To crown matters, she finally married another; but still the platonic passion continued and was recorded in the immortal Vita Nuova; where the foundation may be love but the edifice is certainly allegory. At last she died young; and after an interval of mourning he married another lady, Gemma Donati—of whom we only know that he wrote no poetry about her. The same inference has been drawn as in the case of Shakespeare and Anne Hathaway. And we are bound to say that when a poet's wife never by any chance gets into his writings, while another woman most conspicuously does, it looks as if one has the right to infer.

Nor were the great Florentine's politics more successful than his love matters. Poetry was the only mistress that smiled upon his suit. That during those years he must have stamped his personality upon his fellow-citizens as something more than a rising and somewhat lax-living poet is clear by the great catastrophe of his life. He had come to be recognised as a force in the turbulent affairs of Florence—a fatal distinction. Better for him had he, like his predecessor, Guido Guinicelli, been known as a mere maker of songs, which all parties might admire. For there was struggle in Florence: the Ghibellines drove out the Guelphs, and reigned supreme in a Pyrrhic triumph—as it proved. The government of the city was reorganised on Ghibelline lines, and Dante was placed at its head. Dante, the poet, ruler of Florence! It is an extraordinary tribute to the man's versatile faculty and commanding character. Poet rulers there have been before and since, but not ruler poets. That is, there have been rulers—kings and others—who were poets of some distinction, but not poets who rose to be rulers. Victor Hugo made a poor thing of it as a parliamentarian. One has only to look at Dante's iron face to see the stuff of rule in him; but his companions were men of weaker stuff. It was imperative that an envoy should go to plead their cause with the Pope. There was no one whom Dante could trust to go but himself. There was no one he could trust to leave behind but himself. Painfully misdoubting what would happen among his loggerhead fellows if he were away, he yet (in an evil hour for his cause and himself) decided to leave Florence on the embassy. While he was in Rome came the counter revolution in Florence. The Ghibelline leaders were expelled, decree of banishment was pronounced against the absent arch-Ghibelline—soon to be the arch-poet—and a price set on his head. The interesting experiment of the ruler-poet came to a premature end.

Then began the famous wanderings of Dante. From the castle of one little Ghibelline war-lord to another the sombre and now ageing exile drifted, bearing his wrongs in his bosom and immortality in his pocket; for during this enforced absence from politics and family he fell back upon the composition of the Divine Comedy. We should doubtless have had it none the less had he stayed in Florence; but many persons of very good family might have escaped hell. To Paris again he wandered, and, coming back, had a gleam of hope. For Henry of Luxemburg was elected Emperor of Germany, and forthwith revived the pretensions of his predecessors by invading Italy. Lombardy at Milan gave him submission and the Iron Crown, but Florence stood out; and Dante exultingly beckoned his vengeance upon the haughty city. But the Luxemburger marched on to Rome, fortune turned against him, and when he returned to besiege Florence his army melted away before the pestilence. He retreated to die, broken-hearted; and all was over with the poet. Of Dante's residence and bickerings with Can Grande at Verona you may read in Rossetti's fine poem. There, too, you may read a splendidly poetised account of his answer to the insulting amnesty which Florence offered him, on condition that he should pay the fine, and undergo the public ignominy of the coiners pardoned by custom on St. John Baptist's Day. The offer was made known to him by a Florentine Franciscan; and his actual letter is sternly grand enough, without the added magic of Rossetti's numbers. Thus the close of it runs:

A FLO. MONK.

"No, good father! That is not the way for me to return. But should a way be found by yourself or others that shall not take from Dante's fame and honour, be sure that I shall follow it. Should no such way be found by which I can enter Florence, then its gates I shall never pass. And what? Shall I not see wherever I turn the bright rays of the sun and of the stars? Can I not everywhere under heaven speculate on the sweetest truths of life without submitting myself to the people of Florence, stripped of my glory and covered with ignominy? Not even bread shall fail me."

With Guido Novello, Lord of Ravenna, Dante found a final asylum. There he completed his days and the great poem, the gradual publication of which had already made him famous. As he had been exiled during one embassy, it was his fate to die after another. On his return from an embassy he had undertaken to Venice for Guido, he caught a fever and expired. The last portion of his poem was only found and published after his death. So Florence kept her living poet an exile to the last. And ever since she has been vainly striving to recover from Ravenna his dead bones. Which thing, is it not an allegory of the world's treatment of its poets? That is what we know of the life of one of the world's greatest poets—a story sad, terse, dignified, and worthy of the man.

The Hero as Mountaineer.

The Highest Andes: a Record of the First Ascent of Aconcagua and Tupungato in Argentina, and the Exploration of the Surrounding Valleys. By E. A. FitzGerald. (Methuen. 30s. net)

From the Alps to the Andes, being the Autobiography of a Mountain Guide. By Mattias Zurbriggen. (Fisher Unwin.)

EVER since Falstaff—himself no hero—reviled "the cankers of a calm world and a long peace," it has been the custom with certain philosophers to look on war as the most fertile breeder of the heroic virtues and to clonk its savagery with sentiment. To such thinkers Mr. FitzGerald's long struggle in the service of science with the elemental forces of nature, if it appear heroic at all, will appear but a heroism of the lower order, but to such as have no love for the hot-blooded heroisms of the bayonet and yet believe endurance and courage to be the basal virtues, this story of the conquest of Aconcagua will be of high inspiration. It is not a record of mountaineering in the ordinary sense; to ice and rock-craft there is little explicit reference; the arch-enemy is not the mountain, but the atmosphere, and the issue of the assault depends less on axe and rope than on temperament.

Aconcagua rises twenty-three thousand and eighty feet above the sea, and Mr. FitzGerald's highest camp—where he spent, on and off, many weeks—was only some four thousand feet from the summit, yet the circumambient air of that last three-quarters of a mile presented a more formidable obstacle than he had ever before encountered. The assault on this invisible barrier by the handful of intrepid men that formed his party—falling back exhausted time after time, yet for ever hurling themselves against it as in some forlorn hope—is an epic in action. Three of them at last pressed through—first the chief guide, Mattias Zurbriggen, then Mr. Stuart Vines, the geologist of the expedition, with the guide Nicola—but the leader himself had finally to abandon the attempt, an heroic victor nevertheless, though disappointed in his supreme ambition.

The effect of these high altitudes upon the individual explorers is described in the book with much detail, but perhaps nothing else will convey to the man in the plains such a forcible impression of the physical havoc they caused as the following homely comparison. "Nobody can conceive," writes Mr. FitzGerald, "unless he has tried to work under similar conditions, the feeling of utter lassitude that overtakes one. I have heard people complain of the same sort of feelings from acute sea-sickness. Having suffered badly from that malady myself, I can say that a man could go about and cheerfully do his work while suffering from the worst attack of sea-sickness far more readily than he could take his pocket-handkerchief out to blow his nose at an altitude of 19,000 feet." Add to this that there were times when some of the men—all hardened mountaineers—"sat down, and absolutely cried, great tears rolling down their faces, simply because of the cold," and that "the stoutest-hearted man" Zurbriggen ever knew "wept bitterly," because he had broken a bottle of wine, and we shall have some slight notion of the transformation to be effected by rarified air.

In one sense the most absorbing chapters in the book are those in which Mr. Vines describes his ascent. Who will not be glad that he has attempted to describe what lay before him as he stood on the highest point yet reached by man? Of the view to the west he says:

No lens or pen can depict the view on the Chilean side. I looked down the great arête, past the western peak of the mountain to right and left, over ranges that dwindled in height as they neared the coast, to where, a hundred miles away, the blue expanse of the Pacific glittered in the evening sun. [He had left the camp at 8.30, and reached the summit at 5.] Far down to the south, and fifty leagues away to the north, stretched the vast blue line. The sun lay low on the horizon, and the whole surface of the ocean between the point of vision and the sun was suffused with a blood-red glow. The shimmering of the light on the water could be distinctly seen.

He stayed more than an hour on the top, and then, as he began the descent, the sun [he tells us], a great ball of blood-red fire in a cloudless sky, was dipping into the waters of the Pacific. Rapidly it sank, and disappeared from view. Yet, as if still struggling for supremacy with the fast-approaching night, an after-glow of surpassing beauty spread over land and sea in a series of magnificent changes of colour. The mighty expanse of water from north to south, together with the sky above it, was suffused with a fiery red glow. While the red in the sky remained, the waters, through a variety of intermediate shades of colouring, turned slowly to purple and then to blue. And yet we were not in darkness, for with the sun's departure the risen moon had declared itself with wondrous brightness, penetrating the thin atmosphere and flooding everything with its colder light. The effect produced by such a combination of brilliant moonlight and glorious sunset was beautiful beyond words. For during half-an-hour that wonderful glow rested on the horizon of the Pacific—a great red line of subdued fire suspended in mid-air, the darkness that had fallen like a pall on sea and land beneath severing its connexion with the earth.

But the most important part of Mr. FitzGerald's work was the exploration of the envioning country, and in that he met with the fullest measure of success. His labours, indeed, have materially added to our knowledge of that out-of-the-way part of the world—its topography, its geology, its fauna and flora, and (it may be added) its manners and customs. The record, moreover, possesses the additional interest of robust adventure; and whether we are triangulating in the Horcones valley with Mr. FitzGerald; volcano-hunting in Southern Chili with Mr.

Vines; crossing the Cumbre Pass (12,800 feet), with revolvers and half a ton of precious baggage, in the teeth of an appalling blizzard, with Mr. Lighbody; or collecting specimens in the wastes of Inca or the vineyards of Lujan with Mr. Gosse, we are sure of a "crowded hour of glorious life."

The expedition started from Southampton with eighty tons of luggage; lasted seven months; included five Swiss guides and an innumerable host of native carriers; cost we know not how many thousands; ended in serious illness for many of the party; and was, withal, a notable achievement. And the book that enshrines the record is in all respects worthy. With its elaborate appendices, its excellent maps, and its numerous illustrations—many of rare beauty—it is even a greater material triumph than the same writer's previous volume on the Alps of New Zealand.

Mr. Zurbriggen is, by common consent, the finest exploring guide the world has yet produced. Born in 1856, in the heart of the high Alps, it was not till 1880 that, driven from pillar to post in the valleys by an innate restlessness, he determined to devote his life to the mastery of the great mountains. Since then he has made conquest after conquest—all detailed in the present volume—not only in his own Switzerland, but in the Himalayas, in New Zealand, and in the Andes, where, as Mr. FitzGerald has just shown us, it was he who first set foot on the hitherto untrodden summit of Aconcagua.

The life-history of such a man, told in the rough, spontaneous eloquence of his native tongue by hut or bivouac-fire on the crag of some great peak, would flood the soul of the fortunate listener with many emotions, whereas the same thing on paper, in the elaborated idiom of translation, with embellishments and enlargements by the translator, stuck between conventional covers and besprinkled with illustrations sometimes uncalled for and sometimes unworthy, loses a large part of its most characteristic quality and scarcely reveals a personality.

And so it comes to pass that the writer of this autobiography lives more truly in other men's books than in his own, not because he tells his tale clumsily or incompletely—though there is a marked reticence on many of the matters that go to make up a man—but because it is not the real man who is telling it. The book, judiciously edited, should have revealed an unconscious hero; it shows us instead a good fellow and a skilful climber, with a constitution of iron, an indefatigable energy, a passion for adventure, a touch of piety, and a liking for bottled beer and a cigar. But this is not Mr. Zurbriggen's fault; it is the fault of his friends. The book, nevertheless, will be attractive to many as being the first attempt of any guide to give an account of himself and his doings in print, and as containing a record of mountain-adventure that few climbers—and certainly no guide—could match.

Mr. Seaman's New Volume.

In Cap and Bells. By Owen Seaman. (Lano. 3s. 6d.)

WELL-MEANING, educated readers say of Mr. Seaman's verse that it is "not unworthy of Calverley," that "he is on Calverley's level," that he is "almost as good as Calverley." It is, perhaps, a blunder to make the comparison, but as it is made so frequently, everyone interested in good work is driven, in the first instance, to approach Mr. Seaman from that particular standpoint, and every just mind is soon forced to admit, with all admiration for Calverley and without the least disparagement of his gifts, that, as a parodist and in technique, Mr. Seaman is Calverley's superior. Some, preferring generous before sardonic humour, would even maintain that the second comer is the better wit. The amusement to be found in Calverley is certainly, for the most part, embittering. There may be laughter, but there is little true gaiety in his verse. His parodies, again, are ingenious, yet they are rarely sympathetic. Take, for instance, his parody of Browning—"The Cock and the Bull." It is stupidly funny. Browning's intellect is never once taken into account: he wrote every way except foolishly, and to burlesque his manner where he himself, as in certain portions of "The Ring and the Book," is taking some elbow-room at the expense of dull dogs shows a want of critical perception. And so "The Cock and the Bull" misses its mark. This is not the case with Mr. Seaman's "Resignation"—a dramatic study after the same master. Here the subject is seen as Browning might have seen it, and it is treated with the irony which no one commanded more often than Browning himself. Other parodies in Mr. Seaman's new volume are wonderful examples of this difficult art: the Stephen Phillips, the Alfred Austin, the Watts-Dunton, and the George Meredith are faultless. And, further, not one of these distinguished writers would find anything offensive or ill-bred, or, worse still, unknowing in these remarkably skilful productions.

Mr. Seaman has imitated, in each case, with a poet's appreciation, the treatment and the musical tone, but he employs, in the subject-matter, his own observations and his own ideas. Calverley, on the other hand, lacked imagination, or what is sometimes called the instinct for beauty. He wrote as a man of the world, not as a poet, not as an artist. His verse is correct enough, and it looks well on the page. Poetry, however, is for the ear and voice, not for the eye. There must be sound and feeling as well as sense. These indispensable characteristics are never absent in Mr. Seaman's brilliant work. Calverley's lines are often tortured, curiously harsh, and difficult to speak—common effects among parodists who catch the time and not the tune of a poet's literary style. He was also an uncompromising realist: sentimentality, we may believe, irritated, bored, perplexed him; he had, as one says, "no patience with it," and was consumed by an anxiety to get the first laugh—an uneasy, fatal habit among English authors of this generation. Mr. Seaman, less self-conscious, and therefore much stronger, writes with the straightforward ease of those who, acutely susceptible to what is droll, have not sacrificed every high faculty and ideal to that relatively small side in human affairs. There are many modern minds who are capable of seeking for the humorous aspect of the Agony in Gethsemane. Mr. Seaman possesses the great quality of discrimination, and his new volume is much more than a collection of extraordinarily clever poems and burlesques. It is a chivalrous book—a book with what may be called "a whole soul." And lest any one with the fear of chivalry before his eyes should suspect that a "whole soul" is not racy, let us hasten to add that it is the best comedy possible, and English in the most gallant sense.

Other New Books.

FROM KING ORRY TO QUEEN VICTORIA. BY E. CALLOW.

"This is not a guide-book," says Mr. Callow. It is not. It is such a popular history of the Isle of Man as may well satisfy the thirst for information of the summer visitor to that delectable isle when he has exhausted the guide-book. It should lie upon the table of every hotel coffee-room and every lodging-house parlour in Douglas. Mr. Callow has no pretensions to be a scientific historian, but he has gathered his material with care, and has put it together in a readable and anecdotal form. Those who regard the Isle of Man as a sort of ancestral estate belonging to Mr. Hall Caine will be surprised to learn that he is not, to the best of our belief, so much as mentioned in the volume. The King Orry who appears in the title was a Norse Viking who conquered the Celtic inhabitants of the island in the tenth century, set up a dynasty, and, if tradition may be credited, founded the representative House of Keys upon Tynwald Hill. To this day Man, unlike its greater Celtic neighbour, possesses Home Rule. It is an independent unit in the British Empire; the Queen of Great Britain is also Lady of Man. In the thirteenth century Hakon Hakonson of Norway was defeated by Alexander III. of Scotland, and Man became an appanage of the Scottish Crown. Edward I., and after him Edward III., conquered it, and it was held with the title of king by divers noblemen and Court favourites. Ultimately Henry IV. granted it for an annual tribute of a cast of falcons to Sir John Stanley. From him sprang the Earls of Derby who remained until 1504 "kings," and until the eighteenth century "lords," of Man. Then it passed through the distaff line to the Dukes of Athol, who ruled it ill and selfishly. In 1765 it was sold to the British Crown for £70,000 down and certain annuities. But the final claims of these ducal "horseleeches"—it is Mr. Callow's word—were only settled, in 1829, by a payment of £400,000 more. (Elliot Stock.)

HOW SOLDIERS FIGHT.

BY F. NORREYS CONNELL.

The popular taste appears to demand books of the drum-and-trumpet order just at present. Wherefore Mr. F. Norreys Connell has felt called upon to put forth a volume in which he essays to describe the duties which the various branches of the Army are called upon to perform, and the feelings of the soldiers who perform them. Mr. Connell as a writer of stories we know, and have been able to commend; but we have not been able to discover that Mr. Connell has any special knowledge of warfare, or any claim to rank as an authority on the doings and the feelings of soldiers. It is true that he exhibits an enthusiasm for "bugginess"; and in reading his book there came back to our memory some lines from some dreadful stanzas that were current about twenty years ago:

O ain't it a jolly lark,
A-cuttin' of the throats
Of them Boer blokes,
An' wadin' through blood in the dark!

Bloodshed may be necessary, but it is not for us who sit at home to take pleasure in the contemplation of it. Thus does Mr. Connell counsel the private of the line:

Of the tactics of infantry there is no end, but there are some simple rules for the individual foot-soldier to remember when lost in the chaos of battle. If you cannot bayonet your enemy, shoot him; if he goes away, aim at the base of his spine. But do not let your attention be distracted from business by the consideration that other people are making a mark of you. It is your duty to kill the highest possible number of those opposed to you, not to save your own skin.

Such counsel as this is not likely to reach the infantry soldier, and it leaves an unpleasant taste in the mouth of the civilian reader. (James Bowden. 3s. 6d.)

LEGENDS OF THE BASTILLE.

BY FRANTZ FUNCK-BRETANO.

In this merciful, researchful age the worst men and the worst institutions of the past stand a good chance of receiving justice or, at the least, a coat of whitewash. M. Funck-Bretano sets himself to demolish those legends which represent the Bastille of the eighteenth century as the abode of disease and tortures. We are no longer to believe in iron cages, underground dungeons flooded by the Seine, toads, lizards, rats, scant furniture, clanking chains, Cimmerian darkness, and unknown accusations. These are the dreams of melodrama, and the prison was a desirable residence. Each prisoner had a large room, adequately furnished, and he could add to the furniture.

He could procure whatever clothing he needed, and could even indulge his fads. "Paris was ransacked to find 'a dress of white silk spotted with green flowers,' for a lady named Sauvé, and when the gaolers could find only a white dress with green stripes theirs was the dejection! Good fires blazed, pens and books were in plenty, and there were concerts in the prisoners' rooms and in the governors' rooms. Prisoners could pursue their hobbies, or they could walk on the platform of the fortress and watch the crowds on the boulevard.

As for Latude and his tales—pooh! He never stood waist deep in water; on the contrary, he was removed to a better cell when the floods arose. When he complained of rheumatism furs were provided for him, and when he wanted a dressing-gown of "red-striped calamanco" it was obtained. His Memoirs are "a tissue of calumnies and lies," and it is pointed out that this man, who alleged that he had suffered torture and exposure for thirty-five years, was active and gay at seventy-five, and died at eighty. There is, of course, no doubt that the extravagance of the French Revolution infected its memories and legends, and that not all these have been corrected by later historians. M. Funck-Bretano's defence of the Bastille is a striking one, and is supported by documents, but that it will prevail against the forces of settled tradition is doubtful. Tradition says that the Bastille was a "hell of living men," and that it was taken by storm. M. Funck-Bretano says it was a comfortable hotel, and that it was entered in a quarter of an hour. Tradition quotes the poets, M. Funck-Bretano prefers contemporary records. An interesting book, with an introduction from the pen of M. Victorien Sardou. (Downey. 6s.)

THE ENGLISH CHURCH (597-1066).

BY WILLIAM HUNT, M.A.

This is the first instalment of a somewhat comprehensive undertaking, a complete History of the English Church on a scale considerably larger than any other modern work—for modern histories, civil or ecclesiastical, are generally little more than Introductions and Outlines—and incorporating the results of recent research. The task is obviously one too great for any single scholar of these degenerate days, and it has been divided into seven periods and put into the hands of seven men. Mr. Hunt's share reaches from the coming of Augustine to the Norman Conquest, and among the names of writers to whom later sections are assigned we notice those of such competent historians as Canon Capes and Dr. Gairdner. The general editors are the Dean of Winchester and Mr. Hunt himself. In order, we suppose, to avoid controversy other than historical, it appears to be intended that the work should close with the eighteenth century. Mr. Hunt adds to real learning an adequate narrative style, and we especially commend the judicial and scholarly temper in which he approaches his theme. He says of the volume:

While it is written from the standpoint of a member of the Church of England, it has not been my design either to advocate the principles of a party, or even to exalt the Church. Whether the fact that the Church held certain beliefs and enjoined certain practices a thousand and more years ago is any reason why it should do the like now is not for me to say. Everything recorded here has been inserted either because it seemed to me necessary to my narrative or interesting in itself. It has been my earnest wish to present a thoroughly truthful picture of the Church during this period, and not to misrepresent anything. No cause seems the better for the art of the special pleader, still less for disingenuousness. Nor would the interests of the Church, even if they could be saved by such methods, be so sacred to me as historic truth.

We are a little surprised, in view of the scale and importance of this history—"the first attempt," says Mr. Hunt, "to write a continuous History of the English Church before the Norman Conquest with any degree of fulness"—that Mr. Hunt has not thought it desirable to give full references to the authorities for his statements in footnotes. Instead of this, he only gives a brief general list of authorities at the end—why not the beginning?—of every chapter. (Macmillan. 5s. net.)

SHAKESPEARE'S SONNETS.

BY SAMUEL BUTLER.

We had thought—shall we say, hoped?—to have heard the last of the Sonnets for some time. But Mr. Butler comes late and eager into the field, with an elaborate introduction, footnotes, a reprint of the Quarto text, and all the rest of it. Mindful of a recent volume in which Mr. Butler tried to prove that Nausicaa, of all people, wrote the Odyssey, we were quite prepared to find him ascribing the Sonnets to Queen Elizabeth, or Lettice Devereux, or Mary Fitton herself. On the contrary, with the exception of a slight tendency to indulge in the somewhat dangerous pastime of re-arranging the order of the Sonnets, he faces the problem in a thoroughly sober and scholarly mood. We have not space to discuss his views in full, but the volume is one which no serious student can afford to neglect. Briefly, Mr. Butler is neither a Herbertian nor a Southamptonian. He tilts indifferently at Mr. Archer and Mr. Sidney Lee. But he takes the common-sense view that the "Mr. W. H." of the preface was the person to whom the Sonnets were written, and he thinks, chiefly on the ground of the italicised *How*s in Sonnet 20, that the initials conceal some unidentified Will Hows probably of obscure social standing. It may be so. In any case, we think that few scholars will follow Mr. Butler in the belief that the Sonnets were literally the work of Shakespeare's "pupil pen," and were written between 1585 and 1588. (Longmans.)

LETT'S DIARIES.

We have received a parcel of these well-known publications, the merits of which are too well known to need statement. But Lett's Diary No. 8, which is in a convenient octavo size and gives a page to each day of this year, strikes us as an excellent type of diary for the literary man. (Cassell & Co.)

Fiction.

Active Service. By Stephen Crane.
(Heinemann. 6s.)

THE hero of this novel is the editor of the Sunday edition of a New York paper, Rufus Coleman, a down-East Yankee of the most resourceful and clear-headed type. Coleman falls in love with Marjory Wainright, daughter of a college professor. The professor declines the young man as a son-in-law, and then, his daughter proving obstinate, takes her and his wife to Greece, with a party of young students. Rufus follows as correspondent of his paper, and there follows also a divette named Nora Black, who has something more than a preference for the great young Sunday editor. The presence of all the characters in Greece can only be explained by the fact that Mr. Crane has spent some time in Greece as a war-correspondent, and must have a large quantity of descriptive stuff to "work off." Otherwise it has no significance. Mr. Crane makes of the Turko-Greek war a rather effective background to a romantic love-tale with a "happy" conclusion. The book is full of those feats of description for which the author is famous—some of them really excellent, others nothing but trickeries in which a certain effect is obtained by applying to men the epithets of things and to things the epithets of men. But let us admit that Mr. Crane can handle the epithet and the simile with surprising, almost miraculous dexterity. The best chapter in the book is that in which is set forth the strenuous life of the sixteenth floor of the New York Eclipse building. It is a piece of sheer impudent vivacity, the end justifying the means. If it had not succeeded it would have been obviously crude; but it does succeed, and the sixteenth floor of the Eclipse building lives for you as in a biography.

A large part of the book is occupied with the American University student, of whom Mr. Crane presents several varieties in what one of his characters calls a "calcium light." These persons are not wholly fascinating; their passion for slang amounts to a disease—a disease which has communicated itself to Mr. Crane. If a slang phrase will roughly serve his turn he never hesitates to use it. The students' conversations have picturesqueness:

In the corridor, one of the students said offensively to Peter Tounley:

"Say, how in hell did you find out all this so early?"

Peter's reply was amiable in tone.

"You are a damned bleating little kid, and you make a holy show of yourself before Mr. Gordner. There's where you stand. Didn't you see that he turned us out because he didn't know but what you were going to blubber or something? You are a sucking-pig, and if you want to know how I find out things, go and ask the Delphic Oracle, you blind ass."

"You'd better look out, or you may get a punch in the eye!"

"You take one punch in the general direction of my eye, me son," said Peter cheerfully, "and I'll distribute your remains over this hotel in a way that will cause your friends years of trouble to collect you. Instead of anticipating an attack upon my eye, you had much better be engaged in improving your mind, which is not at present a fit machine to cope with exciting situations. There's Coke! Hello, Coke, heard the news? Well, Marjory Wainwright and Rufus Coleman are engaged. Straight? Certainly! Go ask the minister."

On the whole, Active Service is a little below Mr. Crane's best. It is mannered, and the mannerisms of a writer with methods so audacious and novel as Mr. Crane's are apt to irritate. But it quite deserves to be called a remarkable book.

Princess Feather. By A. C. Inchbold.
(Hutchinson & Co. 6s.)

MR. INCHBOLD (if, indeed, it be a man; but we are by no means sure) has written a novel of peasant life on the Sussex shore at the end of the eighteenth century. His heroine, Elizabeth, sprang originally from the Foundling Hospital. She was carefully brought up, and arrived at the status of a lady's maid. Pretty, clever, refined, reliable and good, she was a valuable pearl among lady's maids. One day she went with her mistress to stay at a country house. She there saw a sheep-shearing festival, and fell in love with the braggart but picturesque Michael Tagg, captain of sheep-shearers. She married him. Thenceforward her history is one of sorrow and declension. Michael was a smuggler and a bully—masterful, drunken, immoral, bestial—in fact, we suppose, an average eighteenth century peasant husband. In vain Elizabeth exercised amiability, obedience, and conscientious endeavour to please. He knocked her down with a single blow. She found herself a peasant's wife. Mr. Inchbold's concern is to make us feel what it was to be a peasant's wife in years before the battle of Trafalgar. He succeeds. The picture is sinister, but it convinces. Imagination has been put into this promising book. It is a book dominated by a sincere effort after truth—both dark truth and light. The realism is relentless, but it is a fine, selective sort of realism too. The difficult Sussex dialect is handled with skill, and the author has a pastoral, open-air sense of things which enables him to build up round his characters a genuine atmosphere of England's green and England's sea. In short, Princess Feather, no doubt a first attempt, may be called rather notable, since it has strength, colour, and a broad, just outlook. Some of the scenes possess a memorable stringency. The most dramatic is that of the wife auction (marking the lowest point of Elizabeth's fall), where the once prim and proud lady's maid is sold by her husband to a soldier for five sovereigns. We should like to quote from it, but a short extract would be inadequate. The psychology of the soldier and the subsequent passages between the soldier and Elizabeth are well and subtly done. They disclose a talent at once ingenious and agile, and, above all, honest with itself and its subject. That is the leading characteristic of this novel: a simple, unaffected intention to be real. On the whole, the style is the least satisfactory feature of the story. The author is too much inclined (as Schopenhauer puts it) "to think in phrases"—the worn-out stock-phrases which may have been fresh centuries ago—instead of constructing his sentences word by word.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

THE LADY FROM NOWHERE.

BY FERGUS HUME.

The author of The Mystery of a Hansom Cab again takes a murder as his theme. It occurs in a London suburb, the victim being an eccentric young lady who—to quote her landlady—"dined off a chop and potatoes, and dressed in silk and lace to eat them." Eyeing her room, with its violent yellow tone and gorgeous furniture, the detective Gebb rubs his hands: "By the sight of it, this is going to be a romantic case." (Chatto & Windus. 6s.)

A PURE CHILD-FACE.

BY E. S. PADMORE.

A didactic story in paper covers. The period is laid in the early days of Christianity, and the priest of the Sun has much to say. There are fairies and converts. The last sentence points the moral: "Better the Paradise of fools than the Gehenna of a sated soul." (Simpkin Marshall. 1s.)

WHILE THE LOTUS IS CLOSED.

BY MICHAEL GRANT.

A love-story with a background of wealth and titles and country life. The heroine "walked slowly across the lawn, the frou-frou of her skirts keeping time to the soft throb of the Blue Hungarian Band." (H. J. Drane. 3s. 6d.)

SHE STANDS ALONE.

BY MARK ASHTON

The central character in this story is Pilate's wife, "the Maid of Athens," who is treated in her character of pleader for Christ during His trial before Pilate. The story may be said to be written round the text "Have thou nothing to do with that just Man." Part of the novel is laid in Britain. "The great Julius has maligned Britain," she observed. . . . "It is not nearly so savage a country as I anticipated, and as to the barbarous natives who gave him such a rough reception, where are they hidden, centurion?" (Hutchinson. 6s.)

THE KINGDOM OF A HEART.

BY EFFIE ADELAIDE ROWLANDS.

A love-story of great length and many incidents, in which two sisters are the heroines. Tragedy, intrigues, secrets, and mistakes pass away. Then "Rachel's old audacious look danced in her eyes," and Anne "will be an ideal Rector's wife." The story ends on baby-socks: "Baby likes the pink ones best." (Routledge. 6s.)

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates for Yearly Subscriptions ..... 20s. including postage.

American Agents for the ACADEMY: Brentano's, 31, Union-square, New York.

Made Writing.

Travellers for Ever is the title borne by a dainty little book of "fantasies and sketches" written by Mr. L. Cope Cornford, and just published by Mr. Nutt. Mr. Cornford has recently written a very creditable study of the life and achievement of Robert Louis Stevenson. It is evident that he owes something of his style and vocabulary to Stevenson, something also of these to Mr. Henley; but we do not wish to make a point of this. The point we are led to make—after reading these essays not once, nor twice, but several times—is that Mr. Cornford is very typical of a multitude of young writers to whom a St. Paul, in the dawn of a new century, might say in gentle but convincing tones: "I perceive that in all things ye are too stylish." Paul would say "styleful"—unpleasing word—because it would carry his meaning. He would not say: "I perceive that in all things ye are too careful of style"; that is impossible in young writers. Style in excess is the evil—style conceived as the root instead of the flower. The fault, no doubt, leans to virtue's side; but just now it frequently is found leaning at an angle that demands correction. It does so in Mr. Cornford's essays.

Mr. Cornford's theme is the open road, that leads from cities into the fields and woods. It is a theme on which every man has leave to write, the condition is that he shall write well. In the limited sense that he writes carefully, and with a curious search for fit and musical words, Mr. Cornford does write well. It is, indeed, "evidently manifest," to use a phrase of his own, that Mr. Cornford has spent whole afternoons in making and pruning his style. Yet by his style—we are sorry to say—he is condemned. Everywhere it suggests things read, rather than things seen or felt. It is curious that in seven essays eulogising the country he hardly ever names a tree, bird, or plant. He writes—as might any of the "horde of sedentary persons" with whom he peoples London—"fir-woods," "old-grown woods," "shores alive with wild fowl," "bird-voices," "pollarded willows," "leviathan beeches," and "virginal birches." Once he names the hollow clapper of the cuckoo—a phrase that could be learned from a cuckoo-clock—but when "a bird in the thicket flutes a solo," we are not told what bird; and the "strange broken speech of the wild fowl, that sometimes sounds like words," is attributed to no species. Indeed, definiteness is the last quality of these polished but periphrastic essays. Landscapes are lost in adjective and metaphor. Thus:

All the eastern sky is glowing amber; westward, riding high, the moon stares from the empyrean of cold azure washed with silver, a disc of polished brass. Wreaths of mist fill the valleys, like fleeces of carded wool. The far, lusty clarion of chanticleer rings through the hushed expectancy. The east burns redder, melting into the blue, paling the brassy moon. The icy air grows warmer, and breathes an odour of grass and flowers. A grey continent of cloud, leaning from the western sky, flashes here and there with igneous flakes of red, and, yawning into cavernous deeps, slowly breaks in pieces, and drifts, red-dening towards the misty hills that rise beyond the creaming valleys and the hanging woods. The east burns into fiery rose; a tiny wreath of cloud floating above a black mass of foliage changes hue and shape, and floats away, still changing.

We are afraid that the impression floats away too. We quote another passage:

Out of the city the wayfarer follows the road; the road which runs up sheer into the lifting sky and leaps the hill, and, winding through shaughs and blowing meadows, leads past ancient churches grey with lichen and over shining water, trending always to the sea. Across the azure bloom of the summer champaign sweep vast shadows chasing gleams of silver light, until the sun goes down into his country of the sunset beyond the purple hills. Down the road, to the music of beating hoofs and tinkling bells, roll the harvest wains loaded high with wealth of sheaves; follows, heavy with toil, the train of bronzed labourers. Upon a dark bank, high above the road, stands a peasant woman holding a child in her arms, encircled and magically illumined by the western radiance.

This is Nature seen in engravings. The style cries for substance, for personality—all that makes style a virtue. To call the country alluring is not to make it so. You may write of "the jolly wind," "ribbons of running water," the "haunting, eager wind," and the "amorous bravery of the spring"; you may swear that the land "smells of fairies," and point to "the long silhouette of a town rising beyond the golden pastures of a lucent sky"; you may distinguish the colour of the sea as "lilac," and declare that old beeches are "writhen like fossil serpents"; you may speak of "a gaudy chime of bells"; and you may set these phrases in shapely sentences and paragraphs—still it may be naught. For to communicate only words, not things, or to communicate more words than substance, is to fail. Style is not the art of finding beautiful words and arranging them well; it is the art of fitting words to things, and arranging both well. Many pitfalls await the young author who thinks of words before things. He borrows unusual words from one model, or a few models, and the result is that in trying to bejewel his vocabulary he narrows it. Mr. Cornford uses words like "scanted," "brash," "hebetude," "wried," "immobile," "purview," "writhen," "ceiled," "scission" and "lure" (as a noun). It is made a point by many young writers to bring such words into use. Against that we have little to say, provided the words are come by rightly. But a writer should not try to tickle his readers by a word which he has not by processes of thought truly made his own. What we notice in Mr. Cornford's book is that the presence of unusual words does not give him a large vocabulary. His repetitions are many. On one page he writes: "You shall hear the tramp of ancient armies ring upon the ribs of earth"; on another, "the weapon digged from the adamant ribs of earth." A "white plume of smoke" is emitted, on p. 24, by a railway train, and on p. 36 a "level plume of smoke" floats from an outward-bound steamer. On p. 32 we have the "valiant sun," on p. 63 the "valiant stars." On p. 24 "the lusty clarion of chanticleer shatters the stillness"; and on p. 50 "the far lusty clarion of chanticleer rings through the hushed expectancy." Twice or thrice is the sky "lucent," and twice we have "the myriad wheels of circumstance." These repetitions, occurring in about fifty small pages, betray the dominance of words over things, and the dominance of a model over words. And here it may be said that the writer who takes Mr. Stevenson or Mr. Henley as his master makes a cardinal error: instead of contemplating these, who are two, he should study their models, who are many. Instead of imitating their writing, he should emulate their reading.

Nothing wearies like the excess of style over matter. For in such cases the disproportion is not all: the matter is sure to want quality as well as quantity. The thought seems caught out of the air. It is delicately worded, but it is of no account. It is pretty, but it is not true. Mr. Cornford will have it that the lovers of the open road are elect. He draws tenebrous pictures of city life, of the town's "poisonous wilderness," its "sour gloom," and of the multitude who "cut their staves into shopmen's yards, and settle down to fatten peaceably in villas." He sees nothing between "the immemorial, elemental life of man, and civilisation's buckram parody." The "horrible shrill city" is to be flown. The town-dweller is admonished thus:

You read, vaguely, in the newspapers of the Army and the Navy, the Colonies, and the Agricultural Interest, it is true; nevertheless, you shall come to believe in time that the District Railway circumscribes the habitable world; and you go contentedly to and fro, like tame pheasants in a ring-fence preserve. But the drop of savage blood still throbs in some of you; and, although Esau may compromise with Jacob (for substantial reasons), he still refuses ultimate alliance with his smooth-faced kinsmen in the black coat and varnished boots.

This is what we may term "made" writing. It answers to no large essential facts. Need we point out that the wearer of varnished boots is no tame town pheasant, but a shooter of pheasants. Need we point out that the desire to see the country, and at last to live in the country, is the ruling passion of Londoners. What is suburban life but a tribute to the country? Every London suburb is a leaf straining to the light. Has Mr. Cornford seen a chrysanthemum show at the People's Palace? Has he attended a bulb auction in Poultry? or met the Spring in the Strand? A writer is not obliged to write all truths about his subject, but he must have a saving sense of them. And nothing obscures that sense more than a predominance of the wish to write over the wish to think.

We have examined Mr. Cornford's book with unusual keenness because we believe that he means to challenge criticism on his style, and because that style seems to afford a good object of inquiry at the present time. If it had fewer virtues we should have found fewer faults. Mr. Cornford has acquired a great deal of craftsmanship: his sentences as sentences, and his paragraphs as paragraphs, are very well turned; he has the taste for words. But —

How Long Should Copyright Last?

Mr. Bernard Shaw's Views.

IN our issue of December 2 we printed a number of replies which we had received from authors to the questions: Is Perpetual Copyright in books desirable? and, If not, how long should Copyright last?

To these questions Mr. Bernard Shaw replied as follows:

The proposal of perpetual copyright is a piece of rapacious impudence. Would it benefit anybody if the heirs of John Bunyan were now wallowing idly in royalties on The Pilgrim's Progress instead of working honestly for their living?

Considering that an inventor who enriches the world is granted patent rights for fourteen years only, it is not clear why an author, who possibly debauches it, should get from thirty to over one hundred years' copyright. The present term is too long, except in a very few special cases, for which extension should be granted on application to the courts. If the descendants of authors want copyrights, they can earn them by writing books.

In our issue of last week we printed the views of Mr. Herbert Thring, secretary of the Society of Authors, who concluded his remarks as follows:

It appears to me extraordinary that none of your contributors have taken into account the fact that neither the public nor the author's descendants reap the benefit, but the publishers.

Do I understand that it is the general opinion of literary men that the profits arising from the judicious administration of literary property should belong to the publisher, rather than the author's representative or the public?

Mr. Shaw now sends us the following rejoinder:

"Mr. Herbert Thring is mistaken in concluding that the point he raises has escaped my consideration. What is of more importance, he is also mistaken in supposing that a publisher can make anything out of a copyright of which he has no monopoly. The entire works of Shakespeare can be purchased for sixpence less than Mr. Pinero's worst single play, because the publisher pays nothing for Shakespeare's work and can charge nothing for it. If he attempted to put a penny on to the price on Shakespeare's account his edition could instantly be under-sold to that amount by his competitors, who have the same access to Shakespeare as he. I can take a copy of 'Hamlet' into a jobbing printer's to-morrow and get it reprinted as cheaply as I could an equal quantity of copy offering rewards for lost dogs. Dent may charge me eightpence for 'Hamlet,' Cassell threepence for it, and Dicks a penny; but what I pay them for is the design of the book, the printing, the paper, the binding, the size, the copyright illustrations, the editorial notes, not for Shakespeare. Him I get for nothing.

Mr. Thring, nevertheless, thinks that a copyright which has become common property by the expiration of its monopoly is not really a national possession. In a sense, he is right. The Englishman who never buys a copy of Shakespeare's works, never reads one, and never goes to the theatre, may contend that he has never got anything by his share of the national inheritance of Shakespeare's genius, and that the readers and playgoers have used that inheritance without sharing it with him. He may claim that the Government should levy a royalty on all copies sold, and apply the proceeds to the general benefit in relief of taxation or otherwise. Similarly a Londoner who never goes into Hyde Park may contend that, to enable him to share its benefits with those who do go into it, a charge should be made for admission, and the proceeds devoted to the reduction of London rates. Or a bedridden ratepayer might demand that the street should be made a turnpike, so that the actual users should pay an equivalent for the wear and tear of the pavement into a common fund for the benefit of the bedridden and the active alike.

The answer to these perfectly logical proposals is, first, that their adoption would be so exceedingly inconvenient and costly if carried out consistently in every department of life, that they would make society physically impossible, whereas the existing communistic methods work fairly well. And second, that it is not true that the actual first-hand users of an institution are the sole or chief beneficiaries. Take the case of the British Museum Library and Reading-room. Is it a place kept up by the nation for the benefit of the readers? No: as we authors and journalists and literary hacks know to our cost, it is a place which benefits the nation through the labour (often miserably underpaid, and largely gratuitous) of those who work there. Take again the case of railways. They benefit everybody, but only on condition that a certain number of people face the discomfort and risk of travelling by them. Hence, when other Socialists have advocated free railway travelling, I, better advised, have advocated payment of railway travellers, a juster and more popular reform.

Mr. Thring, then, need not fear that the copyrights which have lapsed into the common stock benefit only the publishers who make use of them. On the contrary, the real difficulty is to induce publishers to touch them and face the competition that follows success with them. They prefer the monopoly of copyright. When I was a boy the American publishers vied with each other in bringing out editions of the latest works of our English novelists, who cried Thieves and Pirates with all their might. What was the result? The American public read all our leading works of fiction for a few cents, to their great benefit and to ours (since it was thus that they learnt to love literature); but the publishers were brought to the verge of ruin. To-day, when they ask me for new copyright matter, I tell them that a million words of my best writing lie at the disposal of every publisher in America; but they prefer to pay a royalty for a monopoly, and they are right. If we turn to the stage, we find that Sir Henry Irving, instead of pouring royalties into the pockets of Sardou, Pinero, Jones, and Grundy, has availed himself of the national property in Shakespeare. With what result? That he tells us that the non-copyright system has left him £100,000 to the bad. He is now glad to call in Sardou and pay him heavy royalties. It is a mistake to suppose that either publishers or managers profit by free books and plays. To them, monopoly is always worth the royalty it costs.

May I, in conclusion, say publicly what Mr. Thring knows privately: namely, that I am not one of those literary blacklegs who are not ashamed to earn a few disgraceful shillings by reviling the Authors' Society, and belittling the work which will make Sir Walter Besant famous, not as a mere author—that might happen to anybody—but as a great Trade Union secretary. Only, I have fought from the first against the clamour of the author for a perpetual literary property, and against the argument that if other men are allowed to quarter their descendants idly on the labour of future generations, why shouldn't we? Even if the claim were honest, and the argument worthy, what chance has either of acceptance in an age of increasing death duties, of jealous public limiting of concessions to electric lighting and tramway companies, of a general revolt of the public conscience against perpetual pensioners of all sorts? In this matter Sir Walter has the notions of 1860, and Mr. Lang those of 1870. It is now 1900—time for my ideas to have a turn. Mr. Nutt, I grant, is up to date: he faces the choice between the attitude of the Socialist and the attitude of the Struggle-for-Lifer, but does not give any reason why the Struggle-for-Lifers who are not authors should tax their posterity for the benefit of a seventeenth Duke of Besant or Marquis of Shaw. Perpetual copyright is an Alnaschar's dream, all the less worth troubling about in view of the fact that the copyrights most in need of help from the Society of Authors have a natural life—inextensible by any legal device whatever—of from twenty-four hours to eighteen months.

G. BERNARD SHAW."

Things Seen.

The Lower Criticism.

THE Beadle was a bland, elderly, sententious man, with a taste for wisdom, and a paternal interest in the shrubs and flowers of the Public Garden under his charge.

As my homeward route at the close of every working-day took me through his garden, a casual friendship grew up between us. We always exchanged greetings, which now and again expanded into conversation, as on one December evening when the trees stood out black and bare against the flying clouds. On that night the windows of the church at the corner of the garden were alight, and the frosty air was filled with melody.

"Choir practising, I suppose?"

The Beadle nodded, and tilted his bland face a couple of inches nearer the heavens. "It does one good to stand outside and hear them rolling the psalm to wintry skies," he said. "I don't go to church now. I've given up going to church. My wife goes to church, but women don't think the same way as men."

He was silent for a minute, gazing at the sky.

"Perhaps she's right," he continued; "but I don't see how a man can go to church if he doesn't believe the Bible's all true. Do you, sir?"

I gave a small, non-committal cough.

The singing ceased.

"Well, it's tea-time," he said; and as we paced along the asphalt path he inquired if I had seen the new Bible Dictionary. Without waiting for my answer, he continued: "It's a wonderful book. A gentleman, a great barrister living over there in the Inn, lent me the first volume. It goes from A to D, and plays havoc—great havoc, sir—with the Bible. It's queer reading for a Christian woman, so I keep it locked up, out of the way of my wife. It's no good upsetting one's womenfolk. They haven't got the same brains like us." He clutched my arm and lowered his bland face to mine: "'Tisn't only the Old Testament they play havoc with. There's a German professor says that the Star of Bethlehem shines only in the legend, and—and—his voice sank to a whisper—they don't even let St. Paul alone. But I must keep it from the missis. It don't do, sir, to upset women."

By this time we had reached the lodge. He pushed open the door, disclosing a bright room with the cloth laid for tea. In a low chair by the fire sat an old lady, with an open book upon her knees. She smiled upon her husband and greeted me pleasantly.

"I was getting anxious about you, William, dear."

"I've been having a bit of a talk with this gentleman," said William.

"And what have you been talking about?" asked the old lady.

William looked uncomfortable: "It's not the kind of talk that you would want to hear, Mary."

She glanced up quickly at her husband. There was such divination in the look—such a kind, reproachful comprehension shone on her wrinkled face—that I was moved to say: "Your husband has been regretting that he can no longer go to church because—because the higher criticism has made such havoc with the Bible that he can no longer accept its infallibility."

"Dear William!" said the old lady, and she took her husband's hand. "Dear William!"

She did not speak for a minute—she only looked at him, as one might look at a forgiven child.

"Dear William," she said, "I knew what was troubling you, and I knew that you was trying to spare me. Oh, William, 'tisn't what men have said or written that's given me peace all my days and happiness now that I'm an old woman. If every line of the Bible was proved to be false, if all the learned men in the world came to the door and told me I was an old goose, it wouldn't make no difference. Dear William, it's what I know that makes me happy and sure—so sure. Nobody can teach me, and nobody can take it away from me, William, dear." And then she read aloud this from the book upon her knee:

"I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care."

All Real.

HE was a big man, and a veritable red-neck. Looking at him as he sat next me at the long counter of a London restaurant, I surmised thus:—An office in the City, a house at Crouch End, a wife and four children, a good deal of smoking and billiards, a good deal of sleep and tubbing. Yet this formidable Englishman had propped before him a well-thumbed copy of Short Stories, a penny weekly publication. While he was cutting his stewed steak and conveying it to his mouth his eye never left the frivolous page leaning against the water-jug.

The contradiction between the man whose back sloped away like a mountain side and the frail penny literature which interested him more than his food fascinated me. Long he munched and read, and long I was conscious of his tall silk hat tilted back, and his staring forward gaze at the paper. A colophon on the page showed that the story was ending. My curiosity was great. At last he started, summoned the waiter, and counted out his money. Meanwhile I was able by an effort to gather the conclusion of the story which had held him. This is what I read in difficult glances:

"On the Green Room couch lay Nanine; on one side stood Lord Borrodaile, Harold Methuen on the other. . . .

She opened her eyes. There bending over her stood her mother and Harold Methuen, hand in hand.

She raised herself. 'The cue, prompter; quick, the cue.'

Harold bent over. . . . 'I love you, I love you.'

She rubbed her eyes. 'Yes, cue, love.'

'I love you with all my heart.'

'Curtain, quick, curtain.'

'No, dearest, this . . . beginning of the act.'

She looked . . . dazed way, . . . recognition came.

'Not acting, . . . real, all real. Oh, I . . . happy now!'

Correspondence.

"E. H." and "Contemporary Style."

SIR,—Could you not bestow a New Year's boon on the majority of your readers by spiking "E. H.'s" gun, or taking away his breech-block, and so putting an end to his pedantic effusion on a subject already fairly well understood by many educated persons? He does not appear to note the difference between a report written against time and calculated to convey an idea of the situation to eager and anxious readers, and Count Tolstoy's MS.—which makes one long to be his typewriter!

Now if you could persuade "E. H." to send his lucubrations to the prisoners at Pretoria, history would be repeated, and no doubt the prisoners would be charmed. On May 2, 1818, Mr. William Cobbett wrote a dedication to his Grammar, of which the following is a portion:—"To Mr. Benbow, shoemaker, of Manchester. DEAR SIR,—When, in the month of August, 1817, you were shut up in an English Dungeon by order of Lord Sidmouth, without any of the rules or forms prescribed by law of the land; without having been confronted with your accusers; without having been informed of the charge against you; while you were thus suffering under the fangs of absolute power, I did myself the honour to address you, from this place, two Letters on English Grammar, and in those letters I stated to you my intention of publishing a book on that subject."

How delighted Mr. Benbow must have been! I am told a prisoner will read anything.

Well, in the course of Mr. Cobbett's work, he quotes startling errors from Dr. Johnson's writings in the Rambler. It is quite evident the Doctor either emended his writing till he forgot his subject, or else thought quicker than he could write. The majority of books are marred by stilted grammatical (?) sentences, which delight reviewers, but stop all action. Fancy you and I on the top of a fire-escape pausing to consider our Addison! "Get on, or let me," would be about our form; we should wait till afterwards to note the "lurid glow," and "the myriad, wind-swept sparks falling in showers like a labyrinthine firmament." May we never try. A happy new year.—I am, &c., EYRE HUSSEY.

Bromsberrow, Ledbury: Jan. 3, 1900.

[“Fancy you and I on the top of a fire-escape.” By fancy Mr. Hussey means imagine or supposo. In any case, the word is an active transitive verb, and should have governed the accusative.—E. H.]

Our Weekly Prize Competitions.

Result of No. 15 (New Series).

LAST week we offered a prize of one guinea for the best set of mottoes to be placed over the doors of (a) a dining-room, (b) a music-room, (c) a library, and (d) a bedroom. The mottoes were to be chosen from English authors and none were to exceed two lines in length.

A not unexpected feature of the mottoes sent to us is that almost every set contains at least one happy suggestion. Not a few sets contain three good mottoes but break down in the fourth.

The best complete set of mottoes comes from Mr. Barnell Payne, 78, Wimpole-street, Cavendish-square, W., to whom a cheque for one guinea has been sent. Mr. Payne's set is as follows:

DINING-ROOM.

"Now, good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both." Shakespeare.

MUSIC-ROOM.

"Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears." Shakespeare.

LIBRARY.

"Come and take choice of all my library." Shakespeare.

BED-ROOM.

"O sleep! it is a gentle thing,
Beloved from pole to pole!" Coleridge.

Among other sets are these:

DINING-ROOM.

"Across the walnuts and the wine." Tennyson.

MUSIC-ROOM.

"The world is too much with us." Wordsworth.

LIBRARY.

"The rest is silence." Shakespeare.

BED-ROOM.

"He giveth His beloved sleep." The Bible.
G. D., Horley, Surrey.

DINING-ROOM.

"Be merry, masters, while ye may,
For men much quicker pass away." W. Morris.

MUSIC-ROOM.

"From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began." Dryden.

LIBRARY.

"The assembled souls of all that men held wise." Leigh Hunt.

BED-ROOM.

"For worst and best Right good is rest." William Morris.
M. A. C., Cambridge.

DINING-ROOM.

"Kissing don't last; cookery do." Meredith.

MUSIC-ROOM.

"Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears." Shakespeare.

LIBRARY.

"Here are books, if we have brains to read them." Thomas Carlyle.

BED-ROOM.

"Let still Silence trew night watches keepe,
That sacred peace may in assurance rayne." Spenser.
E. U., Campden Hill, W.

DINING-ROOM.

"Now, good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both!" Shakespeare.

MUSIC-ROOM.

"God has a few of us whom He whispers in the ear;
The rest may reason and welcome: 'tis we musicians know." R. Browning.

LIBRARY.

"O blessed Letters, that combine in one
All ages past, and make One live with All!" S. Daniel.

BED-ROOM.

"He giveth His beloved sleep." The Bible.
M. A. W., Watford.

Replies received also from: B. D., Newington Butts; G. E. B., Forest Gate; A. T., Reigate; N. F., Glasgow; E. B., Liverpool; A. E. C., Brighton; J. B., Edinburgh; W. B. K., London; A. E. T., Bristol; C. K., Dublin; Rev. R. F. McC., Whitby; J. A. C., South

Hackney; A. H. W., Westward Ho; A. M. J., Eccles; B. B., Birmingham; J. D. W., London; A. R. B., Malvern; D. M. L. S., London; L. P., Inverness; C. M. J., Hexham; C. J. P. C., Cambridge; M. C., Dorking; C. S., Brighton; J. R., Aberdeen; W. H. B., Plaistow; H. R. C., Egham; H. F. McD., London; S. T., London; W. J. F., Birmingham; E. L. C., Redhill; F. L., London; G. R., Aberdeen; J. B., Wimbledon; E. G. B., Liverpool; E. E., Malvern; H. W. F., Cork; G. E. M., London; H. D. R., London; E. H., Didsbury; G. S., Edinburgh; H. G. H., Whitby; A. H. C., Lee; A. U., London.

Prize Competition No. 16 (New Series).

THIS week we set our readers an exercise in ingenious versification. A little booklet, entitled More Anagrams, by "Some Minor Poets," just issued by Messrs. Spottiswoode, contains 100 examples of the application of the anagram to rhyme. For example:

My Muse, who often ——— to treat
Of trifles, now has persevered
To tell of him, whose fearless fleet
Once ——— the haughty Spaniard's beard.
By bold ———, in daring age,
Drake ——— his name on history's page.

And again:

Macbeth, by all his ——— forsaken,
Died fighting rather than be taken;
With less to fear and hopes more slight
Did ——— to the fight.

The first of these verses is completed by arranging the letters D-E-I-G-N-S in four ways to fill the four blanks. The verse then reads:

My Muse, who often deigns to treat
Of trifles, now has persevered
To tell of him, whose fearless fleet
Once singed the haughty Spaniard's beard.
By bold design, in daring age,
Drake signed his name on history's page.

Similarly, the second verse is completed by arranging the letters T-H-A-N-E-S as Thane, Athens, and hasten.

We offer a guinea for the best anagram-verse of this kind.

The subject of the verse must have a literary flavour.

The key-words must be supplied to us, and these should be written below the verse, not inserted in the blanks.

The pith and quality of the resulting anagram-verse will be our main consideration in awarding the prize.

RULES.

Answers, addressed "Literary Competition, The ACADEMY, 43 Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Tuesday, January 9. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found in the first column of p. 20 or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. We wish to impress on competitors that the task of examining replies is much facilitated when one side only of the paper is written upon. It is also important that names and addresses should always be given: we cannot consider anonymous answers.

OUR SPECIAL PRIZE COMPETITIONS.

(For particulars see inside page of cover.)

Received this week: J. D.

New Books Received.

[These notes on some of the New Books of the week are preliminary to Reviews that may follow.]

POMPEII: ITS LIFE AND ART.

BY AUGUST MAU.

The present work is in no sense a translation of Herr Mau's earlier and numerous contributions to the subject. The plan of the book falls naturally into several divisions, the first of which recounts the early history of the city and its destruction. A large portion is devoted to a description of the excavations which have been made, and the various buildings, public and private, which have been uncovered. Ten full-page photographs, and more than two hundred "half-tone" engravings are provided, and the book is in all other ways handsomely equipped. (Macmillan. 25s. net.)

DARWIN AND DARWINISM.

BY P. Y. ALEXANDER.

A clearly written and manifestly sincere criticism of many of Darwin's positions. Mr. Alexander acknowledges "the master's" wonderful gifts of observation, but like some other critics—distrusts his conclusions. Only certain lines of inquiry are opened in this book, of which the "argument" is stated very succinctly under eleven heads. The author's first point is to endeavour to show that the Origin of Species, in its main character, was superseded by the Descent of Man. The misuse of the word instinct, by Darwin and his disciples, is another of Mr. Alexander's themes. (Bale, Sons & Danielsson. 7s. 6d. net.)

PULPIT POINTS FROM LATEST LITERATURE.

BY J. F. B. TINLING.

"Illustrations are necessary to a preacher, and a large proportion of them should be fresh." Accordingly Mr. Tinling has made this collection of short extracts from the books of 1898, touching on all manner of pulpit topics, as: "Apathy," "Official Corruption," "Meeting Death," "A True Gentleman," "Marriage Without Love," "Night Refuges," &c. It is his hope to issue such a volume yearly. (Hodder & Stoughton. 5s.)

LIFE AND HAPPINESS.

BY AUGUSTE MAROT.

A practical unpretending little book of advice about the care of Body, Mind, and Soul, by one who, finding himself strong and happy, wishes to see his readers similarly blessed. This personal tone distinguishes the book from most budgets of advice. (Kegan Paul. 2s. 6d. net.)

OSBERN

AND

URSYNE:

A DRAMA IN THREE ACTS.

BY

JOHN OLIVER HOBBS.

PRESS NOTICES.

"The work before us reveals a sustained nobility of style ..... And this short essay in dramatic verse can only add fresh proof of the fine catholicity of her genius."—OWEN SEAMAN, in the Morning Post, Nov., 1899.

"There is a play by John Oliver Hobbes in verse, which, solemn and pathetic as it is, is quite as admirable ..... as her lighter prose."

Scotsman, July 3, 1899.

"This is a striking poetical play written partly in rhymed dialogue, partly in blank verse, and partly in prose ..... There is real poetry in the play, and it has more than beauty enough to make it please any lover of poetry who takes it up."—Scotsman, Nov. 11, 1899.

"John Oliver Hobbes's new venture is a tragedy, and in some sense a strong one. It is good to read and might easily be adapted for the stage. It has the merit of concentration, and, if carefully mounted and skilfully acted, would produce powerful effects. Its plot is one which might have inspired Aeschylus or Shakespeare to produce a great play ..... It is a powerful play, and is full of striking lines and passages. Whether it is put upon the stage or not, it may be said with truth that the author has achieved a success that has in it some of the elements of greatness."—Glasgow Herald, Nov. 11, 1899.

"Osbern and Ursyne," a drama in three acts in verse, seems to us very beautiful and melodious."—Daily Chronicle, June 30, 1899.

"In 'Osbern and Ursyne' ..... the theme is dramatic, the handling imaginative and powerful."—WILLIAM ASCHER, in the Daily Chronicle, Nov., 1899.

"Written partly in blank and partly in rhymed verse, with an occasional subsidence into prose, 'Osbern and Ursyne' contains pretty passages and some striking ones ..... One is stirred by the keynote of the drama—a love great enough to make a woman kill her beloved for his good, and a love great enough to enable a man to commit murder to save his sweetheart from a taint."

Outlook, Nov. 11, 1899.

"John Oliver Hobbes's blank verse Anglo-Saxon play, 'Osbern and Ursyne,' has ..... subtlety. It is also lofty and poetical ..... In reading it you cannot help feeling that she understands the principles of tragedy."—Queen, July 29, 1899.

"Mrs. Craigie's play ..... both in bulk and literary merit is the most important contribution to the 'Anglo-Saxon.'"—Standard, June 30, 1899.

"The play is a very fine piece of dramatic literature, in which all the clearness of vision and insight into motive which crystallises into sparkling epigram in this author's novels, has been used to form poetic periods which are neither artificial nor unduly stilted. Some of the passages are almost Shakespearean, and will easily bear comparison with extracts from Rostand's 'Cyrano.' Considerable knowledge of stage technique is also manifest throughout, and it is evident that Mrs. Craigie has devoted considerable time and used the results of copious study in the construction of the play."

Brooklyn Eagle, Nov. 29, 1899.

JOHN LANE, The Bodley Head, Vigo Street, London.

CATALOGUES

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS of FREE LIBRARIES.—The JANUARY CATALOGUES of Valuable SECOND-HAND WORKS and NEW RE-MAINERS, offered at prices greatly reduced, are Now Ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & SONS, Library Department, 186 Strand, London, W.C.

WILLIAMS &amp; NORGATE,

IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, North Frederick St.
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BOOKS WANTED—25s. each offered.—Stevenson's Edinburgh, 1879—Tennyson's Poems, 1830—Symonds's Age of the Despots, 1879—Symonds's Essays, 2 vols., 1890—Symonds's Sketches and Studies in Italy, 1879—Inland Voyage, 1878—New Arabian Nights, 2 vols., 1892—Hawthorne's Grange, 1847—Wild Wales, 3 vols., 1864—Moore's Alps in 1864—Scrope's Salmon Fishing, 1843—Crown's Painting in Italy, 5 vols., 1864—Kinz's Glumpine, an Interlude, 1837. Rare Books Supplied.—BAKER'S GREAT BOOKSHOP, BIRMINGHAM.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and moving 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.

Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALIAS, 151, Strand, London, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.—Authors' MSS., Plays, Legal and Scientific Documents, &c., at usual rates. Translations from and into Foreign Languages.—W. T. CURTIS, 10, Harringay Park, Crouch End, London, N.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. 10d. per 1,000 words. Samples and references. Multi-Copies.—Address, Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TRAFALGAR LITERARY and TYPE-WRITING BUREAU (DE MOMET & WALKER), 3, Trafalgar Buildings, Northumberland Avenue, W.C.—Typing, Duplicating, Shorthand, Reporting, Translations (all Languages), Literary Researches, Press Cuttings.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. ON CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

"THE ACADEMY"
LITERARY COMPETITIONS.

New Series. No. 16.

All readers attempting this week's Competition (described fully on page 19) must cut out this Coupon and enclose it with their reply.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, Cooper's Hill, Staines.

The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for Employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1900. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition—Twelve Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphs Department, One in the Accountants' Branch P.W.D., and One in the Traffic Department Indian State Railway.—For particulars apply to Secretary at College.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION for FILLING-UP VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th and 22nd instant. For information apply to the Rector of St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—The EXHIBITION of WORKS by VAN DYCK is NOW OPEN DAILY, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Admission, 1s.; Catalogue, 6d. Season Ticket, 5s.

WOOD-CARVING CLASSES at KING'S COLLEGE, STRAND, W.C.

FOR LADIES OR GENTLEMEN.

LENT TERM will commence on MONDAY, January 22nd. DAY CLASSES, by W. H. HOWARD, on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Fees from 1 to 3 Guineas per Term: hours, 11 to 5 o'clock.

EVENING CLASSES, by G. J. BULL, on Monday and Wednesday, from 7 till 9 o'clock. Fees per Term: One Evening per week, 10s. 6d.; Two Evenings, 18s. 6d.

Tools provided. Prices at end of Session. Inspection of Studio and work in progress invited during hours named above, when all information will be given by the Instructor in charge.

STANTON W. PRESTON,
Clerk to Worshipful Company of Carpenters.
WALTER SMITH,
Secretary to King's College.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY
(LIMITED),

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of
all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN
SPANISH, and RUSSIAN BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA
per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS
per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis
and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT
GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, SPANISH, and RUSSIAN BOOKS.

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; 48, Queen Victoria
Street, E.C., LONDON;

And at Barton Arcade, MANCHESTER.

MONTHLY, PRICE HALF-A-CROWN.

The CONTEMPORARY REVIEW

CONTENTS FOR JANUARY.

CAPITALISM and IMPERIALISM in SOUTH AFRICA.
By J. A. HENSON.

RADICALISM and the IMPERIAL SPIRIT.
By A. R. CARMAN.

IS IT the VOICE of the HOOLIOAN? By SIR WALTER REAGAN.

CABUL and HERAT. By DEMETRIUS C. BOULGER.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON'S LETTERS.
By AUGUSTINE REBELL, Q.C. M.P.

OTHER THINGS and IMPROVEMENTS in CYCLES.
By JOSEPH PENKELL.

THE RIDDLE of the NATIONS.
By Professor R. S. CONWAY, LL.D.

CANADIAN TRADE with GREAT BRITAIN.
By RICHARD JAGO.

LADIES' DWELLINGS. By ALICE ZIMMERMAN.

SOCIALISM in the UNITED STATES.
By AMAROCK PARE WISTON.

PUER FARVULUS. By the Countess MARTINEGO-CESAREO.

OUR PRESENT KNOWLEDGE of the LIFE of CHRIST.
By JAMES STALKER, LL.D.

CROMWELL'S CONSTITUTIONAL AIMS.
By Professor S. R. GARDINER.

THE WAR in SOUTH AFRICA. By an OFFICER.

LONDON: THE COLCHESTER COMPANY (Limited), Columbus House, 43 and 43A, Fetter Lane, E.C.

THE

GEOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL.

Price 2s.—CONTENTS.—JANUARY.

ON DESERT SAND-DUNES bordering the NILE DELTA.
By VAUGHAN CORNISH.

THE "YERMAK" ICE-BREAKER. By Vice-Admiral
MAKAROFF, of the Russian Imperial Navy.

ON THE CONFIGURATION of the EARTH'S SURFACE, with Special Reference to the British Islands. By the Right
Hon. Sir JOHN LEWIS, Bart., M.P.

A RECORD of EXPLORATION in NORTH-EAST AFRICA.
DISTRIBUTION of AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS outside the TROPICS. By A. J. HAZENSTON.

LIEUT. KOZLOFF'S EXPEDITION to CENTRAL ASIA.
THE MONTHLY RECORD.

OBITUARY.—Sir RAWSON WILLIAM RAWSON, K.C.M.G.,
C.B.

CORRESPONDENCE.—LONGITUDE of NKATA BAY, LAKE
NYASA. By Captain C. F. CLOSE.

THE MANSAROWAR and RAKASTAL LAKES. By Lieut.
O. KENDALL-CHANNED.

MEETINGS of the ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.
SESSION 1899-1900.

GEOGRAPHICAL LITERATURE of the MONTH.

NEW MAPS.

NUMEROUS MAPS and ILLUSTRATIONS.

EDWARD STANFORD, 26-27, Cockspur Street, Charing Cross,

LIGHTS and SHADOWS of a BYGONE
DAY (drawn by H. W. BREWER); St. Sophia, Constantinople, by A. E. HENDERSON (with Illustrations); Greek Grave-Reliefs, by Miss JANA E. HARRISON (with Illustrations); Nomenclature of English Gothic Styles; Illustrations of Rheims (drawn by W. MOOK); New Palace Hotel, Paris; New Reredos, Bristol Cathedral; Dorchester Abbey ("Abbey of Great Britain" Series); "Monument Aox Morti," Père Lachaise Cemetery, Paris.—See the New Year's Number of THE BUILDER (4d.; by post, 4d.). Through any newsagent, or direct from The Publisher of "THE BUILDER," 46, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS
TO
"THE ACADEMY,"
Consisting of Thirty-seven Portraits of Old and New Celebrities in Literature, may still be obtained, singly, or in complete sets for 3s. 6d., on application to the Office, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY

For JANUARY,

COMMENCES A NEW VOLUME, and contains Contributions by—

COLONEL SIR GEORGE SYDENHAM CLARKE, K.C.M.O., F.R.S.—"THE DEFENCE of the EMPIRE and the MILITIA BALLOT."

SIDNEY LOW—"THE MILITARY WEAKNESS of ENGLAND, and the MILITIA BALLOT."

COLONEL J. G. B. STOPFORD—"THE VOLUNTEERS."

SIR HENRY HOWORTH, K.C.I.E., M.P.—"OUR INDIAN TROOPS."

THE REV. DR. WIRGMAN (Canon of Grahamstown Cathedral)—"THE SOUTH AFRICAN CONSPIRACY against BRITISH RULE."

DR. ST. GEORGE MIVART, F.R.S.—"THE CONTINUITY of CATHOLICISM."

HERBERT PAUL—"THE PRINCE of JOURNALISTS."

THE LATE NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE—"THE GHOST of DR. HARRIS."

THE REV. JOHN M. BACON—"CLIMATE and the ATMOSPHERE."

MONTAGUE CRACKANTHORPE, Q.C.—"CAN SENTENCES be STANDARDISED?"

PAUL BETTELHEIM—"THE JEWS in FRANCE."

THE REV. C. G. LANG—"THE WAR RELIEF FUNDS."

R. B. TOWNSHEND—"THE COMMON MULE."

J. CUTHBERT HADDEN—"THE TINKERING of HYMNS."

SIDNEY LEE—"SHAKESPEARE and the MODERN STAGE."

SIR WEMYSS REID—"THE NEWSPAPERS."

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LTD.

BLACKWOODS' NEW EDUCATIONAL WORKS.

BLACKWOODS'

ILLUSTRATED CLASSICAL TEXTS.

General Editor—H. W. AUDEN, M.A.,

Assistant-Master at Fettes College.

LEADING FEATURES OF THE SERIES.

- Interesting Biographical and Critical Introductions.
- A Sound Text.
- Practical Notes.
- Careful Typography.
- Useful Summaries and Appendixes.
- Numerous Plain and Coloured Illustrations, Maps, and Plans.

NOW READY.

Cæsar—Gallic War. Bks. IV., V. By ST. J. B. WYNNE WILLSON, M.A., Assistant Master at Rugby. With or without Vocabulary. 1s. 6d.

(Prescribed for the Oxford Local, London Matric., and College of Preceptors Exams., 1900.)

Virgil—Georgics. Bk. IV. By J. SARGEANT, M.A., Assistant Master at Westminster. 1s. 6d.

In active preparation:—

Ovid—Metamorphoses (Selections). By J. H. VINCE, M.A., Assistant Master at Bradford. [Immediately.]

Cicero—In Catilinam. Bks. I.-IV. By H. W. AUDEN, M.A., Assistant Master at Fettes College. [Shortly.]

Cæsar—Gallic War. Bks. I.-III. By J. M. HARDWICK, M.A., Assistant Master at Rugby.

Homer—Odyssey. Bk. VI. By E. E. SIKES, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of St. John's College, Cambridge.

Ovid—Elegiac Extracts. By A. R. F. HYSLOP, M.A., Assistant Master at Harrow.

Sallust—Jugurtha. By J. F. SMEDLEY, M.A., Assistant Master at Westminster.

Homer—Odyssey. Bk. VII. By E. E. SIKES, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of St. John's College, Cambridge.

Demosthenes—Olynthiacs, I.-III. By H. SHARPLEY, M.A., formerly Assistant Master at Marlborough.

Cicero—Pro Lege Manilia and Pro Archia. By K. P. WILSON, M.A., Assistant Master at Fettes College.

Cicero—Pro Cæcina. By Rev. J. M. LUPTON, M.A., Assistant Master at Marlborough.

Tacitus—Agricola. By H. F. MORLAND SIMPSON, M.A., Rector of Aberdeen Grammar School.

Livy—Book XXVIII. By G. MIDDLETON, M.A., Lecturer in Sanskrit and Comparative Philology in the University of St. Andrews.

Euripides—Hecuba. By F. GRIFFIN, M.A., Head Master of Birkenhead School.

Nepos—Select Lives. By Rev. E. J. W. HOUGHTON, M.A., Head Master of King Edward's Grammar School, Stratford-on-Avon.

Xenophon—Anabasis. Bks. I., II. By A. JAGGER, B.A., Hymer's College, Hull.

Virgil—Æneid. Bks. V., VI. By ST. J. B. WYNNE WILLSON, M.A., Assistant Master at Rugby.

Other Volumes to follow.

GREEK AND LATIN.

Greek Prose Phrase Book. By H. W. AUDEN, M.A., Editor of "Meissner's Latin Phrase-Book." Interleaved. 3s. 6d.

Greek Test Papers. By JAMES MOIR, Litt.D., LL.D., Co-Rector, Aberdeen Grammar School. 2s. 6d.

Higher Greek Unseens. By H. W. AUDEN, M.A., Assistant Master at Fettes College. 2s. 6d.

Higher Greek Prose. By H. W. AUDEN, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Lower Greek Prose. By K. P. WILSON, M.A., Assistant Master at Fettes College. 2s. 6d.

Higher Latin Unseens. By H. W. AUDEN, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Higher Latin Prose. By H. W. AUDEN, M.A. 2s. 6d.

* * KEY (for Teachers only), 5s. net.

Lower Latin Unseens. By W. LOBBAN, M.A. 2s.

Lower Latin Prose. By K. P. WILSON, M.A. 2s. 6d.

* * KEY (for Teachers only), 5s. net.

Tales of Ancient Thessaly. An Elementary Latin Reading Book, with Vocabulary and Notes. By J. W. E. PEARCE, M.A., late Assistant Master, University College School, London. 1s.

ENGLISH.

Blackwoods' School Shakespeare. Edited by R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON. Each Play complete, with Introduction, Notes, and Glossary. In Crown 8vo Volumes. Price 1s. 6d. each, cloth; paper, with cloth back, 1s.

As You Like It.

(Prescribed for Cambridge and Oxford Local Exams., 1900.)

The Merchant of Venice	Julius Cæsar	[Ready.]
Richard II.	The Tempest	[Ready.]

Blackwoods' Literature Readers. Edited by JOHN ADAMS, M.A., B.Sc., F.C.P., Rector of the Free Church Training College, Glasgow.

Book I.	Price 1s.	Book III.	Price 1s. 6d.
Book II.	Price 1s. 4d.	Book IV.	Price 1s. 6d.

A History of English Literature. For Secondary Schools. By J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A., First English Master, Edinburgh Ladies' College. 3s.

Outlines of English Literature. By J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A. 1s. 6d.

English Verse for Junior Classes. By J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A. Part I.—CHAUCER TO COLERIDGE. Part II.—NINETEENTH CENTURY. Each 1s. 6d. net.

English Prose for Junior and Senior Classes. Part I.—MILTON TO BOSWELL. Part II.—NINETEENTH CENTURY. By J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A. Each 2s. 6d.

Paraphrasing, Analysis, and Correction of Sentences. By D. M. J. JAMES, M.A. 1s.

One Hundred Stories for Composition. Told in Alternative Versions. 1s. 3d.

Stormonth's Handy School Dictionary. New Edition, thoroughly Revised. By WILLIAM BAYNE. 1s.

FRENCH AND GERMAN.

The Tutorial Handbook of French Composition. By ALFRED MERCIER, L.-ès-L., Lecturer on French Language and Literature in the University of St. Andrews. 3s. 6d.

The Children's Guide to the French Language. By ANNIE G. FERRIER, Teacher of French in the Edinburgh Ladies' College. 1s.

Select Passages from Modern French Authors (Prose and Verse). With short Literary and Biographical Notices. Part I. ADVANCED COURSE. Part II. JUNIOR COURSE. By L. E. KASTNER, B.A., Lecturer in Modern Languages at Caius College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d. each.

French Historical Unseens. For Army Classes. By N. E. TOKE, B.A. 2s. 6d.

A Compendious German Reader. Consisting of Historical Extracts, Specimens of German Literature, Lives of German Authors, an Outline of German History (1640-1890), Biographical and Historical Notes. Especially adapted for the use of Army Classes. By G. B. BEAK, M.A., Oxon, Modern Language Master at The King's School, Braton. 2s. 6d.

Progressive German Composition. With Copious Notes and Idioms, and FIRST INTRODUCTION TO GERMAN PHILOLOGY. By LOUIS LUBOVIOUS, German Lecturer in the Free Church Training College, Glasgow. 3s. 6d.

Also in Two Parts:—Composition. 2s. 6d. Philology. 1s. 6d.

* * Key to Composition (for Teachers only), 5s. net.

Lower Grade German. Reading, Supplementary Grammar with Exercises, and Material for Composition. With Notes and Vocabulary, and Ten Popular Songs in Sol-fa Notation. By LOUIS LUBOVIOUS. 2s. 6d.

MATHEMATICS.

Modern Geometry of the Point, Straight Line, and Circle. An Elementary Treatise. By J. A. THIRD, M.A., Head Master of Spier's School, Beith. 3s.

Arithmetic. With numerous Examples, Revision Tests, and Examination Papers. By A. VEITCH LOPHIAN, M.A., B.Sc., F.R.S.E., Mathematical and Science Lecturer, E.C. Training College, Glasgow. With Answers, 3s. 6d.

Complete Educational Catalogue forwarded post free on application.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.'S LIST.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ADMIRALS ALL!"
STORIES from FROISSART.

By HENRY NEWBOLT. With Illustrations by Gordon Browne. Large crown, cloth boards, gilt top, 6s.

STORIES from FROISSART.

By HENRY NEWBOLT.

STORIES from FROISSART.

By HENRY NEWBOLT.

STORIES from FROISSART.

By HENRY NEWBOLT. Cloth, 6s.

"No better book could be chosen to teach a boy some of the noblest years in our 'rough-and-tumble' island story,' and it could hardly have been presented in a better form."
St. James's Gazette.

A THRILLING STORY BY A NEW WRITER.

I LIVED AS I LISTED.

By ALFRED L. MAITLAND. With Etched Title and Frontispiece, from Drawings by A. G. Walker, Sculptor. Large crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

"Wholly delightful."—Truth.

I LIVED AS I LISTED.

I LIVED AS I LISTED.

JUST PUBLISHED

I LIVED AS I LISTED.

By ALFRED L. MAITLAND. Large crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mr. Maitland looks upon his story as a 'frail cockleboat of a romance.' It is nothing of the kind. It is an uncommonly strong romance. It is admirable."—Scotsman.

BY THE POPULAR AUTHOR OF "THREE GIRLS IN A FLAT," "A HAUNTED TOWN," &c.

MARGET at the MANSE.

By ETHEL F. HEDDLE. With Illustrations and Cover designed by Gordon Browne. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.
"These stories of a little Fishershire parish remind one considerably of that first work of Mr. Crockett's which made a reputation at a bound. And we go so far as to say that the pathos in them is sounder, the tears they draw of a finer water, and the laughter every bit as merry as his."—Daily Chronicle.

JUST OUT.

MARGET at the MANSE.

By ETHEL F. HEDDLE. Crown 8vo, cloth 6s.

MARGET at the MANSE.

By ETHEL F. HEDDLE. 6s.

MARGET at the MANSE.

By ETHEL F. HEDDLE. 6s. At all the Libraries.

THE NEW BOOK BY THE POPULAR AUTHOR OF "THREE GIRLS IN A FLAT."

MARGET at the MANSE.

By ETHEL F. HEDDLE. 6s.

"It argues a man able, on the part of an author to be able to take up the every-day humdrum lives of a few very commonplace people and invest them with such genuine interest that we enter into their joys and their sorrows as keenly as if we lived in their midst."—Literary World.

JACK and JILL'S JOURNEY.

Reprinted from the Sun-Children's Budget. By PHOEBE ALLEN, Author of "Playing at Botany," &c. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, boards, 3s. 6d. [Now ready.]

JACK and JILL'S JOURNEY.

Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

VOL. I. NOW READY.

THE SUN-CHILDREN'S BUDGET.

Edited by PHOEBE ALLEN and Dr. HENRY W. GOLDFREY. Containing Contributions by the Rev. HUGH MACMILLAN, Mrs. EARLE, ROSALIND NORTHGOTE, JULIUS H. E. VINES, F. G. HEATH, LIZZIE DEAS, M. GRENFELL, and others. With Illustrations of Plant Life. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

"It continues full of natural history lore pleasantly imparted."—Guardian.

"Young people will thoroughly enjoy the bright amusing papers on plant-life, wild flowers, &c., whilst their elders will appreciate Dr. Goldfrey's studies on elementary botany, with excellent illustrations by himself."—Daily News.

"An attractive magazine. There is a lot of botanical lore in it, put in simple form, and the publication as a whole is not only instructive, but entertaining. It contains interesting articles on 'The Future of British Flowers' by that eminent authority Percy Groom, M.A., F.R.S."—Church Belle.

"Conducted upon somewhat original lines. It is always interesting and sometimes quaint. We always greet its appearance with pleasure."—Churchwoman.

The SUN-CHILDREN'S BUDGET

for JANUARY contains a Frontispiece in Colours of Rother's Broom (Ruscus aculeatus), from a Painting from Nature, by Miss Rose Hue. Price 6d. Quarterly; post free for a Year, 2s. 4d.

London: WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.,
3, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.;
and 44, Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S LIST.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSTALLS.

In cloth gilt, price 6s. each.

ADELINE SERGEANT'S NEW NOVEL.

A RISE IN THE WORLD.

By the Author of "Blake of Oriel,"

"A Valuable Life," &c., &c.

W. CLARK RUSSELL'S NEW ROMANCE.

A VOYAGE AT ANCHOR.

By the Author of "The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor,'" &c., &c.

"This delightful story is in Mr. W. Clark Russell's happiest style."—Scotsman.

"A new idea which works out very successfully."—World.

FLORENCE WARDEN'S LATEST NOVEL.

A LOWLY LOVER.

By the Author of "The House on the Marsh," &c., &c.

"Thoroughly interesting."—Black and White.

NEW NOVEL BY LUCAS CLEEVE (Mrs. Howard Kingscote).

WHAT A WOMAN WILL DO.

By the Author of "Lazarus," "The Monks of the Holy Tear," &c., &c.

"Full of smart and bitter writing, readable and amusing in every page."—Academy.

"Rivets the attention, and interests the reader up to the very last page."—Punch.

"A really entertaining book."—Review of the Week.

F. V. WHITE & CO.,

14, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.

A SECOND IMPRESSION OF

LORD ROSEBERY'S

WORK ON

SIR ROBERT PEEL

IS NOW ON SALE. Price 2s. 6d.

"The little monograph as an estimate of Peel's personality is animated by vivid and luminous insight."—Daily Telegraph.

"An eminently readable and interesting short study of the great leader; luminous, and full of insight."—Scotsman.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Ltd., London, and all Booksellers.

SECOND EDITION.

LIFE of BISHOP SMYTHIES.

By GERTRUDE WARD.

Edited by the Rev. EDWARD F. RUSSELL. With Portrait, Illustrations, and Map, 200 pages. Price 4s. net.

"We hope that the memoir will have great and wide success."—Guardian.

"Full of charm.... A mine of information and sage counsel concerning some of the most difficult problems and discouraging results which evangelists abroad have to encounter, or their supporters at home to discuss."—Athenaeum.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

JUST OUT.

LETTERS from EAST AFRICA, 1895-1897.

With Illustrations and a Map. Price 3s. 6d. net.

THE UNIVERSITY'S MISSION TO CENTRAL AFRICA,
9, Dartmouth Street, Westminster.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO

"THE ACADEMY,"

Consisting of Thirty-seven Portraits of Old and New Celebrities in Literature, may still be obtained, singly, or in complete sets for 3s. 6d., on application to the Office, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

Osborn and Ursyne:

A DRAMA IN THREE ACTS.

BY

JOHN OLIVER HOBBS.

PRESS NOTICES.

"The work before us reveals a sustained nobility of style.....And this short essay in dramatic verse can only add fresh proof of the fine catholicity of her genius."

OWEN SEAMAN, in the Morning Post, Nov., 1899.

"There is a play by John Oliver Hobbes in verse, which, solemn as pathotic as it is, is quite as admirable.....as her lighter prose."

Scotsman, July 3, 1899.

"This is a striking poetical play written partly in rhymed dialogue, partly in blank verse, and partly prose.....There is real poetry in the play, and it has more than beauty enough to make it please any lover of poetry who takes it up."—Scotsman, Nov. 11, 1899.

"John Oliver Hobbes's new venture is a tragedy, and in some sense a strong one. It is good to read and might easily be adapted for the stage. It has the merit of concentration, and, if carefully mounted and skilfully acted, would produce powerful effects. Its plot is one which might have inspired Eschylus or Shakespeare to produce a great play.....It is a powerful play, and is full of striking lines and passages. Whether it is put upon the stage or not, it may be said with truth that the author has achieved a success that has in it some of the elements of greatness."

Glasgow Herald, Nov. 11, 1899.

"'Osborn and Ursyne,' a drama in three acts in verse, seems to us very beautiful and melodious."—Daily Chronicle, June 30, 1899.

"In 'Osborn and Ursyne'.....the theme is dramatic, the handling imaginative and powerful."—WILLIAM ARCHER, in the Daily Chronicle, Nov., 1899.

"Written partly in blank and partly in rhymed verse, with an occasional subsidence into prose, 'Osborn and Ursyne' contains pretty passages and some striking ones.....One is stirred by the keynote of the drama—a love great enough to make a woman kill her beloved for his good, and a love great enough to enable a man to commit murder to save his sweetheart from a taint."—Outlook, Nov. 11, 1899.

"John Oliver Hobbes's blank verse Anglo-Saxon play, 'Osborn and Ursyne,' has.....subtlety. It is also lofty and poetical.....In reading it you cannot help feeling that she understands the principles of tragedy."—Queen, July 29, 1899.

"Mrs. Craigie's play.....both in bulk and literary merit, is the most important contribution to the 'Anglo-Saxon.'"—Standard, June 30, 1899.

"The play is a very fine piece of dramatic literature, in which all the clearness of vision and insight into motive which crystallises into sparkling epigram in this author's novels, has been used to form poetic periods which are neither artificial nor unduly stilted. Some of the passages are almost Shakespearian, and will easily bear comparison with extracts from Rosset's 'Cyrano.' Considerable knowledge of stage technique is also manifest throughout, and it is evident that Mrs. Craigie has devoted considerable time and used the results of copious study in the construction of the play."

Brooklyn Eagle, Nov. 20, 1899.

JOHN LANE, The Bodley Head,
Vigo Street, London.

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1445. Established 1869.

13 January, 1900.

Price Threepence.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

IN our issue of next week we shall announce the names of the six books published in 1899 which we have selected for the ACADEMY's awards to authors in recognition of sincerity and thoroughness in literary art. The sum of One Hundred and Fifty Guineas will be divided into six portions of Twenty-five Guineas each. These will be awarded to the authors of books, representing various branches of literature, which, in our opinion, have not received the notice they deserve.

OUR issue of next week will also contain a Special Supplement containing a survey of recent educational publications, with articles of interest on the subject.

It is said that the competition between publishers for books about the war is much less keen than was fore-shadowed at the outbreak of hostilities. This is quite natural considering the enormous number of writing men, either accredited correspondents or freelances, who are in South Africa or on their way there, the majority of whom will probably write books. War volumes may be expected from Mr. G. W. Steevens, Mr. Winston Churchill, Mr. Julian Ralph, and Mr. Knight. It will be interesting to see who is first in the field. Mr. G. W. Steevens, who, we are glad to hear, is convalescent, has had plenty of leisure at Ladysmith to write a book on the siege.

THE speed with which Dr. Nansen gave to the world a popular account of his famous Arctic expedition is only equalled by the deliberation with which he has prepared his scientific records of the same expedition. These are now just nearing completion: they will form a series of "memoirs," which Messrs. Longmans will publish. Recognising the comparative newness of his subject, and the problems he deals with, Dr. Nansen has entered into great detail. He will give in most cases his original observations in full, so that the reader may compare his conclusions with his facts.

"ELEANOR," Mrs. Humphry Ward's new novel, begins in the January number of Harper's Magazine. The opening chapter is placed in Italy in a villa fifteen miles from Rome, and introduces us to a brilliant youth with a political past, a charming woman who is in love with him, and a visitor with whom he is apparently destined to fall in love. Mr. Barrie's "Tommy and Grizel" opens in Scribner's. It is the sequel to Sentimental Tommy, begins with the arrival of Tommy in London with his sister Elspeth, and launches him as a writer who suddenly becomes celebrated with a book called Letters to a Young Man about to be Married. The chapter is full of Mr. Barrie's particular humour, and contains a delightful sketch of a Colossus among writers of penny stories, one O. P. Pym.

HERMANN SUDERMANN's new play, on which he has been at work for the past year, is to be entitled "Johannisfeuer," the name given to the midsummer-day sports common in Germany. It preserves the mystical element found in his "Three Heron Feathers." The new play is to be produced at the Lessing Theatre.

OUR Mr. Winston Churchill is about to publish a novel called Savrola: a Tale of the Revolution in Laurania. "Our" Mr. Winston Churchill is, of course, the Mr. Winston Churchill, author of The River War, who has done such splendid work for the Morning Post in South Africa. He is not the American Mr. Winston Churchill, author of the successful novel Richard Carvel. The two writers are not related in any way. The only connexion between them is the remarkable fact that they bear the same Christian and surnames. "Their" Mr. Winston Churchill is the only son of Mr. E. S. Churchill, of Portland, Maine. He is twenty-eight years of age. "Our" Mr. Winston Churchill is the eldest son of the late Lord Randolph Churchill. He is twenty-five years of age.

THE dedication of Parson Kelly, Mr. A. E. W. Mason's and Mr. Andrew Lang's new novel of the Pretender days, is as follows:

TO THE

BARON TANNEGUY DE WOGAN

THE REPRESENTATIVE OF A HOUSE ILLUSTRIOUS FOR ITS ANTIQUITY:

IN PROSPERITY SPLENDID: IN EXILE AND POVERTY
GAY AND CONSTANT: OF LOYALTY UNSHAKEN; IS DEDICATED

THIS NARRATIVE, FOUNDED ON THE DEEDS OF HIS ANCESTOR, THE CHEVALIER NICHOLAS DE WOGAN.

DR. ST. GEORGE MIVART's novel, which is on the eve of publication, will be called Castle or Manor? It is described as a story of social life, and was completed some time ago. To publish a first novel at the age of seventy-three is something of a feat.

THE second number of the King contains a picture that marks a new departure in the history of illustrated journalism. It is a photograph of Lord Methuen directing the Battle of Magersfontein, which was taken by the "telephoto" lens, an adaptation of the telescope to photography, at a distance of over a quarter of a mile.

LORD ROSSLYN, who has found time in the midst of his stage work to edit Scottish Life, is now on his way to South Africa to represent the Daily Mail and the Sphere.

THE Spear is the title of a new paper registered at Stationers' Hall in the name of Sir William Ingram.

THE Ladysmith Lyre—of which copies have reached this country—is amusing, even in London. The Editor says:

The Ladysmith Lyre is published to supply a long-felt want. What you want in a besieged town, cut off from the world, is news which you can absolutely rely on as false. The rumours that pass from tongue to tongue may, for all you know, be occasionally true. Our news we guarantee to be false. In the collection and preparation of falsehoods we shall spare no effort and no expense.

We call Sir Walter Besant's immediate attention to the Lyre's notice to contributors:

Accepted contributions will be paid for at the rate of £10 per 100 words, or portion thereof, over the first hundred, which will be accepted gratis.

No contribution will be accepted which exceeds 100 words.

We feel an interest in the prospects of publishing at Ladysmith.

PUBLISHER'S COLUMN.

New edition just published, revised, and enlarged:

"Minor Tactics"—By Major-General Sir F. Clery, &c., &c., with an appendix, on the function and management of armoured trains.

"Deep Level Mining and the Mineral Riches of Ladysmith"—By the Saddler-Sergeant of the I.L.I.

"Ladysmith Revisited"—A volume of poems, by Silent Susan (shortly).

"From Park Lane to Pretoria"—By Winston L. Spencer Churchill (in preparation).

"A Handy Guide to Ladysmith"—By 2nd Lieut. Hooper, 5th Lancers (ready).

"Natal by Road and Rail"—By Commandant Schiel.

But is no one writing a volume of "Things Seen" at Ladysmith?

A CORRESPONDENT of the Daily News sends from Russia a curious and unpleasant account of the application of the censorship to English books arriving in Russia as Christmas presents. These, being obviously innocent, are not treated with oblitative "caviare," they are merely ripped to pieces with a dissecting knife, "presumably in search of revolutionary literature." Nursery books and pictorial A B C's are mutilated in this barbarous way. Even Dickens is detained:

A neighbour of mine purchased some three months ago the Daily News edition of Dickens. The books have been lying at the censor's office for a month past, although it is perfectly well known to the officials that the great English writer nowhere refers to Russia. All Dickens's works are now translated into Russian. Perhaps in another month or so the official will grant his imprimatur to my neighbour; but there is no use in attempting to hurry the censor, who is a tschinovrik against whom no appeal or protest will carry.

We should like to have Sam Weller's comments on this subject. Or Mr. Dooley's.

PERPETUAL Copyright did not commend itself to Dr. Johnson. Miss F. C. M. Dart writes to us: "While reading my Boswell the other day, I chanced upon a passage which struck me with added interest, for it was concerned with that burning question of literary copyright and its tenure. So I copy it for those readers of the ACADEMY who may not remember and yet appreciate its purport, or at least attach a certain significance to the opinion 'of that great Cham of literature, Samuel Johnson.' The point at issue was an Edinburgh bookseller's action in selling cheap editions of popular English books in defiance of the supposed common-law right of literary property. Boswell says: 'It is remarkable that when the great question concerning literary property came to be ultimately tried before the supreme tribunal of this country, in consequence of the very spirited exertions of Mr. Donaldson (the erring bookseller), Dr. Johnson was zealous against a perpetuity; but he thought that the term of the exclusive right of authors should be considerably enlarged. He was then for granting a hundred years.'"

In Prayers from the Poets (Blackwood), the cover-design of which we reproduce, we have an anthology happily inspired, and worked out with skill and care. The compilers, Mr. Laurie Magnus and Mr. Cecil Headlam, have drawn their material from a great many sources, and have sought and found permission to print a number of copyright verses. The editors' catholicity of taste is shown by their inclusion of poems so widely different as Henry Vaughan's "Lord, bind me up, and let me die," and Mr. Henley's "Out of the night that covers me," which appear on the same page. A poem which Messrs. Magnus and Headlam may like to note is contained in Mrs. Charlotte

P. Stetson's recent volume, In This Our World:

O God! I cannot ask Thee to forgive;
I have done wrong.
Thy law is just; Thy law must live—
Whoso doth wrong must suffer pain.
But help me to do right again—
Again be strong.

A FRIEND of the late R. L. Stevenson writes: "Here is a specimen of the way our Italian friends do their 'conveyancing,' it is taken from a publisher's advertisement. The italics are mine:

'Il Portone del Sire de Malétoit, Novella di Anderson, tradotta da Sofia Fortini-Santarelli; Citta di Castello: S. Lapi, Tipografo-Editore 1899.'

WE believe that the open access system in Free Libraries has worked very badly in some instances, books being stolen, or mislaid, while a larger staff is rendered necessary. But the Librarian at Croydon finds human nature pretty good: he reports that the books are not stolen, that they are not often mislaid, and that the staff is rather reduced than increased, while the number of books issued has gone up by many hundreds since the system was adopted.

In her Introduction to the new edition of Shirley (Smith, Elder), Mrs. Humphry Ward prepared us for a warm eulogy of Villette. Nor are we disappointed. Referring to Mrs. Gaskell's statement that Villette "was received with one burst of acclamation," Mrs. Ward says:

There was no question then among "the judicious," and there can be still less question now, that it is the writer's masterpiece. It has never been so widely read as Jane Eyre; and probably the majority of English readers prefer Shirley. The narrowness of the stage on which the action passes, the foreign setting, the very fullness of poetry, of visualising force, that runs through it, like a fiery stream bathing and kindling all it touches down to the smallest detail, are repellent or tiring to the mind that has no energy of its own responsive to the energy of the writer,

But not seldom the qualities which give a book immortality are the qualities that for a time guard it from the crowd—till its bloom of fame has grown to a safe maturity, beyond injury or doubt.

MANY English readers have hardly heard the name of Mr. E. L. Godkin, who for many years has had the reputation of being one of the strongest and most brilliant journalists in the United States. As editor of the New

MR. E. L. GODKIN.

York Evening Post and the Nation, the second paper being practically a weekly edition of the first, Mr. Godkin has given and taken hard blows since 1882. He has just retired from the editorship of these papers in consequence of ill-health, said to have been contracted while he was in London last summer. Mr. Godkin's early journalistic training was English, for it was as correspondent of the Daily News in the Crimean War that he started work. It is now Mr. Godkin's privilege to sit in his arm-chair and read divergent opinions on himself and his career. For instance, these:

The "Critic" (New York).

During the period of reconstruction after the Civil War, and in the long-continued struggles for tariff reform, the purification of the ballot, the elevation of the civil service, the establishment of the finances of the country on a sound basis, the separation of municipal affairs from state and national politics, and, finally, the curbing of the present lust for expansion by force of arms, he has been an aggressive and persistent fighter. No one identified with journalism in New York rivals him in the length and brilliancy of his service; and on the occasion of his receiving the degree of D.C.L. from Oxford in 1897, a leading English writer declared him to be perhaps the most distinguished of living journalists.

It is not often, by the way, that a critic flatters more than a mirror.

The "Mirror" (St. Louis).

He was a jaundiced, exclusive, hypercritical, unsympathetic publicist. He was always against whatever appealed most to the common people. He saw little but the deficiencies of popular government, rarely its great merits. He had high ideals, but they were frosty. He was so pertinaciously critical of things American as to be almost entitled to the epithet of un-American. He had brains, but his character as a publicist was repellent. His brilliancy was practically nullified by his acerbity. . . . Bile overbalanced his brain. His intellectualism took little account of toleration for human frailty. He was a polite and graceful Thersites, stupendously wrong-headed in his leanings toward the exclusive's views.

WHEN we enumerated some weeks ago Dr. Conan Doyle's many qualifications for making himself valuable in South Africa, we ended by remarking that he was a good surgeon. It is as a surgeon, we find, that Dr. Doyle is to go out. He will be attached to the Langman Field Hospital. An epigrammatist contributes the following to Books of To-day and Books of To-morrow:

MAJOR CONAN DOYLE, V.C.

Said Dr. Robertson Nikola concerning Sherlock Holmes (Who's volunteered for Africa as a change from writing tomes):

"He canna weel ignore the least of meeletary cues, For the modern soldier learns to fight by Multiple Reviews."

THE statistics of book-production for 1899 just issued by the Publishers' Circular present some unusually interesting features. To begin with, in spite of the war and the disturbed conditions that preceded it, the number of new books and new editions in 1899 exceeded by fifty those of 1898. Other things to note are these:

In fiction the number of new editions is 88 greater than in 1898. That is a healthy sign.

In belles-lettres, essays, monographs, &c., there is an increase of 102 books over 1898.

In poetry an increase of 23 volumes.

Oddly enough, political and kindred books have fallen by 70 from the total of 1898, and by 177 from the total of 1897.

THERE is always room for solid, well-printed and bound reprints of the classics, and we have no hesitation in commending the new "Library of English Classics" just begun to be issued by Messrs. Macmillan. The books in this library are in a rather large octavo size, and are bound in dull red canvas. Each book has a bibliographical note, otherwise it is left to shine in its own light, and by the aid of the best typography. The series has started with The Plays of Sheridan and Bacon's Essays and Advancement of Learning. Complete and accurate texts may be looked for in this series, which will speedily include Malory's Morte d'Arthur (2 vols.), Shelton's Don Quixote (3 vols.), Boswell's Life of Johnson (3 vols.), Lockhart's Life of Scott (5 vols.), a collection from De Quincey, and many other standard works. The price is 3s. 6d. net per volume.

FROM The Philistine, of East Aurora, N.Y.:

NOTICE.—Systematic attempts having been made by the tribe of Romeika to secure the gifted author of the Rubaiyat as a subscriber for clippings, this is to notify all parties that Col. Khayyam doesn't care a dam what the newspapers say about him, one way or the other.

MR. WALTER RALEIGH, whose treatise on Style won him some honour two years ago, has recently delivered an address on "The Study of Arts in a Modern University" to the students of the University College at Liverpool. The address is the first of a series of annual addresses to be delivered to the students in the Faculty of Arts. Mr. Raleigh's address sparkles, as his book did, with neat thoughts expressed in rather lapidary diction, as witness these sentences:

The poetry of Catullus has survived the passing of a religion and an empire; the diary of Mr. Samuel Pepys will be as fresh as at the day of its birth when the Forth Bridge is oxide of iron and London a geological pancake of brickdust.

It is not likely that man will ever be dangerously reluctant to form moral judgments, and to act upon them. But that, he cannot and will not understand—that is his daily disease; so that his morality becomes a kind of wandering ague, shaking him with hot and cold fits. "Rousseau, Sir," said Dr. Johnson, "is a very bad man. . . . I should like to have him work [in the plantations.]" There is then no more to be said. But if you study

Rousseau in his own world and his own country, how engrossing and difficult a study it is, and what gleams of lofty thought flash through the clouds of sentimentality and mania that veil his head!

Charles Darwin sauntered into the garden of Literature, one day in his later years, and remarked, with rare and admirable candour, that the plays of Shakespeare made him sick. The remark is weightier, and more interesting, than the majority of literary criticisms.

It will be understood that without their contexts these extracts indicate, rather than convey, Prof. Raleigh's thoughts.

In a "Thing Seen" published in our last issue, called "The Lower Criticism," the troubled Beadle of a Public Garden, opening his heart to a sympathetic friend, remarks that "the new Bible Dictionary plays havoc—great havoc, sir—with the Bible." Messrs. T. & T. Clark ask us to state that the remark did not apply to their publication called The Dictionary of the Bible, edited by Dr. Hastings. A Beadle is a Beadle, but his words should not be liable to misconstruction. Acting on his behalf we gladly make the correction.

Bibliographical.

AFTER what I have already said in this column on the subject of "introductions" to literary classics, I need hardly say how delighted I am that in Messrs. Macmillan's new series of such things "introductions" are to be conspicuous by their absence. That is why I am able to congratulate the said firm for once more putting before us Mandeville's Travels, Malory's Morte d'Arthur, Shelton's Don Quixote, Walton's Lives and Angler, White's Selborne, and so forth. To judge from the frequent reproductions of the same works, one would imagine English literary classics to be singularly few! The edition of Sheridan's Plays I rather welcome because, though it has had several predecessors, cheap and otherwise, it was always possible to improve upon them. A very attractive book in many ways was Sheridan's Comedies, as published in England fifteen years ago, with "introductory" matter by Mr. Brander Matthews, and pictorial illustrations by E. A. Abbey, C. S. Reinhardt, Fred. Barnard, &c. In this volume "The Rivals" and "The School for Scandal" were reprinted from the edition of 1821, which was prefaced by Moore. Unfortunately "The Critic" and "The Duenna" were omitted from this volume; the rest (such as "St. Patrick's Day" and "Pizarro") one can very well do without.

One is inclined to be very well pleased that the bibliographical part of Messrs. Macmillan's new series should be undertaken by Mr. A. W. Pollard, who is also to choose the editions to be reproduced. Mr. Pollard, as all know, has already done good work in the direction of illustrating by his pen the history of English literature. There is, for example, his little book on English Miracle Plays, now nearly ten years old. Then there are his Chaucer Primer and his Early Illustrated Books, both belonging to 1893. Add to these his Odes from the Greek Drama, and it will be seen that Mr. Pollard is a scholar in whose hands literary classics may safely be left.

Talking of classics, there are those which the Scottish Text Society proposes to give us in a new shape by and by. For instance, Archdeacon Bellenden's translation of five books of Livy's Annals; secondly, the works of Robert Henryson, of which, I fancy, there is not at present a complete edition, though some of them were reprinted by the Bannatyne and Maitland Clubs; thirdly, the Hymns or Sacred Songs of Alexander Hume (1599), which have long awaited reproduction; and the Scots works of James I. of England, whose prose writings were collected in 1616, and some of whose work was reprinted by Mr. Arber. For all of these promised new editions something is to be said.

I take it that Mrs. Meynell's monograph on Mr. Ruskin will be rather critical than biographical, or even expository, in form. The biography of the sage has often been written, and its details are familiar to the public. One of the first to deal with it was Mr. J. M. Mather, in a book published in 1883-4. Then there were Mr. W. G. Collingwood's two volumes in 1893, preceded by Mrs. Ritchie's essay in 1892. A good deal of light on Mr. Ruskin's relations with the Pre-Raphaelites has been thrown by a recent volume of Mr. W. M. Rossetti's. On Mr. Ruskin's autobiographical work I need not dwell. The books devoted to criticism of his writings and teachings are fairly numerous. He was dealt with, anonymously, as an Economist in 1884. Mr. E. T. Cook's Studies in Ruskin date from 1890; Mr. Collingwood's analysis of his Art-Teaching came out in 1891. Mr. C. Waldstein's discussions of his Work in general and his relation to Modern Thought belong to 1893 and 1894 respectively. It will be remembered that one of the earliest and most enthusiastic critics of Mr. Ruskin was Charlotte Brontë.

A collection of Mr. George Meredith's epigrams! That should be at once easy and difficult to make—easy because of the wealth to choose from, difficult because of the universal brilliancy. Theoretically, one objects to these gatherings together of disconnected sentences; practically, one rather enjoys them, and even finds them useful. That they are popular may be assumed from their increasing number. I do not refer to the more solid books of extracts, such as those of the Selections from Mr. Ruskin, Matthew Arnold, and the like. I refer to the small anthologies, usually in the form of birthday books, and so forth. There is, for instance, a little book of sentences from Disraeli's writings which I keep habitually at my bedside, together with similar selections from favourite writers. An epigram or a maxim may suggest a whole train of thought; it may even conduce to somnolency! What is certain is, that this sort of book should really be a booklet; one does not want a volume full of maxims or epigrams.

I read the other day, somewhere, a very favourable notice of a new book of verse called The Foremost Trail, and written (to quote the title-page) by C. Fox Smith. The reviewer assumed throughout that the author was a man, and, if I remember rightly, made some encouraging remarks about his future career. Now, a reviewer should always be suspicious of initials on a title-page. They are sexless, and may lead one wrong. Sometimes, I believe, they are deliberately placed as traps for the unlucky commentator. However that may be, it is certain that C. Fox Smith is no man, the "C." standing for the word "Cecily"—a name which adorned the title-page of the young lady's first book of verse, published some little time ago. Miss Fox Smith, I am told, is still in her teens, a remarkable testimony to the extent to which the spirit of an English girl can be informed with the most enthusiastic patriotism.

I wrote the other day concerning the difficulty of recording and describing the prose and verse printed in connexion with private clubs and societies—opuscula which must needs be lost to the world if not reproduced some day in volume form. A somewhat similar difficulty meets the bibliographer in the case of the publications issued by theatrical managers in connexion with their various productions. These sometimes have a literary interest, especially when they have reference to Shakespeare's plays. They are usually the work of experts, and occasionally are something more than compilations. There are those who make collections of such fugitive issues; but it is virtually impossible to catalogue them. They have their day and cease to be. THE BOOKWORM.

Reviews.

Sober and Substantial.

Tennyson, Ruskin, Mill, and other Literary Estimates. By Frederic Harrison. (Macmillan. 8s. 6d. net.)

MR. FREDERIC HARRISON is a man of versatile gift, as we are aware. For years his pen has touched, in the principal reviews, various themes of the day; and his scope has not been limited, while he has always shown himself an accomplished gladiator. But it is as an intellectual gladiator that we chiefly think of him, and as the gladiator of a special cause. He stands to us for the high priest and protagonist of Positivism. Instinctively, at the sound of his name, there leaps to our memory that deft pasquinade—do the younger generation know it?—of Mortimer Collins:

Churches and creeds are all lost in the mists,
Truth must be sought with the Positivists.

Wise are their teachers beyond all comparison,
Comte, Huxley, Tindall, Mill, Morley, and Harrison;
Who will adventure to enter the lists
With such a squadron of Positivists?

The squadron, alas! is scattered; viscerunt. No longer, in compact ranks, do they ride the fields of literature, and bear down all before them, as (Comte excepted) they did in the earlier times of the century. Mr. John Morley and Mr. Frederic Harrison alone survive to witness a reaction against the principles they valiantly championed, and which they still unfaintingly maintain. But it is not Mr. Harrison the gladiator who now, in this volume, confronts us. He enters the silken lists of pure literature, controversy (save incidentally) laid aside. Unarmed and pacific, he casts a backward eye upon some of the principal writers who have been his contemporaries, whom he has known in the campaigns of literature. These essays, consequently, cover no small part of the great figures in Victorian letters; and such, he tells us, was the deliberate plan of his book.

Mr. Harrison has very considerable equipment for such a task. His style is always cultivated, equable, lucid, and graceful; though it cannot claim the distinct and individualising stamp which is the token of genius. He has a tolerant appreciation of multifarious excellence; and his taste only falls short of the last and keenest edge with regard to verse. But it does so fall a little short; and also (which is well-nigh an inevitable limitation) his appreciation is confined mainly to the writers of his own youth and prime. Beyond these there is a level line of silence—not the less felt for being mostly inexplicit, merely indicated by reticence. In a book which covers (through successive essays) Tennyson, Ruskin, Arnold, Symonds, Lamb, Keats, Gibbon, Froude, Freeman, and John Stuart Mill, the writer can scarce narrow himself entirely to pure literary criticism. The man must show at intervals through the critic; not only his idiosyncrasy, but his general views, his prejudices, his personal attitude towards life and life's problems. Therefore, as we have hinted, the veteran of Positivism emerges now and again: we are not suffered to forget under what banner Mr. Harrison fights; and the reader, after his several kind, must allow for the critic's peculiar views. For the most part, however, these are expressed with courtesy, if also at times with energy; they are offensive only in the martial sense. It is exceptional to encounter (in the fine essay on "Ruskin as Prophet") a fleer at "tender mothers adoring the divine judgment which consigns their children to hell-fire"—exceptional, and we note it with regret. Such an utterance is in hopelessly bad taste, not merely because it is crass, perverse, and unfair—a hit below the belt—but because it is calculated wantonly to wound the deepest feelings of multitudes among Mr. Harrison's fellow-citizens; and especially of the tenderest class. It is as if he had buffeted a woman. So cheap a sneer might be left to the scurrilous rank of controversialists; it is not worthy of Mr. Harrison—let us trust he will see fit to suppress or modify it. But because of its rarity we note it: Mr. Harrison is not given to hit below the belt.

Not in vain has he studied his favourite master in criticism, Matthew Arnold, whose balance and sanity he conscientiously strives to imitate. Dealing with so various a range of writers, he holds a level balance in regard to all; no easy feat, requiring a judiciously combined with catholicism of taste, not in these hasty days too common. In detail we may, and do, freely dissent from him; but there is seldom much fault to be found with the broad scope and trend of his judgment. This is high praise of essays which compass so large a field. Yet with all their merits they do not rank Mr. Harrison among the illuminative critics; there are neither flashes nor broad lights of insight, bringing to sudden view unsuspected aspects, dark recesses in the great authors analysed. We do not feel as we rise from our reading that we know substantially more of them than we did. The best which is held in solution by the better criticism of our day has been precipitated and presented to us in crystalline form; our most truthful previous impressions are pleasantly confirmed and interpreted to us; but beyond sifting and discrimination these polished essays hardly go. The best of them is perhaps the elaborate study of Ruskin, which runs through three successive essays: it is eloquent, it is enthusiastic—as in these reactionary days a study of Ruskin ought to be; it analyses his prose with understanding love; it defends his greatness as teacher with selective sense of his limits, weaknesses, fervid extravagances, and appreciation of his power more generous than could be surmised from a rival apostle, professedly out of touch with many of Ruskin's most basic beliefs. But there is like fair-minded justice, if (on account of the subject-matter) less eloquently set forth, in the studies of those two most opposite and antagonistic historians, Froude and Freeman, in the perhaps too genially balanced notice of Addington Symonds.

Perhaps, however, we may study Mr. Harrison's defects and qualities in representative equipoise by considering the essay on Arnold. After some remarks on Arnold's admitted felicity as a phraser, he proceeds to discuss his poetry, with the disputable opinion that in poetry he reached his finest vein, and by it will be longest remembered. To this succeeds the assertion that no poet in our literature, unless it be Milton, "has been so essentially saturated to the very bone with the classical genius." Much depends on the interpretation of this sentence, and one must confine it to the poets of Mr. Harrison's own prime. His remarks on the sense in which Arnold is classical—"the serene self-command, the harmony of tone, the measured fitness, the sweet reasonableness of his verse"—would need for their due discussion an essay on what is permanent, essential, universal in Greek poetry, apart from what is local, external, and externally imitable. Mr. Harrison thinks that the full acceptance of Arnold's poetry has yet to come—which we may seriously doubt, calculated as its appeal was for his special time. That Arnold's equableness is attained at the expense of height and passion Mr. Harrison perceives. Arnold is, he says, peculiarly a gnomic poet, a moralist on life and conduct. He credits him with seeing into the intellectual world of our age "more deeply and more surely than any contemporary poet." If this somewhat inexplicit sentence means that Arnold reproduced the tone of thought common to the cultured circles of his day, it is true. That is just what he did. But we cannot extend it further. "A resolute and pensive insight into the mystery of life and of things" we cannot discern in him, but rather a resigned pausing at the gates of the mystery. The ethical lesson of nature preoccupies him when he is not dealing directly with human conduct Mr. Harrison recognises. It is no loss to Mr. Harrison—though it is to us—that Arnold, unlike his beloved preceptor, Wordsworth, halts at the ethical lesson of nature, is insensitive to the spirit within and behind nature which was the solemnly convinced burthen of Wordsworth's song.

To this "concentration of poetry on ethics, and even metaphysics," Mr. Harrison attributes Arnold's limitations and "loss of charm." Yet, at the same time, he says that Arnold, unlike Wordsworth, is "never prosaic." Here it is that we find that falling short of the keenest poetic sense which we have attributed to Mr. Harrison. Arnold, unfortunately, is too often prosaic—for line after line, passage after passage. Perhaps, as a subsequent portion of the essay would suggest, Mr. Harrison is not insensible to this; and we should take him to mean that Arnold is never prosy. That is the exact truth; he is too much an artificer to prose like Wordsworth, but prosaic he is frequently, to a level extent—that is to say, his language is the language of very fine and distinguished prose. Even when he rises higher, he too often hovers on the doubtful border where we hesitate to pronounce it poetry, are loath to pronounce it prose. And though it is true that the greatest poets are seldom directly didactic, it is not this which depresses Arnold; it is the lack of inspiration to give wings to his thought. The greater the burthen of intellectuality, the more of sheer inspiration is necessary.

"Dramatic passion," "tumultuous passion"—not these, as Mr. Harrison regretfully supposes, does Arnold need. Wordsworth had them not, and yet soared into regions of which Arnold but desirously dreams. It is inspiring emotion, the solemn passion, intense in its still ardour, appropriate to intellectual poetry, which Arnold needs. It is really passion of the intensest order, deceptively calm through its equipoise with the weight of thought. The calm which results from the careful husbanding of effort may imitate it with the multitude, but can never deceive the elect. In the main, Arnold reaches only this latter calm; and that Mr. Harrison should identify it with that inspired tranquillity and impassioned peace of Wordsworth (at his highest), the supreme Greek poets, and Dante, shows that Mr. Harrison—as we say—has not the keenest edge of poetic sensitiveness.

That is why Mr. Harrison feels that Arnold, though faultless, is "not of the highest rank." It is a misnomer, in fact, to call such poets "faultless," whether it be Racine or Arnold, when in line after line there is the blot of absent inspiration, when there is not the only possible word in the only possible place. The greatest of all faults in a poet is to lack poetry, and that is theirs. At the same time Mr. Harrison does not, perhaps, lay sufficient stress upon Arnold's occasional success in touching the mark at which he aimed. The austere and noble sonnet on Shakespeare, with other brief achievements of the kind, are worth more than long poems full of fine thought, but only now and again inevitable in expression. For they are integral; and it is that quality which makes for permanence. Mr. Harrison (in this influenced by Arnold himself) is too apt to set store by detached lines and passages, which poets of no high power can often forge in tolerable quantity, to the great comfort of reviewers who pant for "quotes." He ignores too much the supreme value of relation and organism. Thus he depreciates, justly enough, the quality of Arnold's metre; but the reason he alleges is quite unconvincing and inadequate—namely, that Arnold has lines containing harsh collocations of consonants. The same could be alleged against Shakespeare, could be—and has been—alleged against Milton. Lowell rightly replies that metre may aim either at melody or harmony; that while the former demands smoothness, the larger music of harmony not only admits but makes use of occasional roughnesses, as discords have their function in the harmonies of music proper. To cite these individual lines of Arnold's, disjoined from their relation, proves nothing. Yet Mr. Harrison is right in his judgment, though defective in his reason: Arnold was lacking in metrical power, though he could strike out fine imitative music in occasional passages.

When we leave details, and attend to Mr. Harrison's summing-up, we find, indeed, that he is mainly right, and that our objections have caught largely on side-issues.

By temperament and by training he, who at birth "was breathed on by the rural Pan," was deprived of that fountain of delight that is essential to the highest poetry, the dithyrambic glow—the ἀνθήριμον γέλασμα—of perennial poetry. This, perhaps, more than his want of passion, of dramatic power, of rapidity of action, limits the audience of Arnold as a poet. But those who thirst for the pure Castalian spring, inspired by restrained and lofty thoughts, who care for that high seriousness of which he spoke so much as the very essence of the best poetry, have long known that they find it in Matthew Arnold more than in any of his even greater contemporaries.

The countless dimples of the laughing seas

That is a good specimen of Mr. Frederic Harrison's style, and it states the case for Arnold as a poet with a discrimination which leaves little to desire. Partly, indeed, it agrees with our own criticism of Mr. Harrison's criticism, or so nearly that the difference seems to become inconspicuous. And this excellently exemplifies the studiousness of balance which characterises Mr. Harrison's appreciations. Not once nor twice does he thus in his summary disarm the reviewer, and leave him half-apologetic for differences which are finally made so small. What may in the body of the essay have erred by over-emphasis or omission is here usually rectified and supplied. His picture of Arnold altogether (though he gives less space than we could desire to the prose) is urbane, sympathetic, and observant of poise. If we doubt his forecast of an extended future for Arnold, it is because we think his aloofness from the many is due to more than his mere distinction and those other fastidious causes set forth by Mr. Harrison. Arnold as a teacher was pre-eminently undecided (to use an adjective thrown out by Mr. Harrison himself). A teacher of delicate incertitude, a watchman who has no word of the night, a prophet who disclaims prophecy, and is never likely to have acceptance with the many who still, as of old, ask for a sign. And even among the few his cultivated stoicism and half-complaisant, half-melancholy indecision is scarce likely to be the fashion of the future. Even the cultured and sovereign few now begin to cry for a gospel and a hand from the cloud. But that constant reference to conduct, which Mr. Harrison rightly adjudges his dominant note, will doubtless secure to him long his measure of influence with the practical Saxon mind. His spirit has done a worthy posthumous work in prompting the eminent sanity of Mr. Harrison's extremely able, though not strongly original, book.

Whose only message is that he sees nought,

A Man of Fashion—and More.

George Selwyn: His Letters and His Life. Edited by E. S. Roscoe and Helen Clergue. (Unwin.)

ALTHOUGH it is natural to regard this book as merely supplementary to the late Mr. Jesse's George Selwyn and His Contemporaries, it is nearer the truth to say that it supersedes that work. That is to say, there is more of Selwyn in this one volume than in the four volumes of Jesse. The biographical sketch of Selwyn here given is as good as Jesse's—in some respects it is more discerning—while the body of the work is composed of Selwyn's own letters; not, as in Jesse's volumes, of letters that Selwyn received. How Mr. Jesse missed these letters, or whether he was denied access to them, we do not happen to know. He must have suspected the existence of Selwyn's letters to the fifth Earl of Carlisle, seeing that he printed the letters of that peer to Selwyn. Fifty-five years after Jesse's volumes were published, these lost letters stole from their obvious hiding at Castle Howard, and ranged themselves in the Fifteenth Report of the Historical Manuscripts Commission. There they attracted little attention save from Mr. E. S. Roscoe and Miss Helen Clergue, who are to be thanked for bringing them to our arm-chairs escorted by a discerning memoir and many notes.

Critics are grateful and captious in a breath, and we must point out a few trifling faults of editing before we go further. Selwyn's English is slovenly in grammar and unessential details, but it was a pity to sprinkle sic's over his text. Far better have announced George's weakness, and then left him to placate the reader by his good qualities, which he would have done before he had written three letters. As it is the sic's are for ever tripping one up. "There has [sic] been no events this week that I know of," is the sort of thing, and one soon wearies of seeing so good a fellow as Selwyn checked for writing like a gentleman instead of like a scholar. And the editors have contrived to double the infliction by making it uncertain. So that the absence of a sic when Selwyn writes "You was," on page 41, is as trying as its presence when he writes "There has [sic] been no events," on page 43. If "terrible [sic] long" appears on one page, why should "your extreme kind letter" go unscathed on another?

This is not quite all; the footnotes are pointed and informing, but they are hardly numerous enough. On page 73 two notes are required. We read of Charles James Fox: "Vernon said yesterday, after dinner, that he and some others—Bully, I think, among the rest—had been driven by the rain up into Charles's room; and when they had lugged him out of bed, they attacked him so violently upon what he did at Bath, that he was obliged to have recourse, as he did last year, to an absolute denial of the fact." What was this affair at Bath? Maybe no one knows; but a query at the foot of the page would have been rather better than nothing. Again: "Lady Albemarle, who is not a wise woman, certainly, was at Lady Gower's the other evening, and was regretting only that Charles had not been consumed in the Fire, instead of the linnets." The reader soon understands that the fire was at Holland House, but he would like to know more about the linnets which suffered vicariously for Charles. "I had rather have heard Walter play upon his hump for nothing," comments Selwyn on an expensive evening at Vauxhall; but without a note it is difficult to gauge his regret.

We come to the Letters. Their value is twofold. They are full of matter; they bring back the habits, tones, and follies of high life in the most interesting part of the eighteenth century. Reading them, we catch the manners as they flew when George III. was king and America was rebellious. In 1781 Selwyn writes to his young friend—the Carlisle of these Letters: "I have . . . a perpetual source of intelligence, for although je ne fais rien qui vaille, I am always doing or hearing something, as much as those who are employed about more important matters, and if among these a circumstance happens to interest or amuse you, je ne serai pas fâché de vous l'avoir mandée." Fortunate young Earl! Though often out of London, now abroad, now in Ireland, now ensconced in his seat at Castle Howard, he had in Selwyn a friend, older than himself, who was a kind of lay confessor to the choicest people of the age, who united a love of gossip with a sound judgment, and was never happier than when transmitting smart news and shrewd comment to those whom he loved. Hence these Letters take us into fine company and yield us many secrets. We are constantly at Almack's, at White's, at Holland House. We go to the House of Commons to hear Fox, and leave it to escape Burke. We whisper dark things about duchesses, and calculate the losses of young bloods at faro. We intrigue for sinecures and punt for fortunes. And always we watch the squalid comedy of Charles James Fox—noblest, weakest of men—giving his eloquence to his country and his furniture to the bailiffs. Let us dwell for a moment on the gambling scenes in which Fox rose and fell, was hated and worshipped. On May 29, 1781, Selwyn writes to his friend:

You must know that for these two days past all passengers in St. James'-street have been amused with seeing two carts at Charles's door filling, by the Jews, with his goods, clothes, books, and pictures. He was waked by Basilico yesterday, and Hare afterwards by his valet-de-chambre, they being told at the same time that the execution was begun, and the carts were drawn up against the door. Such furniture I never saw. Betty and Jack Manners are perpetually in a survey of this operation, and Charles, with all Brooks's on his behalf, in the highest spirits. . . . What business is going on I know not, for all the discourse at which I am present turns upon this bank. Offley sat up till past four, and I believe has lost a good part of his last legacy.

Two days later Selwyn reports: "Never was a room so crowded or so hot as this was last night," and then he names the punters. A little later:

The Pharo Bank is held in a manner which, being exposed to public view, bids defiance to all decency and police. The whole town as it passes views the dealer and the punters by means of the candles and the windows being levelled with the ground. The Opposition, who have Charles for their ablest advocate, is quite ashamed of the proceeding, and hates to hear it mentioned.

Gambling pervades many pages, but never to the exclusion of deaths, marriages, divorces, dinners, balls, and levées. Sometimes Selwyn goes down to Gloucester to cajole his electors, and spend some weeks of boredom at his lovely seat, Matson. He makes speeches which he is glad no one hears but the Corporation, and is delighted when Horry Walpole turns up in those benighted parts—"someone to converse with who speaks my own language." If his constituency is tiresome, not less so is Parliament. Between these two boredoms Selwyn is never happy unless poised in the beatific regions of St. James's-street. Of literature we do not hear much. Topham Beauclerk seems to be the one link between Selwyn and the Johnsonian circle. Once or twice Selwyn dines with Gibbon. He is not a great reader. One day he buys Mme. Du Barri's Anecdotes, and they amuse him; he buys also Dart's Antiquities of Westminster Abbey, but seems to think more of the price, £6, than of the book. We are alert when we find him buying Dr. Johnson's Lives of the Poets. But it leaves him cold:

I have bought Johnson's Lives of the Poets, and repent of it already; but I have read but one, which is Prior's. There are few anecdotes, and those not well authenticated; his criticism on the poems, false and absurd, and the prettiest things which he wrote passed over in silence. I told Lord Loughborough what I thought of it, and he had made the same remarks. But he says that I had begun with the life the worst wrote of them all.

In truth Johnson was not an author to lure Selwyn from his wines and his hazards and his own triumphs of wit. Every post brought him letters, every scandal and every posture of affairs in Parliament brought him suppliants for advice. He was liked and pestered by all. He gave sympathy so freely that he came to need it, and the little note of tragedy in Selwyn's life, which was single to the end, is accentuated in this confession to the friend he trusted most:

To find a person who really interests themselves about you, and is able and willing to give you such advice as applies immediately to your case, is of all things in the world most difficult to meet with, but the most comfortable when you do, and is the utmost service which I ever expect from anybody in this world, and yet what I despair of finding, in the circle in which I move.

Here, indeed, we come to the second grounds on which we take delight in these Letters: they reveal Selwyn's best self; they make him more lovable and human than he has ever showed before. Hitherto Selwyn has shone in the public memory as a wit, and as a pious attender at executions. But in this book of his own letters his wit is not assertive, and his love of hangings is hardly mentioned. Yet one feels that we have the true Selwyn here. As for his wit, it died with him. The jokes called Selwyn's are mostly sorry reading; probably many of them were not his; and even the best of them lacking Selwyn's manner, and the atmosphere that gave them birth, lack all. We are told that he delivered his witticisms in a listless, drowsy way, turning up the whites of his eyes. Selwyn's love of executions was but his love of variety. Far too much has been made of his journeys to the gallows-tree. It is forgotten that everyone else went, and that his were days when telescopes were regularly placed in the Strand in order that people might gloat on the heads above Temple Bar, at a penny a peep. Apart from his lost wit, and his inessential love of a criminal, Selwyn has been supposed to have been an idle dog. But Lord Chesterfield's chaffing description of his normal day, in a letter to Selwyn himself, has been taken too seriously. Said Chesterfield: "You get up at nine; play with Raton till twelve in your night-gown; then creep down to White's to abuse Fanshawe; are five hours at table; sleep till you can escape your supper reckoning; then make two wretches carry you, with three pints of claret in you, for a shilling." Even if the outline were correct, Selwyn filled it in with a hundred kindly offices and not unworthy social duties. Above all, he filled it with his love of children—a singular trait in this polished clubman.

Selwyn's love for his Mie Mie runs like a thread of untarnished gold through all his tangled pleasures. Mie Mie's paternity is still a matter of doubt. She was the daughter of the Marchesa Fagniani, and the Duke of Queensberry and Selwyn each believed himself to be her father. Selwyn would have been awarded the child by Solomon, and, for the most part, she lived in Selwyn's house in Cleveland-row, St. James's, delighting his heart and unconsciously tempering and refining his morals. On June 1, 1781, he writes to Carlisle: "I am at this moment employed fort pédagoguement. I have taken into my own department Mie Mie's translations out of English into French. That is, I am at her elbow when she translates, and by that means can see what faults she makes from insufficiency, and what are produced from carelessness. . . . To-day I give a dinner to the bankers [he means the faro bankers at White's]." Although devoted to Mie Mie, Selwyn had plenty of love to spare for other children; and his inquiries about George and Caroline, the Earl of Carlisle's children, mingle with, and sweeten, his worldly gossip. "I found myself [at Lady Lucan's] with a party of Irish, Dean Marly, Lady Clermont, and with her Mrs. Jones, whom I was ravished to see, for she had given a ball where Caroline was, and commended her dancing, and I tormented the poor woman with such a number of questions about her, that I believe she thought me distracted. . . . I must be quite wore out with infirmities . . . if seeing Caroline appear to advantage will not give me pleasure." Indeed, there are a hundred things in these pages which go to justify Horace Walpole's eulogy of his friend in his letter to Miss Berry: "I am on the point of losing, or have lost, my oldest acquaintance and friend, George Selwyn, who was yesterday at the extremity. These misfortunes, though they can be so but for a short time, are very sensible to the old; but him I really loved, not only for his infinite wit, but for a thousand good qualities."

Books of Travel.

The Yangtze Valley and Beyond. By Mrs. I. B. Bishop. (John Murray. 21s.)

Mrs. BISHOP's name will have to be written very large in the list of travellers who have enabled the West to understand the East. This is her twelfth travel volume, and no one needs to be told how much she has added to our knowledge of the regions stretching from Kashmir to Korea. The fact that Lord Salisbury has accepted the dedication of it to himself is the highest proof both of its importance and its interest. Books on China are multiplying nowadays, but they do not always illuminate the country that has been "coming" for centuries. Mrs. Bishop's last work is one on which unstinted praise must be bestowed. Her sympathies are wide, her knowledge is deep, her style is bright, and her photographs deserve most honourable mention. Her opinion of the race of which she is writing is summed up thus: "The Chinese are ignorant and superstitious beyond belief, but, on the whole, with all their faults, I doubt whether any other Oriental race runs so straight." She had experience of their superstition and bigotry at least once in the course of her plucky journey, for she was pelted and insulted as a "foreign devil and child-eater" with a vigour that would have daunted a less daring lady chronicler. The method of her narrative is to carry the reader with her from point to point of her journey, and she avoids the trivialities of travel which are so often apt to weary without enlightening. Politics, domestic life, commercial prospects, scenery, glorious and all but unknown, fall naturally into their places, and by the time that you have read a few chapters, you become aware that you are the wiser by many a little unobtrusive observation on the point of view of one of the most interesting communities in the world. "China is certainly at the dawn of a new era. Whether the twentieth century shall place her where she ought to be—in the van of Oriental nations—or whether it shall witness her disintegration and decay, depends very largely on the statesmanship and influence of Great Britain." That is Mrs. Bishop's view of the Far Eastern question.

The Redemption of Egypt. By W. Basil Worsfold. (George Allen. 25s. net.)

MR. WORSFOLD seems bent on annexing Africa with his pen. Having written a book on South Africa, he has now compiled one on Egypt. He seems to have a clear consciousness of his own limitations, for he tells his readers plainly that in December, 1898, his knowledge of Egypt was contained in four words—Pyramids, Nile, Cairo, Khartoum; but that before the day of his landing ended he had to add a fifth—Mosquito. This is not a very profound, nor is it an original, opening to a work with so serious a title; and one is soon fain to confess a sense of confusion when one finds Theocritus jostling a Chamber of Commerce report, and Catullus called on to compete with Lord Cromer's latest views, all within the compass of some twenty or thirty pages. And as one goes on this sense of confusion grows, for the author seems to be in haste to prove that he is at one and the same time archaeologist, historian, artist, littérateur, and reproducer of a holiday diary, written by himself. He has obviously considerable interest in the subject of which he has chosen to write; but such elementary slips as Lybian for Libyan should not have escaped the eye of a Master of Arts, who can quote Herodotus in a translation. However, there is a deal of instructive fact in the book, and if there were only an index to guide one to it one would feel that a not very judicious enthusiast had added something to our knowledge of the reforms carried out in Egypt since Sir Alfred Milner gave us his masterly work on the subject. Here is a small sample from the end of the last chapter that fairly typifies Mr. Worsfold's capacity of criticism: "But whether the instruction be confined to the merest rudiments of useful knowledge, or all the sciences of Europe be taught, if only the Gordon College can infuse something of the spirit of the man whose name it perpetuates into its alumni, it will prove a potent factor in the regeneration of the Sudan." We are sorry to say it, but most of the author's comments do not rise above this not very lofty pinnacle of platitude. He has compiled somewhat too hastily a mass of records on an extremely interesting subject, and has added many very charming illustrations.

The Land of Contrasts. By J. F. Muirhead. (John Lane. 6s. net.)

MR. MUIRHEAD, as compiler of Baedeker's handbooks to the United States and to Great Britain, has had exceptional chances of "sampling" American characteristics, and he has made most excellent use of his opportunities. Both to those who know, and to those who do not know, the States his series of studies will prove diverting and instructive. Even in America the book should have a good run, for Mr. Muirhead is as kindly a critic as he is well qualified. He has read widely as well as travelled widely, and without parade he draws on his accumulations of study and observation to show John Bull where he may learn from Brother Jonathan. American women, children, journals, amusements, and humour are all surveyed. "If American women have been well treated by their men-folk, they have nobly discharged their debt," he says; but of the child he is not so appreciative. Here is a typical tale of a youthful Transatlantic:

Even in trying circumstances, even when serious misfortune overtakes the youthful American, his aplomb, his confidence in his own opinion, does not wholly forsake him. Such a one was found weeping in the street. On being asked the cause of his tears he sobbed out in mingled alarm and indignation: "I'm lost; mammy's lost me; I told the darned thing she'd lose me."

On sport Mr. Muirhead is laudably judicial, though he has some justly hard things to say of football à l'Américaine. Thus: "In old English football you kicked the ball; in modern English football you kick the man when you can't kick the ball; in American football you kick the ball when you can't kick the man." In the chapter on "Some Literary Straws" the selections from the late Miss Emily Dickinson's poems will attract mere Britishers, for to most of them she will prove a novelty. There is an abundance of good things on more solid subjects than these. Mr. Muirhead has a light touch, a wide range, shrewd sense, and commendable impartiality.

A New Ride to Khiva. By Robert L. Jefferson. (Methuen & Co. 6s.)

ATTEMPTING the impossible remains the pastime of a few; and for some Khiva seems still to have special attractions in this respect. Colonel Burnaby rode there because, as he tells us, he was "contradictorious." They told him the task was impossible. Therefore he undertook it, and accomplished it satisfactorily to himself and with a profitable extension of English knowledge of a region then very little known. Mr. Jefferson's reasons for his ride were similar, if its results are slighter. Some Catford cyclists told him he could not "bike" to Khiva; so, of course, he started off. But he took almost the first train back, and being aware from earlier journeys in Central Asia that he was likely to find little there to reward his journey, can hardly be blamed for not stopping longer.

Here was Khiva, but what a Khiva! I saw irregular lanes bordered by tall gloomy walls, all in an extreme state of decay, stretching here and there. Filthy ditches ran down the centre of these lanes; shadow and gloom were everywhere. The atmosphere was white with dust and reeked horribly. Down these narrow lane-like streets we picked our way cautiously, stumbling in the gloom against crouching Khivans or kicking out of the way sore and miserable dogs that prowled everywhere. At the corners beggars, blind, maimed, or covered with horrible sores, sat in small clusters with hands outstretched.

Within the compass of thirty pages Mr. Jefferson tells all the little there is to tell of Khiva. Mat Murat, its Premier and the richest man in the city, lives in a mud-built erection. The Khan and his son were courteous but not communicative. Both talked mainly of the Spanish-American war. But, as Mr. Jefferson says, Russia is killing Khiva with a war indemnity she cannot possibly pay, and is sitting by waiting till she dies. The only discovery he made of any live interest is that of a German socialistic colony near Khiva. For the rest, the journey, though a good deal of it is over familiar ground, is brightly described, and the illustrations are numerous and good.

A Dictionary of Bad Puns.

A Dictionary of English Homonyms. By A. F. Ingloft Bey. (Kegan Paul.)

WHAT is a homonym that it should have a dictionary all to itself? What is a homonym? we asked. "It is some sort of relation to a synonym," said one. "It is a kind of horse," said another, wiser and more flippant, vaguely remembering Gulliver and his goings on. A few moments of philological reasoning, however, brought the conviction, which was confirmed by a glance at the preface, that homonyms are English words, similar in sound but differently spelled, conveying different meanings. A further examination of the pages of the dictionary discloses myriads of words, such as "centaur," "centre," "sender," which sound a little alike, followed by definitions of their respective meanings. The author must have taken an amazing amount of trouble, but it is not easy to imagine anyone to whom the book could be of the slightest use. As the preface itself is written in three languages—English, French and Italian, he presumably hopes to aid the foreigner in his struggle with the English tongue. We will quote the paragraphs devoted to one word—"hair":

HAIR, n. här, the mass of filaments growing from the skin or bulbous root of animals.

Capelli.

Cheveux.

Hare, n. här, a well-known timid animal like a rabbit.

Lepre.

Lièvre.

Her, pro. hër, objective case of She.

Lei; colei.

Son; sa; elle; lui; la.

From the translations appended one would infer that Mr. Ingloft Bey was seeking to give the Frenchman and the Italian a clue to the maze of English phonetics. But if the foreign student did not know the meaning of "hair," he would not get much information from the statement that it was the mass of filaments growing from the skin or bulbous root of animals. Moreover, the list is obviously incomplete. If we are to hedge against the possible misconceptions of the Frenchman who is taking down an English speech, we must not omit "heir," "air," "e'er," "here," "hear," "ear," and so on. Turning the pages at random we come to "cousin." The intelligent foreigner is warned against confusing the "son or daughter of an uncle or aunt" with "chosen." Surely the stranger who cannot observe the distinction for himself would do better to remain on his native soil. Nor do we think it necessary to write a book to persuade people that "craze" is not the same word as "grays," and to define the latter as "Horses called so from their colour of black and white."

Perhaps, however, we are on the wrong tack. After all, a homonym is only a pun writ large; and if the author were not so tremendously serious, we should at once conclude that he had foreseen a revival of the Gaiety burlesque, and had compiled a dictionary of homonyms for the benefit of possible successors to Mr. Burnand and the late Mr. H. B. Farnie. When we find under "earring" such words as "erring," "hearing," "herein," and "herring" suspicion is justifiable. Surely Mr. Inglott Bey has compiled a dictionary of puns. Remembering the absurd suggestion that a homonym is a horse, we turn up the word, and to our astonishment it is not there. Incredible, we glance at the opposite page. Yes, here is "hoarse." Surely here we have innumerable pitfalls for the unwary foreigner, infinite opportunities for the bad punster. But whether he aims at the foreign student or the native jester, Mr. Inglott Bey fails miserably: he gives only "horse" as a homonym to "hoarse," and defines it as "the animal that neighs." One might as well define man as the animal that writes dictionaries. If, as we gather from this work, "except" is a homonym to "expect," and "higher" to "eyre" (what is an Eyre apart from a Spottiswoode?), the author has missed golden opportunities here. Picture the foreigner astray or the punster agape among the homonyms to "horse"! "Oars," "hawse," "haws," "awes," "hoers," "erse," "hearse," "O. R.'s," "ours," "hours" — why Mr. Inglott Bey might have written a shelf-full of volumes before he had done with his homonyms, in which case he would worry the foreign student back to his native land, and reduce punning to an absurdity. As it is, he has written an inadequate dictionary of bad puns.

An Articulate Colony.

The Long White Cloud. By William Pember Reeves. (Horace Marshall & Son. 6s. net.)

MOTHERS remember their sons, mother-countries forget them. There is always a long period of neglect, broken only by fits of irritation: it is the child that is loyal. We see this to-day when colony after colony offers us help. And this book—which has reached a second edition and is worthy to reach a third and a fourth—makes a proud and undeniable claim on the mother-country. New Zealand has had its share of shrugs and buffets from England; but it has fought and pushed its way to manhood, and it now sends us this vivid story of its struggles, in which there is no reproach save what we read between the lines. Let us say at once that New Zealand has found an eloquent spokesman in Mr. Reeves. His book is really a book, having soul and speech; and therefore it is fascinating reading. How strange that the struggles of our young colonies have not been recognised as literary material of the finest, the most piquant!

Mr. Reeves knows New Zealand from end to end, and has been concerned in the administration of the country; we are not, therefore, surprised that he has information. What pleases us is that his book is an artistic fusion of all the elements in New Zealand life. There are no abrupt transitions, no yawning gaps. Mr. Reeves understands that what we need is a complete picture of the country, as a thoughtful Englishman would see and experience it if he settled at Auckland to-morrow. This is what he gives, and it was a point of wisdom to begin with the scenery of the islands. At once he enchants and allures us by his descriptions of the "cool, noiseless forests" of New Zealand, with their mingled dignity and luxuriance, their wealth of lichens, ferns, waving lianas, and the wonderful pohutu kawa, a flowering tree, which the wind tosses into strange contrasts of colour as its blood-red flowers mingle with the upper (dark) and lower (white) sides of its leaves. As a whole, New Zealand, in both its north and south islands, is a land of mountains and rivers. Some of its mountains recall the west of Scotland, but their heights are alpine. To see the rivers one must go inland and find them "as they are still to be found in the North Island, winding through untouched valleys, under softly-draped cliffs, or shadowed by forests not yet marred by man; or, in the South Island, they should be watched in the Alps as, milky or green-tinted, their ice-cold currents race through the gorges."

All through these pages one is under a strange spell. Here is a country where English law and order prevail with more than English freedom, where you may wear a tall hat in a canoe rowed by Maoris, where you may read the latest London news, and listen to smoke-room tales of cannibalism sixty years ago. A free, clean country, full of hope and Nature, touched with the romance of a dying race, and thrilling with the uncrowded activities of a new one. Not without blood and error has New Zealand become a white man's paradise. From October 6, 1769, when Nicholas Young, a boy on Captain Cook's Endeavour, sighted the first bit of New Zealand ever seen by English eyes, down to the present day, a strange and varied drama unrolls itself. Human greed and injustice stain its pages, yet the pages brighten as we turn them. We can do no more than indicate the trend of the narrative, preferring to record its ultimate impress on the mind. Mr. Reeves understands the Maori race and the pathos of their hospitality to the white man. The adventures of gold-seekers and land-sharks, the efforts and failings of missionaries, the aims of politicians and the destinies that overruled them, are set forth with masterly clearness. And what of young New Zealand to-day? What is its manner of life? "Two-thirds of the New Zealanders live in the country, in villages, or in towns of less than 5,000 inhabitants. . . . There are very few spots in the towns where trees, flower-gardens, and grass are not close at hand, and even orchards and fields not far away. . . . Bright, windy, and full of the salt of the ocean, the air is perhaps the wholesomest on earth." The intellectual life of the people is in its youth. Let Mr. Reeves characterise the sons of the pioneers:

Of artistic, poetic, or scientific talent, of wit, originality, or inventiveness, there is yet but little sign. In writing they show facility often, distinction never; in speech fluency and force of argument, and even, sometimes, lucidity, but not a flash of the loftier eloquence. Nor has the time yet arrived for Young New Zealand to secure the chief prizes of its own community—such posts and distinctions as go commonly to men fairly advanced in years. No native of the country has yet been its Prime Minister or sat amongst its supreme court judges or bishops. A few colonial-born have held subordinate Cabinet positions, but the dozen leading Members of Parliament are just now all British-born. So are the leading doctors, engineers, university professors, and preachers; the leading barrister is a Shetlander. Two or three, and two or three only, of the first-class positions in the civil service are filled by natives. On the whole, Young New Zealand is, as yet, better known by collective usefulness than by individual distinction.

We can pay Mr. Reeves no higher compliment than to say that his book gives the town-pent English reader a heart-ache. The "Long White Cloud" is a cloud such as a child watches, and longs to inhabit.

Rosebery on Peel.

Sir Robert Peel. By Lord Rosebery. (Cassell & Co.)

LAST year the private papers of the great Sir Robert Peel were judiciously edited and given to the public. Lord Rosebery's review of those volumes originally appeared in the Anglo-Saxon Review, but as that publication is not for all men, he has done wisely to republish his article in volume form. The little book is doubly interesting. It gives us a very fine portrait of Sir Robert in certain aspects, and it also throws a powerful sidelight on Lord Rosebery himself. Ostensibly the ex-Premier is writing of his great predecessor, but behind the rugged mask of Peel we often see the rounder features of Lord Rosebery. Nothing, for example, could be more delightfully personal than the following passage. It is not often we enjoy seeing a man who has held one of the highest positions on earth baring his own heart under the pretence of dissecting another man :

"What is a Prime Minister? That is a question which it would require a pamphlet to answer, but in a few sentences it may be possible to remove a few hallucinations. For the title expresses much to the British mind. To the ordinary apprehension it implies a dictator, the duration of whose power finds its only limit in the House of Commons. So long as he can weather that stormful and deceptive ocean he is elsewhere supreme. But the reality is very different. The Prime Minister, as he is now called, is technically and practically the chairman of an Executive Committee of the Privy Council, or rather, perhaps, of Privy Councillors—the influential foreman of an executive jury. His power is mainly personal, the power of individual influence. That influence, whatever it may be, he has to exert in many directions, before he can have his way. He has to deal with the Sovereign, with the Cabinet, with Parliament, and with public opinion, all of them potent factors in their various kinds and degrees. To the popular eye, however, heedless of these restrictions, he represents universal power; he is spoken of as if he had only to lay down his views of policy and to adhere to them. That is very far from the case. A First Minister has only the influence with the Cabinet which is given him by his personal arguments, his personal qualities, and his personal weight. But this is not all. All his colleagues he must convince, some he may have to humour, some even to cajole: a harassing, laborious, and ungracious task. Nor is it only his colleagues that he has to deal with; he has to masticate their pledges given before they joined him, he has to blend their public utterances, to fuse as well as may be all this into the policy of the Government; for these various records must be reconciled, or glossed, or obliterated. A machinery liable to so many grains of sand requires obviously all the skill and vigilance of the best conceivable engineer. And yet without the external support of his Cabinet he is disarmed. The resignation of a colleague, however relatively insignificant, is a storm signal.

This is a long quotation, but hardly a word could be omitted without destroying its value. It possesses a keen and vivid interest which few essays on the person and policy of Sir Robert Peel, or any other statesman of the past, have for the living generation. Nominally it deals with the Prime Minister and the Cabinet of the early 'forties; actually it pictures for us those of the early 'nineties. Every man may guess for himself the colleagues who had to be convinced, to be humoured, to be cajoled. Some, perhaps, will do it for the forgotten ministry of Sir Robert Peel; more, we suspect, will search for those who filled the various rôles in the Earl of Rosebery's own Cabinet five or six years ago.

As the judicious will observe from the extract quoted, Lord Rosebery's style is not impeccable. It is usually fresh; it is frequently vivid, and the little inelegancies are probably due to careless revision. But the voice of the public speaker is heard all through the book. As we read we seem to hear the orator punctuating his phrases with his fist, or cunningly leading up to a passage which almost demands "loud cheers," in brackets, after it. At other times Lord Rosebery lapses into the grandiloquence of Gibbon—as, for instance, in the following passage: "But as to the philippics arising from Peel's refusal, it may perhaps be felt by politicians that it would be a churlish and mawkish morality which would deny to baffled ambition the natural outlet of invective and lampoon." This is a splendidly purple patch, but it has not many fellows.

Of Lord Rosebery's estimate of Peel it may be said that it is quite tolerant and appreciative. Evidently Sir Robert has long been a hero with the ex-Premier. In under a hundred widely-printed pages Lord Rosebery has succeeded in giving a very pleasant picture of his subject, but he has done so much more by way of self-portraiture that the interest in the man of the forties pales before the interest in the man of to-day.

Milton's Autobiography.

An Introduction to John Milton. By Hiram Corson (Macmillan.)

PROBABLY few readers of the ACADEMY ever heard that Milton wrote an autobiography. He did not, indeed, in the obvious and literal sense of the statement; but he was so interested through life in the history of his own career, and incorporated so many references to it into his writings, that from these references almost alone his tale might be told. Of course such passages have been used often enough by Prof. Masson and others for biographical purposes; but to consult them at first hand you must disentangle them from a mass of irrelevant and sometimes repellent controversy. Prof. Corson has had the happy thought to string them together in the chronological order of the events to which they refer, and thus to make of them a most valuable introduction or companion to all editions or lives of the poet. Our gratitude to him would have been even greater if he had been content to publish a small book, and had not thought it necessary to pad it out to three times its normal size by appending fully annotated and perfectly superfluous editions of "Comus," "Lycidas," and "Samson Agonistes." No doubt these are, in a sense, autobiographical; but they certainly do not, like the other passages, want collecting, and still less editing.

Looking through this volume we are struck once again with the remarkable and, as far as we know, unparalleled fashion in which Milton, having formed a great literary ambition in early life, and having been debarred for twenty years by the stress of the world's work from realising it, yet kept it before him throughout, until the day came when he could turn serenely to the great achievement. Let us trace briefly the evidence of this singular obsession by an idea through two decades. In 1637, the year of "Lycidas," Milton writes to his friend, Charles Diodati: "You ask me what I am thinking of? So may the good Deity help me, of immortality! And what am I doing? Growing my wings and meditating flight." Three years later the Long Parliament called Milton from his dreams to practical life—to the scholar's share in practical life, which is controversy. But in his most arid or his least savoury pamphlet he will from time to time wax lyrical and great at the thought of what for him, and for England, the future has in its womb. Hear him in the Considerations of Reformation in England:

Then, amidst the hymns and hallelujahs of saints, someone may perhaps be heard offering at high strains in now and lofty measures, to sing and celebrate the Divine mercies and marvellous judgments in this land throughout all ages.

Hear him in the Animadversions upon the Remonstrant's Defence:

And he that now for haste snatches up a plain un-garnished present as a thankoffering to Thee, which could not be deferred in regard of Thy so many late deliverances wrought for us one upon another, may then perhaps take up a harp; and sing Thee an elaborate song to generations.

But, to conclude, the best passages are found in The Reason of Church Government urged against Prelaty, where he goes back over his own youth, and tells how

I began thus far to assent both to them and divers of my friends here at home, and not less to an inward prompting which now grew daily upon me, that by labour and intense study, (which I take to be my portion in this life,) joined with the strong propensity of nature, I might perhaps leave something so written to after times, as they should not willingly let it die.

Fiction.

The Enchanter. By U. L. Silberrad.
(Macmillan & Co. 6s.)

THERE is something unusual and something strong in this novel. Though it shows many faults, the author has imported into it a forceful freshness which must necessarily attract. The figure of Nicholas Pycroft, whose boyish ambition it is to be an "enchanter," and who ends as a scientist of European fame, is original and rather charming. His early predilection for the companionship of Nature, his simple and passionate interest in all forms of life and all natural phenomena (even to an abandoned river-bed), his sensitiveness to the feeling of places, his directness of intercourse, and that absolute reliance upon instinct which carries him safe through difficult crises: these things—characteristics not often recommending themselves to our novelists—are well rendered, and they constitute a hero of real nobility. For us Nicholas Pycroft is the whole book. We do not consider that there is much else in it which can be called entirely satisfactory. The "enchantment" business—ruined tower, Eastern MS., elixir of life, vampire, insane genius, death-struggle amid the inevitable thunderstorm—is certainly not satisfactory, though the author does her best to be effective with the outworn material.

Slowly, very slowly, the two figures, which looked like one in the dim light of the low fire, turned. Nicholas was uppermost now; in the long pause that followed he wondered by what accident it had happened. How the wind screamed! He had never heard it scream so before. How the old Tower rocked, rocked, swayed with a strange sickening sway; had the end come? No, the foundation still held, the walls were almost motionless again, only shuddering. Something fell in the room beneath, and here, in this room, five bottles on a high shelf came tottering to the ground. One held some red solution: it streamed across the uneven floor and then settled in a hollow, looking like a pool of blood.

Slowly, very slowly, the figure beneath was relaxing its hold, and ever, as it loosened, the grasp of him who was uppermost tightened, till it was as the grasp of death.

This is not good. Nor is Nicholas's love-affair good. At the beginning of the book, when Nicholas, the village boy, and Ira, the proud child of rank, come together, and Ira orders Nicholas about, and Nicholas obeys her and snubs her within the same hour—we know that the pair will marry, after the girl has spent a sufficient number of years in hating the youth. It has been done a hundred times before, and it will be done a hundred times yet again. But there seems no valid reason why Miss Silberrad should have done it. And in particular there seems no reason why she should have taken hero, heroine and villain to a remote spot in Asia, and there caused the hero to free the heroine from an imprisonment wickedly contrived by the villain. The Asiatic scenes are quite unconvincing.

Miss Silberrad writes with correctness, and her style is clear and terse. She does not, however, appear to have any feeling for verbal dignity and beauty, and if a phrase of the street serves her purpose she will use it. Few novelists have any feeling for verbal dignity and beauty, but Miss Silberrad's promise is such that she ought to cultivate that feeling; without it she will never do herself justice.

Cold Steel. By M. P. Shiel.
(Grant Richards. 6s.)

THE title of this novel of the reign of Henry the Eighth is fairly descriptive of its contents. The story contains more fighting than any novel that we remember—not excepting The Three Musketeers. Mr. Shiel appears to have had it in mind to imitate Dumas' methods of narration, or rather his mannerisms, especially in the disposition of paragraphs and the frequency of short lines. One is inclined to think sometimes that he wrote Cold Steel at so many francs per line, like Eugène Sue his feuilletons. But these are merely superficial characteristics. There is good stuff in Cold Steel, partly obscured beneath various affectations. The central point of the tale is a girl named Laura Ford, of peerless beauty—the male characters call her "a tasty moppet"—who excites the dangerous admiration of Henry. With much ingenuity Mr. Shiel weaves round this girl a court intrigue of amazing complexity:

Most of the five parties—the King's, the Queen's, Anne's, Du Ballay's, and Wolsey's—come to seize Bessie and Laura Ford, were astonished at the presence of all the others at the Bell.

They were nineteen: the King's three—Fitz, Mac, and Bonner; Du Ballay, with four French knights, on steeds caparisoned in goodly trappings with purples; hot-headed young Percy of Northumberland, sent by Anne, with three stout livery-men; the Counté Alvarada, with the ferocious huge Sir John Perrot and two Queen's-men; and, lastly, three blood-hounds of Wolsey, gentlemen of his bed-chamber, gallants famed for tilting at the quintain, running at the ring, or jousting in single combat.

Of all these, Alvarada alone knew that the girls were locked in a chamber, and where. The keys of the chamber he had in his doublet.

To these is soon added King Francis of France, whose aim is as sinister as that of Henry himself. Some three hundred pages of cut-and-thrust are consumed before Laura is safely united to a faithful student with whom in the early part of the book she has had a love scene of the most "passion-pale" sort. Here is a sample of the fighting:

They met; and at once with clattering brusquerie and spurts of sparks the engagement commenced, the white and whetted steel of Percy's slenderly-curved axe-blade operating fiercely, notching the sword of Alvarada, and cleaving his armour, every time. The defect, however, of the axe in armoured combat is its inability to pierce, its effect being for the most part flesh wounds—a defect which gave rise to the invention of the halberd; and at a moment when the cuirass of the Spaniard ran three streams of red, a sudden deft prick in the ribs caused Percy to close his spurs in an involuntary spasm: his mare leapt forward; as his sick left arm tore at her mouth, there was an ooze of blood from the elbow-joint; at that moment...

Cold Steel is not a fine book, but it has its fiery moments of imagination and force. We consider that if Mr. Shiel abandoned every master save his own literary conscience he might produce good work. His Prince Zaleski was decidedly no ordinary achievement.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

PARSON KELLY. By A. E. W. MASON AND ANDREW LANG.

This story of the period of the Pretender—to which Mr. Lang has brought much Jacobite erudition—opens in Paris in 1719. It is continued in the London of Steele and Addison and Lady Mary Wortley Montagu. The parson hero, who is an agent of the Pretender, makes a striking figure. (Longmans. 6s.)

THE WHITE DOVE. By WILLIAM J. LOCKE.

This novel, by the author of Derelicts, shows how Ella Defries's love is contended for by a rising surgeon of cold, but sterling, virtues, and a hollow-hearted, raving apostle of Art. (John Lane. 6s.)

BENEATH THE MOON. By DOLLY PENTREATH.

A melodramatic novel, hot with India and intrigue. The heroine is a fragile adventuress, whose husband, realising his perils, contrives to be drowned, and then Lady Eleanor begins adventuring in earnest. (Simpkin, Marshall. 6s.)

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates for Yearly Subscriptions ..... 20s. including postage.

American Agents for the ACADEMY: Brentano's, 31, Union-square, New York.

The Ideal Circulating Library.

By a Reader.

IT is a curious fact that at the present time, when the doors of the twentieth century are soon to swing back to let the hurrying world rush through, we have no circulating library in London that is conducted upon "up to date" lines of modern commercial enterprise. We have, it is true, several long-established firms that let out books for a consideration, and these are admirably managed; but we, the reading public, have now reached a stage in our development at which the old-fashioned methods cannot supply our enlightened demands. Let me sketch a few of the characteristics of my ideal library, in the fond hope that the Twentieth Century will see it converted into a reality.

In the first place, the organiser must be a man who has fathomed the grand secret of success in trade. This is so simple that it may be told in three words—"Study your customer." Feel his pulse, anticipate his desires, supply his wants in the manner most easy and agreeable to himself. Pamper him, in short, and be sure that he will repay you. It will be news to many people that it was not always the custom for shops to send home their customers' purchases free of charge. A few enterprising tradesmen began the fashion, and the rest were soon compelled to follow suit. Provision merchants not only sent home goods, but called for orders daily, and found themselves well rewarded for their trouble. Only the big libraries held out, and still hold out. Once a week (in some cases twice) they contract to exchange books at their customers' houses and at their customers' expense. Fancy the blank astonishment of the British matron if Mr. Peter Robinson or Mr. Whiteley were to inform her that he would be happy to send home her purchases on a Friday—his regular day—but that he would be obliged to make an extra charge for portage. It may be objected that the cases are not on all fours, since the books are only hired, while the other goods are bought outright; but let the objector hire a bath, a lamp, or some crockery at any of our large stores, and the goods will not only be conveyed to him, but fetched away again free of charge. It is really a pathetic sight on a rainy, windy day to see middle-aged ladies struggling along New Oxford-street with a strapful of books, an umbrella, and a long skirt. The first big library that starts a motor van for each district that it serves, supplemented if necessary by tricycle carriers, and exchanges books daily at its customers' houses will win the public gratitude. At the present time there are, it should be mentioned, a few small libraries in connexion with stationers' shops whose proprietors send home customers' books, but the stock at these establishments consists, as a rule, almost entirely of novels, with a sprinkling of popular biographies and travels, and is of little use to the reader who desires to range over a wider field of literature.

The "back-stock" of the ideal circulating library should rival that of the London Library, while modern publications should be provided on the most liberal scale. The proprietor should clear his mind of red-tape, and discard all obnoxious little charity-school rules. At most of the existing libraries the rules seem to be framed with a view to saving trouble to the employés instead of to the customers. Take one or two striking examples. It is, I believe, the rule at every big library that clients may not change books more than once a day. Of course, in a general way, they would not want to. But consider the hard case of a man who only subscribes for one book, and who, having taken it home, finds that he has already read it, or that he does not want to read it. Is he to be left for the whole of a possibly wet day and sleepless night without any fresh sustenance for his mind, or—to put it on the lowest grounds—any effectual antidote for his sordid worries? Another irksome rule ordains that no country reader may "break a set"; that is, if he wants to read a three-volume novel he may not have one volume at a time—he must take all or none. Now, when a Londoner goes into the country for his holiday, he becomes a country customer for the time being, and subject to country rules. If, just before starting, he has read the first two volumes of a novel, and desires to take the third with him, he is obliged to saddle himself with the two volumes already read. This rule is less irksome now than formerly, because the three-volume novel is practically dead; but there are plenty of old books by such writers as Mr. Gissing and Mr. Henry James which are still alive, but which can only be obtained at the libraries in three-volume editions.

Again, a customer desiring an early opportunity of reading a book which is in considerable demand may put his name down for it at the libraries, but only on condition that he leaves a volume in pawn. Now, this is mere pandering to the big subscribers. The rich man whose subscription entitles him to ten or twelve volumes at a time, can always afford to leave one or two in pawn, and thus carries off all the new publications. The poor man, who only subscribes for one or two volumes, has never one to spare, and consequently seldom obtains a book until it is from four to six months old, which is like getting Saturday's loaf on Monday morning. The system of putting down names of applicants to be dealt with in turn would be perfectly fair if it were not accompanied by a demand for a hostage. But without that condition, say the authorities, the system would involve too much trouble. Trouble to whom? To the employés. The convenience of customers should be taken into account.

The proprietors of most of our important libraries ignore the immense floating population of London, which wants to hire books by the night, the week, or the month. As a rule, subscriptions cannot be taken out for less than three months, the small profits and quick returns so dear to the heart of all practical tradesmen being entirely disdained. The virtuous librarian of my dreams would arrange a separate department for clients who desired to subscribe for a shorter period than three months. No doubt the working of such a department would give a good deal of "trouble," but in any other lines of business the fear of trouble does not prevent tradesmen from letting out their goods by the night. It would be rather hard upon the hospitably-inclined if they were unable to hire plate, palms, and rout-seats for a period of less than three months!

A few years ago the libraries combined to boycott the three-volume novel published at a guinea-and-a-half. They insisted that all novels should be published in one volume at 6s. or 3s. 6d. There was a tacit agreement that the libraries would take so many more copies at these reduced prices that the trade would suffer no loss, while the reading public would benefit enormously. The actual result of the bargain has been that authors, booksellers, and the patrons of circulating libraries are all worse off than they were six years ago. The ideal library of the future, having raked in all the custom, would be able to compel the publishers to follow the good example set by foreign firms, and issue books in paper covers at half-a-crown, or thereabouts. As soon as these covers became soiled or torn, a limited number of copies of each work that was thought worthy of the honour could be cheaply bound (by the libraries) in plain, strong covers. This seems to be the method practised at Rolandi's, and other foreign circulating libraries. Twice or four times a year there should be a sale of surplus unbound copies at a uniform price of one shilling. The volumes should be conveniently arranged, for the inspection of customers, on long trestles. Every big draper recognises the advantage of letting people (more especially women) turn over goods upon the counter. Purchases through the post consist of necessities only, but purchases in a shop, at bargain time, consist of opportunities seized and temptations yielded to. Another leaf which the libraries should take out of the book of the big drapers is the tea-room. This should be well supplied with comfortable chairs and illustrated papers, and on each of the little tables should lie a monthly list of new books and a pencil, so that customers could read and mark while drinking their tea.

Descriptive Art.

IN the January number of the National Review Miss J. H. Findlater writes interestingly on "The Art of Narration." Her main point is, that descriptive writing has made more marked advance of late years than almost any other form of literature. "The change is from prolixity to brevity; from colourless detail to vivid outline; from long words to short ones." Miss Findlater's examples of the old and new styles of description are happily chosen. She aptly contrasts an old and a new writer in the following passages:

Sir Walter Scott.

The Cheviots rose before me in frowning majesty; not, indeed, with the sublime variety of rock and cliff which characterises mountains of the primary class, but huge, round-headed, and clothed with a dark robe of russet, gaining by their extent and desolate appearance an influence upon the imagination which possessed a character of its own.

Here, of course, the advantage is with the later writer, but we shall have a word to say on the value of such comparisons. Meanwhile, we are glad to see that Miss Findlater is alive to the young vices as well as the maturing virtues of the new school. She deprecates the method which relies too much on "words which express themselves." Such words are rarely classical, and they produce a sense of violence. They are expensive, in the old sense, and the best proof that they are in the long run ineffective is that they tire the reader. In The Red Badge of Courage Miss Findlater finds many examples of this assertive writing: "His canteen banged rhythmically, and his haversack bobbed softly. . . . The purple darkness was filled with men who jabbered. . . . The ground was cluttered with men. . . . A spatter of musketry. . . . His knees wobbled," &c.

Another doubtful method is the staccato. As Miss Findlater says: "Nothing is easier. The method is simple. It presents no difficulties. It is distinct. It appeals to many. It is new." The growing use of simile in description is, perhaps, too incautiously approved by Miss Findlater. We agree that a few similes may easily double the force of a descriptive passage; but Miss Findlater does not seem to recognise that here also many come to grief. A simile must be absolutely right to be acceptable: it must be accurate, and it must enlighten the reader swiftly

Mr. Kipling.

The animal delight of that roaring day of sun and wind will live long in our memory—the rifted purple flank of Lackawee, the long vista of the lough darkening as the shadows fell; the smell of a new country, and the tearing wind that brought down mysterious voices of men from somewhere high above us.

and graciously. We have noticed a strong tendency to drag in similes where none are needed, and to aim at clever juxtaposition of remote and unfamiliar things. We discussed this subject last October in connexion with Mr. Capes's fine novel, Our Lady of Darkness. Mr. Capes is of the new school of narration, and his enterprise is beyond praise; but we found him saying of a girl who was skimming cream: "The tips of her fingers budded through the white, like nibs of rhubarb through melting snow." Very likely they did, but it was scarcely wise or helpful to say so. Mr. Capes also wrote: "The girl stood solid on end, like a pocket of hops," which is simile run wild. Not that simile may never be pushed into new regions; but there is a discretion. Mr. Kipling is justified of this: "The weather was glorious—a blazing sun, and a light swell to which the cruisers rolled lazily, as hounds roll on the grass at a check." Of the following simile-laden passage from Tess of the D'Urbervilles Miss Findlater thinks: "Description can no further go."

There had not been such a winter for years. It came on in stealthy and measured glides, like the moves of a chess-player. One morning the few lonely trees and the thorns of the hedgerow appeared as if they had put off a vegetable for an animal integument. Every twig was covered with a white nap, as of fur grown from the rind during the night, giving it four times its usual dimensions; the whole bush or the tree forming a staring sketch in white lines on the mournful grey of the sky and horizon. Cobwebs revealed their presence on sheds and walls where none had ever been observed till brought out into visibility by the crystallising atmosphere—hanging like loops of white worsted from salient points of the outhouses, posts, and gates.

This is good description. But is it better than the following passage, which has no similes, in Eothen? Kinglake is describing the desert march of a caravan:

You look to the Sun, for he is your task-master, and by him you know the measure of the work that you have done, and the measure of the work that remains for you to do. . . . No words are spoken, but your Arabs moan, your camels sigh, your skin glows, your shoulders ache, and for sights you see the pattern, and the web of the silk that veils your eyes, and the glare of the outer light. Time labours on—your skin glows, and your shoulders ache, your Arabs moan, your camels sigh, and you see the same pattern in the silk, and the same glare of light beyond, but conquering time marches on, and by and by the descending Sun has compassed the Heaven, and now softly touches your right arm, and throws your lank shadow over the sand, right along on the way for Persia; then again you look upon his face, for his power is all veiled in his beauty, and the redness of flames has become the redness of roses—the fair, wavy cloud that fled in the morning now comes to his sight once more—comes blushing, yet still comes on—comes burning with blushes, yet hastens, and clings to his side.

What we miss most in Miss Findlater's paper is a sense of the comparative unimportance of descriptive writing. She concludes her paper by expressing the belief that the younger men of the new school of writing may yet produce classics. True, but Miss Findlater has been talking about little beyond style, as applied to descriptions of scenery; and it is certain that this is not a basis of immortality. The masterpieces of fiction take their rank by virtue of qualities which are hardly hinted at in Miss Findlater's paper. In fact, to discuss the art of description apart from creation and insight is a rather dangerous proceeding. Mr. Crane's book, for instance, has substance and insight, and these are more important to it than its diction. Novels are not judged by their backgrounds. They live by their interpretations of human character, and that is why Scott's interpolated descriptions do not matter, and are even liked for their placidity. As candidates for the classical shelves, our young writers need something before style; even thought, penetration, and abundance.

The Amateur Critic.

[To this page we invite our readers to contribute criticism, favourable or otherwise, of books new and old, or remarks on striking or curious passages which they may meet with in their reading. No communication, we would point out, must exceed 300 words.]

On the Abuse of Dialect.

A WRITER in the ACADEMY has justly given high praise to On Trial as a work of art, prophesying that in years to come, when the popular fourth-rate novels of the moment are forgotten, the work of "Zack" and of Walter Raymond will be remembered. But to the West Country-man there is a wide difference between these two writers. The author of Two Men o' Mendip must be "Zummerzet" born and bred, and it would seem to be an absolute impossibility for him to make a mistake in the dialect. He can probably think in it with as much ease as in modern English. The village folk in his tender idylls and sombre tragedies are therefore convincing, not only by reason of their strongly-drawn characteristics and individuality, but also because their speech is true to nature. The charm of their quaint sayings goes straight home to the hearts of all dwellers in the West, and although it may be contended that this does not add to the literary or artistic value of the stories, I cannot but think that the writing of fiction in a dialect which never existed, save in the imagination of the author, must in some measure detract from their value.

It is in this respect that "Zack," with so many others, offends. The others do not matter. It is not necessary to read their novels. But it is a real loss when the power and beauty of a work are made as nought by the unskilful handling of the dialect. Life is Life contains fewer errors than On Trial, though the reader will be brought up sharply now and again by some Midland or North-country expression never heard in the West. As a rule the swing of the dialect is true, and that is the chief thing. But in On Trial it is all wrong. The groundwork certainly is Devon, and there is a hint of Somerset which is also admissible in an Exmoor story. But why will "Zack" scatter over her pages such words as "happen," "main," "liefer," and "alles"? The last is particularly aggravating, and its continual occurrence is enough in itself to destroy the Devonshire atmosphere of the book. It should be either "alwes" or "alwa-a-ys," with the accent on the second syllable. The negatives, too, betray the unpractised ear. "Her'll no profit" may be Scotch, but it is not Devonshire.

These are a few isolated examples, and may seem of small account, but to a West Country reader the murdering of his beloved dialect is as irritating as the murdering of the Queen's English must be to one who has a keen delight in style. "Zack" is not dependent on any one form of expression. She is an artist, and should work in a medium she understands. She can write pure English, even if she cannot master the Devonshire dialect, and will, perhaps, one day give us an unspoiled work of art.

Blackmore and Walter Raymond are unrivalled in their use of the West Country speech, and for an example of the restrained suggestion of dialect Hardy's Wessex folk are unapproachable. The author never tortures the language with strange spelling, making it difficult for the uninitiated to understand; and yet by little turns of speech he suggests the intonation and the rhythm which, after all, are the chief features of dialect.

M. H.

The Topography of Reading.

NOT the reading of topography. Oh, no! I mean the topography of one's own reading. I speak of that charming association which links a good book to the place where one first read it. Only yesterday, in walking down Holborn, I saw a copy of Mr. Tarver's Life and Letters of Gustave Flaubert offered as part of a "remainder" for 2s.

I bought it. In 1895 I had borrowed this book from Mudie's, and I see now the little heath, with its brambles and sandpits, and its little overflowing ponds that made skies in the grass, where I read the burning, sensuous thoughts and flashing atheisms of the author of Salammbô. Hugo, the Goncourts, Chateaubriand, were with me, and it seemed that only Frenchmen could write. A couple of horses, out to graze, moved off slowly as I read, and seemed always gravely keeping their distance. Over yonder hedge stretched the miles of Essex marsh; beyond these the Maplin Sands, and then the blue, dangerous sea, with the light-ships.

Seldom is the topography of reading logical or appropriate. Therein lies its charm. I first read Jane Austen in the window-seat of a Cornish farmhouse on a wild day. Cape Cornwall loomed out of the wrack, and retired; and, far away over the Atlantic, rain-storms moved slowly, like squadrons on a plain. I wonder whether my preference of Ann Elliot over all Jane Austen's heroines was assured in that hour?

Such experiences are the marriages of the mind, and they never fade. Never do I think of Carlyle but I am walking up and down a York playground. Down there, over the lawn, a football match is writhing. But I walk up and down with my book—my head in the clouds—and the Minster bells, chiming the quarter, set golden accents on the words of the Sage: "Came it never over thee like the gleam of preternatural eternal Oceans, like the voice of old Eternities, far-sounding through thy heart of hearts?"

W.

Inkhorn Terms.

No doubt Stevenson's work is responsible for a good deal of the made writing of the present day, as the contributor of the article in the ACADEMY for this week seems to suggest. But the practice of fine writing is of tolerable antiquity, and one can guess how such work will be valued in the future when one looks back, for instance, on the work of the Euphuists which followed John Lyly's famous book three hundred years ago. One cannot help deploring that there should be such a lack of thought in the work of Stevenson's imitators, for he never descended to mere verbiage. The following passage in Thomas Wilson's System of Rhetoric, published in 1553, might be quoted and practised, I think, with some effect at the present time:

Among other lessons, this should first be learned: that we never affect any strange inkhorn terms, but to speak as is commonly received; neither seeking to be over fine, nor yet living over careless; using our speech as most men do, and ordering our wits as the fewest have done. Some seek so far for outlandish English, that they forget altogether their mother's language. And I dare swear this, if some of their mothers were alive they were not able to tell what they say, and yet these fine English clerks will say that they speak in their mother tongue if a man should charge them with counterfeiting the king's English.

JAMES POSTLETHWAITE.

Superfine English,

THE article on "Made Writing" in the ACADEMY for this week reminds me of a comment on R. L. Stevenson's work which appeared in one of the daily newspapers at the time of his death. The writer claimed that Stevenson had even influenced the journalist, who now found time to put some finish into his work. It was a good influence—for there is some truth in the contention—but it is to be feared that it also had some doubtful effects. Stevenson, who loved to write about his work, has been the cause of sending a whole host of young men down a remarkably steep place, somewhat with the same result as did John Lyly three hundred years ago with his Euphuës. The man who has something to say is in no danger of making such a descent, but the mere stylist seems to follow Lewis Carroll's advice to "Take care of the sound and the sense will take care of itself" with a result such as you instance. A. BARTON.

Correspondence.

"Bulks Largely."

SIR,—As my use of the words "bulks largely" in That Reminds Me has been twice mentioned in your columns, I beg leave to say—though I am not enamoured of the phrase, and though I know that anyone who writes in a newspaper is expected to lie down under any reproach of bad English—that I find the use of "bulk" as a verb accepted without question in Murray's Dictionary. It is there attributed to writers who wrote in 1672, 1725, 1832, 1859 respectively; and among these is Carlyle, who wrote "bulked much larger." If the objection is to the adverb "largely" I fail to see that the use of it is more offensive than that of the adjective; and, if that matters, the adverb may seem to some more grammatical.—I am, &c.,

EDWARD RUSSELL.

The Daily Post, Victoria-street, Liverpool:
Jan. 2, 1900.

[Our objection to the phrase "bulks largely" had reference to Sir Edward Russell's context, in which cynicism was said to bulk largely in table stories. We think that the phrase "bulks largely" becomes incorrect when applied to an abstract quality like cynicism. A man may bulk largely in the dark; cotton goods may bulk largely in our exports; but surely cynicism cannot bulk largely anywhere.—ED. ACADEMY.]

Quintuple Rhythm.

SIR,—Will you allow me to ask some of your readers who are learned in the subject of poetical rhythms if there are any examples in English verse of the quintuple rhythm which is often effectively used by musical composers, and notably by Tchaikowsky in his "Symphony Pathétique"?

I do not know if the experiment has been tried or if it is worth trying.

In the doggerel I send you the beats are, I think, fairly correct, at any rate.

"Hear how merrily monks sing," Cnut King calls.
"Row we cheerily, comrades,
Near their halls."
"Can we emulate their love
For their heavenly King?
Can we raise our souls till they Likewise sing?"

—I am, &c.,
Belfast: Dec. 25, 1899.

CHABREZ.

"How Soldiers Fight."

SIR,—While in no sense objecting to the general tenour of your critic's strictures on my book, How Soldiers Fight, I would like to correct a false impression he appears to suggest as to the reason why it saw the light—to wit, my desire to catch the pennies of people who gloat over the present South African horror. As one who, maugre "an enthusiasm for 'blugginess,'" has sacrificed material gain to his aversion from our unhappy policy in the Cape, I think I have the right to ask you to allow me to deny this.

How Soldiers Fight, slight as the volume is, and whatever its shortcomings may be, represents not less than thirteen years' study of the history of warfare and its science. The writing of it was commenced in the year 1897; several of the articles (including that containing the phrases which your critic quotes) appeared in a popular magazine in the spring of 1898; and the whole book as it now stands was in the hands of the publisher at least three months before hostilities were declared between this country and the Boer Republics.—I am, &c.,

Jan. 7, 1900.

F. NORREYS CONNELL.

The S. S. McClure Co.

SIR,—In your issue of January 6 it is stated that Mr. Walter H. Page, formerly of the Atlantic Monthly, together with other gentlemen whom you mention, is to become a member of the S. S. McClure Company. Permit me to say that these statements are entirely erroneous and quite misleading. There has been no change in the membership of the S. S. McClure Company, and no change is contemplated. Neither is the firm's name to be changed, in any way, as you state. Your paragraph, doubtless, refers to the operation of another concern.—I am, &c.,

ROBERT MCCLURE.

10, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Our Weekly Prize Competitions.

Result of No. 16 (New Series).

LAST week we offered a prize for the best application of an anagram to verse after a model which we supplied. We have received a large number of replies, but the task of awarding the Guinea has been unusually easy. It goes to the Rev. Roslyn Bruce, St. Ann's Rectory, Soho-square, W. Mr. Bruce's anagram-verse is as follows

Nay, great Khávyám! a power more strong than wine
Controls earth's empires and the heavens above:
Thus Hamelin's piper sang of some divine
She-rat, which stirred the he-rats' hearts to Love.

Among other attempts are these:

Thou Muse, who rulest verse and trope,
May'st shed a lustre on my name,
Thou lurest me, e'en me, with hope
Of fair result to purse and fame.

[I. H. T., British Museum.]

Pedantic Muse! why dost thou bore us so
In artful anagram to robe our thought,
While Boer and British still give blow for blow,
And "Cantuar" and "Ebor" help us naught?
And yet the brave who bear War's bitterest tests
Have time for other games, and life for laugh'terous jests.

[H. A. W., Portobello.]

If Art prove cruel, and appear too proud,
Make lucre God, and pander to the crowd:
Let some Thersites play the hero's rôle,
And bare to all the ulcer of his soul.

[F. E. W., London.]

Ah! had I time, my teeming brain
Should countless anagrams emit,
And not an item prove unfit
Its mite of enlogy to gain.

[M. A. W., Watford.]

That wise son of Levi, of whom Browning told,
Could live his life bravely, and bravely grow old;
He saw through the veil God's purpose revealed,
And evil and good were two sides of one shield.

[H. M. S., Manchester.]

The heart of earth is glad because of spring,
Fierce hater she of winter's cold and dearth,
The rathe primrose and the violet sing
With fragrant breath to herald the new birth.

[A. L., London.]

My fame will flame aloft when pales
Your ineffectual fire;
To steal the least of your stale tales
Is far from my desire!

[R. B. J., West Kensington.]

These silent counsellors with patience wait,
Not decked in tinsel, but adorned with gold,
Symbol of words we listen to, elate,
That enlist the mind, while treasures they unfold.

[SCOTIA.]

The ablest poet he whose fluent style
On tables broad can show the stable strength
Of massy peaks, whose fronts the lightning dare,
But paints with skill no less sweet Chloe's smile
For piping Corydon, who lolls at length,
Of bleats of thorn-caught ewe-lambs unaware.

[F. H. B.]

Mastering his pride, sets out King James,
With followers few, down streaming Thames.
Like emigrants, they all repair
To breathe St. Germain's sheltering air.

Replies received also from : J. D. A., Ealing ; J. E. Y., Kilburn ; W. S., Buxton ; G. M. P., Birmingham ; T. E. O., Brighton ; E. B., Liverpool ; J. B. W., Hove ; S. B., Malvern ; G. E. M., London ; Rev. R. McC., Whitby ; M. G. B., London ; J. P. B. B., Liverpool ; E. B., Liverpool ; A. F., Sutton ; K. P., Bangor ; J. C. F., Emdon ; L. W., London ; T. C., Buxton ; D. M. S. S., London ; K. de M., London ; B. P., London ; E. F. S., Bristol ; A. S., Edinburgh ; K. K., Belfast ; H. G. H., Whitby ; E. G. B., Liverpool ; F. L., London ; H. B. R., Bradford ; M. F. L., Stafford ; P. A. K., Dalkeith ; A. B. C., London ; H. H. C., Lee ; J. A. B., Birmingham ; H. C. H., Manchester ; J. L. H., West Norwood ; Miss G., Reigate ; T. M., Oundle ; Miss C., London.

Prize Competition No. 17 (New Series).

This week we return to more serious work. In a recent issue of the ACADEMY, a contributor to our "Amateur Critic" page, referring to a new edition of Earle's Microcosmography in the "Temple Classics" series, wrote :

"It is to be hoped that this admirable gallery of seventeenth century character studies will have an extended popularity. Now is the time for some modern Theophrastus to arise and give us a new series of characters of our age. I venture to submit the following titles for some of the word-portraits of modern literary characters : 'The Good Authors'-Agent, 'The Virtuous Publisher,' 'A Roaring Journalist,' 'The Downright Lady-Novelist,' 'A Very Laureate,' 'A Mere Dull Contributor,' and 'A Grub-street Phantastique.'"

We offer a guinea for the best character-sketch of the kind indicated. It should not be imitative of Earle's archaic style, on the contrary it should be modern in subject and tone.

Freedom of choice is given in the selection of a "character." We have no objection to competitors using the subjects suggested by our contributor.

The length of a character-sketch must not exceed 200 words.

RULES.

Answers, addressed "Literary Competition, The ACADEMY, 43 Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Tuesday, January 16. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found in the first column of p. 40 or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon ; otherwise the first only will be considered. We wish to impress on competitors that the task of examining replies is much facilitated when one side only of the paper is written upon. It is also important that names and addresses should always be given : we cannot consider anonymous answers.

OUR SPECIAL PRIZE COMPETITIONS.

(For particulars see inside page of cover.)

New Books Received.

[These notes on some of the New Books of the week are preliminary to Reviews that may follow.]

CHATTERTON : A BIOGRAPHY. BY DAVID MASSON.

Forty-four years have passed since this biography was first published as part of a collection of essays. It has long been out of print, and is now re-issued in a handsome volume, revised throughout, with the concluding chapter much enlarged. It is a good and sympathetic piece of work, none the worse for a certain old-fashioned air that hovers about its leisurely pages. As in his Life of Milton, Prof. Masson suggests the atmosphere of the time, and the conditions of the period in which Chatterton lived out his brief, unhappy life. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

IN TUNE WITH THE INFINITE. BY R. W. TRINE.

This is one of those helpful, sympathetic little books about the conduct of life and the reality of the unseen world that are a particular characteristic of America. Their parent is Emerson ; they champion no creed ; they seek to unravel the "golden thread that runs through every religion in the world," and they are widely read. The volume is printed from the twenty-first American edition. Mr. Trine writes in clear, straightforward language, and his book makes for happiness and contentment. (Bell. 3s. 6d.)

AN ETHICAL SUNDAY-SCHOOL. BY WALTER L. SHELDON.

This sketch of an ethical Sunday-school will be studied by social workers interested in the young. The Sunday-school in question is at St. Louis, and the feature of the teaching is that boys and girls are first grounded in the rules of morality. "It has not been our purpose in any way definitely to antagonise religious beliefs. But instead of beginning our teaching with talks about 'God,' this latter feature comes in . . . at the end of the course, about the time when the young people are passing on into young manhood and young womanhood." The foundation of the teaching is a catechism, or "responsive exercise." The subjects illustrated in this sketch—it is confessedly no more—include the Bible, Habits, Home, the State, Religious Beliefs, &c. A suggestive little book, full of a new spirit. (Sonnenschein. 3s.)

THE AGE OF JOHNSON.

BY THOMAS SECCOMBE.

This book takes its place in the excellent series of "Hand-books of English Literature" which includes Dr. Garnett's The Age of Dryden and Mr. John Dennis's The Age of Pope. Mr. Seccombe's qualifications for treating of eighteenth century literature are well established, and he brings to his task feeling as well as knowledge. Thus he deprecates the cold-shouldering which the eighteenth century has received from a long line of able critics who "have denounced the age unsparingly as dull and unprincipled, ugly and brutal." As to dulness, Mr. Seccombe thinks the allegation is arrived at "by the same process that many Englishmen pronounce German literature stupid, and by which George III. doubtless decided that much of Shakespeare was 'sad stuff.'" The period covered by Mr. Seccombe is 1748-1798 ; the book is written on the orderly plan of its predecessors, and concludes with a useful chronological table. (Bell & Sons. 3s. 6d.)

A DIVIDEND TO LABOUR. BY NICHOLAS PAINE GILMAN.

Profit-sharing systems, called in the United States Employers' Welfare Societies, are among the most significant of modern developments in commerce. Mr. Gilman's book is, as far as we know, the first survey of such systems in Germany, France, Holland and Belgium, Great Britain, and America. The book is an intelligent account of the rise of humane and "moralised" relations between employers and workers, and its interest for both these classes at the present day is great. The particulars given about many English firms are both minute and readable. (Gay & Bird. 7s. net.)

In addition to the above, we have received :

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

Sessions (F.), Isaiah ..... (Headley) 1/6
E'tis (J.), Tools for the Master's Work ..... (Alenson) 1/6

POETRY, CRITICISM, AND BELLES LETTRES.

Ruskin (John), On the Old Road, 2 vols. (Reprints) ..... (Allen) each net 5/0
Earle (W.), Thought Sketches ..... (Allen) net 1/6
H. B., Lambkin's Remains ..... (Vincent) 2/3
Liohban (H. C. J.), The Last Hours of a Lion Heart ..... (Melville, Mullen, & Shude)
Thorpe (Elphinstone), Lyrics from Lazyland ..... (Glaisher) net 2/6

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

Sanderson (Edgar), Historic Parallels to L'Affaire Dreyfus ..... (Hatchinson) 6/0
Wilson (H. W.), The Downfall of Spain ..... (Sampson Low)
Bessant (Annie), The Story of the Great War: Some Lessons from the Mahábháratá ..... (Theosoph. Pub. Soc.)

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Catholic Directory, 1900 ..... (Burns & Oates) net 1/6
Hinselwood (James), Letter, Word, and Mind-Blindness ..... (Lewis) 3/0
Geldart (Rev. E.), A Manual of Church Decoration and Symbolism ..... (Mowbray & Co.) net 10/3
Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation ..... (Murray) net 3/0

NEW EDITIONS.

Chiswick Shakespeare: Winter's Tale, King John ..... (Bell)
Arber (Edward), Spenser Autology ..... (Frowde) 2/6
Russell (Rev. M.), Altar Flowers ..... (Gill & Son) 4/6
A Soldier, True Stories of South Africa ..... (Barleight) 4/6
Larger Temple Shakespeare: Vols. V. and VI. .... (Dent) each net 1/6

CATALOGUES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick St.
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

BAEDBKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed CATALOGUE sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOBO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

BOOKS WANTED.—25s. each offered.—
Stevenson's Edinburgh, 1879—Tennyson's Poems, 1830—
Symonds's Age of the Despot, 1875—Symonds's Essays, 1 vols.,
1898—Symonds's Sketches and Studies in Italy, 1879—Inland
Voyage, 1874—New Arabian Nights, 2 vols., 1882—Hawthorne
Grange, 1847—Wild Wales, 3 vols., 1862—Moore's Alps in 1864—
Scorpe's Salmon Fishing, 1843—Crowe's Paintings in Italy, 5 vols., 1864-71—King Glumpus's an Interlude, 1837. Rare Books
Supplied.—BAKER'S GREAT BOOKSHOP, BIRMINGHAM.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.
—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class
Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet
Street, E.C., have especially-built Rotary and other fast Machines
for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built
Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page
Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence
New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman,
experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by
letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 151, Strand, London, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.—Authors' MSS., Plays,
Legal and Scientific Documents, &c., at usual rates.
Translations from and into Foreign Languages.—W. T. CECIL,
10, Harringay Park, Crouch End, London, N.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately
done. 10d. per 1,000 words. Samples and references.
Multi-Copies.—Address, Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TRAFALGAR LITERARY and TYPE-
WRITING BUREAU (DE MOMET & WALKER),
3, Trafalgar Buildings, Northumberland Avenue, W.C.,
Typing, Duplicating, Shorthand, Reporting, Translations
(all Languages), Literary Researches, Press Cuttings.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on
DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums
on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

"THE ACADEMY"

LITERARY COMPETITIONS.

New Series.—No. 17.

All readers attempting this week's
Competition (described fully on page
39) must cut out this Coupon
and enclose it with their reply.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN, Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

TUESDAY NEXT, JANUARY 16th, at 3 o'clock, Professor
E. RAY LANKESTER, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., Director of the Natural History Departments of the British Museum, Fullerian
Professor of Physiology, R.I. First of TWELVE LECTURES on "THE STRUCTURE and CLASSIFICATION of FISHES." One Guinea the Course.
THURSDAY, JANUARY 18th, at 3 o'clock, W. H. K. RIVERS, Esq., M.A., M.D., F.R.C.P., First of THREE LECTURES on
"THE SENSES OF PRIMITIVE MAN." Half-a-Guinea the Course.
SATURDAY, JANUARY 20th, at 3 o'clock, Sir HUBERT PARRY, Mus. Doc., M.A., D.C.L., Director of the Royal College of Music, First of THREE LECTURES on "NEGLECTED BYWAYS in MUSIC." (With Musical Illustrations.) Half-a-Guinea the Course.
Subscription to all Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.
FRIDAY, JANUARY 19th, at 9 o'clock, The Right Hon. Lord
RAYLEIGH, M.A., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., on "FLIGHT."

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY
(Incorporated by Royal Charter).

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
President—A. W. WARD, LL.D., Litt.D.
THURSDAY, JANUARY 19th, 5 p.m., at ST. MARTIN'S TOWN HALL, Charing Cross, the following Paper will be read:
"THE DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE between ENGLAND and RUSSIA in the FIRST HALF of the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY," by Mrs. D'ARCY COLLIER.
HUBERT HALL, Director and Hon. Secretary.
115, St. Martin's Lane, London, W.C.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING
COLLEGE, Cooper's Hill, Staines.

The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for Employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40
Students will be admitted in September, 1900. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition—Twelve Appointments
as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphs Department, One in the Accountants' Branch
P.W.D., and One in the Traffic Department, Indian State
Railway.—For particulars apply to SECRETARY at College.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMINA-TION for FILLING-UP VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th and 22nd instant.
For information apply to the Bursar of St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

WOOD-CARVING CLASSES at KING'S COLLEGE, STRAND, W.C.

FOR LADIES OR GENTLEMEN.
LENT TERM will commence on MONDAY, January 22nd.
DAY CLASSES, by W. H. HOWARD, on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Fees from 1 to 3 Guineas per Term: hours, 11 to 3 o'clock.
EVENING CLASSES, by G. J. BULL, on Monday and Wednesday, from 7 till 9 o'clock. Fees per Term: One Evening per week, 10s. 6d.; Two Evenings, 18s. 6d.
Tools provided. Prizes at end of Session. Inspection of Studio and work in progress invited during hours named above, when all information will be given by the Instructor in charge.
STANTON W. PRESTON,
Clerk to Worshipful Company of Carpenters.
WALTER SMITH,
Secretary to King's College.

A CHARMING GIFT BOOK!

6s., claret roan, gilt, illustrated.

LONDON IN THE TIME OF THE DIAMOND JUBILEE.

London: Simpkin, Marshall &amp; Co. Llangollen: Darlington &amp; Co.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S. Maps by BARTHOLOMEW.

Fcap. 8vo. ONE SHILLING EACH. Illustrated.

THE VALE of LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J.
PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING;
A. W. KINGLAKE, and Sir THEODORE MARTIN K.O.B.

BOURNEMOUTH and NEW FOREST.

THE NORTH WALES COAST.

BRECON and its BEACONS.

ROSS, TINTERN, and CHEPSTOW.

BRISTOL, BATH, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

BRIGHTON, EASTBOURNE, HASTINGS, and ST. LEONARDS.

LLANDUDNO, RHYL, BANGOR, BETTWSYCOED, and SNOWDON.

ABERYSTWYTH, BARMOUTH, MACHYNLLETH, and ABERDOVEY.

BARMOUTH, DOLGELLY, HARLECH, CRICCIETH, and PWLLHELL.

MALVERN, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, GLOUCESTER, and CHELTENHAM.

LLANDRINDOD WELLS and the SPAS of MID-WALES.

THE CHANNEL ISLANDS.

THE ISLE of WIGHT.

THE WYE VALLEY.

THE SEVERN VALLEY.

1s.—THE HOTELS of the WORLD. A Handbook to the leading hotels throughout the world.

"What would not the intelligent tourist in Paris or Rome give for such a guide-book as this, which teaches so much that is outside the usual scope of such volumes!"—The Times.
"The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.

SECOND EDITION, ENLARGED, 5s.—60 Illustrations, 24 Maps and Plans.

LONDON AND ENVIRONS

By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.

With an additional Index of 4,500 References to all Streets and Places of Interest.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON &amp; CO.

LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, &amp; Co., Ltd., The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers.

Volume III. Ready Next Week.

THE ANGLO-SAXON REVIEW

A QUARTERLY MISCELLANY

EDITED BY

LADY RANDOLPH SPENCER CHURCHILL.

Small folio, bound in Leather. Price 21s. net.

CONTENTS.

On the Binding of this Volume ...	CYRIL DAVENPORT, F.S.A.
War Memories ...	STEPHEN CRANE
Spain: Financial and Political ...	SEROR MOREY Y PRENDERGAST
Some Letters of George Canning (mostly unpublished) ...	Edited by the Rev. Canon RAYEN
Ucrutins on Life and Death ...	W. H. MALLOCK
Talbot of Ursula ...	GEORGE ATKINSON
Our Sea-Fights with the Dutch ...	DAVID HANNAY
The Merciful Soul ...	LAURENCE ALMA TADEMA
Notes on the Venezuelan Arbitration ...	G. R. ASKWITH
Paolo and Francesca ...	RICHARD GARNETT, LL.D.
Four Poems written in Norway in 1899	EDMUND GOSSE
Changes in Parliamentary Speech ...	HON. ALFRED LYTTELTON, M.P.
On the Art of Going to War ...	SPENCER WILKINSON
The Unfinching Realist ...	H. D. TRAILL
Past and Future in South Africa ...	LUCY PHILLIPS
The Outcasts ...	H. DE VREE STACPOOLE
Chinese Doctors and Medical Treat- ment ...	ISABELLA L. BISHOP
Sikhs and Boers: a Parallel ...	STEPHEN WHEELER
Some Battlepieces ...	SINNEY LOW
Impressions and Opinions ...
Notes on the Portraits of Bonaparte, the Shelleys, and Mary of Lorraine	LIONEL CUST, F.S.A., Director of the National Portrait Gallery

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Napoleon Bonaparte ...	DENON
George Canning ...	GAINSBOROUGH
Percy Bysshe Shelley ...	AMELIA CUBAN
Mary Shelley ...	R. ROTHEWELL
Faderewski ...	EMIL FUCHS
Marie de Guise-Lorraine ...	CLOUET

NEW NOVELS.

THE WHITE DOVE. By W. J. Locke, Author of

"Idols," "Derelicts," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"A moving tale of human passion and a powerful study of conduct and motive.....it is a work of high art as well as a piece of wise teaching."

Scotsman.

ONE QUEEN TRIUMPHANT. By Frank Mathew, Author of "Defender of the Faith," "Spanish Wine," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A pleasant historical romance,"—Academy.
"Mr. Mathew has made Elizabeth a very real figure, and indeed has given to the whole book a reality which few present-day writers of historical romance achieve....." One Queen Triumphant "is a fine accomplishment, and a story to be read,"—Daily Mail.

THE REALIST. By Herbert Flowerdew, Author of "A Calihate's Wife." Crown 8vo, cloth 6s.

"One of the cleverest stories we have read for a long time.....interestingly interesting,"—Pall Mall Gazette.
"Mr. Flowerdew has written a story of singular ingenuity and dexterous literary workmanship,"—Daily Telegraph.

"A clever book.....presented with skill and with certainty of touch,"—Daily News.

THE JUDGMENT of HELEN. By Thomas Cobb, Author of "Carpet Courtship," "Mr. Passingham," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A more delightful comedy than 'The Judgment of Helen' could not be wished for.....The situation is very cleverly handled, the characters are charming and play their part to perfection, the dialogue is as bright as the situations are piquant, and the interest and amusement never flag,"—Scotsman.

JOHN LANE, Publisher, Vigo Street, London, W.

CLARENDON PRESS, OXFORD.

FORTHCOMING VOLUMES OF THE OXFORD CLASSICAL TEXTS.

(Scriptorum Classicorum Bibliotheca Oxoniensis.)

THUCYDIDIS HISTORIAE. Libri I—IV.

Recensuit H. STUART JONES. Paper, 3s.; cloth, 3s. 6d.

PLATONIS OPERA. Tom. I. Recensuit J.

BURNET. Paper, 5s.; cloth, 6s.; India paper, 7s.

LUCRETI DE RERUM NATURA LIBER.

Recensuit C. BAILEY. Paper, 2s. 6d.; cloth, 3s.; India paper, 4s.

TACITI OPERA MINORA. Recensuit H. FURNEAUX. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

NEARLY READY.

AESCHYLI TRAGOEDIAE CUM FRAGMENTIS.

Recensuit A. SIDGWICK. Paper, 3s.; cloth, 3s. 6d.; India paper, 4s. 6d.

NOW READY.—Crown 8vo, 5s.

SELECT FRAGMENTS of the GREEK COMIC

POETS. Edited by A. W. PICKARD-CAMBRIDGE, Fellow of Balliol College.

(i.) On Rag-made paper, cloth, 6s. net.

(ii.) On Oxford India paper, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

NOVA ANTHOLOGIA OXONIENSIS. Translations into Greek and Latin Verse. Edited by ROBINSON ELLIS, M.A., and A. D. GODLEY, M.A.

Second Edition, Revised. In 2 vols., cloth, 15s.

THUCYDIDES. Translated into English, with Introduction, Marginal Analysis, Notes, and Indices. By B. JOWETT, M.A., late Master of Balliol College.

NOW READY. In Three Sizes.

THE COMPLETE WORKS of MOLIERE.

(i.) Crown 8vo, on Rag-made paper, cloth, 5s. (ii.) Crown 8vo, on Oxford India paper, cloth 9s. 6d. (iii.) In miniature, 32mo, 4 vols. in Cass, cloth, 14s.

Vol. I., with many Illustrations, royal 8vo, half-morocco, 28s.

THE PHYSIOLOGY of PLANTS. A Treatise upon the Metabolism and Sources of Energy in Plants. By Dr. W. PFEFFER, Professor of Botany in the University of Leipzig. Second Fully Revised Edition, Translated and Edited by ALFRED J. EWART, D.Sc., Ph.D., F.L.S.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Vol. I. French Works, buckram, 16s.

THE COMPLETE WORKS of JOHN GOWER.

Edited from the MSS., with Introductions, Notes, and Glossaries, by G. C. MACAULAY, M.A., formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Crown 8vo, cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

GLOSSARIAL INDEX to the WORKS of GEOFFREY CHAUCER. By the Rev. WALTER W. SKEAT, Litt.D.

JUST PUBLISHED.—8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

LETTERS of DAVID RICARDO to HUTCHES

TROWER and OTHERS (1811-1823). Edited by JAMES BONAR, M.A., LL.D., and J. H. HOLLANDER, Ph.D., Assoc. Prof. of Finance, Johns Hopkins Univ. Baltimore.

THE OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY. A New

English Dictionary on Historical Principles. Under the general Editorship of Dr. JAMES A. H. MURRAY. New Double Section, price 5s. Glass-Cover—Graded (Vol. IV.), Edited by HENRY BRADLEY, M.A. New Monthly Number, price 3s. 6d., No. 7, At—Backwards, Edited by Dr. JAMES A. H. MURRAY.

Also published by HENRY FROWDE.

BRITISH ANTHOLOGIES.

Edited by Prof. EDWARD ARBER, F.S.A.

In crown 8vo vols., cloth extra, 2s. 6d. each, and in various leather bindings.

Each vol. is complete in itself, and may be obtained separately.

NOW READY.

Vol. III. SPENSER ANTHOLOGY (1548-1591 A.D.).

Vol. VII. DRYDEN (1675-1700 A.D.). Vol. VIII. POPE (1701-1744 A.D.).

New Volume in the

OXFORD "THUMB" EDITION SERIES.

Printed on the Oxford India Paper.

THE COMPLETE ANGLER. By Isaak Walton.

Prices from 1s. net. With Colotypes, measuring 2½ by 1½ by ¾ inches, and issued in various bindings. Uniform with the "Pilgrim's Progress" and the "Vicar of Wakefield."

London: HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Warehouse, Amen Corner, E.C.

T. &amp; T. CLARK'S LIST

THE NEW BIBLICAL ENCYCLOPEDIA.

To be completed in 4 vols., imp. 8vo.
Promises to be the best Biblical encyclopedia in English.
Guardian.

A DICTIONARY of the BIBLE. Edited by JAMES HASTINGS, M.A., D.D., with the assistance of J. A. Selbie, M.A., and chiefly in the Revision of Proofs of Professors A. R. Davidson, N. B. Driver, and H. B. Swete.

Vols. I. and II. Now Ready. Vols. III. and IV. in the Press.
Published. Price per vol.—in cloth, 28s.; in half-morocco, 34s.
(From which Prices a liberal Discount is given by Booksellers.)
"This treasury of Biblical learning... A very noble work which no serious student of Scripture can afford to dispense with."—Bookman.

Full Prospectus, with Specimen Page, free on application.

THE THEOLOGY of MODERN LITERA-

TURE. By S. LAW WILSON, M.A., D.D. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.
In his Introduction, after discussing the relation which have prevailed between Christian Theology and Literature, Dr.
Wilson proceeds to take a general survey of the field, passing in review most of the representative authors of the day, more especially in the field of fiction. This is followed by a series of instructive chapters on Emerson, Carlyle, Browning, George Elliot, George MacDonald, J. M. Barrie, Ian Maclaren, Mrs.
Humphrey Ward, Thomas Hardy, and George Meredith.
"This remarkable work bears evidence on every page of omnivorous reading, and of an intimate, we might almost say exhaustive, acquaintance with modern fiction... A deeply interesting book."—British Weekly.

THE RITSCHLIAN THEOLOGY,

CRITICAL AND CONSTRUCTIVE: An Exposition and an Estimate. By the Rev. A. E. GARVIE, M.A. (Oxon.)
8vo, 9s.
"Ritschlian Literature is permanently enriched by this publication."—British Weekly.

THE SPIRIT and the INCARNATION in

the LIGHT of SCRIPTURE, SCIENCE, and PRACTICAL NEED. By the Rev. W. L. WALKER. 8vo, 9s.
"One of the most remarkable and stimulating—intellectually and spiritually stimulating—theological works of the day."

THE TRIAL of JESUS CHRIST: A Legal

Monograph. By A. TAYLOR INNES, Advocate. With 2
Illustrations. Post 8vo, 2s. 6d.
"The angust tragedy, as Mr. Innes handles it in the course of his inquiry, is touched with a new gleam of realism."—Academy.

PROF. A. DILLMANN'S "GENESIS."

Authorized Translation. 2 vols., 8vo, 21s.
"Dillmann's Commentaries are inimitable works for labour and insight, for the mass of their contents, as for the thoroughness and lucidity of their scholarship. They form an indispensable basis for all further works on the same subject."—Bookman.

THE CHRIST of HISTORY and of EXPERIENCE. By D. W. PORRETT, D.D. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"I have been reading with much interest your admirable lectures. It is a fine and instructive piece of work."
The late Principal Cairns, D.D., LL.D.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRITICAL

COMMENTARY.
Editors—Dr. DRIVER, Dr. PLUMMER, and Dr. BRIGGS.

The following Volumes now ready:

DEUTERONOMY. Prof. S. R. Driver, D.D. 12s.

JUDGES. Prof. G. F. Moore, D.D. 12s.

I. and II. SAMUEL. Prof. H. P. Smith, D.D. 12s.

PROVERBS. Prof. C. H. Toy, D.D. 12s.

ST. MARK. Prof. E. P. Gould, D.D. 10s. 6d.

ST. LUKE. Alfred Plummer, D.D. 12s.

ROMANS. Prof. W. Sanday, D.D., and A. C. HEADLAM, B.D. 12s.

EPHESIANS and COLOSSIANS. Prof. T. K. ABBOTT, D.D., Dublin. 10s. 6d.

PHILIPPIANS and PHILEMON. Prof. M. VINCENT, D.D. 8s. 6d.

THE INTERNATIONAL

THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY.

Editors—Dr. SALMOND and Dr. BRIGGS.

The following Volumes now ready:

THE THEOLOGY of the NEW TESTAMENT.
By Prof. G. B. STEVENS, D.D. 12s.

THE CHRISTIAN PASTOR and the WORK-
ING CHURCH. By Prof. W. GLADDEN, D.D., LL.D. 10s. 6d.

CHRISTIAN INSTITUTIONS. By Prof. A. V. G. ALLEN, D.D. 12s.

CHRISTIANITY in the APOSTOLIC AGE.
By Prof. A. C. McHEFFERT, D.D. 12s.

HISTORY of CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE. By Prof. G. P. FISHER. 12s.

INTRODUCTION to the LITERATURE of the OLD TESTAMENT. By S. R. DRIVER, D.D. Seventh Edition. 12s.

CHRISTIAN ETHICS. By Newman Smyth,
D.D. Third Edition. 10s. 6d.

APOLOGETICS; or, Christianity Defensively Stated. By A. E. BRUCE, D.D. Third Edition.
10s. 6d.

* Prospectuses, giving details of the above Two Series, will be sent post free on application to the Publisher.

MICROCOSMUS: concerning Man and his Relation to the World. By HERMANN LOTZE.
Translated from the German. Cheap Edition. 2 vols., 8vo, 21s.

"Few philosophic books of the century are so attractive both in style and matter."—Athenaeum.

THE CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE of IMMOR-TALITY. By Principal S. D. F. SALMOND, D.D. Third Edition. 8vo, 14s.

"The greatest work we have had for many a day on this great doctrine."—Expository Times.

Detailed Catalogue free on application.

Edinburgh: T. & T. CLARK, 38, George Street.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO., LTD.

CHATTO &amp; WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS

ALGERNON GISSING'S New Novel,

A SECRET OF THE
NORTH SEA, is just ready.
Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top. 6s.

GEORGE R. SIMS'S New Novel, IN

LONDON'S HEART, is also just ready. Crown 8vo, cloth,
3s 6d.

Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

SOUR GRAPES. A Romance.

By J. F. CORNISH.

THE LADY from NOWHERE.

By FERGUS HUME. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"It is seldom that an author who made such a hit as Mr. Fergus Hume did in 'The Mystery of a Hansom Cab,' follows it up with another triumph of a similar character. It is due, however, to the author of that startling piece of work to say that he has hit the bull's-eye again. Everybody who enjoys a few hours' exciting reading should procure 'The Lady from Nowhere.' In its way it is a great story."
Sporting Life.

ABBÉ MOURET'S TRANSGRES-

SION. By EMILE ZOLA. Edited, with an Introduction, by E. A. VIZETELLY. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE NEW REPUBLIC; or, Culture, Faith, and Philosophy in an English Country House. By W. H. MALLOCK. A New Edition.

Post 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A KIPLING PRIMER. Including

Biographical and Critical Chapters, an Index to Mr. Kipling's Principal Writings, and Bibliographies. By F. LAWRENCE KNOWLES. With
Two Portraits. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE the BOY. With

Sketches of the Home and School Life, the Games and Sports, the Manners, Customs, and Folk-lore of the Time. By WILLIAM J. ROLFE, Litt.D.
With 42 Illustrations. A NEW EDITION, with an Index of the Plays and Passages referred to.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

ACCORDING to MY LIGHTS. By

JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD. With a Portrait.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [January 25.]

POPULAR SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE ORANGE GIRL. By Sir Walter

BESANT. With 8 Illustrations by Fred Pagam.
SEVENTH EDITION.

TERENCE. By B. M. Croker. With

6 Illustrations by Sidney Paget.

MRS. DUNBAR'S SECRET. By Alan

ST. AUBYN.

A CRIMSON CRIME. By George

MANVILLE FENN. SECOND EDITION.

UNDER FALSE PRETENCES. By

ADELINE SERGEANT. THIRD EDITION.

THREE-AND-SIXPENNY NOVELS.

THE SIREN'S WEB. By Annie

THOMAS.

TALES of TERROR. By Dick

DONOVAN, Author of "A Detective's Triumphs."

A PLASTER SAINT. By Mrs. Annie

EDWARDS.

THE GOLDEN IDOL. By J. E.

MUDDOCK.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

MACMILLAN & CO'S
NEW BOOKS.

NEW WORK BY GOLDWIN SMITH.

THE UNITED KINGDOM:

A Political History.

By GOLDWIN SMITH, D.C.L.,

Author of "The United States," &c.

In 2 vols., 8vo, 16s. net.

MORNING POST.—"We are by no means certain that there is any single book in existence from which the man who wants not dates and details, but intelligent appreciations and broad views, could learn so much of certain phases of the history of England as he would glean from Mr. Goldwin Smith's volumes and they are eminently readable, full of happy touches, and graphic sketches."

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"Brilliant, vigorous, original
... Mr. Goldwin Smith writes extraordinarily well... A most bracing and stimulating book, written by a master of English in a style which is still very near his high-water mark."

SECOND IMPRESSION NOW READY.

THE LIFE OF

EDWARD WHITE BENSON,

Sometime Archbishop of Canterbury.

By HIS SON,

ARTHUR CHRISTOPHER BENSON,

Of Eton College.

With numerous Portraits and Illustrations.

In 2 vols., 8vo, 36s. net.

SPECTATOR.—"Mr. Arthur Benson has had a difficult work to do, and he has done it thoroughly well... We take leave of a book of remarkable interest with sincere gratitude to Mr. Benson for the way in which he has executed a very difficult task, and brought us face to face with a singularly lovable character."

NOTES on SPORT and TRAVEL.

By GEORGE HENRY KINGSLEY, M.D. With

a Memoir by his Daughter, MARY H. KINGS-

LEY. With Portrait. Extra crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

net.

DAILY NEWS.—"It can be said without flattery that a book of reminiscences by one of the Kingsley brothers, with a memoir of the author by his daughter of West African renown can be otherwise than delightful."

NEW BOOK BY FREDERIC HARRISON.

TENNYSON, RUSKIN, MILL, and other LITERARY ESTIMATES. By FREDERIC

HARRISON. Extra crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

ACADEMY.—"Dealing with so various a range of writers, he holds a level balance in regard to all—no easy feat, requiring a judiciously combined with catholicism of taste, not in these hasty days too common... There is seldom much fault to be found with the broad scope and trend of his judgment. This is high praise of essays which compass a large field... Extremely able."

NEW AND NOTABLE NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, gilt tops, 6s. each.

15,000 Copies have been sold in England and America.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD.

VIA CRUCIS.

18,000 Copies have been sold in England and America.

By EGERTON CASTLE.

"YOUNG APRIL."

9,000 Copies have been sold in England and America.

By A. E. W. MASON.

MIRANDA of the BALCONY.

By F. M. PEARD.

DONNA TERESA.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A brilliantly-told story."

310,000 Copies have been sold in England and America

By WINSTON CHURCHILL.

RICHARD CARVEL.

By M. J. CANAVAN.

BEN COMEE: a Tale of Rogers's

Rangers, 1758-59, With Illustrations by GEORGE

GIBBS.

By BEULAH MARIE DIX.

SOLDIER RIDGALD: How he Sailed

in the Mayflower, and how he Served Miles

Standish. Illustrated.

NEW BOOKS FOR BOYS.

DRAKE and his YEOMEN. A true accounting of the Character and Adventures of

Sir Francis Drake as told by Sir Matthew Maunsell, his Friend and Follower, wherein is set forth much of the Narrator's Private History.

By JAMES BARNES. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 8s. 6d.

BOY LIFE on the PRAIRIE. By

HAMLIN GARLAND. Illustrated by E. W.

DEMING. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

PRAIRIE FOLKS. By Hamlin

GARLAND. New Edition. Cr. 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

CHILD LIFE in COLONIAL DAYS.

Written by ALICE MORSE EARLE, Author of

"Home Life in Colonial Days." With many illustrations from Photographs. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 8s. 6d. net.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1446. Established 1869.

20 January, 1900.

Price Threepence.

[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

WE print, on page 63, the titles of the six books published in 1899 which we have selected in connexion with the ACADEMY'S Awards to Authors.

THERE are ninety-five entries under the name of the late Dr. Martineau in the British Museum Catalogue. These include a fair proportion of new editions and a number of single addresses, pamphlets, &c. In mere number of catalogue entries Dr. Martineau does not compare with Dean Farrar, who has more than two hundred to his credit, or with the late Mr. Spurgeon, who has a still larger number.

WE hope that some effort will be made to compile a worthy and representative volume in which Dr. Martineau's ethical teachings, and the grace of his spiritual life, may be made easily available to readers to whom his works are still unknown.

THE public will soon have an opportunity of reading English translations of two further plays by Ibsen. To one of them, his latest work, "When We Who Are Dead Awaken," we have already made reference. The other, "Love's Comedy," begun forty-five years ago, and not completed till seven years later, has been translated by Prof. Herford, and will be published by Messrs. Duckworth in their "Modern Plays" series. Asked by the Daily Mail for a specimen of his translation, Prof. Herford obliged with the following:

Nay, Swanhild, do not jest! Behind your scoff
Tears glitter. O, I see them well enough.
And I see more; when you to dust are fray'd
And kneaded to a shapeless lump of clay,
Each bungling dilettante's scalpel-blade
On you his dull devices shall display.
The world usurps the creature of God's hand
And sets its image in the place of His;
Transforms—enlarges that part, lightens this—
And when upon the pedestal you stand
Complete, cries out in triumph, "Now she is
At last what Woman ought to be! Behold
How plastically calm, how marble cold!
Under the lamplight's soft irradiation,
How well in keeping with the decoration!"
(He passionately seizes her hand.)
But if you are to die, live first! Come forth
With me into the glory of God's earth!
Soon, soon the gilded cage will claim its prize,
The Lady thrives there, but the Woman dies;
And I love nothing but the Woman in you.
There, if you will, let others woo and win you.
But here my spring of life began to shoot,
Here my song-tree put forth its firstling fruit,
Here I found wings and flight; Swanhild, I know it.
Only be wise—here I shall grow a poet!

THE ill-luck of authorship takes many forms. One of them is for a writer to discover, when he is approaching the end of a laborious task, that a fellow author has been working at the same subject. It sometimes happens that the two books are published in the same week. Three recent instances occur to us. During the past six months, at intervals of a few days, two books on Danton were published, two on Greek Terra-Cotta Figures, and two on Pompeii. And publishers are not exempt from this form of ill-luck. Messrs. Methuen, who had begun to prepare a series of Classical Texts, have just discovered that the Clarendon Press has a similar series in hand. After some negotiations it has been decided that the existence of two rival series would be unfortunate, and Messrs. Methuen have agreed to abandon their series and co-operate with the Clarendon Press in the issue of the Oxford Classical Texts. Unfortunately such a combination is not possible to authors.

So many conflicting reports have been published as to arrangements that have been made in regard to Mr. Stephen Phillips's Paolo and Francesca, that it may be well to state just how the matter stands. Mr. Phillips has had three offers for Paolo from American managers, among them being Mr. Richard Mansfield. Mr. Alexander, however, declined to surrender the American rights, as he proposes to make the play a feature of his American tour. Mr. Mansfield thereupon commissioned Mr. Phillips to write a poetic play, with no restrictions as to subject, which he will produce in New York in the autumn. Mr. Phillips has also had a proposal to translate and produce Paolo in Paris; and it may be seen in Vienna.

MORE English as she is wrote. Messrs. A. & C. Black send us the following letter from an Italian newspaper editor, applying for a copy of Prof. Ward's Naturalism and Agnosticism. The letter is a printed form, and runs as follows:

"SIR,—You will make a thing gracious to us and at the time useful to diffusion of knowledge, if you will send to us as a gift your recent publication signed in the address.

That might be useful, in the limites of our power to the diffusion of the book.

We will send to you the fascicles, in which the book will being announced and examined, and if the exchange of gifts will be pursued, our Review might be sent to you regularly. . . .

The Direction and Redaction of the NUOVO RISORGIMENTO.

HARDLY a week passes but there is some change to announce in the journalistic world. The news of the week is that Mr. Mudford has retired from the editorship of the Standard. He is succeeded by Mr. G. Byron-Curtis, who for the last twenty years has been assistant editor. Then we are to have another sixpenny weekly. It will be conducted by Mr. Lathbury, late editor of the Guardian. We understand that the Tribune—that is the name of the new paper—will carry on the policy in ecclesiastical matters which the Guardian followed during Mr. Lathbury's sixteen years of editorship. With four new weekly sixpenny papers, the first month of the new year opens luxuriantly.

THERE is much talk about the forthcoming rivalry between the Sphere, conducted by Mr. Clement K. Shorter, and the Spear, which will be launched, or shall we say hurled, by Sir William Ingram. The clashing of names is unfortunate, to say the least. Mr. Shorter's title was first in the field, and we should not have supposed that competition would have been carried so far as to confound the public ear. Folk will have to take their choice, and enunciate their words plainly at the bookstalls. We have heard only one objection raised to the title the Sphere. It was made by a grave young man in a railway carriage, who, being asked what he thought of this title, said he disapproved of it on the ground that it clashed with—the Globe!

THE American Book Buyer's summary of Transatlantic literature in 1898 takes the form of a comparison between English and American achievements. Admitting that "we have produced nothing to set beside the Letters of Stevenson or the Life and Letters of Mrs. Oliphant," that "we have no Mr. Lecky to write for us," and that "we have no poet's work to rank with Mr. Swinburne's tragedy," the Book Buyer takes courage to make a few comparisons against us. "We can offset Stephen Phillips's 'Paolo and Francesca' with Mr. Fenollosa's 'Lucifer,' and feel that we have done well. . . . In fiction we have been sufficient unto ourselves. . . . For Mr. Churchill's Richard Carvel and Mr. Ford's Janice Meredith English fiction during the last twelve months offers no parallels. . . . Mr. Anthony Hope's The King's Mirror is best compared, so far as exquisite workmanship is concerned, with Mrs. Wharton's The Greater Inclination."

THERE was some excellent work in The Greater Inclination, but we knew nothing about the life of its author, Mrs. Wharton, till, turning to the Book Buyer's "Literary Querist" pages, we found this choice specimen of a literary reputation in the making according to modern methods:

Who is Edith Wharton? Has she not written poems as well as The Greater Inclination? Where does she live, and what does she do besides writing?—M. W.

She is Mrs. Edward Wharton, and was Miss Edith Jones, of New York. She has lived abroad for several years. The June Book Buyer contained a reproduction of her portrait painted by Mr. Julian Story. Her writings include, beside her volume of stories, a book entitled The Decoration of Houses. She is the author of several poems which have appeared in Scribner's Magazine.

Mrs. Wharton's rise is proceeding on lines the most normal, the most correct.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish early in January a work on Malay Religion, by Mr. W. W. Skeat. This is a minute study of folk-lore, ceremonial observances, and magic in the Malay Peninsula—a country where Mohammedanism only superficially overlays a mass of aboriginal beliefs and customs. From a discussion of the more general views which the Malay holds as to the Creation, man's place in it, his relations with the supernatural, and the number and attributes of the gods, the book proceeds to detail the charms and ceremonies by which man attempts to influence nature—weather, beasts, water, and fire; and then deals exhaustively with magic rites affecting the life of man, in birth, marriage, death, &c. The work is specially addressed to students of folk-lore, and more particularly of Oriental custom, but should have some interest also for the general reader who has welcomed such books as Frazer's Golden Bough and Spencer and Gillen's Native Tribes of Central Australia.

MR. HENRY JAMES's article on Robert Louis Stevenson's Letters in the North American Review is as intimate and subtle as anything that has been written about Stevenson.

The man, the author, and the friend are all touched on with a fine pen; yet the article, taken alone, leaves the impression that Stevenson is for the few, not for the many. Mr. James seems to speak in low tones to the elect. He concludes with the following valedictory classification of Stevenson:

It has been his fortune (whether or no the greatest that can befall a man of letters) to have had to consent to become, by a process not purely mystic and not wholly untraceable—what shall we call it?—a Figure. Tracing is needless now, for the personality has acted and the incarnation is full. There he is—he has passed ineffaceably into happy legend. This case of the figure is of the rarest, and the honour surely of the greatest. In all our literature we can count them, sometimes with the work and sometimes without. The work has often been great and yet the figure nil. Johnson was one, and Goldsmith and Byron; and the two former, moreover, not in any degree, like Stevenson, in virtue of the element of grace. Was it this element that settled the business even for Byron? It seems doubtful; and the list, at all events, as we approach our own day, shortens and stops. Stevenson has it at present—may we not say?—pretty well to himself, and it is not one of the scrolls in which he least will live.

IN that broad, sagacious book, Government and Democracy, and Other Essays, Mr. John Jay Chapman had something to say about literary naughtiness in high places. "The literary man," he wrote, "is concerned with what will go, like the reformer who is half-politician. The attention of every one in the United States is on some one else's opinion, not on truth." That such reflections dwell in Mr. Chapman's mind is shown by some remarks he makes, in the January Critic, on the fleeting, yet tyrannical, fashions of literary criticism. Mr. Chapman says:

If any man doubts the hidebound character of our journals to-day let him try this experiment: Let him write down what he thinks upon any matter, write a story of any length, a poem, a prayer, a speech. Let him assume as he writes it that it cannot be published, and let him satisfy his individual taste in the subject, size, mood, and tenour of the whole composition. Then let him begin his peregrinations to find in which one of the ten thousand journals of America there is a place for his ideas as they stand. We have more journals than any other country. The whole field of ideas has been covered, every vehicle of opinion has its policy, its methods, its precedents. A hundred will receive him if he shaves this, pads that, cuts it in half; but not one of them will trust him as he stands. "Good, but eccentric." "Good, but too long." "Good, but new."

IN the January Macmillan Mr. Stephen Gwynn, who startled many by his onslaught on Jane Austen, writes with warmth and discrimination on Anthony Trollope. He says with justice that though Thackeray's and Scott's characters are more charming, and have more interesting traits than Trollope's, they are not more alive. In his truth to average English life Mr. Gwynn thinks that Trollope "immeasurably surpasses the novelists who are in fashion to-day." Mr. Gwynn then boldly compares Trollope's delineations of society with those to be found in Mr. Benson's Mammon & Co., Mr. Whiteing's No. 5, John Street, and Miss Fowler's Concerning Isabel Carnaby. His conclusion is that the notions of society conveyed by these novels are correct only as well-collected facts may be correct. They do not really supersede those which one might gather from the newspapers. Whereas Trollope, with less experience of society, but working from the essential to the accidental, produced dukes who live, financiers who breathe, and great ladies whose social power we understand. Hence, Mr. Gwynn concludes, Trollope can never be wholly out of date. Many things, indeed, would surprise us more than a revival of Trollope. Why has the sixpenny reprint passed him by?

THE Monthly Guide to Periodical Literature, of which the first number has just been issued by the Advertising Agency of London, Ltd., promises to be a useful publication. It is simply an index of the contents of the month's magazines, and it will be issued early in each month. The contents of fifty-four magazines are dealt with in the first number under the heads of their subjects and authors. Poetry, fiction, and serial fiction are distinguished by a simple device, and the whole arrangement of the Guide is clear and business-like.

Stalky & Co. is a militant sort of book, but we did not dream that it would lead to a libel action. Yet it is announced that an action has been brought by the Cambridge Magazine against the Cantab, for stating that four articles which appeared in the first-named paper, and purported to be written by McTurk of Stalky & Co., were not written by McTurk. Mr. Kipling has been summoned to give evidence at the trial, which will take place shortly at Cambridge Assizes, Mr. Justice Ridley presiding.

As we anticipated, the Daily News has found the adjudication in its competition for a £10 prize to the compiler of the best list of a hundred Children's Books no light task. Our contemporary is, however, grappling manfully with its task: "an election count is nothing to this" is its perspiring remark. The prize will ultimately go to the competitor whose list is most approved by the lists of all his rivals. Meanwhile, the "first report" of the judges touches lightly on a number of questions suggested by the lists now under inspection. "What is a Child?" is one of these. "Up to 12 or 13," "8 to 16," "4 to 18"—such are the age limits selected by various competitors. The proper proportion which boys' books should bear to girls' books, and the necessity for any such distinction, are difficulties.

INTENSE eagerness characterises the letters and comments of the competitors, many of whom have been distracted by afterthoughts, and have sent new suggestions in letters and postcards. "One of these was written in a train by a competitor, who was so agitated by his 'ghastly misgiving' that he forgot to say who he was." All kinds of classification have been adopted. The most eccentric paper received contains the following list:

EIGHT BRITISH BATTLES.
LIFE OF CHRIST.
CARROTS.

More and more do we admire the wisdom of our contemporary in applying the unanswerable plebiscite system to its adjudication. The competitors include librarians, clergymen's wives, a Bishop's wife, authors, and a town missionary.

THE duties of a librarian in one of Her Majesty's prisons are not so simple as may be commonly supposed. In the current Library World Mr. William Harvey, chief clerk to the Prison Commissioners for Scotland, points out the difficulties that arise in fitting books to the needs and prejudices (both of which are carefully considered) of the prisoners. He says:

A large percentage of the prisoners are unable to make use of works which contain what is commonly called "stiff" reading; another section, being Irish and Roman Catholic, must have books which contain no attack upon the doctrines, customs, or priests of their Church. Romola may not be issued to a Catholic prisoner because it records Savonarola's declaration that "a man without virtue may be Pope"; Esmond, too, would be placed on the priests' Index, because those portions of the story which deal with the duplicity of Father Holt and his fellow-workers for the Stuart cause might be read as an attack on Catholics in general. . . . Care must also be taken that no book is admitted which is calculated to undermine the influence of the chaplains of the Reformed Churches; but there is less danger in this respect in a country where the majority of authors are Protestant. Suitable intellectual food must be provided also for the many really cultured men in confinement (there are not many cultured women).

On the whole, it would seem, there is a good deal to be learned about books and their readers behind the prison bars.

WHATEVER is to be said against President Kruger, it must be allowed that he has a keen eye for a text. His message to the Boer generals—"Read Psalm 33. The enemy have fixed their faith on Psalm 83"—is worth following up. The verses in these Psalms which have rewarded President Kruger's untiring search of the Scriptures are evidently these:

PSALM 33: BOER.

Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord: and the people whom He has chosen for His inheritance.

There is no king saved by the multitude of an host; a mighty man is not delivered by much strength.

An horse is a vain thing for safety; neither shall he deliver any by his great strength.

Our soul waiteth for the Lord: He is our help and our shield.

PSALM 83: BRITISH.

They have taken crafty counsel against Thy people, and consulted against Thy hidden ones.

They have said, Come and let us cut them off from being a nation; that the name of Israel may be no more in remembrance.

Fill their faces with shame; that they may seek Thy name, O Lord.

Let them be confounded and troubled for ever; yea, let them be put to shame and perish.

One cannot but admire the President's selection of a Psalm containing the verse: "An horse is a vain thing for safety," since, humanly speaking, the Boers owe very much to their ponies. President Kruger's statement that "the enemy have fixed their faith on Psalm 83," tends to turn the words quoted against the Boers themselves: for the Uitlanders might well have adopted Psalm 83 as an expression of their grievances.

THE educational views of the Rev. Mr. Lambkin—to whose witty book we refer in our "Books Received" column—arrive in happy time to be noticed in our Educational number. We recommend his address on "The Tertiary Symptoms of Secondary Education among the Poor." It was delivered in 1868 to the Higher Spinsters, or rather to the "League of Progress" in which the Spinsters had been incorporated. Having smiled genially, and drunk "a draught of pure cold water from a tumbler at his side," Lambkin said:

"The Tertiary symptoms of Secondary Education among the Poor" is a noble phrase and expresses a noble idea. Why the very words are drawn from our Anglo-Saxon mother-tongue deftly mingled with a few expressions borrowed from the old dead language of long-past Greece and Rome.

What is Education? The derivation of the word answers this question. It is from "e"—that is, "out of"; "duc-o" "I lead," from the root Duc=to lead, to govern (whence we get so many of our most important words such as "Duke"; "Duck" = a drake; &c.), and finally the termination "-tio," which corresponds to the English "-ishness." We may then put the whole phrase in simple language thus, "The threefold Showings of twofold Led-out-of-ishness among the Needy."

We must leave Lambkin's further argument to his intending readers.

BUT we should like to quote from the address of Lambkin, as Bursar, delivered in Hall on the morning upon which the College went down:

In the past term . . . I know that life has become fuller for you . . . You arrived sure of a number of things which you had learnt at school or at your mother's knee. Of what are you certain now? Of nothing! It is necessary in the mysterious scheme of education that this blind faith or certitude should be laid as a foundation in early youth. But it is imperative that a man—if he is to be a man and not a monster—should lose it at the outset of his career. My young friends, I have given you the pearl of great price. You have begun to doubt . . . As to the religious state of the College it is as you all know, excellent—I wish I could say the same for the Inorganic Chemistry. There is one last thing that I shall touch upon. We have been constantly annoyed by the way in which undergraduates tread down the lawn. The Oxford turf is one of the best signs of our antiquity as a university. There is no turf like it in the world. . . . I wish you a very Merry Christmas at the various country houses you may be visiting, and hope and pray that you may find united there all the members of your own family. Mr. Gurge will remain behind and speak to me for a few moments.

A CORRESPONDENT sends us the following "educational" "Things Seen":

"I was in the early suburban train to town. Wedged into the far corner of my compartment was a little fellow of, perhaps, ten, in the regulation hat and collar of a famous London school, listlessly getting up his home-work—as my professional eyes informed me—from a school edition of the Second Book of Samuel.

In the opposite corner was an adult enlargement of the picture, but with a characteristic difference—the father had superseded the historian.

For some twenty minutes the situation was unchanged, then, without a word, he folded his Sportsman, and scoring a passage with his thumb-nail, handed it to his son. The boy's eyes gleamed at the distraction; the paragraph evoked a responsive nod; some modern concrete interest took possession of his soul, and Samuel was dropped and forgotten."

Bibliographical.

THE announcement of the approaching appearance of biographies of Coventry Patmore and Edward FitzGerald suggests a direction in which the literary class might find some honourable labour. The Life of Patmore will be official, and based in all probability upon wholly new material, ignoring, for example, such glimpses of Patmore as we get in the Journal of the "P.R.B.," just published by Mr. W. M. Rossetti. But glimpses such as these are often very illuminating—sometimes more significant than anything we find in "authorised" biographies. Now, why should not some industrious and careful persons go through the Sonnets, Diaries, Reminiscences, and Memoirs of, say, the present century, and compile from them a series of Anecdotal Biographies, to be used as supplements to the official Lives? This is very much, though not quite, what Mr. Melville did in his recent Life of Thackeray, and it is a useful, if a humble, work. I make a present of the idea to my brethron of the pen. Judgment would have to be shown in the selection, and skill in the handling of the material collected; and, with those qualities present, the Anecdotal Biographies I suggest should be not only of much service, but very readable.

I have not yet seen the Index to the Songs, Snatches, and Passages in Shakespeare which have been Set to Music, compiled by Mr. Kelsey White, and published by Mr. J. R. Tutin; but when it comes my way I shall have the pleasure of comparing it with the Handbook of Shakespeare Music compiled by Alfred Roffo, finished by him in 1867, and published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus in 1878. This work includes "an account of three hundred and fifty pieces of music set to words taken from the plays and poems of Shakespeare, the compositions ranging from the Elizabethan age to the present time." Roffo's book had been preceded in its turn by John Caulfield's Collection of the Vocal Music in Shakespeare's Plays, which was, in the main, a gathering together of the melodies traditionally associated with songs and passages in Shakespeare. Thus, Caulfield took the trouble to "take down" from the pretty lips of Mrs. Jordan the airs which she had been accustomed to sing when appearing in the character of Ophelia.

The "boom" in naval history and biography still continues, as we see from the announcement of volumes on Our Naval Heroes and Britain's Sea-Kings and Sea-Fights. The truth is, however, that books of this sort have always been popular in our midst. I remember that, when I was a boy, one of the most successful of books for juveniles was called Neptune's Heroes, or the Sea-Kings of England, and that, later on, much vogue was obtained by a work from the same hand, entitled Famous Ships of the British Navy. This reminds me that, about a dozen years ago, a two-volume work was issued under the title of England at War: the Story of our Great Campaigns. Would it not be a good idea to bring this work up to date, and re-issue it? England at War!—that, surely, would be a name to conjure with just now.

The Daily Mail, I see, has been publishing "advance paragraphs" about Prof. Herford's translation of "Love's Comedy," which our contemporary blandly announces as "Ibsen's latest play." It is, of course, the latest of Ibsen's plays to appear in an English form—that is all; and it is a little surprising, truly, that it should have been so long ignored by our translators. It was begun in 1855, but not completed till the summer of 1862, and not published till the following winter, when it appeared as the New Year "extra number" of the Illustreret Nyhedstid. Ibsen started to write it in prose, which, however, he soon set aside in favour of the rhymed iambs which Prof. Herford has essayed to represent in English verse.

Mr. Alfred Austin, in one of his latest products, has been putting forward the confident assertion that

Who dies for England sleeps with God.

To this it has been objected that England has no special monopoly in the dulce et decorum est. But Mr. Austin has very good poetic authority for assuming that Providence takes particular care of Englishmen. Does not Tennyson, in his Wellington Ode, call upon us to

Thank Him who isled us here, and roughly set
His Briton in blown seas and storming showers?

"His Briton," you observe!

A correspondent asks me to give him the name and date of the "little book of sentences from Disraeli's writings" to which I made allusion last week. I have pleasure in doing so. The booklet is entitled The Beaconsfield Birthday Book, and was published by Messrs. Longmans in 1884. A much larger collection, called Wit and Wisdom of Benjamin Disraeli, had been issued by the same firm in 1881; but for reading in bed it is too heavy to hold, nor, moreover, is the selection particularly well made.

As an old pupil (at the Denmark Hill Grammar School) of the recently deceased Mr. C. P. Mason, I may be forgiven for drawing attention to the continued vitality of his educational works—such as his First Notions of Grammar for Young Learners, which reached its thirteenth edition in 1891, and his English Grammar (including Grammatical Analysis), which attained its thirty-seventh edition in 1896. The last-named may fairly be regarded as a classic in its way.

It is very nice of the Edinburgh Review to state that "the work of Mr. Watson, Mr. Francis Thomson, and Mr. Yeats . . . is quite worthy to rank with that of Herrick, Crashaw, and Carew"; but why deprive Mr. Thompson of the "p" in his name?

THE BOOKWORM.

Reviews.

The Other Side.

The Eve of the Reformation. By Francis Aiden Gasquet. (Nimmo. 12s. 6d. net.)

FATHER GASQUET describes his new book as "Studies in the religious life and thought of the English people in the period preceding the rejection of the Roman jurisdiction by Henry VIII." In his introduction he explains that the time has not yet arrived for a history of the Reformation, or for any detailed and accurate picture of the period which preceded it. The volume, therefore, consists of "a series of separate studies, which, while joined together by a certain connecting thread," in no sense claim to be a complete account. The various essays deal, in no progressive order, with a number of common allegations about the Reformation and the state of the Church in the preceding age, and attempt to prove their utter falsity. The whole object of such proofs is to argue away the necessity for a reformation of the Church—at any rate, of so drastic a kind as happened.

The Church was not hostile to learning; the people did not object to the jurisdiction of Rome; there was no antagonism of clergy and laity; the Church was not hostile to the Bible in the vernacular; religious life in England was vigorous in the age before the Reformation. According to our author, the mischief involved in the separation of England from the Roman See was due to a combination of Henry VIII.'s lustful desires and the invasion of Lutheran teachers. With Mr. James Gairdner, he thinks that Wycliffe has no claim to be called "the morning star of the Reformation," for that his influence, whatever it was, had long died away. On the other hand, it is strongly urged that the term "the New Learning," which Mr. Green has taught us to apply to the Renaissance, in the mouths of contemporaries referred to the new theological beliefs imported from Germany, and that the condemnation of Tyndale's translation of the New Testament was aimed solely at the deliberate mistranslations which it contained, with a view to disseminating the opinions of the Lutheran reformers.

In support of all these assertions much contemporary evidence is marshalled. We have all heard of the comment on the vehement speaker, "that man says, 'and that's the truth,' so often that I begin to think he is telling a falsehood." Father Gasquet so overwhelms us with written testimony that we incline to suspect its absolute value. Any theory from the pen of Sir Thomas More would command our respect, but, dutiful son of the Church that he was in matters regarding the faith, his desire to defend and justify his own religious position would outweigh, as it has done in many wise and good men at all times, the critical sense which he would freely employ in all other departments of life. This consideration does not, of course, rule out of court all that he or any other defender of an existing system may advance in its behalf. All we mean to urge is that such evidence is not as conclusive as we are desired to believe it. The writer has done well in laying stress on the amount of real work which the Church was still doing. He has already shown us that the monasteries at the time of their dissolution were not nearly so black as they were painted by Henry VIII.'s Commissioners.

This did not mean that they were all the homes of pure and undefiled religion. Thus we may well hold that in the century which preceded the Reformation church life was still a real thing in England without believing that the whole of the anti-Papal movement was a trumped-up thing. Revolutions do not take place without a cause. The defender of the Ancien Régime sees no need for the French Revolution. The violence which attends all great upheavals ends by discrediting the original movement and obscuring the necessity of any change at all. If the Church had really been doing its duty, if the church building and beautifying, on which Father Gasquet lays such stress, had really represented the strong and spontaneous love of Church people, if the teaching and preaching had really been as effective as we are led to suppose, not only would there have been no need for the Reformation in England, but we would venture to maintain that it would never have taken place. Henry VIII.'s lust explains much in his reign; it does not explain the practical acquiescence of the people in the anti-Roman position which he took up. After all, advantage always lies with the party in power which commands the machinery of organisation. Why was the Church at the mercy of the Crown? Why did the Pilgrimage of Grace not receive universal support? Why did an ecclesiastic of the stamp of Gardiner accept the changes made by Henry? Such questions are not answered by the antiquarian researches of our learned author. They are only to be solved by a careful study of the general course of English history for the two centuries before the Reformation.

Father Gasquet quotes very freely and appositely from More's writings to prove that no obstacle was placed by the Church in the way of the popular study of the Bible in the vernacular. Wycliffe's and Tyndale's translations were condemned because they contained deliberate mistranslations with intent to mislead the ignorant readers, and since most of those who called for such translations were suspected of unorthodoxy, the clergy did well to discourage the spread of the vernacular Scriptures. "As for the other old [translations]," says More, "that were before Wycliffe's days, they remain lawful, and are in the possession of some people, and are read." But what and where are these pre-Wycliffite translations? If they had existed, they would scarcely have disappeared altogether. All that our author can say is that it is by no means so clear "that such translations did not exist." We would suggest that so far as More's words state a fact they may have referred to translated portions, extracts issued under some ecclesiastical sanction. It is scarcely conceivable that a vernacular copy of the Scriptures if it was in circulation would have been lost or would have escaped subsequent mention, any more than Wycliffe's translation was lost. Father Gasquet seems to wish us to infer that such was the perversion of heretical writers that whatever copies do remain owe their continued existence to the malicious unorthodoxy of their authors.

But apart from the particular argument of these essays, and despite the somewhat tedious quotations from contemporary literature, the volume is full of interesting matter. It is always good to see the other side, and here we have set out with great knowledge and greater skill all that is to be said for the mediæval Church in England at the period which is generally marked as the period of its greatest corruption. The concluding chapters on the influence of the Church and the daily life of the people are full of interest and instruction. Anything that increases our knowledge of the fifteenth century is to be welcomed; but the scantiness of material drives our author to depend mainly on information from the early years of the sixteenth century. The material to which he has had recourse shows over how wide a field the modern historian roams. Chronicles as such play practically no part in the working up of the picture presented to us; contemporary literature of an ephemeral kind, wills, guild statutes, are the records to which Father Gasquet prefers to appeal. Nothing could be better. The author himself deprecates premature conclusions on the important matters of which he treats. His controversial object has probably carried him further in this direction than perhaps he originally intended.

In a Glass Coach.

A New English Dictionary. Edited by Dr. James A. H. Murray. Glass-coach—Graded. (Clarendon Press. 2s. 6d.)

THE new part of Dr. Murray's great Dictionary opens conveniently with Glass-coach. We will e'en borrow that glass-coach and drive rapidly up and down the serried columns of the middle G's. A glass-coach, need it be said, was a coach into which glass windows had been let; they were thus superior to the hackney-coaches, which had only curtains. It follows that they were better horsed. "Abroad to White Hall, in a hackney-coach with Sir W. Pen," writes Pepys in 1667, "... we were forced to leap out. . . . Query, whether a glass-coach would have permitted us to have made the escape." Query, eternal query! "Gentlemen may have a Glass-Coach or Chariot instead of a Curtain Coach," says an advertiser in the London Gazette twenty years later. Serjeant Ballantine could remember, in 1890, how "when middle-class people went to the play . . . they performed the operation in what was called a glass-coach"—so recent is antiquity! No doubt the users of hackney-coaches "glavered" on the users of glass-coaches. To glaver, need we say, was to fawn upon with words of glozing courtesy, to flatter deceitfully. A seventeenth century preacher advised his hearers to carry themselves "at an equal distance from contempt and haughtiness on the one hand and sneaking and glaving on the other"—thus sweeping the glass-coaches and the hackney-coaches into one net. In 1753 the word was used in the Gray's Inn Journal, and one hundred and twenty-three years later it suddenly started to life in the Athenæum of July 7, 1866: "The doorkeeper is a wily, elderly Italian. . . . He . . . holds his face forwards, and looks down, with a steady glavinging smile, or simper, in the corners of his mouth." Surely a useful word untimely dropped. A beautiful old word was Glead, meaning a live coal, an ember. "Those few weak gleeds of grace that are in me," wrote Bishop Hall, "might go soon out, if they were not thus refreshed"; and Bunyan speaks of "the sweet and warm gleeds of the promise." The word survives until 1891, but not beautifully: "They poke out the gleeds at the bottom with the tickler, and put them at the top with the tongs," a gleed being now a cinder used by nail-makers.

Gleg, meaning quick in perception, has had a long career, recently helped by Stevenson and Mr. Crockett. "Ye're no very gleg at jumping"—we forgot who says this in Kidnapped. "The Lord did not stint me as to glegness of eye," says one of Mr. Crockett's people. The word has done tragic duty too: "Death snaps the thread Wi' his gleg shears" writes a Georgian Scottish poet; here it means sharp, keen. Oddly enough, a water-tap that turns too easily and leaks from wear is still said, in Northumberland, to be gleg—i.e., smooth.

Glib has had more varied meanings in the past. We apply it now only to a loose, facile tongue, but Browning recalled an older shade of meaning when he wrote in "Ivan Ivanovitch," "The snow lies glib as glass and hard as steel"—i.e., slippery as glass, and, like glass, offering no foothold, or resistance to motion.

Glimpse as a verb is become rare, but Lowell wrote in his Study Windows: "I seem to glimpse something of this familiar weakness in Mr. White." How much sweeter than "detect"! Less happy was Hawthorne: "Glimpsing in, you see that a cottager's life must be the very plainest and homeliest that ever was lived by men and women." How much worse than "peeping"! Glissade is a good word on occasion. Spurgeon said: "The descent to eternal ruin is easy enough, without making a glissade of it." And Edwardes in his Ballroom Repentance writes, unexpectedly enough: "The hundred thousand miles glissade of some shooting meteor"; but a fall through space is not a glissade, which implies a steep place down which objects slide with contact. "Here and there dwarf thicket clinging in the general glissado," wrote Stevenson in the Silverado Squatters.

Gloom is now but gingerly used as a verb. Morris wrote archaically in the Earthly Paradise:

But whoso gloomed at tidings men might show,
It was not Kiartan.

Yet Thackeray has the word, and Froude used it happily: "The Stanleys, Howards, Talbots, and Nevilles were glooming apart, indignant at the neglect of their own claims." And Tennyson wrote in a letter: "A black yew tree gloom'd the stagnant air." Glory as a verb meaning to boast is a fine old word, of which examples are given no later than 1673. A seventeenth century critic could write: "We have seen a glimpse of that perspicuity and modesty which is gloried to be in these annotations." What a scent of old leather bindings is wafted here!

Gnar, which means to snarl or growl, is a strong word invalidated. Carlyle, who gave new life to many an old locution, used it; and Tennyson uses it finely in "In Memoriam":

A thousand wants
Gnarr at the heels of men,

thus spiritualising the word as it is used by an older poet:

No lion here the traveller assails
With midnight roar, nor ruthless panther gnars.

Golly as part of a veiled oath is familiar, but golly meaning to shout with a thick voice is quoted only from Carlyle and Mr. Crockett. "The Annandale Voice gollying at them." "We heard the wrathful gollying of the great voice." Goody-goody seems to be very modern. The first instance of its use given is from Dr. Smiles's Character. Examples follow from the Christian World and Bishop Fraser. In the Minutes of the Congregational Council of the United States it is written: "Thick-headed goody-goodies, who were fit for nothing but to hold prayer-meetings and look after Sunday-schools." Those Minutes must be full of surprises. Gore, in its meaning of "a small strip or tract of land lying between larger divisions," survives, of course, in Kensington Gore. A whole indictment of certain modern literary methods is summed up in the quotation from Mr. Ruskin under gorgeable. Apparently no one else has used the word. "Chopping up its formerly loved authors . . . into crammed sausages or blood puddings swiftly gorgeable." Gracile is a delicate word, not much employed since De Quincey. It has no connexion with grace, and should not be used to mean gracefully slender. It means no more than thin, slender, or lean. De Quincey wrote: "In person he was tall, fair, and gracile." Milman even wrote: "As the niches became narrower the saints . . . shrunk to meagre gracility."

We have not found space to dwell on the interesting histories of such words as glee, glide, glow, gold, gospel, and gossip. Nor have we so much as touched on the thirty-four columns devoted to Go. Our glass-coach would infallibly have stuck in such wonderfully intricate and interesting columns. God and Good are treated with the same care, and the whole "part," which is the work of Mr. Henry Bradley, is rich in notable words.

A Popular Preacher.

Charles A. Berry, D.D.: a Memoir. By James S. Drummond and Mrs. Berry. (Cassells. 6s.)

DR. BERRY was of the people, the son of a small tradesman, and was educated in a Wesleyan day school. A promising pupil, he was picked out by his master to receive the training of a teacher; and when that career proved uncongenial, he served in a subordinate capacity for two years in the post-office. But already he knew himself a preacher. In his pinafore he had held forth to the edification of his sisters' dolls; and clasped to his mother's heart, had been hailed by her fondly as the answer to her prayer that she might be the parent of a minister. At sixteen he knew himself "a dedicated spirit"; and at Christmas, 1869, he was sent to Airedale College. In the course of the following year he went forth, his pocket bulging with lumps of sugar (which he supposed to be good for the voice), and in his memory an original sermon written beforehand with diligence upon a slate, to supply the place of the evangelist at Grassington. He had the good fortune to preach with great acceptance on "cross-bearing." "Yon's a lad," discerned an elder, "wi' a bit o' grit." And in 1874, at the age of twenty-two, he was appointed to St. George's-road Church, Bolton. While there he quickly won his way to the front rank in his sect. He travelled as he found the opportunity, and enlarged his acquaintance, becoming intimate incidentally with the proprietor of the Greatest Show on Earth (whom he described as "a man of deep spirituality"), and with Henry Ward Beecher. It is the principal glory of Berry's life, according to the mind of his "co-pastor" and biographer, that from the other side of the Atlantic, upon Beecher's death, there came to him an invitation to occupy his room at Plymouth Chapel. To have declined this distinction is counted to him as self-sacrifice in the heroic degree.

The federation of the Free Churches was the noble obsession of his middle years; and for the furtherance of this end he set out, in 1891, upon what should have been a voyage round the globe. His health was precarious; he needed rest; and by this time he was a person of sufficient importance to travel incognito. A Mr. Macdonald was among the passengers, and a common secret presently drew the two together. They swore eternal friendship and a treaty of silence. But the third day out an American doctor, from Wisconsin, came up to Berry, and, said he:

That friend of yours ain't Macdonald, anyway. Do you think it respectable to keep up a ten-cent fraud like this, and keep your fellow-passengers from the proud privilege of knowing that they are ploughing the deep in company with Rudyard Kipling, eh? I found his picture in Plain Tales from the Hills; here it is; look at it, and then call your friend Macdonald if you can.

Upon his return, his views as to the possibility of a closer union between the bearers of the Christian name grew more comprehensive; and at the conference ridiculed by the profane as the "Grindelwald Picnic," he became known to Bishop Perowne of Worcester and the ex-Carmelite Père Hyacinthe, and had the honour of preaching before them in default of Dr. Guinness Rogers. His views as to the relation of the sects to the Kingdom of God he thus expressed to Mr. Gladstone, who, the biographer assures us, listened "with delighted acquiescence":

I took [said Berry] the heavenly city and its twelve gates, some of which were diametrically opposite to the others, as illustrating the vastness and variety of the Christian Church. . . . Through each gate crowds of people are hurrying to the one central spot of magnificent sunshine, in the glory of which all are bathed, and beneath the blaze of which all differences melt away. . . .

But his breadth did not include the Unitarians. On the Incarnation he was orthodox to the last: "for months he carried out a course of wide reading on the Kenosis," and among his papers was found a careful digest of St. Anselm's Cur Deus Homo.

As he lived his life before the eyes of his brethren, so he died a singularly dramatic death. He was conducting a funeral service. "Thou knowest that we would bear this burden for her," he was saying, alluding to the widow, "if we could, but this Thou dost not permit." With that he fell forward, and, after a few troubled seconds, died.

Of the way in which the biographer has done his work we can speak with warm, if not unqualified, praise. To those for whom the book is primarily intended—for the disciples, the admirers, the relatives of Dr. Berry—this record of his doings, and this unstinted tribute to the best qualities of the man, will be precious; we others should have relished the dish better, it may be frankly confessed, for a pinch of salt. For the man must have had weak points—little vanities, little insincerities and jealousies. Which things are so endearing!

Powder and Shot.

How England Saved Europe. In Four Volumes. Vols. I. and II. By W. H. Fitchett. (Smith Elder. Each 6s.)

HAVING dealt with "Fights that Won the Flag" and "Deeds that Won the Empire," Mr. Fitchett now sets out to tell the long and stirring story of England's struggle with France between 1793 and 1815. We find no falling off in his industry or accomplishment.

It is not necessary to examine his new narrative in the light of historical accuracy. Its general accuracy is patent, and it makes no challenge to the scholar. All we wish to do is to point out that the author knows how to play upon his readers' minds. Not the least of his distinctions is his economy of verbal thunder. He has learned from the soldiers and sailors whose fights he describes to reserve his fire. He has the tact to compare great things to small instead of straining to compare great things with greater. "The four British seventy-fours may be regarded as a claw clutching at the feathers in the French admiral's tail." "Nelson was throwing an overwhelming force on each ship of the French van in turn, and crushing it like a nut in a pair of crackers." He notes and registers some poetic moment—some haunting picture—in the quickly changing battle. Such a moment he finds in the grey dawn of the First of June, when Howe was clinging to the weather gauge and longing for the sky to clear.

Now and again a long line would open through the fog, and the ghostly image of a great ship would cross it, whether French or English it was hard to tell. The British look-outs, too, perched aloft, would sometimes see over the drifting fog, as across some continent of snow, the limp topsails of a dozen great ships, mere peaks of airy canvas, with no hull visible beneath them.

Here is a scene in the battle of that day:

The Brunswick drifted into the fight with all the ports on her lower deck strictly closed, and Harvey, its captain, sent an officer down with orders that not a port was to be lifted, nor a gun fired, until he gave the signal. The officer ran down with the order; the lower deck, with its double line of guns, and every officer and man at his station, was in perfect darkness. Coming out of the glittering sunlight into the worse than Egyptian gloom, the officer could distinguish no one. Standing on the lowest step of the ladder, he called out at the top of his voice that not a gun was to be fired till the word was given. Out of the darkness came in cheerful accents the voice of the lieutenant of the lower deck, "Tell the captain we do not mean to fire till we get the word, and that we are all as happy as princes, singing 'Rule Britannia.'"

A fine minor effect is caught by Mr. Fitchett in the Battle of the Nile, when the Goliath, anticipating Nelson's wish, manœuvred round to the land side of the French fleet to the amazement of the enemy:

Steadily the great English seventy-four kept on its course. The battery on the island spluttered angrily, but ineffectively, upon it. The shadow of the tall masts of the Goliath east by the westerling sun swept over the decks of the Guerrier; and just as the centre gun of the British ship's broadside covered the Frenchman's bowsprit, the whole length of the Goliath broke into the flame of an overwhelming broadside.

That picture of the soft shadows of the Goliath's masts and rigging caressing the Guerrier's decks, just before the fatal moment, is as good as it need be.

Fiction.

The Judgment of Helen. By Thomas Cobb.
(John Lane. 6s.)

MR. COBB is making progress. Of his three books, this is the best. It is considerably better than Carpet Courtship, and somewhat better than Mr. Passingham. He ought, however, to produce work on a much higher plane in the near future. The present novel, like its predecessors, is thin, scraggy. Mr. Cobb, if we may use the simile, should cultivate a tendency to embonpoint. In literature embonpoint means plot—plot which some clever writers have affected to despise, but which the greatest have always utilised for the furtherance of their greatest effects. Mr. Cobb is scarcely fertile in the invention of incident. He begins with a good situation (though by no means a new one), but he does not carry it definitely forward until the conclusion of the book is reached. That Helen should be cajoled into an engagement with the plutocratic and admirable Mr. Josiah Barbrook was quite probable, and that within three weeks she should convey to her mother her absolute refusal to marry the man was also quite probable; for Helen is well drawn. And the predilection of Helen's stolid cousin Patty for the stolid Mr. Barbrook is fully justified by their respective characters. Thirdly, it is obvious that young Maurice Vaughan is exactly the male creature for Helen. Indeed, all the signs point to a felicitous sorting-out of couples. Yet that sorting-out is postponed and postponed while interviews and petty intrigues occur in haphazard succession—in fact, while Mr. Cobb writes his novel. The fault of the book is that the initial situation is capable of an immediate solution. Helen's mother, Mrs. Christopherson, is only a sham obstacle, especially after she in turn is wooed and won by a well-preserved widower.

Still, the tale is uniformly agreeable—light and bright in its winding attenuation. Some of the scenes have wit. Thus, after the engagement between Helen and Barbrook, and before the former has decided to acquaint the latter of her intention to jilt, the country clergyman calls:

"He thought it necessary to offer us both a great deal of advice; almost a sermon," Helen explained. "And then he asked us to pray with him."

"How extremely provincial!" cried Mrs. Christopherson. "What did Josiah say to that?" she asked.

"He only looked at me. Of course, it was very embarrassing. But I didn't like to object, so we knelt down and Mr. Hodgson prayed."

"What a mercy no one entered the room!" exclaimed her mother.

"I didn't think of that," said Helen. "Mr. Hodgson seemed very earnest. I shouldn't very much have objected if—but, mother," she cried with a good deal of feeling, "he prayed that we might live happily together."

"What execrable taste!"

Mr. Cobb is a man of good promise. In future we hope that he will give the rein to his imagination and the spur to his invention.

The Infatuation of the Countess. By Percy White.
(Sands & Co. 6s.)

THE object of the Countess's infatuation was Arthur Gammellyn, a young and handsome fencing instructor at a Brompton gymnasium. The young wife of an elderly husband, Lady Reedsdale was one of those women who play with the emotions as gracefully as Mr. Percy White plays with women such as Lady Reedsdale; and it was only because Arthur Gammellyn was in love with Connie Adair, a new species of new woman, and because he was possessed of an innocence rather surprising in a man who has served Her Majesty in the ranks, that the Countess did not come to terrible grief.

The comedy plays itself lightly out in the fencing school, in Connie Adair's studio, and in the boarding-house "situate in the neighbourhood of the park, the gardens, and the museums," where Arthur Gammellyn lives, and tries to keep his father the major in the paths of sobriety and financial rectitude. The major, with his magniloquence and his surreptitious borrowings, is the most amusing character in a very amusing book. Curiously enough the only unconvincing character in the story is the hero, Arthur Gammellyn himself. We can be interested in the women; but it would perhaps be impossible to interest us in a rather priggish young athlete whom countesses adore for his beaux yeux and young lady artists yearn to model in clay for his magnificent neck.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the week's Fiction are not necessarily final.
Reviews of a selection will follow.]

SOUL GRAPES.

By J. F. CORNISH.

A good, readable novel, in which the dark sides of life are shown; but the end is peace and wealth. "The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge," is the motto of a story which anyone may read and enjoy. (Chatto & Windus. 6s.)

LAO-TI THE CELESTIAL.

By M. BIRD.

Chinese life seems to offer a basis for many novels. In following the story of Lao-Ti we have glimpses into respectable family life in China, and many fine traits of character are presented. (Hutchinson. 3s. 6d.)

YEOMAN FLEETWOOD.

By M. E. FRANCIS.

In this story, by the author of The Duenna of a Genius, we are in rural England of the early years of this century. Later we are introduced to the Prince Regent's gay life at the Pavilion, Brighton. Mrs. Fitzherbert and her misfortunes, and Beau Brummel and his eye-glass, move across the pages. (Longmans. 6s.)

A FANTASY IN FUSTIAN.

By GEORGE WEMYSS.

A pleasant, well-conceived story, showing how town-bred Zenobia Gliddon, being left an orphan, goes to live at an old farm-house where contact with Nature refines her tastes. Her final choice between town and country resolves itself into a choice between a farmer and a fop, and she chooses well. (Downey & Co. 6s.)

THE WORLD'S OLD STORY.

By FRANCES SCOTT.

An artless love-story, helped out with italics. "I was glad and thankful for it," says the hero in Chapter II., "as rendering me perhaps more acceptable in the eyes of somebody, my reader knows who." (Digby, Long. 6s.)

BEN COMEE.

By M. J. CANAVAN.

A tale of 1758-59, mainly concerned with the wars with the Indians and the French, in which the English fought under Abercrombie and Howe. The assault on Ticonderoga is an incident, and the tale closes just before the War of Independence. (Macmillan. 6s.)

We have also received Edgar's Ransom, by C. Rysbridge (Digby, Long. 6s.), a beginner's novel, on novelette lines; A Comedy of the Cloth, by Thomas A. Lewis (Digby, Long), a better novel, showing how a farmer's coquettish daughter played on the hearts of two curates; Narcissus, by John Bede (Elliot Stock. 5s.), a short novel written to expose Ritualism; Father Fox, by Dorothy Martin (Elliot Stock. 5s.), a story written with the same end in view; Drake and His Yeomen, a romance founded on the achievements of Drake. (Macmillan. 6s.)

The Academy, January 20th, 1900.

Educational Supplement.

FROM MR. MURRAY'S EDUCATIONAL LIST.

SIR WILLIAM SMITH'S EDUCATIONAL SERIES.

LATIN COURSE.

The Young Beginner's Course. 2s. each. I. First Latin Book. Grammar, Easy Questions, Exercises, and Vocabulary.—II. Second Latin Book. An Easy Latin Reading Book, with Analysis of Sentences.—III. Third Latin Book. Exercises on the Syntax, with Vocabulary.—IV. Fourth Latin Book. A Latin Vocabulary for Beginners, arranged according to subjects and Etymologies.

Principia Latina. Part I. Containing Grammar, Delectus, Exercises Book Vocabulary, &c. Thirty-eighth Edition. 3s. 6d.—Appendix to Part I. Additional Exercises and Examination Papers. 2s. 6d.—Part II. A First Reading Book. 3s. 6d.—Part III. A First Verse Book. 2s. 6d.—Part IV. Prose Composition. 3s. 6d.—Part V. Short Tales and Anecdotes for Translation into Prose. 3s. 6d.

Students' Latin Grammar. For the Use of Colleges and the Higher Forms in Schools. Fifteenth Edition, Thoroughly Revised and partly Rewritten. 6s.

Smaller Latin Grammar. For Middle and Lower Forms. Twenty-third Edition. 3s. 6d.

Translation at Sight: or, Aids to Facility in the Translation of Latin. Passages of Graduated Difficulty, carefully Selected from Latin Authors, with Explanations, Notes, &c. By Professor T. D. HALL, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s.

Child's First Latin Book. Comprising Nouns, Pronouns, and Adjectives, with the Verbs. With ample and varied Practice of the easiest kind. Both Old and New Order of Cases given. By T. D. HALL, M.A. Enlarged Edition, including the Passive Verb. 16mo, 2s.

ENGLISH COURSE.

School Manual of English Grammar. With Historical Introduction, Copious Exercises, and Appendices. Eighth Edition, carefully Revised. 3s. 6d.

Primary English Grammar for Elementary Schools. With numerous Exercises and carefully graduated Parsing Lessons. 1s.

Manual of English Composition. With Illustrations and Practical Exercises. 3s. 6d.

Primary History of Britain for Elementary Schools. With a Map. 2s. 6d.

FRENCH COURSE.

French Principia. Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, Vocabulary, and Materials for Conversation. 3s. 6d.—Appendix to Part I. Additional Exercises and Examination Papers. 2s. 6d.—Part II. A French Reading Book, with Etymological Dictionary. 4s. 6d.—Part III. Prose Composition. 4s. 6d.

Students' French Grammar. Practical and Historical. For the Higher Forms. With an Introduction by M. LITTRÉ. 6s.

Smaller French Grammar. For the Middle and Lower Forms. 3s. 6d.

French Stumbling Blocks and English Stepping Stones. By FRANCIS TARVER, M.A., late Senior French Master at Eton College. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

GERMAN COURSE.

German Principia. Part I. Grammar, Exercises, Vocabulary, and Materials for Conversation. 3s. 6d.—Part II. Reading Book, with Dictionary. 3s. 6d.

Practical German Grammar. For Advanced Students. 3s. 6d.

GREEK COURSE.

Initia Græca. Part I. A First Greek Course, containing Accidence, Rules of Syntax, Exercises and Vocabulary. Edited and carefully Revised throughout by FRANCIS BROOKS, M.A., Lecturer in Classics at University College, Bristol, and formerly Classical Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford. 3s. 6d.—Appendix to Part I. Additional Exercises and Examination Papers. 2s. 6d.—Part II. A Reading Book 3s. 6d.—Part III. Prose Composition. 3s. 6d.

Students' Greek Grammar. For the Higher Forms. 6s.

Smaller Greek Grammar. For Middle and Lower Forms. 3s. 6d.

Greek Accidence. 2s. 6d.

ITALIAN COURSE.

Italian Principia. Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, Vocabulary, and Materials for Conversation. Thoroughly Revised and in part Rewritten. By C. F. COSCIA, Professor of Italian in the University of Oxford. 3s. 6d.—Part II. A Reading Book. 3s. 6d.

SIR WILLIAM SMITH'S SCHOOL DICTIONARIES.

Smaller Latin-English Dictionary. With a Dictionary of Proper Names. Thirty-seventh Edition. 7s. 6d.

Smaller English-Latin Dictionary. 7s. 6d. A companion to the foregoing. Seventeenth Edition.

Concise Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities. Thoroughly Revised and in the most part Rewritten (1896) by F. WARRE CORNISH, M.A., Vice-Provost of Eton. Profusely Illustrated from the best examples of Objects of Antiquity. Medium 8vo, 2s.

Smaller Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities. Abridged from his larger Dictionary. With 200 Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Classical Dictionary of Mythology, Biography, and Geography. Compiled from his larger Dictionaries. With 750 Woodcuts. 8vo, 18s.

Smaller Classical Dictionary. Abridged from the above Work. With 200 Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

MURRAY'S STUDENT'S MANUALS.

A SERIES OF CLASS-BOOKS FOR ADVANCED SCHOLARS.

ENGLISH HISTORY AND LITERATURE.

The Student's Hume: a History of England, from the Earliest Times to the Revolution in 1688. By DAVID HUME. Incorporating the Researches of Recent Historians. Revised, Corrected, and Continued to the Treaty of Berlin in 1763, by J. S. BREWER, M.A. With Notes, Illustrations, and 7 Coloured Maps and 70 Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Student's Constitutional History of England. From the Accession of Henry VII. to the Death of George II. By HENRY HALLAM, LL.D. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Student's Manual of the English Language. By GEORGE P. MARSII. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Student's Manual of English Literature. By T. B. SHAW, M.A. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Student's Specimens of English Literature. Selected from the Best Writers, and arranged Chronologically. By THOS. B. SHAW, M.A. Crown 8vo, 5s.

SCRIPTURE AND CHURCH HISTORY.

Student's Old Testament History. From the Creation of the World to the Return of the Jews from Captivity. With an Introduction to the Books of the Old Testament. By PHILIP SMITH, B.A. With 40 Maps and Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 7s. 8d.

Student's New Testament History. With an Introduction, containing the Connection of the Old and New Testaments. By PHILIP SMITH, B.A. With 30 Maps and Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Student's Manual of Ecclesiastical History. A History of the Christian Church to the Reformation. By PHILIP SMITH, B.A. 2 vo's. Part I, A.D. 30-1000. Part II, A.D. 1001-1599. With Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.

Student's Manual of English Church History. By G. G. PERCY, M.A., Canon of Lincoln. 3 vols., 7s. 6d. each. 1st Period, 596-1539; 2nd Period, 1539-1717; 3rd Period, 1717-1884.

ANCIENT HISTORY.

Student's Ancient History of the East. From the Earliest Times to the Conquests of Alexander the Great, including Egypt, Assyria, Babylonia, Media, Persia, Asia Minor, and Phœnicia. By PHILIP SMITH, B.A. With 70 Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Student's History of Greece. From the Earliest Times to the Roman Conquest. With Chapters on the History of Literature and Art. By Sir WM. SMITH, D.C.L. With Coloured Maps and Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Student's History of Rome. From the Earliest Times to the Establishment of the Empire. With Chapters on the History of Literature and Art. By Dean LIDDELL. With Coloured Maps and Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Student's History of the Roman Empire. From the Establishment of the Empire to the Accession of Commodus, A.D. 180. With Coloured Maps and Numerous Illustrations. By J. B. BURY, Fellow of Trin. Coll., Dublin. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Student's Gibbon. A History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. Abridged from the Original Work by Sir WILLIAM SMITH, D.C.L., LL.D. A New and Revised Edition in Two Parts. By A. H. J. GREENIDGE, M.A., Lecturer and late Fellow of Hertford College, Lecturer in Ancient History at Brasenose College, Oxford. Part I. From A.D. 98 to the Death of Justinian. With Maps and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s.

EUROPE.

Student's History of Modern Europe. From the Capture of Constantinople by the Turks, 1453, to the Treaty of Berlin, 1878. By RICHARD LODGE, M.A., Professor of Modern History in Glasgow University. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Student's History of Europe during the Middle Ages. By HENRY HALLAM, LL.D. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

FRANCE.

Student's History of France. From the Earliest Times to the Fall of the Second Empire. By W. H. JERVIS, M.A. A New Edition, thoroughly Revised, and in great part Rewritten, by ARTHUR HASSALL, M.A., Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. Coloured Maps, and many new Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

GEOGRAPHY AND GEOLOGY.

Student's Manual of Ancient Geography. By Canon BEVAN, M.A. 186 Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Student's Manual of Modern Geography, Mathematical, PHYSICAL, and DESCRIPTIVE. By Canon BEVAN, M.A. With 129 Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Student's Geography of British India, Political and Physical. By GEORGE SMITH, LL.D. With Maps. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Student's Elements of Geology. By Sir CHARLES LYELL. A New Edition, thoroughly Revised by Prof. J. W. JUDD. Crown 8vo, with 600 Woodcuts, 3s.

Physical Geography. By MARY SOMEVILLE. Seventh Edition, Corrected and Revised. Post 8vo, 9s.

LAW AND PHILOSOPHY.

Student's Edition of Austin's Jurisprudence. Compiled from the larger work. By ROBERT CAMPBELL. Crown 8vo, 12s.

An Analysis of Austin's Jurisprudence. By GORDON CAMPBELL. Crown 8vo, 6s.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S BOOKS FOR SPECIAL EXAMINATIONS (1900-1901).

CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATION (1900).

The Gospel according to St. Luke. The Greek Text. With Introduction and Notes by Rev. J. BOND, M.A. 2s. 6d.
The Acts of the Apostles. Authorized Version. With Notes by T. E. PAGE, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 2s. 6d.
— The Greek Text. With Notes by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Shakespeare.—As You Like It. With Introduction and Notes by K. DRIGHTON, 1s. 9d.
Scott.—Marmion. With Introduction and Notes by M. MACMILLAN, B.A. 3s.; sewed, 2s. 6d.
Milton.—Paradise Lost. Books III. and IV. With Introduction and Notes by M. MACMILLAN, B.A. 1s. 3d. each; sewed, 1s. each.
Virgil.—Æneid. Book VI. With Notes and Vocabulary by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.

Cæsar.—De Bello Gallico. Book VI. With Notes and Vocabulary by C. COLBECK, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Horace.—Epistles and Ars Poetica. Edited by A. S. WILKINS, Litt.D. 5s.
Livy. Book XXI. With Notes and Vocabulary by W. W. CAPES, M.A., and J. E. MELNISH, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Cicero.—De Senectute. With Notes and Vocabulary by E. S. SHUCKBURN, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Xenophon.—Anabasis. Book V. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. G. H. NALL, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Euripides.—Hecuba. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. J. BOND, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
M'rimée.—Colomba. Edited by G. E. FASNACHT. 2s.
Goethe.—Hermann und Dorothea. With Introduction and Notes by J. T. HATFIELD. 3s. 6d.

OXFORD LOCAL EXAMINATION (1900).

Defoe.—Robinson Crusoe. Edited by J. W. CLARK, M.A. 2s. 6d. net.
Shakespeare.—As You Like It. With Introduction and Notes by K. DRIGHTON, 1s. 9d.
Scott.—The Lay of the Last Minstrel. With Introduction and Notes by G. H. STUART, M.A., and E. H. ELLIOT, B.A. 2s.
Chaucer.—The Prologue. With Introduction and Notes by A. W. POLLARD, M.A. [In the press.]
Milton. With Introduction and Notes by W. BELL, M.A. Comus. 1s. 3d. Lycidas. 6d. COMUS and LYCIDAS in 1 vol., 1s. 6d.
Cæsar.—The Gallic War. Edited by Rev. JOHN BOND, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 4s. 6d.
— Gallic War. With Notes and Vocabulary. Book V. By C. COLBECK, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Virgil.—Æneid. Book IX. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 1s. 6d.

Horace.—Odes. Book III. With Notes and Vocabulary by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Livy. Book XXII. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. W. W. CAPES, M.A., and J. E. MELNISH, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Cicero.—Catiline Orations. Edited by A. S. WILKINS, Litt.D. 2s. 6d.
Xenophon.—Anabasis. With Notes and Vocabulary. Book III. By Rev. G. H. NALL, M.A. 1s. 6d. Book IV. By Rev. E. D. STONE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Euripides.—Medea. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Homer.—Iliad. Books I.-XII. Edited by W. LEAF, Litt.D., and Rev. M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 8s.
Herodotus. Book VI. Edited by J. STRACHAN, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Perrault.—Contes de Fées. Edited by G. E. FASNACHT. 1s. 6d.
M'rimée.—Colomba. Edited by G. E. FASNACHT. 2s.
Hauff.—Die Karavane. Edited by H. HAGER, Ph.D. 3s. (This Edition contains "Kalif Storch" and "Das Gespensterschiff.")

OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE SCHOOLS EXAMINATION (1900).

Shakespeare.—Richard II. With Introduction and Notes by K. DRIGHTON, 1s. 9d.
— Midsummer Night's Dream. With Introduction and Notes by K. DRIGHTON, 1s. 9d.
Chaucer.—Prologue. With Introduction and Notes by A. W. POLLARD, M.A. [In the press.]
— Works. Edited by A. W. POLLARD, M.A. Globe Edition. 3s. 6d.
Milton.—Paradise Lost. With Introduction and Notes by M. MACMILLAN, B.A. Books I. and II., 1s. 9d. Books I. to IV., separately, 1s. 3d. each; sewed, 1s. each.
Cæsar.—Gallic War. With Notes and Vocabulary. Book IV. By C. BRYANS, M.A. 1s. 6d. Book V. By C. COLBECK, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Cicero.—The Second Philippic Oration. Edited by J. E. B. MAYOR, M.A. 3s. 6d.

Horace.—Odes. With Notes and Vocabulary by T. E. PAGE, M.A. Books II. and III. 1s. 6d. each.
— Satires. Edited by A. CALMER, M.A. 5s.
Livy. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. W. W. CAPES and J. E. MELNISH, M.A. Books XXI. and XXII. 1s. 6d. each.
Plautus.—Miles Gloriosus. Edited by R. Y. TYRRELL, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Tacitus.—The Histories. Books I. and II. Edited by A. T. GODLEY, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Virgil.—Æneid. With Notes and Vocabulary. Book VII. By Rev. A. CALVERT, M.A. 1s. 6d. Book VIII. By Rev. A. CALVERT, M.A. 1s. 6d. Book IX. By Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Euripides.—Hecuba. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. J. BOND, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.

Euripides.—Bacchæ. Edited by R. Y. TYRRELL, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Herodotus. Book VII. Edited by Mrs. MONTAGU BULLOCK, 3s. 6d.
Plato.—Apology, &c. Translated by F. J. CURCH. 1s.
Thucydides. Book IV. Edited by C. E. GRAVES, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Molière.—Le Medecin Malgré Lui. Edited by G. E. FASNACHT. 1s.
— Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme. Edited by L. M. MORTIART, B.A. 1s. 6d.
Schiller.—Wilhelm Tell. Edited by G. E. FASNACHT. 2s. 6d. Edited by W. H. CARRUTH. 3s. 6d.
Hauff.—Die Karavane. Edited by H. HAGER, Ph.D. 3s.

CAMBRIDGE HIGHER LOCAL EXAMINATION (June and December, 1900, and June, 1901).

Spenser.—Faerie Queene. Book I. With Introduction and Notes by H. M. PERCIVAL, M.A. 2s.; sewed, 2s. 6d. [June, 1901.]
Bacon.—The New Atlantis. With Introduction and Notes by A. T. FLEX. 1s. [June, 1901.]
Shakespeare.—Coriolanus. With Introduction and Notes by K. DRIGHTON. 2s. 6d.; sewed, 2s. [June, 1901.]
— Hamlet. 2s. 6d.; sewed, 2s. [June, 1900.]
Burke.—Reflections on the French Revolution. With Introduction and Notes by F. G. SELBY, M.A. 5s. [June, 1900.]
Wordsworth.—Poems. Selected by MATTHEW ARNOLD. 2s. 6d. net. [June, 1900.]
Chaucer.—Complete Poetical Works. Edited by A. W. POLLARD and others. 8s. [June, 1900.]
— The Knight's Tale. With Introduction and Notes by A. W. POLLARD, M.A. [In the press.]
Historical Outlines of English Accidence. By Rev. R. MORRIS, LL.D. Revised by L. KILLNER, Ph.D., and H. BRADLEY, M.A. 6s.
The History of the English Language. By O. F. EMERSON, Ph.D. 6s. net.

A Primer of Chaucer. By A. W. POLLARD, M.A. 1s.
Xenophon.—Anabasis. Book V. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. G. H. NALL, M.A. 1s. 6d.
English Prose Selections. By Sir H. CRAIK, K.C.B. Vols. I.-IV., 7s. 6d. each. Vol. V., 8s. 6d.
The English Poets. Edited by T. H. WARD, M.A. Vols. I.-III., 7s. 6d. each. Vol. IV., 8s. 6d.
A Shakespearean Grammar. By Rev. E. A. ARNOTT, D.D. 6s.
Virgil.—Georgics IV. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d. [June, 1900.]
Horace. Book III. With Notes and Vocabulary by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d. [June and Dec., 1900, and June, 1901.]
Cicero.—Pro Milone. Edited by F. H. COLSON, M.A. 2s. 6d. [June, 1900.]
— Pro Leg Manilia. Edited by A. S. WILKINS, Litt.D. 2s. 6d. [Dec., 1900, and June, 1901.]
Tacitus.—Agricola. Edited by Rev. A. J. CURCH, M.A., and Rev. W. J. BROOKING, M.A. 2s. [June, 1901.]
Euripides.—Bacchæ. Edited by R. Y. TYRRELL, M.A. 3s. 6d. [June, 1900.]

Demosthenes.—De Corona. Edited by B. DRAKE. Revised by E. S. SHUCKBURN, M.A. 3s. 6d. [June and December 1900, June, 1901.]
Molière.—Les Précieuses Ridicules, Le Misanthrope, Les Femmes Savantes. Edited by G. EUGÈNE FASNACHT. 1s. each. [June, 1900.]
— Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme. 1s. 6d. L'AVARE. 1s. Edited by L. M. MORTIART, B.A. [Dec., 1900, and June, 1901.]
Cornellie.—Le Cid. Edited by G. E. FASNACHT. 1s. [Dec., 1900, and June, 1901.]
Goethe.—Egmont. Edited by S. PRIMER. 3s. 6d. [June, 1900.]
— Iphigenie. Edited by H. B. COTTERILL, M.A. 3s. Edited by W. H. CARRUTH. 3s. 6d. [Dec., 1900, and June, 1901.]
Lessing.—Minna von Barnhelm. Edited by Rev. C. MERE. 2s. 6d. [June, 1900.]
— Nathan der Weise. Edited by G. O. CORNELL. 3s. 6d. [Dec., 1900, and June, 1901.]
Schiller.—Wilhelm Tell. Edited by G. E. FASNACHT. 2s. 6d. Edited by W. H. CARRUTH, Ph.D. 3s. 6d. [June, 1900.]
— Wallenstein. Edited by H. B. COTTERILL, M.A. 2s. [Dec., 1900, and June, 1901.]

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON (1900-1901).

MATRICULATION (June, 1900).

Cæsar.—Gallic War. IV. With Notes and Vocabulary by C. BRYANS, M.A. 1s. 6d.
— Gallic War. V. With Notes and Vocabulary by C. COLBECK, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Euripides.—Hecuba. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. J. BOND, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
English Grammar, Past and Present. By J. C. NESFIELD, M.A. 4s. 6d. (Adapted to the London Matriculation Course.)
A Short History of English Literature. By Prof. G. SAINTSBURY. 8s. 6d.
Elementary General Science. By A. T. SIMMONS, B.Sc., and L. M. JONES, B.Sc. 3s. 6d. (Adapted to the London Matriculation Course.)
Lessons in Elementary Chemistry, Inorganic and Organic. By Sir HENRY ROSCOE, F.R.S. 4s. 6d.

Mechanics for Beginners. By W. GALLATLY, M.A. 2s. 6d.
Magnetism and Electricity for Beginners. By H. E. HADLEY, B.Sc. 2s. 6d.
Botany for Beginners. By ERNEST EVANS. 2s. 6d.

MATRICULATION (January, 1901).

Virgil.—Æneid II. With Notes and Vocabulary by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Æschylus.—Prometheus Vincit. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 1s. 6d.

MATRICULATION (June, 1901).

Sallust.—Catilina. Edited by C. MÉRIVALE, D.D. 2s.
— Bellum Catulinæ. Edited by A. M. COOK, M.A. 2s. 6d. For English Grammar, &c., see above.

COLLEGE OF PRECEPTORS EXAMINATION (June and December, 1900).

Shakespeare.—As You Like It. With Introduction and Notes by K. DRIGHTON, 1s. 9d.
Scott.—The Lay of the Last Minstrel. With Introduction and Notes by G. H. STUART, M.A., and E. H. ELLIOT, B.A. Cantos I. to III. 1s. 3d.; sewed, 1s.
Macaulay.—Lays of Ancient Rome. With Introduction and Notes by W. T. WHEAT, M.A. 1s. 9d. (Contains "The Prophecy of Cypar," "Ivy," and "The Armada.")
Cæsar.—Gallic War. Book V. With Notes and Vocabulary by C. COLBECK, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Euripides.—Medea. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Eutropius. Books I. and II. With Notes and Vocabulary by W. WELCH, M.A., and C. G. DUFFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.

Horace.—Odes. Book III. With Notes and Vocabulary by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d. Edited by the same. 2s.
Livy. Book XXII. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. W. W. CAPES, M.A., and J. E. MELNISH, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Pædrius.—Fables. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. G. H. NALL, M.A. 1s. 6d.
— Select Fables. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Virgil.—Æneid. Book IX. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Xenophon.—Anabasis. Book III. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. G. H. NALL, M.A. 1s. 6d.
The Acts of the Apostles. With Introduction and Notes by T. E. PAGE, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Educational Supplement.

SATURDAY: JANUARY 20, 1900.

The Choice of School Text-Books.

Views of Schoolmasters.

OF the making of school text-books there is no end. A catalogue which came under our notice the other day contained no fewer than twelve school editions of "Julius Cæsar" and "Richard II." Every conceivable subject has its range of text-books. The stream never ceases. So the question arises, How is one to decide which are the best? Experience is the only real guide; but for the sake of those who are still buying their experience we asked three schoolmasters—men keenly interested in their profession, and of wide experience—to draw up independent lists of thirty books suitable for use in a modern secondary school. We print List A in full without criticism, adding a note on the points that have struck us in comparing it with Lists B and C.

LIST A.

This list is based on the principle of what may be called stock text-books. The common idea of a school-book is realised by a little blue-backed volume, used for a term, wearily embellished with rude portraiture, and most gladly cast away when its service is over. But there is no reason why a boy should not be trained to preserve his school books, if not to love them; and he will learn more, and at less cost to his parents, by being soaked, so to speak, in a few good books rather than dipped in a sequence of bad ones. Whether the saturating process is pleasant or not will depend on the teacher who presides over it. Leaving, however, argument aside, and suppressing a few obvious assumptions, here is my list of thirty stock text-books, grouped according to their subjects:

A.—ENGLISH (in a school sense).

1. English Grammar. By Mason. Bell & Sons. 3s. 6d.
2. English History. By Oman. Edward Arnold. 5s.
3. Geography. By G. G. Chisholm. Longmans. 3s. 6d.
4. School Atlas. By A. Keith Johnston. W. & A. K. Johnston. 12s. 6d.
5. Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics. By Palgrave. Macmillan. 2s. 6d.

Many repetition books have been compiled in the faith that boys have no imagination and can grasp nothing beyond John Gilpin. Why not bring into the schoolroom the best anthology that we have, and trust the teacher to make his own choice of the flowers?

B.—MATHEMATICS.

6. Arithmetic. By C. Pendlebury. Bell & Sons. 4s. 6d.
7. Elementary Algebra. By Hall and Knight. Macmillan. 3s. 6d.
8. Elements of Euclid. By Deighton. Bell & Sons. 4s. 6d.
9. Elementary Trigonometry. By C. Pendlebury. Bell & Sons. 4s. 6d.
10. Elementary Mechanics. By Briggs. Clive. 3s. 6d.

The text-book last mentioned by no means holds the field against all rivals; but it has much to recommend its use where candidates are sent in for the examinations of London University, and, indeed, elsewhere.

C.—SCIENCE.

11. Elementary Science. By Jones and Simmons. Macmillan. 3s. 6d.
12. Lessons in Elementary Chemistry. By Roscoe. Macmillan. 4s. 6d.
13. Chemical Arithmetic. By Sidney Lupton. Macmillan. 4s. 6d.

D.—MISCELLANEOUS.

14. First Lessons in Political Economy. By F. A. Walker. Macmillan. 5s.
15. Geometrical Drawing. By A. J. Pressland. Rivingtons. 2s. 6d.

E.—LATIN.

16. Revised Latin Primer. By Kennedy. Longmans. 2s. 6d.
17. Bradley's Arnold. Rivingtons. 5s.
18. Latin Elegiac Verse. By Gepp. Rivingtons. 3s. 6d.
19. School Atlas of Classical Geography. By A. Keith Johnston. W. & A. K. Johnston. 12s. 6d.
20. Smith's Smaller Classical Dictionary. Murray. 7s. 6d.
21. Dictionary of Classical Antiquities. By Seyffert. Son-nenschein. 10s. 6d.
22. History of Rome. By Smith (and Greenidge). Murray. 3s. 6d.
23. School Latin Dictionary. By Lewis. Clarendon Press. 18s.

History of Rome is classed here as being a commentary on the texts studied. The mention of a Latin Dictionary (23) raises the vexed question of its merits in comparison with separate vocabularies for each author read. Suffice it now to say that most teachers prefer the vocabulary system for younger boys, but grieve to see the effort of older ones reduced to a minimum. English-Latin and English-Greek Dictionaries are alike taboo for constant use, but occasional access to desk copies may be allowed.

F.—FRENCH.

24. French Grammar. By Fasnacht. Macmillan. 3s. 6d.
25. Class-book of French Composition. By Blonët. Hachette. 2s. 6d.
26. French Dictionary. Cassell & Co. 3s. 6d.

G.—GREEK.

27. Greek Grammar. By Goodwin. Macmillan. 6s.
28. Introduction to Greek Prose Composition. By Sidgwick. Rivingtons. 5s.
29. Elementary History of Greece. By Oman. Rivingtons. 4s. 6d.
30. Greek Lexicon abridged from Liddell and Scott. Clarendon Press. 7s. 6d.

H.—GERMAN (as alternative to Greek; whence the double numbering).

- 27a. German Conversation Grammar. By Otto. Nutt. 5s.
- 28a. Materials for German Composition. By Bachheim. Bell & Sons. 4s. 6d.
- 29a. Bachheim's Deutsche Lyrik. Macmillan. 2s. 6d.
- 30a. Flügel's German Dictionary. Whittaker & Co. 6s.

The limit imposed (thirty books) has prevented the whole school domain from being covered. And of the text-books named many are unsuitable for beginners; but most of these (e.g., Nos. 1, 7, 12, 16, 24, 27a) have elementary introductions by the same authors, so that uniformity of treatment and terminology is secured."

Of these books only two appear in all threelists (Nos. 6 and 7); ten in lists A and B (Nos. 11, 12, 14, 16, 17, 23, 25, 27, 30, 30a); two in lists A and C (Nos. 5 and 14); and two in lists B and C (Abbott's How to Parse, and Gow's Method of English). The average price in A—and price has to be reckoned with—is something over 5s., in B something under 3s., and in C something over 2s. B gives Ransome for history, Meiklejohn for geography, Gill for chemistry, and a choice of "Literature Manuals" for [the drybones of] literature. C is more progressive, inclining to the "Parallel Grammar Series," Dent's "French and German Books," and Meiklejohn's How to Write English, omitting exercise books altogether, and substituting, wherever possible, for annotated editions of authors such plain texts—printed, in the case of modern languages, in the foreign country—as would attract the boy in the street. "To-day," he concludes, "your British boy's idol is Henty. Saturate him with a French Henty, then, in French, throwing grammar and exercise to the dogs."

Reviews.

The Theory of Education.

The Logical Bases of Education. By J. Welton, M.A., Professor of Education in the Yorkshire College. (Macmillan.)

THE teacher desiring to know the raison d'être of this book should first read through the last two chapters. The most cursory glance through that dealing with Definition, Classification, and Explanation will show the necessity for going a step further back than the ordinary text-books on special subjects. Prof. Welton selects those on grammar for examples of confused thought and consequent blundering; but a thoughtful reading of the chapter will well repay teachers of subjects other than language. The last chapter is in a double sense the conclusion of the whole matter. The gist of the book is here admirably put; here and elsewhere there is a discriminating criticism of educational reformers, and of some of their past and present watchwords. The various points made must give pause to the reader. How far should the educational development of the child follow that of the race? What part must authority play in education? Is it mere learning of facts from books, or development of the power to think and initiate, that is of prime importance? What are the best methods of education? These are some of the questions raised and answered. The author states in his preface that "but little of the traditional formal logic will be found in the book." This is a definite gain, and a careful reading of the book justifies the statement. There is a sane treatment of the syllogism; and the various forms of it and their uses are worked out in a most interesting manner. The modern mind can well dispense with the mnemonic Barbara, Celarcut, Darii, Ferio, &c., although Dante has put its ingenious author into Paradise. The test of inference should be mental, not mnemonic. It is well to note, too, that logic is not so much a thing apart from ordinary talk and reasoning as once it was, and that no longer does it reject, as the traditional logic did, all inferences which do not give a certain and definite conclusion, the reason being, as Prof. Welton points out, that we are not so sure of our starting-point now as in the time when the axioms were "Nature abhors a vacuum," "All men are equal," "All children are born wholly inclined to evil," and the like. Indeed, the modern treatment of the subject is much more interesting and far more profitable than the study of the traditional logic. There is a fascinating chapter on the value of evidence. Apt illustrations and quotations abound throughout the book. One here given of the value of Froude's testimony is amusing: "He had visited the city of Adelaide in Australia. 'We saw,' says he, 'below us, in a basin with a river winding through it, a city of 150,000 inhabitants, none of whom has ever known, or will ever know, one moment's anxiety as to the recurring regularity of his three meals a day.' Thus Froude; now for the facts. Adelaide is built on an eminence; no river runs through it; when Froude visited it the population did not exceed 75,000, and it was suffering from famine at the time." No wonder the writers here quoted come to the conclusion that Froude suffered from "chronic inaccuracy." But the book should be read as a whole; it is an excellent example of logical exposition.

Educational Reform. By Fabian Ware. (Methuen.)

IN these short essays, some of which have already appeared, Mr. Ware discusses the educational organisation of our country, indicating, very roughly, where it is weak, and where strong: in particular, he concerns himself with the reforms which the Board of Education may effect in Secondary Education. Of course, the Board of Education Act commits the Government to nothing tangible, but many educationists hope, now that the first step has been taken—the formation of a Central Educational Authority—that very soon we shall have a register of efficient Secondary Schools, a Secondary School inspectorate, registration of teachers, and the formation of local authorities. The discussion of these and kindred subjects make up the material of this book. Mr. Ware does not address his appeal so much to the expert as to the general reader, although one soon discovers that the author is not only thoroughly within his province when tackling questions of organisation, but also when he is criticising educational theories and ideas. He is opposed to all regulations which will destroy initiative on the part of the teacher by "hedging him in with too many restrictions," and although "the nation must insist on the attainment by all secondary teachers of a certain standard of scholarship, of a knowledge of the principles which underlie their art, and of skill in its practice before they can be recognised as fully qualified," yet this must be secured without "crushing personality and reducing all teachers to one dead mechanical level." We have not space at our disposal to do more than notice one point. On page 131 Mr. Ware writes that "France, owing to an incalculable extent to the subordination of the ethical to the intellectual aim in her education, has, it is true, so immeasurably weakened the moral foundations of her former greatness, that little short of national regeneration will restore her to the position of a rival to be feared." This is assuredly an entirely misleading statement. As M. Gustave Le Bon has shown repeatedly, education in France is not properly intellectual at all: what passes there for education is an atrophy of faculty by an oppressive and severe discipline. The result is a loss of initiation and real individual freedom, a consequence of which is an excessive love of bureaucracy and militarism. If the French would only change their educational system, and make it genuinely intellectual, then they would soon rise again, not to be feared as rivals but to be loved as friends. On the whole, then, this is a very readable and useful book; it is a popular exposition of the questions thrust into notice by the Board of Education Act, and we are therefore somewhat at a loss to know why Mr. Ware should anticipate severe criticism. He has stated his views with clearness and evident sincerity, and we cannot think that any critic could seriously differ from the great body of his conclusions.

Careers from the Inside.

Unwritten Laws and Ideals. Edited by E. H. Pitcairn. (Smith, Elder.)

THIS is a collection of essays, by "expert" writers, on the unwritten laws and ideals of the professions in which they have attained eminence. The successful student will find on reading the volume that much that makes for effectiveness in an active career has, naturally enough, not got into the examination syllabus. A barrister must know some law; but his real work is, says Mr. Augustine Birrell, "to get his client out of a hole" (and, we presume, the other man into one). Learning becomes a schoolmaster, as roses a garden, but to win the confidence of boys and to get them to do their best with their gifts, or, in Dr. Welldon's words, "so to train boys that they can after a time dispense with his training," is, for all Bacon's saying, a rare possession. Not many youths look—and it is well—to the embassy as a profession. If Sir Edward Malet speaks truth, the ambassador should be more sensitive than the most delicate chemical balance. He must take his hostess in to dinner, and sit at her right hand, or "his dinner will be as ashes in his mouth." He must not betray any sign of boredom when complaints are being poured into his ear. Nor is this all. He cannot, poor man! marry whom he would. Listen! "The ambassadress should be British-born, and of equal or higher rank than her husband; she should know French as well as she does her own language; and be not without such a grounding in other languages as would enable her to attain proficiency in them if necessary, &c., &c." Who ever was so compact of virtue as to satisfy these—there are many more—demands? At the other pole shall we place the Navy? Even here the "unwritten law" is sterner than the written. "Any lie," it says, "is justified to screen a shipmate who has 'got into trouble,' as the expression goes. More particularly is this the case if the trouble has arisen through smuggling liquor into the ship." And the Army? Disobedience may sometimes be necessary. "Suppose that under given circumstances I know that if I exercise my judgment in a matter entrusted to me and am wrong, I may be professionally ruined or shot, but have positive evidence under my eyes that if I do not vary my instructions the lives of thousands of men under me will be lost . . . nothing can morally excuse me if I set up the plea of discipline—the means against the end."

And so we might go through all the professions; but each demands qualities of heart and brain known only to the initiated and experienced; hence his collection of essays by "expert" writers will reveal to the uninitiated some of the stern realities of life; and therein lies their use. There is another side to the shield, and we should have read the book with greater pleasure if the "amenities" had been more emphasised.

Text Books, School Books, &c. English.

A Brief Survey of British History. By G. T. Warner, M.A. (Blackie & Son.)

MR. WARNER says, in the preface to this little book, that he has selected from each historical period what he considers the most important events; and he has endeavoured, so far as it was possible within such small compass, to present these events as links in a connected series of events. Considering the ground covered, it seems to us that he has accomplished what he set out to do. An example will make clear the author's method. In the chapter dealing with the Black Death and the Serfs, he shows how the real cause of the Peasants' Revolt (1381) was not the levying of the Poll-Tax—its immediate and apparent cause—but the terrible scourge which destroyed one-third of the population in less than three years (1347-1350). This plague, by decreasing the supply of labour, increased the independence of the serfs, raised their wages, and set going a train of events which resulted, by the time of Elizabeth, in the complete abolition of serfdom. What has here been condensed into a few words is allotted five pages of text, so it will be evident that the beginner is taught, at the threshold of his subject, to look upon events, not as isolated phenomena, but as acts in a drama. The maps, plans, and synopsis add very much to the usefulness of the book, although we miss illustrations of buildings, armour, dress, coins, &c.

How to Learn Philology. By Eustace H. Miles, M.A. (Swan Sonnenschein.)

THERE can be little doubt that the student who works carefully through Mr. Miles's book will obtain a sound, if elementary, knowledge of philology, textual criticism, and other related matters; and, further, if the subject is taught in class on the lines laid down by the author in his preface, very gratifying results must follow. But this is not a book to put into the schoolboy's hand, for it contains the answer—whole, or in part—to every question set, and, therefore, the teacher would never be sure that his pupils' work was the result of thought and effort rather than mere "cram." If Mr. Miles would split this book into two, or, better still, supplement the present volume by one specially written for class use, then we could heartily recommend the present text-book as a teacher's aid to the intelligent teaching of a most fascinating subject. The truth is, that too many text-books are written which are intended primarily to supplement bad teaching; such books enable the pupil to acquire the information necessary to pull him through an examination, but inasmuch as they do not encourage independent thought and research they are not properly speaking educative at all. Mr. Miles's book is an excellent specimen in the "old" style, but the least admirable in the "new" style is better than this. Of course the pupil's part should be something more than a mere collection of exercises: it could be made bright and interesting by facsimile reproductions from Latin and Greek codices, and photographs of inscriptions. The footnotes should be suggestive and stimulative rather than complete and tiresome. In this way the pupil would learn the look of an unemendated and contracted passage, and would also acquire under the guidance of the teacher a knowledge of his subject in the same historical order and by the same methods in which the subject has been built up to its present state.

Introduction to English, French, and German Phonetics. With Reading Lessons and Exercises. By Laura Soames. New Edition. Revised and Edited by Wilhelm Viëtor, Ph.D., M.A., Professor of English Philology in the University of Marburg.

To utter clearly and correctly the sounds of a language is an accomplishment of such rarity that none can possess it without winning the gratitude of his auditors. Why is this? Possibly because very little attention hitherto has been paid to the training of the ear at the only time when such training is effective—in childhood. It has been said that a false quantity has much less chance of passing unchallenged in the House of Commons than the mispronunciation of an English word. If, however, the interest which is now being taken in phonetics is sustained, there is hope that before long to speak beautifully will be as precious to us as the affected drawl of the public schoolboy is now.

Miss Soames's book, revised by Prof. Viëtor, will be found an easy introduction to phonetics; and we recommend the student to turn first to the reading lessons, and then, after familiarising himself with the new symbols for the sounds, he will find it not difficult to understand the way in which the sounds are produced.

We have one criticism to make: why are the reading lessons prepared for children who have already gone through the grind of learning to read and pronounce words in anomalous spelling? After a child has learnt to pronounce and spell correctly "cough," what possible sense can there be in spelling it "kof"? The anomalous spelling should follow, not precede, the phonetic spelling. If a child knows two ways of spelling the same word, what probability is there that it will choose one way in preference to another? Another cause of irritation is that, although Prof. Viëtor has himself written a book on phonetics, the symbols for the sounds in his own book are totally different from those in Miss Soames's book. Phonetics for some time to come will be useful mainly for learning to read and for learning the sounds of a foreign language; but we think it most inadvisable to attempt in schools the running of two systems of spelling, seeing that the anomalous or present system presents so many difficulties and wastes so much school time. The following selection will enable the reader to realise the value of phonetics in learning a foreign language: "Deù pti garson d la vil, Richa:r é Gusta:v, s'égare:r eun jou:r danz un épè:s forè. Anfèn i trouè:r un petit obèrj, ô milyeu d la forè, é izi antré:r pouri pásé la nùd."

The Making of Europe. By Nemo. (Nelson & Sons.)

WHAT object Nemo had in view in writing this book it is impossible to find out by reading it, and it lacks a preface. It has the appearance of a text-book for use in schools; but a history of Europe without maps, or illustrations, or significant dates, cannot possibly be meant to be put into the hands of children, unless Nemo's aim is to make them hate history for the rest of their lives. The book is merely an uninteresting collection of snippets.

The Expansion of the British Empire. By W. H. Woodward.

As history grows from more to more, and as the picturesque and popular story of a nation too often veils the real significance of events, it is becoming more and more common for writers to detach a few strands from the meshwork of facts, and to leave to the student the reweaving of them into the general fabric. Unless Mr. Woodward's story of our territorial expansion is fitted into the body of general history, very much as a tile is fitted into a mosaic pavement, the effect of such a book as this is to do violence to the historic sense, and make the part seem greater than the whole. The purport of a sentence like the following, for instance, is quite lost if the reader cannot "fix up" the politicians referred to: "Clarendon showed, indeed, a broad and intelligent spirit in his Colonial policy, and in Shaftesbury he found an able colleague and successor." With this reservation the book can be confidently recommended; it continually provokes in the reader a mental reaction, and pushes him on to further inquiries; it contains some well-drawn maps, has an index and a table of important dates.

Readings in John Ruskin's "Fors Clavigera," 1871-1884. Selected by C. A. Wurtzburg. (Allen.)

GREATLY daring would be the schoolmaster who should use Fors Clavigera—as yet—for his handbook of ethical instruction, and many are the dove-cotes which would be fluttered by the reports brought back by impressionable youth of the strange new teaching. For such a purpose Mrs. Wurtzburg's carefully made selection of essential passages would be invaluable. She gently brushes aside the irrelevancies of the master, and under three heads—"Ethic," "Economic," "Didactic"—gives the gist of his social gospel. If an end of education is stimulus to thought, no book could be better designed to effect it.

Shakespeare's "As You Like It." Edited by A. W. Verity. (Pitt Press.)

MR. VERITY's school editions of Shakespeare's plays have by now their acknowledged position. "As You Like It" is the most elaborate and in some ways the best he has done. The commentary and illustrative matter is fuller than is usual with him. He prints the story of the play from Lamb's Tales, and make an interesting appendix out of extracts from Shakespeare's source, the euphuistic romance of "Roselynde," by Thomas Lodge. Mr. Verity's work is admirable throughout. We deem, however, a little to his method of supplying æsthetic comment largely in the form of extracts from other critics, who naturally do not always agree either among themselves or with Mr. Verity.

Pope's "Rape of the Lock." Edited by Frederick Ryland. (Blackie & Son.)

WE do not like the use of Pope for educational purposes nor do we quite think that the undeniable merits of the "Rape of the Lock" are precisely those best fitted to catch the imagination of the schoolboy. The edition, however, is a good one. Mr. Ryland has made it his chief object "to make as clean as possible the literary and social environment within which the poem was produced. To impart merely philological information has not been his aim." He is well acquainted with the eighteenth century, and his long introduction and brief notes are full of facts and interest without being pedantic.

Selections from Tennyson's Poems. 1832-1855. By E. C. Everard Owen. (Arnold)

THE introduction, which covers the whole of Tennyson's life and work, is full and good: but the notes give one the impression of having been written currente calamo, without much reflection as to the principles of annotation or the difficulties which a young student is or is not likely to feel in reading the poems. The citation of parallel passages is constant and childish. Mr. Churton Collins is general editor of "Arnold's School Series," and his method of commenting on Tennyson is not worthy of imitation. Nor is a selection of Tennyson's poems from 1832-1855 in the least wanted. The latter year is not a turning point in Tennyson's work: it is only the purely accidental period at which considerations of copyright obliged the editor to stop. We do not for a moment believe that "Charing" Cross has anything to do with chère reine. That is mere folk-etymology. There are other statements in Mr. Owen's notes which seem to us equally hasty.

Stories from the Northern Sagas. Edited by Albany F. Major and E. E. Speight. (Marshall.)

A CAPITAL reading book for junior forms—if translations are considered legitimate for the purpose. The extracts are from publications of William Morris and Eiríkr Magnússon, Prof. York Powell, Sir George Dasent, and others, all of whom in their various ways have caught some share of the swing and vigour of the Scandinavian originals. There are no notes, but Prof. York Powell contributes a brief preface, and each Saga drawn on has a few lines of explanatory introduction.

The Cambridge Bible for Schools: Chronicles. Edited by W. E. Barnes, D.D. Proverbs. Edited by the Ven. T. T. Perowue, B.D.

NEARLY every book of the Bible, with the exception of those included in the Putnam, has now been included in this excellent series, excellent alike for its clear and convenient arrangement, for the high scholarship of most of its editors, and for the liberal attitude which many of them adopt towards matters of criticism. The new volumes will be found well up to the standard.

Wordsworth's "Prelude" as a Study of Education. By James Fotheringham. (Marshall.)

A THOUGHTFUL little paper, which should be of value to all teachers, as a supplement to M. Emile Legouis' monograph on the "Prelude."

French.

My First French Book. By Marguerite Ninet. (Blackie & Son.)

MME. NINET has laid child-learners under a further debt by putting into their hands this pretty little book of pictures and lively anecdote, well-suited to please and instruct. The lists of words which head the lessons will, of course, be learnt by heart. Two words, rouge (p. 40) and bien (p. 67), seem to have escaped registration.

Gems of Modern French Poetry. By Jules Lazare. (Hachette.)

THIS is a selection of short poems by authors of the present century, and illustrates well the grace and music of the French language, both in its deeper and its livelier tones. Those on child-life and on warlike themes are, perhaps, most attractive, and Mme. de Pressensé's imitation of Longfellow's "Psalm of Life" (p. 30) presents an interesting study. The introduction deals briefly but sufficiently with the various forms of French verse: if space had allowed, the section on poetic licences should have given the historical explanation of them, and not left the impression that they are arbitrary. The biographical notes are well done, and all needful help is given in a few pages of vocabulary.

Le Tour du Monde en Quatre-vingts Jours. Par Jules Verne. Edited by Louis A. Barbé. (Macmillan.)

M. BARBÉ has given boys and girls an excellent and amusing class-book in this addition to Siepmann's Series. The story of Phineas Fogg's achievement has been skilfully condensed, and the extravagance of some of the episodes will be no fault in boys' eyes. The notes are satisfactory, and so is the vocabulary. But sous bénéfice d'inventaire is best rendered by our own legal phrase "without prejudice" (p. 73); with interdit should have been noted the idiomatic use, "struck dumb"; and we think that it would have been more useful, and less troublesome, to include all common irregular verbs in the list given, instead of only those that occur in the text.

Cœurs russes. Par le Vicomte E.-M. de Vogüé. Edited by Eugène Pelissier. (Macmillan.)

THIS pleasant book gives an instructive view of the pathos and beauty as well as of the mental chaos of the great Russian people. The notes are adequate. Two things we would suggest to the editor: might not references be uniformly made to Fa-nacht's grammar? and might not the philological chapter be dropped, and the pupil referred to Darmesteter's Historical French Grammar?

French History for Schools. By Katharine Stephen. (Macmillan.)

MISS STEPHEN, who has an hereditary title to her task, here gives us an interesting sketch of the growth of France from the earliest times down to the present. All the main facts of social as well as political history are noticed, and the style is easy and attractive. There is, however, some lack of proportion in the narrative, and at times the effort after simplicity seems strained. The appendices are excellent, and so are the maps; but the chief dates should, we think, have been given in the text as well, and we should have liked uniformity of scale in the maps of France at different stages of her history. As a first book on the subject we can recommend the work.

Greek and Latin.

The Prometheus Bound of Æschylus. Edited by H. Rackham. (Cambridge: University Press.)

IT is a pleasure to read over again, in such learned and helpful company as Mr. Rackham's, this most moving of Greek tragedies. The introduction is good, showing complete knowledge of the subject of the drama, and illustrating it from the latest sources as well as the earlier. The text is every way admirable, and the critical notes at the end show scholarship and sound judgment. The longer notes—e.g., those which deal with Ió's journeyings, with Atlas, and with the mythology—present learning in most attractive form.

The Theætetus of Plato. A Translation with an Introduction. By S. W. Dyde. (Maclehose & Son.)

MR. DYDE's work is pleasant proof that we are linked with our great colonies by sympathy of intellectual pursuits, no less than by more tangible bonds. The translation reads well, and it is no small test of scholarship to give an agreeable version of one of Plato's great dialogues. But the author's chief labour has been spent on the introduction, which forms half the book, and to which the translation is illustrative and subsidiary. The examination of Plato's style and method, of his relations to the Sophists generally, and especially his points of agreement with and antagonism to Protagoras, is full and thorough; and the whole scheme of Plato's philosophy, as developed in this and the cognate Dialogues, is traced with full understanding.

NOW READY.

Royal 8vo, cloth extra, 30s. net; 755 pp.

THE IMPERIAL RUSSIAN NAVY:

Its Past, Present, and Future.

BY

FRED T. JANE,

Author of "All the World's Fighting Ships,"

"The Port Guard Ship,"

"The Torpedo in Peace and War," &amp;c., &amp;c.

With over 150 Illustrations.

SOME OF THE PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

The Germ of the Russian Navy, 865-1645. Peter the Great's founding of the Russian Navy. Its battles, its history, and its organisation from that time to the present day.

Detailed descriptions (with photographs and plans of all the Ships at present on the Russian Navy list.

Detailed descriptions of all the Russian Dockyards, copiously illustrated from the author's sketches and photographs.

Russia's Shipbuilding programme.

Projected Ship Canals.

The Personnel of the Fleet. Full details of the pay, uniform, training, armament, equipment, organisation, drill, discipline, and abilities of Russian officers and men; and the influence of Peter the Great as felt to-day. Particulars of the "magnetic shell" will be found in this section.

Anglo-Russian relations from both the Russian and British standpoints. Russia in the Far East and her true aims. England's mistake in dealing with Russia. Russia's weak points. Russia and Constantinople. Other navies as seen through Russian spectacles. Anglo-Saxon versus Slav: Some problems of the near future.

There is also a copious Appendix, which, amongst other matters, contains full details of British officers who have served in the Russian Navy in the past, with their biographies and services; a large number of plans of battles, official reports, and correspondence relating to historical matters, most of which have never before been published in any shape or form. These include an autograph letter of Peter the Great's (in facsimile), and the whole of the official correspondence and acknowledgment by the Russians of the use of internationally prohibited "fire-shell" at the battle of Gogland in 1788.

Finally, there is a complete list of Russian War Ships, built and building; a history of famous Russian ship names; and a comprehensive Index.

LONDON:

W. THACKER &amp; CO., 2, Creed Lane, E.C.

BLACKIE & SON'S PUBLICATIONS.

BLACKIE'S NEW ILLUSTRATED LATIN SERIES.

Edited by Prof. R. Y. TYRRELL, Litt.D., D.C.L., Examiner, to the Universities of London and Glasgow, &c. Each Volume is furnished with interesting Introduction, Explanatory Notes, and Full Vocabulary, and is illustrated with numerous Maps, Plans, and authentic Drawings from Coins, Gems, Statues, and other objects of Ancient Art. Crown 8vo, cloth. The following Volumes are now ready:—

CICERO.—THE FIRST CATILINE ORATION. Edited by C. HAINES KEENE, M.A. 1s. 6d.

CICERO.—THE CATILINE ORATIONS (Complete). Edited by C. HAINES KEENE, M.A. 2s. 6d.

HORACE.—THE ODES. Books I.-IV Edited by STEPHEN GWYNN, B.A. With or without Vocabulary. 1s. 6d. each.

TACITUS.—AGRICOLA. Edited by W. C. FLAMSTEAD WALTERS, M.A. With or without Vocabulary. 1s. 6d.

LIVY. Book V. Edited by W. Cecil LAMING, M.A. With or without Vocabulary. 2s. 6d.

EUTROPIUS. Books I. and II. Edited by W. Cecil LAMING, M.A.

This should prove the most attractive edition of this portion of Eutropius yet published. The text is printed in large type, and lavishly illustrated. The notes also are printed in a larger type than is usual, and are very clearly and simply expressed.

* * Other Volumes in preparation.

FRENCH.

NEW FRENCH BOOKS.

MY FIRST FRENCH BOOK. By MARGUERITE NINET. Illustrated. Cloth, 1s.

A little book of easy anecdotes, stories, and sketches, in large type, for very young children, with pictures to each lesson, and complete vocabularies.

LES DEUX BOSSUS. Edited by Émile R. LE FRANÇOIS. With a Frontispiece by Alice B. Woodward. Small crown 8vo, cloth, 1s.

SONGS of BÉRANGER. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &c., by GEORGE H. ELY, B.A. Small crown 8vo, cloth, 1s.

GEORGE SAND'S LES SAULES de COURAGE Adapted and Edited, with Notes and Vocabulary, by R. PROPER. 1s. 6d.

PRIMER of HISTORICAL FRENCH GRAMMAR. With a Chapter on Metre. By ERNEST WEEKLEY, M.A. (Lond.), Professor of French at University College, Nottingham. 2s. 6d.

"An eminently satisfactory historical French Grammar. It is a thoroughly workmanlike production, trustworthy in all respects."—Notes and Queries.

NEW ENGLISH CLASSICS.

MACAULAY.—ESSAY on HORACE WALPOLE. Edited by JOHN DOWNIE, M.A.

POPE.—RAPE of the LOCK. Edited by FREDERICK RYLAND, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

POPE. ESSAY on CRITICISM. Edited by FREDERICK RYLAND, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth.

TENNYSON.—SELECT POEMS Edited, for Schools, by AGNES WILSON. In Three Books. Paper, 2d. each; cloth, 3d. each.

1. MORTE D'ARTHUR. THE LADY of SHALOTT.

2. MARIANA. DORA. THE MAY QUEEN.

3. THE DAY DREAM. THE DEATH of the OLD YEAR. THE CHARGE of the LIGHT BRIGADE.

BROWNING.—SELECT POEMS. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &c., by E. H. BLAKENEY, M.A. Paper cover, 2d.; cloth, 3d.

SCOTT.—MARMION. Canto III. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &c., by W. KEITH LEASK, M.A. Paper, 3d.; cloth, 4d.

Another Canto of Mr. Keith Leask's excellent edition.

SCIENCE.

FIRST STEPS in EARTH KNOWLEDGE Being an Introduction to PHYSIOGRAPHY. By J. ANSFRED HARRISON. Edited, by W. JEROME HARRISON, F.O.S. 2s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION to ANALYTICAL CHEMISTRY. By Prof. G. G. HENDERSON, D.Sc., M.A., F.I.C., and M. A. PARKER, B.Sc. 5s.

SCIENCE AND ART.

COMPLETE LIST OF BOOKS ON APPLICATION.

FOR EXAMINATIONS, 1900, 1901.

1. CAMBRIDGE LOCALS, 1900.
2. CAMBRIDGE HIGHER LOCALS, 1901.
3. OXFORD and CAMBRIDGE SCHOOLS, 1900.
4. COLLEGE of PRECEPTORS, 1900.

ENGLISH.

SHAKESPEARE.—AS YOU LIKE IT. Edited by J. C. SMITH, M.A. 1s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE.—AS YOU LIKE IT. Edited by LIONEL W. LYDE, M.A. 8d.

SHAKESPEARE.—RICHARD the SECOND Edited by C. H. HERFORD, Litt.D. 1s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE.—MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, A. Edited by EDMUND K. CHAMBERS, B.A. 1s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE.—CORIOLANUS. Edited by EDMUND K. CHAMBERS, B.A. 1s. 6d.

MILTON.—PARADISE LOST. Edited by F. GORSE, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. BOOKS I., II., and III., 1s. each.

SCOTT.—THE LAY of the LAST MINSTREL. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &c. CANTOS I.-VI. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 1s.

SCOTT.—MARMION. Cantos I. and VI. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &c. Fcap. 8vo, each, paper, 3d.; cloth, 4d.

MACAULAY.—The PROPHECY of CAPYS Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &c. Fcap. 8vo, paper, 2d.

MACAULAY.—ARMADA. IVRY, &c. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &c. Fcap. 8vo, paper, 2d.; cloth, 3d.

HIGHER ENGLISH. An Outline of English Language and Literature. By DAVID CAMPBELL. 1s. 6d.

"The book is as full of information as the proverbial egg.... It is an admirable little work."—Journal of Education.

SYNOPTICAL GEOGRAPHY of the WORLD. A Concise Handbook. With a complete Series of Maps. 1s.

"It is a mine of useful and well-arranged information."—Glasgow Herald.

LANDMARKS in ENGLISH INDUSTRIAL HISTORY. By G. TOWNSEND WARNER, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

ENGLISH ETYMOLOGY. A Select Glossary, serving as an Introduction to the History of the English Language. By F. KLUGE and F. LUTZ. Demy 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Prof. C. H. HERFORD, Litt.D., says: "Kluge and Lutz... ought to have a good sale in England, being unquestionably the most scientific book of English philology and derivation accessible to the English reader; it at the same time covers the whole field of the alphabet."

A NEW SEQUEL to EUCLID. By Prof. W. J. DILLWORTH, M.A. 2s. 6d. Part I. Exercises on the first Three Books, 1s. Part II. More Difficult Exercises on the first Four Books, and Exercises on Book VI, 2s.

LATIN AND GREEK.

CÆSAR.—THE GALLIC WAR. Books IV., V., and VI. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Appendix, &c., by Prof. JOHN BROWN. With numerous Illustrations, Plans, and Maps. 1s. 6d. each.

HORACE.—THE ODES. Books I.-IV. Edited by STEPHEN GWYNN, B.A. Illustrated. 1s. 6d. each. [BOOK III. nearly ready.]

PHÆDRUS.—SELECTIONS from BOOKS I. and II. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &c., by S. E. WINBOLT, B.A. 1s.

EUTROPIUS.—Books I. and II. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Exercises, &c., by W. Cecil LAMING, M.A. Illustrated. [In January.]

EURIPIDES.—THE MEDEA. Edited by F. HALCOMBE, M.A., King's College, Cambridge. The Lyric Parts omitted, but an English Translation supplied. Illustrated. 1s. 6d.

LATIN UNSEENS. Graduated Specimens of Prose and Verse selected mainly from Examination Papers. Junior Section, 3d.; Intermediate Section, 4d.; Senior Section, 6d.

GREEK UNSEENS. Junior Section. 4d.; Senior Section, 6d.

LATIN GRAMMAR PAPERS. Selected from Oxford and Cambridge Local and London Matriculation Examination Papers. By A. C. LIDDELL, M.A. 1s.

FRENCH AND GERMAN.

A FIRST FRENCH COURSE. By J. J. BEUZEMAKER, B.A. 1s. 6d.

A FIRST GERMAN COURSE. By A. R. LECHNER. 1s. 6d.

A COMPREHENSIVE FRENCH MANUAL. For Students reading for Examinations. By OTTO C. NAF, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A COMPLETE COURSE of FRENCH COMPOSITION and IDIOMS. By HECTOR REY, B.A. 1s. 6d.

FRENCH UNSEENS. Junior Section. 3d.; Middle Section, 1s.; Senior Section, 1s. 6d.

GERMAN UNSEENS. Junior Section. Selected, 4d.

London: BLACKIE &amp; SON, LIMITED, 50, Old Bailey.

SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

THE STORY OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

On JANUARY 26.—In 2 vols., large cr. 8vo, with 16 Portraits and 4 Maps, 18s.

THE GREAT COMPANY, 1667-1871.

Being a History of the Honourable Company of Merchant Adventurers trading into Hudson's Bay. Compiled now for the first time from the Company's Archives; from the Journals of its Factors and Traders; from French and English Diplomatic Documents and State Papers; and from many Accounts and Memoirs.

By BECKLES WILLSON,

With an Introduction by LORD STRATHCONA and MOUNT ROYAL.

TRAVELS IN SOUTHERN ARABIA AND THE SOUDAN.

On JANUARY 26.—With a Portrait, 24 Full-page Illustrations, and 6 Maps. Demy 8vo, 18s.

SOUTHERN ARABIA.

By the late THEODORE BENT, F.R.G.S., F.S.A., Author of "The Ruined Cities of Mashonaland," "The Sacred City of the Ethiopians," &c., and Mrs. THEODORE BENT.

On January 26.—In 2 vols., profusely illustrated, crown 8vo, 18s.

THE STONES OF PARIS IN HISTORY AND LETTERS. By BENJAMIN ELLIS MARTIN and CHARLOTTE M. MARTIN.

NEW VOLUME of the "HAWORTH" EDITION of the LIFE AND WORKS OF THE SISTERS BRONTË

To be completed in 7 vols., large crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 6s. each. NOW READY.—With Facsimiles of the Title-pages of the First Editions, and 8 Full-page Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

VOL. IV.—THE PROFESSOR.—By CHARLOTTE BRONTË, and POEMS by CHARLOTTE, EMILY, and ANNIE BRONTË, and the Rev. PATRICK BRONTË, &c. With a Preface by Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD.

Guardian.—"Mrs. Humphry Ward is a critic of the first order. Never before have the Brontë sisters been so accurately placed, so delicately differentiated alike from one another, and from others of their craft."

*. Further Vols. will be issued at Monthly Intervals.—Prospectus on Application.

UNWRITTEN LAWS AND IDEALS OF ACTIVE CAREERS. Edited by E. H. PITCAIRN. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The volume includes Essays by representative men of various professions, and each calling has been dealt with by an expert writing with full knowledge of his subject.
Daily Chronicle.—"Of quite exceptional interest....The reader will find that this volume abounds in varied interest and candid revelation."

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO.'S Publications.

JACKSON'S SYSTEM OF HANDWRITING

Is adopted by the Commissioners of National Education, Ireland; also by the London, Liverpool, Bristol, and many other Important School Boards.

NEW STYLE VERTICAL WRITING COPY BOOKS (the first Headline Copy Books in Vertical Writing ever compiled and printed). With Two Headlines on each page. In Sixteen Numbers. Price 2d. each, or in superior covers, 3d. each.

NEW CODE COPY BOOKS (in Upright Penmanship). With Slow Graduation. In Twenty-six Numbers. Price 2d. each; or in superior covers, 3d. each.

Send for Prize Lists, Specimens, and other Literature, to the Publishers.

NEW METHODS IN EDUCATION. ART—REAL

MANUAL TRAINING—NATURE STUDY. Explaining processes whereby Hand, Eye, and mind are educated by means that conserve vitality and develop a union of thought and action. By J. LIBERTY TADD.

showing children and teachers practising these new methods or their work. A revelation to all interested in developing the wonderful capabilities of young or old. The pictures instantly fascinate every child, imbuing it with a desire to do likewise. Teachers and parents at once become enthusiastic and delighted over the Tadd methods, which the book enables them to put into practice. Size, 7½ x 10½ inches, 456 pages, fine plate paper, bound in cloth boards.

With 478 Pictures

and

44 Full-Page Plates

One Volume imp. 8vo, 14s. net. Prospectus free.

LOW'S CHEMICAL LECTURE CHARTS.

A Series of TWENTY-FIVE SHEETS, 40in. by 30in., price £1 11s. 6d. net.

Backed with linen, £2 10s. net.

Back with linen, varnished, and mounted on rollers, £3 10s. net.

"The drawings are nearly all in outline, are clear and exact, and free from unnecessary detail. They are certainly to be considered very suitable for class use, and we commend them to the notice of all whose teaching of chemistry is not strictly elementary."—Schoolmaster.

*. Prospectus giving full particulars post free on application.

London: SAMPSON, LOW, MARSTON & CO., Limited, St. Dunstan's House, Peter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

DIGBY, LONG &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS

At all Libraries and Booksellers.

RICHARD BAGOT'S NEW NOVEL.

A ROMAN MYSTERY. Cloth, 6s.

NOTE.—The Publishers beg to announce that the First Edition of this successful Novel is now exhausted, and that a NEW EDITION will be READY NEXT WEEK.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

SARAH TYTLER'S NEW NOVEL.

A CRAZY MOMENT. Cloth, 6s.

"A Crazy Moment" is one of the best of Miss Sarah Tytler's many stories."—Manchester Guardian.

"A well-told story, the interest of which never subsides."—Scotsman.

MRS. LEITH-ADAMS'S (Mrs. De Courcy Laffan) NEW NOVEL.

THE PRINCE'S FEATHERS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"Is one of the most charming stories we have seen of late; a pastoral idyll in prose, so romantic is the tale, so artistic the setting, and so graceful and poetic the style in which it is written."—Birmingham Gazette.

DORA RUSSELL'S NEW NOVEL.

A TORN-OUT PAGE. Cloth, 6s.

"Miss Russell's latest story is cleverly thought out and planned....It is seldom we come across a book which is at once so healthy and exciting as this."—Glasgow Herald.

FERGUS HUME'S NEW NOVEL.

THE RED-HEADED MAN. Cloth, 6s.

Third Edition now ready.
"The best piece of work that Mr. Fergus Hume has given us since he wrote 'The Mystery of a Hansom Cab.' The tale contains not a single dull chapter."—World.

JEAN MIDDLEMASS'S NEW NOVEL.

THE YELLOW BADGE. Cloth, 6s.

By the Author of "A Girl in a Thousand," &c. Second Edition.
Bookseller.—"The best of the many good novels that Miss Middlemass has written. It is a powerful and original story.... The opening chapters at once rivet the attention."

G. BERESFORD FITZGERALD'S NEW NOVEL.

BEYOND THESE DREAMS. Cloth, 6s.

By the Author of "The Stigma," "An Odd Career," &c.
Public Opinion.—"A work of considerable originality."
Literary World.—"A very human tale, graphically told."
Liverpool Post.—"A very powerful story.... It is the history of lovely woman and her emotions."

London: DIGBY, LONG & CO., 18, Bonville St., E.C.

FROM ELKIN MATHEWS' LIST

THIRD EDITION IN THE PRESS.

THE WIND among the REEDS. By

W. B. YEATS. With Cover design by Althea Gyles. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"The dreams of a poet... of a poet who loves the twilight better than sunshine, and dim cloud forms better than the loveliest ever chiselled out of marble, or moulded in flesh; what he sings of is the sense of mystery in things that haunt and overpower the mind to the exclusion of more human feelings.... It has the most beautiful cover that we have ever seen on any modern book."—Spectator.

"Contient à peine quarante très courts poèmes, d'une délicate émue et d'une étrange et hantante beauté d'expression."—Mercur de France.

The Daily Mail declares these poems to be great "in the eternal qualities of poetry."

SEVENTEENTH EDITION NOW READY.

ADMIRALS ALL, and other Verses. By

HENRY NEWBOLT. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. net.

"It is, therefore, with the greatest possible pleasure that we notice the delightful little collection of ballads. Mr. Newbolt has done a notable thing. He has managed to write ballads full of ring and go, and full also of patriotic feeling, without imitating Mr. Rudyard Kipling."—Spectator.

"Stirring ballads, written by a man who has spirit and force."—Times.

"Looking back to recent achievements in the same lines, and including even Mr. Kipling's, we do not know where to find anything better after its own kind than his ballad of 'Drake's Drum.'"—Westminster Gazette.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ADMIRALS ALL"

Third Thousand.—Crown 8vo, 3s. net.

THE ISLAND RACE.

Of the Forty Poems in this Volume, Twelve appeared in

"Admirals All."

"Mr. Newbolt's ballads have the right trumpet-tone.... Everywhere is seen the evidence of a delicate ear and a delicate hand."—Spectator.

"If this new volume does no more than establish the reputation won by 'Admirals All,' it is still an achievement.... In 'The Death of Admiral Blake' there is real pathos and dignity. The same haunting charm is found, with quite another measure, in the dirge music of 'Messmates.'"—Athenaeum.

LAMB and HAZLITT: Further Letters

and Records hitherto Unpublished. Edited by W. C.

HAZLITT. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

Literature says:—"Before one has had time to forget to be grateful for that unexpected good gift, 'Charles Lamb and the Hazlitts,' there comes another and of letters both of Lamb and Hazlitt. These are a series of letters which have been for sixty years in the hands of a Mr. Raymond Yates, a friend of Hazlitt's son, and their existence seems to have been unknown until this gentleman, shortly before his death last year, sent them to the present editor.... The letters of both these famous essayists will be altogether new to the reading world, never having been published hitherto in whole or in part.... Caution! Almer's edition of Lamb's works (now being issued) must still remain incomplete."

"A volume with many pleasant things in it, and one which must take its place on the shelves of all true lovers of Charles Lamb."—Literary World.

London: ELKIN MATHEWS, Vigo Street, W.

THIRD EDITION Now Ready.

KINSAH: a Story of Harem Life

KINSAH: a Story of Harem Life

By MAY CROMMELIN.

In cloth gilt, 6s.

DAILY NEWS.—"Vividly drawn. The story should be read not only for its picturesque style, but also for its interest as throwing a sidelight on contemporary manners."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"It is really good; excellent reading. Few books could give a better idea either of the brighter or darker side of Moorish harem life."

BOOKMAN.—"As a picture of harem life in Morocco it is probably unique. The story is picturesque, bright, interesting, and realistic. It deserves a large success."

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"It is no easy matter to gain an entrance to the hidden life of the East. Miss Crommelin had a sagame which others may well envy. The charm of her novel lies as much in the local colouring which she gives as in an ingenious and clever plot."

OUTLOOK.—"A delightful book, all about harem life in Morocco. The adventures of the heroine are charmingly told."

ATHENÆUM.—"The author has been fortunate in her materials, and has used them well."

ECHO.—"Miss Crommelin's latest novel is distinctly a book to be read."

London:

JOHN LONG, 6, Chandos Street, Strand.

Demonstrations in Greek Iambic Verse. By W. H. D. Rouse. (Cambridge: University Press.)

THE author has here given us a first-rate book on Greek verse, somewhat after the model of Sargent's Lectures on Latin Prose, including a long and careful introduction. The practical part, showing "how it is done," deals with some twenty well-chosen pieces of English poetry turned phrase by phrase into very good iambs.

Latin Literature of the Empire. Vol. I. Prose. Selected by Alfred Gudeman. (Harpers.)

THE prose authors of the Roman Empire, from the elder Seneca to Boethius, are here presented to us in a useful anthology. A brief critical estimate of each author is prefixed to his work. The extracts are long and skilfully chosen, so as to show at once the writers at their best, and to give occasion to the reader for comparison between them both for style, method, and difference of opinion on matters of interest and importance. Thus we view Tiberius with the eyes of Tacitus and of Paternulus, Christianity with those of Pliny and Minucius Felix—to give but two instances. The only author we miss is Aulus Gellius, from whose Noctes we should have liked something.

The Odes of Horace: Book IV. Edited by Stephen Gwynn. (Blackie & Son.)

THE distinguishing feature of this new series of Classical texts, superintended by Prof. Tyrrell, is the illustrations. Those in the present volume are interesting and appropriate, being taken nearly all from ancient sculpture and vases. Apart from this, the work is well done. Mr. Gwynn's introduction is excellent, and shows independence of thought. The martial and patriotic character of many of the Odes makes Book IV. specially fit for school use.

Cicero De Officiis. Translated by George B. Gardiner. (Methuen.)

A SHORT introduction describes Cicero's book, and records the concurrent judgment of the ages as to its value, and incidentally the translator compares it with Chesterfield's Letters, very much, and justly, to the disadvantage of the latter. The translation is careful and the style good, and it stands well the test of reading without any reference to the original. It is absolutely without any notes; but we think that quotations should have been traced, and that the original Latin terms in philosophy, &c., might have been given in brackets.

Science.

Chemistry.

Outlines of Industrial Chemistry. By Frank Hall Thorp. (Macmillan.)

An Introduction to Analytical Chemistry. By G. G. Henderson and M. A. Parker. (Blackie & Son.)

Introduction to Physical Chemistry. By James Walker. (Macmillan.)

THE rapid development of chemistry during the last half-century, and the marvellous increase in the applications of chemical knowledge to industrial undertakings of all kinds, have made it impossible for a single individual to become an authority on the whole of this extensive subject. The consequence is that in no branch of science is there greater specialisation than in Chemistry. The chemist, with, say, an expert knowledge of the ceramic industries will probably have but the most casual acquaintance with the chemistry of brewing or tanning; or the experimenter who researches in the direction of artificial dye-stuffs will most likely know very little about electrolytic processes. Such considerations will lead to a due appreciation of the difficulties with which Dr. Thorp had to contend in writing a text-book for students on industrial chemistry. By no means the least difficult point to decide was what to leave out, but, on the whole, the author has used a wise discrimination. The subject of metallurgy has been entirely omitted, since there are several good books available dealing with it alone. The chemistry of the coal-tar colours has been condensed into about nine pages, and is, consequently, little more than indexed. Analytical processes are not included, for they do not fall within the author's definition of his subject, which is to describe "the more important industrial chemical processes." The broad principles of chemical and physical knowledge are not referred to, inasmuch as Dr. Thorp intends his volume for students familiar with the elements of general chemistry and physics. The book is likely to supply a distinct want in the technical institutes of this country. We know of no other volume on precisely the same lines published on this side of the water. The subject-matter is generally quite up to date, though one or two exceptions must be made: especially in the incomplete treatment of electrolytic methods of manufacture is there room for improvement in the next edition. The book is provided with ninety-five illustrations, which add very much to the clearness of the explanations.

The little book which Prof. Henderson and Mr. Parker have produced gives a clear, though short, account of the qualitative and quantitative analysis of typical substances from the regions of both inorganic and organic chemistry. The work dealt with is supposed to be done under the direction of a demonstrator by students who have already had some experience of practical exercises in a chemical laboratory. There can be no doubt that though qualitative analysis does not form for beginners an educative introduction to chemistry, yet for students who have already become familiar with the principles of chemistry along "heuristic" lines, such test-tube work constitutes an intellectual exercise of a most valuable kind.

Prof. Walker's latest book reminds us that, though it is convenient for the purposes of classification to refer to various parts of the study of science by different names, it is quite impossible to draw hard and fast lines between the divisions generally recognised. Chemistry shades into Physics, and no strict delimitation is possible. This explains such titles as "Physical Chemistry" and "Chemical Physics." Throughout his most interesting book Prof. Walker gives indisputable evidence of his great teaching ability. He is persistently explanatory, and the intelligent schoolboy who has been properly taught the fundamentals of the two subjects, which in this book overlap, should have no difficulty in appreciating every step of the author's argument, and at the end of the volume find himself duly equipped for the serious study of the original work of the pioneers—Ostwald, Nernst, and van't Hoff. Though no very extensive knowledge of mathematics is taken for granted by Prof. Walker, he yet manages to present his readers with a good working account of those thermodynamic relations on which so much of the modern work in this borderland subject is based. The book is well printed and suitably illustrated.

Physics.

Optics: a Manual for Students. By A. S. Percival. (Macmillan.)

Experimental Physics. By Eugene Lommel. Translated from the German by G. W. Myers. (Kegan Paul.)

First Steps in Earth Knowledge. By J. A. Harrison. Edited by W. J. Harrison. (Blackie & Son.)

TECHNICAL processes to be of real value must be based upon the sure foundation of exact science. Mr. Percival, in writing his book for ophthalmic students, has duly considered this fact; and, taking into account the strictly limited amount of time at the disposal of this class of readers, he has brought together in his 400 pages nearly everything in the science of optics of importance to an ophthalmic surgeon. The book is thus one with a special purpose. Though it is unsuitable for the student who is studying physics, as it ignores the experimental treatment of the subject, it will at the same time serve as a very good introduction to geometrical optics for mathematical students. It is extremely difficult to refer to any particular subject, since the book is unprovided with an index—an omission which is inexcusable in a scientific work.

Why the volume on Experimental Physics was translated into English we cannot imagine. There are many other books dealing with all the subjects included in this treatise which are better in every way. The title, too, is misleading. The treatment is not experimental in the sense that we understand the expression. The first German edition was published in 1893, and the examination to which we have subjected the contents leads us to the conclusion that very few alterations and additions have since been made. The section (§ 45) called "Universal Gravitation" contains no mention of the repetition of Cavendish's experiment by Prof. Boys. The declination and inclination charts on pp. 264 and 266 are dated 1860! The information which is given about the spectra of common metals is sadly incomplete, and in some cases distinctly misleading—e.g., the number of lines in the spectrum of iron is stated to be about 460, whereas there are more than 2,000. Judging from the confusion between the terms "mass" and "weight" on p. 8, we suspect the translator does not always correctly interpret the original of Prof. von Lommel. Whatever be the source of this want of precision, it very much detracts from the value of a treatise on physics. The illustrations are poor and not always well chosen. Why is the lecture form of the quadrant electrometer (p. 325) given instead of the pattern which is used in all serious experimental work? And why is a "clinical" thermometer called a "fever" thermometer? The book has few merits and many faults, and no useful purpose will be served by its publication.

Though Mr. Harrison has chosen an unfortunate name for his book, which is an experimental introduction to physics and chemistry, he has certainly produced an attractive and trustworthy little volume. The new Code of Regulations of the Education Department for the examination of pupil teachers contains a syllabus of work in elementary science which is, with the exception of a short section on terrestrial magnetism, very well covered by First Steps in Earth Knowledge. The book is excellently printed, well illustrated, and provided with examination questions; it will doubtless be used by a large number of pupil teachers and students of the first part of Physiography in classes under the Department of Science and Art.

Mathematics.

Introduction to the Theory of Analytic Functions. By J. Harkness and F. Morley. (Macmillan.)

Elementary Algebra (to Quadratics). By C. H. French and G. Osborn. (J. & A. Churchill.)

Mathematical Facts and Formulæ. Compiled by A. E. Lyster. (Blackie & Son.)

Higher Rules. (Blackie & Son.)

THESE books represent fairly well the different grades in English education, from the university to the elementary school. Each class of student would appear to have well-marked characteristics which make it desirable to present knowledge to the members of each grade in particular ways.

The volume of Profs. Harkness and Morley is intended for the best of the mathematical students at the universities. It is not in the ordinary sense an elementary book, though the authors speak of it as supplying "a consecutive and elementary account of the fundamental concepts and processes employed in the theory of functions." Some acquaintance with this theory of functions is necessary to the proper equipment of the student of the higher branches of physics; and as previously it was necessary to read widely to obtain the information which is here conveniently collected and arranged, the authors have performed an act of public service in lightening the labours of the already over-burdened student.

It is only necessary to read a few pages of their book on algebra to be convinced that Messrs. French and Osborn are teachers of exceptional power. While always correct, they invariably manage to make their subject sufficiently simple for an ordinary intelligent schoolboy to understand it, and this, too, without hurting the boy's dignity by being childish. The large number of oral exercises is a strong point in the book's favour, and the shortness of the earlier chapters is an additional merit. The typing of the explanations and worked examples is admirable, and we shall be much surprised if the book does not soon become a favourite in schools.

Mr. Lyster's compilation is likely to be most useful in technical institutes where the students have to condense a large amount of work into a short time. Its use cannot be recommended for boys at school.

The book with the title Higher Rules is a little arithmetic for boys who have passed through the standards of an elementary school.

Small crown 8vo, bound in cloth, price 2s. 6d.

A MANUAL OF ESSAY WRITING.

For Colleges, Schools, and Private Students.

By J. H. FOWLER, M.A.,

Assistant Master at Clifton College.

"Schoolboys will be the wiser and the better for reading Mr. J. H. Fowler's little manual on 'Essay Writing.'"—Literature.

"The book, altogether, is one of conspicuous merit, and cannot fail to be warmly welcomed by those engaged in the teaching of a subject of such difficulty as this is universally acknowledged to be."—Educational News.

"The directions he gives are admirable, and the notes in Part II. possess the great merit of suggestiveness."—Public School Magazine.

"This is a distinctly helpful book.... We heartily commend the book to the notice of students preparing for all Higher Standard examinations at which an essay is required."—University Correspondent.

"This is the best handbook of the sort for advanced pupils that we remember to have seen.... Under such guidance the essay becomes in its measure an exercise in the art of literature."—Educational Record.

"A capital book on a practically difficult subject."

The Educational News of South Africa.

"The best book of its kind which has fallen into our hands yet. It is practical and lucid, and contains useful appendices of notes and subjects for essays."—The Educational Review.

"Mr. J. H. Fowler's 'Essay Writing' may be unreservedly recommended for the higher forms in public schools, and for teachers of composition of all grades. The author's aims are high, his method of handling his subject is dignified as well as practical, and his book offers in itself an excellent example of that clearness of thought, sobriety of judgment, and purity of style which he wishes to aid his readers to attain. The duties of a composition master are not—according to Mr. Fowler's conception of them—limited to the development in his pupils of a certain facility for spinning out a meagre stock of ideas in language grammatically correct, and possessing a certain shallow fluency and sparkle; his aim should be to make the writing of an essay an occasion for the acquisition of ideas, the widening of knowledge, the cultivation of habits of research, and the exercise of individual thought and critical judgment. The earnestness and skill with which Mr. Fowler develops this idea constitute the chief claim of his work to consideration, and raise it head and shoulders above any other text-book on composition which we have seen."—Guardian.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London.

HARPER & BROTHERS' PUBLICATIONS.

NEW EDITION, NOW READY.

MR. H. B. MARIOTT WATSON'S NEW NOVEL.

THE PRINCESS XENIA.

Illustrated, cloth, 6s.

"In plot the story is boldly invented, seethes with intrigue and excitement, and ends happily."—Spectator.

"Distinctly clever and original."—Birmingham Gazette.

THE BARRYS: a Novel. By Shan F. Bullock,

Author of "The Charmer," &c. Cloth, 6s.

"Mr. Bullock's novel is the best we have read this autumn. Every scene, every character, grips the heart."—British Weekly.

"A story that makes a strong appeal to human sympathies, and shows a keen knowledge of human nature."—The Bookman.

THIRTEENTH THOUSAND.

THE MARTYRDOM OF AN EMPRESS. With

a Portrait of the late Empress of Austria. Demy 8vo, cloth elegant. 7s. 6d.

"The Martyrdom of an Empress' is a tragic story, and is causing little short of a sensation.... One has a feeling that here, in the main, we have the truth set before us regardless of consequences."—Gentlewoman.

"Never perhaps in the course of history have the tragic secrets of a palace been so unreservedly revealed."—St. James's Gazette.

TALES OF SPACE AND TIME. By H. G. Wells,

Author of "When the Sleeper Wakes," "The Time Machine," &c.

"Mr. Wells never for a moment fails to maintain his grip on the reader. That is why his stories are so deservedly popular."—Manchester Guardian.

"The ingenuity with which the abiding principle of romance is adapted to the imaginary conditions of the mechanical millennium is nothing short of masterly."—Spectator.

NINTH THOUSAND.

WHEN THE SLEEPER WAKES: a Story of the Years to Come. By H. G. WELLS. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"A brilliant effort, both of the imagination and of erudition."—Queen.

NEW EDITION, NOW READY.

THE BOY'S BOOK OF INVENTIONS. By Ray S.

BAKER. With about 300 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo (5½ by 8½), 400 pages. 6s.

The Author here tells for the younger generation stories of the Marvels of Modern Science, such as Telegraphing without Wires, Liquid Air, Flying Machines, the Story of the Phonograph, Men-Lifting Kites and Tailless Box Kites, X-Rays Photography, the Sea Moto-Cycle or Submarine Boat. This chapter contains a graphic account of a voyage on the bottom of the sea. The fascination of such a volume is only equalled by its instructiveness and value.

HARPER & BROTHERS, 45, Albemarle Street, London, W.

BLACKWOODS' NEW EDUCATIONAL WORKS.

BLACKWOODS' ILLUSTRATED CLASSICAL TEXTS.

General Editor—H. W. AUDEN, M.A.,

Assistant-Master at Fettes College.

LEADING FEATURES OF THE SERIES.

- Interesting Biographical and Critical Introductions.
- A Sound Text.
- Practical Notes.
- Careful Typography.
- Useful Summaries and Appendixes.
- Numerous Plain and Coloured Illustrations, Maps, and Plans.

NOW READY.

Cæsar—Gallic War. Bks. IV., V. By St. J. B. WYNNE WILLSON, M.A., Assistant Master at Rugby. With or without Vocabulary. 1s. 6d.
(Prescribed for the Oxford Local, London Matric., and College of Preceptors Exams., 1900.)

Virgil—Georgics. Bk. IV. By J. SARGEANT, M.A., Assistant Master at Westminster. 1s. 6d.
(Prescribed for the Cambridge Higher Local Exams., 1900, 1901.)

In active preparation:—

Ovid—Metamorphoses (Selections). By J. H. VINCE M.A., Assistant Master at Bradford. [Immediately.]

Cicero—In Catilinam. Bks. I.—IV. By H. W. AUDEN M.A., Assistant Master at Fettes College. [Shortly.]

Cæsar—Gallic War. Bks. I.—III. By J. M. HARDWICH, M.A., Assistant Master at Rugby.

Homer—Odyssey. Bk. VI. By E. E. SIKES, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of St. John's College, Cambridge.

Ovid—Elegiac Extracts. By A. R. F. HYSLOP, M.A., Assistant Master at Harrow.

Sallust—Jugurtha. By J. F. SMEDLEY, M.A., Assistant Master at Westminster.

Homer—Odyssey. Bk. VII. By E. E. SIKES, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of St. John's College, Cambridge.

Demosthenes—Olynthiacs, I.—III. By H. SHARPLEY, M.A., formerly Assistant Master at Marlborough.

Cicero—Pro Lege Manilia and Pro Archia. By K. P. WILSON, M.A., Assistant Master at Fettes College.

Cicero—Pro Cæcina. By Rev. J. M. LUPTON, M.A., Assistant Master at Marlborough.

Tacitus—Agricola. By H. F. MORLAND SIMPSON, M.A., Rector of Aberdeen Grammar School.

Livy—Book XXVIII. By G. MIDDLETON, M.A., Lecturer in Sanscrit and Comparative Philology in the University of St. Andrews.

Euripides—Hecuba. By F. GRIFFIN, M.A., Head Master of Birkenhead School.

Nepos—Select Lives. By Rev. E. J. W. HOUGHTON, M.A., Head Master of King Edward's Grammar School, Stratford-on-Avon.

Xenophon—Anabasis. Bks. I., II. By A. JAGGER, B.A., Hymer's College, Hnll.

Virgil—Æneid. Bks. V., VI. By St. J. B. WYNNE WILLSON, M.A., Assistant Master at Rugby.

Other Volumes to follow.

GREEK AND LATIN.

Greek Prose Phrase Book. By H. W. AUDEN, M.A., Editor of "Meissner's Latin Phrase-Book." Interleaved. 3s. 6d.

Greek Test Papers. By JAMES MOIR, Litt.D., LL.D., Co-Rector, Aberdeen Grammar School. 2s. 6d.

Higher Greek Unseens. By H. W. AUDEN, M.A., Assistant Master at Fettes College. 2s. 6d.

Higher Greek Prose. By H. W. AUDEN, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Lower Greek Prose. By K. P. WILSON, M.A., Assistant Master at Fettes College. 2s. 6d.

Higher Latin Unseens. By H. W. AUDEN, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Higher Latin Prose. By H. W. AUDEN, M.A. 2s. 6d.

* * KEY (for Teachers only), 5s. net.

Lower Latin Unseens. By W. LOBBAN, M.A. 2s.

Lower Latin Prose. By K. P. WILSON, M.A. 2s. 6d.

* * KEY (for Teachers only), 5s. net.

Tales of Ancient Thessaly. An Elementary Latin Reading Book, with Vocabulary and Notes. By J. W. E. PEARCE, M.A., late Assistant Master, University College School, London. 1s.

ENGLISH.

BLACKWOODS' SCHOOL SHAKESPEARE.

Edited by R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON. Each Play complete, with Introduction, Notes, and Glossary. In Crown 8vo Volumes. Price 1s. 6d. each, cloth; paper, with cloth back, 1s.

As You Like It.

(Prescribed for Cambridge and Oxford Local and College of Preceptors Exams., 1900.)

The Merchant of Venice [Ready.] Julius Cæsar [Ready.]
Richard II. [Ready.] The Tempest [Ready.]

BLACKWOODS' LITERATURE READERS.

Edited by JOHN ADAMS, M.A., B.Sc., F.C.P., Rector of the Free Church Training College, Glasgow.

Book I. Price 1s. Book III. Price 1s. 6d.
Book II. Price 1s. 6d. Book IV. Price 1s. 6d.

A History of English Literature. For Secondary Schools. By J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A., First English Master, Edinburgh Ladies' College. 3s.

Outlines of English Literature. By J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A. 1s. 6d.

English Verse for Junior Classes. By J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A. Part I.—CHAUSSER TO COLERIDGE. Part II.—NINETEENTH CENTURY. Each 1s. 6d. net.

English Prose for Junior and Senior Classes. Part I.—MALORY TO BOSWELL. Part II.—NINETEENTH CENTURY. By J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A. Each 2s. 6d.

Paraphrasing, Analysis and Correction of Sentences. By D. M. J. JAMES, M.A. 1s.

One Hundred Stories for Composition. Told in Alternative Versions. 1s. 3d.

Stormonth's Handy School Dictionary. New Edition, thoroughly revised. By WILLIAM BAYNE. 1s.

FRENCH AND GERMAN.

The Tutorial Handbook of French Composition. By ALFRED MERCIER, L.-ès-L., Lecturer on French Language and Literature in the University of St. Andrews. 3s. 6d.

The Children's Guide to the French Language. By ANNIE G. FERRIER, Teacher of French in the Edinburgh Ladies' College. 1s.

Select Passages from Modern French Authors (Prose and Verse). With short literary and Biographical Notices. PART I. ADVANCED COURSE. PART II. JUNIOR COURSE. By L. E. KASTNER, B.A., Lecturer in Modern Languages at Caius College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d. each.

French Historical Unseens. For Army Classes. By N. E. TOKE, B.A. 2s. 6d.

A Compendious German Reader. Consisting of Historical Extracts, Specimens of German Literature, Lives of German Authors, an Outline of German History (1610-1890), Biographical and Historical Notes. Especially adapted for the use of Army Classes. By G. B. BEAK, M.A., Oxon., Modern Language Master at The King's School, Bruton. 2s. 6d.

Progressive German Composition. With Copies Notes and Idioms, and FIRST INTRODUCTION TO GERMAN PHILOLOGY. By LOUIS LUBOVIOUS, German Lecturer in the Free Church Training College, Glasgow. 3s. 6d.

Also in Two Parts:—Composition. 2s. 6d. Philology. 1s. 6d.

* * Key to Composition (for Teachers only), 5s. net.

Lower Grade German. Reading, Supplementary Grammar with Exercises, and Material for Composition. With Notes and Vocabulary, and Ten Popular Songs in Sol-fa Notation. By LOUIS LUBOVIOUS. 2s. 6d.

MATHEMATICS.

Modern Geometry of the Point, Straight Line, and CIRCLE. An Elementary Treatise. By J. A. THIRD, M.A., Head Master of Spier's School, Beith. 3s.

Arithmetic. With numerous Examples, Revision Tests, and Examination Papers. By A. VEITCH LOTHIAN, M.A., B.Sc., F.R.S.E., Mathematical and Science Lecturer, E.C. Training College, Glasgow. With Answers, 3s. 6d.

Complete Educational Catalogue forwarded post free on application.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, DECEMBER, 1900. THE PITT PRESS SHAKESPEARE FOR SCHOOLS.

School World.—"It would be difficult to praise this series too highly."
Guardian.—"Mr. Verity is an almost ideal editor of school texts."

AS YOU LIKE IT. With Introduction, Notes, Glossary, and Index, by A. W. VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1s. 6d.

CAMBRIDGE SERIES FOR SCHOOLS & TRAINING COLLEGES

The following Editions have COMPLETE VOCABULARIES.
AUTHOR.	WORK.	EDITOR.	PRICE.
Caesar	De Bello Gallico, Book VI.	E. S. Shuckburgh	1 6
Ovid	Selections from the Tristia	H. F. M. Simpson	1 6
Vergil	Aeneid, Book VI.	A. Sidgwick	1 6
Xenophon	Anabasis, Book V.	G. M. Edwards	1 6

Cambridge Editions of Caesar, Vergil, and Xenophon: The attention of Schoolmasters is called to the fact that there are now two editions of some of the works of these authors in the Pitt Press Series and the Cambridge Series for Schools and Training Colleges. The Editions in the Cambridge Series for Schools and Training Colleges have Complete Vocabulary. If, in ordering, the Edition required is not specified, the Pitt Press Edition, without vocabulary, will be sent.

DEMONSTRATIONS in GREEK IAMBIC VERSE. By W. H. D. ROUSE, M.A., formerly Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge; a Master at Rugby School. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Literature.—"In many ways an improvement on the work of predecessors in the same field. The exercises are singularly exhaustive and lucid, and the book will be of great service to composition masters and their pupils."

Educational Times.—"We hope that this book will find its way into the hands of many teachers, to the certain benefit both of themselves and of their pupils."

A PRIMER of FRENCH VERSE for UPPER FORMS.

Edited by FREDERIC SPENCER, Professor of the French Language and Literature in the University College of North Wales; formerly Chief Master of the Modern Side in the Leys School Cambridge. 3s.

Morning Post.—"Professor Spencer's little collection of French verse should do much to cultivate an appreciation of French rhythm and poetic thought. Only the English teacher can make a selection of French verses which will appeal to our insular youth. Professor Spencer has certainly made such a selection."

PITT PRESS SERIES.

AUTHOR.	WORK.	EDITOR.	PRICE.
Malot	Remi en Angleterre	Mrs. Verrall	2 0
Mérimée	Colomba	A. R. Ropes	2 0
Racine	Athalie	H. W. Eve	2 0
Freitag	Der Staat Friedrichs des Grossen	W. Wagner	2 0
Goethe	Hermann und Dorothea	W. Wagner and J. W. Cartmell	3 0
Klee	Die deutschen Heldensagen (Hagen und Hilde, and Gudrun)	H. J. Wolstenholme	3 0
Paradise Lost	Books III. and IV.	A. W. Verity	2 0
Scott	Marmion	J. H. B. Masterman	2 6

"Far and away the best school edition of the poet we have seen, and it will be difficult, probably impossible, to improve on it."—Guardian.

Caesar	De Bello Gallico, Book VI.	A. G. Peskett	1 6
Cicero	De Senectute	J. S. Reid	3 6
Horace	Epistles, Book I.	E. S. Shuckburgh	2 6
Livy	Book XXI.	M. S. Dimsdale	2 6
Vergil	Aeneid, Book VI.	A. Sidgwick	1 6
Euripides	Hecuba	W. S. Hadley	2 6
Homer	Odyssey, Book XI.	J. A. Nairn [In the press]
Lucian	Meatippus and Timon	E. C. Mackie	3 6
Thucydides	Book III.	A. W. Spratt	5 0

CAMBRIDGE SERIES FOR SCHOOLS & TRAINING COLLEGES

General Editor—W. H. WOODWARD, of Christ Church, Oxford, Principal of University (Day) Training College, Liverpool, and Lecturer on Education in Victoria University.

Specially suited for candidates for Queen's Scholarship Examinations, December, 1900, and Certificate Examinations, July, 1900.

A SHORT HISTORY of the EXPANSION of the BRITISH EMPIRE, 1500-1870. By WILLIAM H. WOODWARD. With Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s.; cloth extra, gilt top, 5s.

Athenaeum.—"Thoroughly to be recommended."

Educational Times.—"Mr. Woodward tells this story in usum scholarum in an altogether admirable manner."

GEOMETRICAL DRAWING. With Notes and Examples.

Part I., Plane and Elementary Solid. (Arranged in accordance with the Syllabus of the Sc. and Art Department.) By W. H. BLYTHE, M.A., Jesus College. 2s. 6d.

BOOKS SUITABLE FOR VARIOUS EXAMINATIONS, 1900-1901.

Euripides. Bacchae. With Introduction, Critical Notes, and Archaeological Illustrations, by J. E. SANDYS, Litt.D. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, 12s. 6d.

THE PITT PRESS SERIES.

GREEK.
AUTHOR.	BOOK.	EDITOR.	PRICE.
Aristophanes	Clouds, Wasps	C. E. Graves	each 3 6
Plautus		W. C. Green	3 6
Demosthenes	Olynthiacs	T. R. Glover	2 6
Euripides	Medea	C. E. S. Headlam	2 6
	Hecuba	W. S. Hadley	2 6
Herodotus	Book VI.	E. S. Shuckburgh	4 0
	Book VIII., Chaps. 1-89		2 6
Lucian	Menippus and Timon	E. C. Mackie	3 6
Plato	Apologia Socratis	J. Adam	3 6
Sophocles	Oedipus Tyrannus	R. C. Jebb	4 0
Xenophon	Anabasis, Books I., III., IV., V.	A. Pretor	each 2 0
	" " " " " " " " " " " "		2 6
	" " " " " " " " " " " "		4 0

LATIN.
Caesar	De Bello Gallico. Comm. II., III.	A. G. Peskett	2 0
	" " " " " " " " " " " "		3 0
	" " " " " " " " " " " "		1 6
	" " " " " " " " " " " "		1 6
Cicero	Philippica Secunda	J. C. Nicol	3 6
	Pro Lege Manilia	J. S. Reid	3 6
	Pro Sulla		3 6
	De Amicitia, De Senectute		each 3 6
	De Officiis, III.	H. A. Holden	2 0
Horace	Odes and Epodes	J. Gow	5 0
	Odes, Books I. and III.		each 2 0
	" " " " " " " " " " " "		1 6
Livy	Book IX.	H. M. Stephenson	2 6
	Books XXI. and XXII.	M. S. Dimsdale	each 2 6
	Book V.	J. D. Duff	2 0
Lucan	Trinummus	J. H. Gray	3 6
Plautus	Historiae, Book I.	G. A. Davies	2 6
Tacitus	Aeneid, Books I.-XII.	A. Sidgwick	each 1 6
Vergil	Georgics I.-II., III.-IV.		each vol. 2 0
	Complete Works. Vol. I. Text and Introductions		3 6
	Complete Works. Vol. II. Notes		1 6

FRENCH.
About	Le Roi des Montagnes	A. R. Ropes	2 0
Boileau	L'Art Poétique	D. Nichol Smith	2 6
Cornille	Le Suite du Monteur	G. Masson	2 0

French—(Continued).
AUTHOR.	BOOK.	EDITOR.	PRICE.
De Staël	La Directoire	G. Masson and G. W. Prothero	2 0
Malot	Remi et ses Amis	M. de G. Verrall	2 0
Molière	L'Avare	E. G. W. Brauholtz	2 6
	Les Précieuses Ridicules		2 0
	" " " " " " " " " " " "		1 6
	" " " " " " " " " " " "		2 6
	" " " " " " " " " " " "		1 6
Perrault	The Fairy Tales of Master Perrault	W. Rippmann	1 6
Ponsard	Charlotte Corday	A. R. Ropes	2 6
Souvestre	Le Serf		1 6

GERMAN.
Benedix	Doctor Wespe	K. H. Brühl	3 0
Goethe	Iphigenie auf Tauris		3 6
Hauff	Die Karavane	A. W. Schlotmann	3 0
Kohlrausch	Das Jahr 1813	W. Wagner	2 0
Lessing	Minna von Barnhelm	H. J. Wolstenholme	3 0
Riehl	Die Gauerben und Die Gerechtigkeit Gütes		3 0
	Culturgeschichtliche Novellen		2 0
Schiller	Wilhelm Tell	K. H. Brühl	2 6
	" " " " " " " " " " " "		1 6
	" " " " " " " " " " " "		6
	" " " " " " " " " " " "		6

ENGLISH.
Bacon	The New Atlantis	G. C. M. Smith [In the press]
Macaulay	Lays of Ancient Rome (with Ivry and the Armada)	J. H. Flather	1 6
	Arcturion and Comus	A. W. Verity	3 0
The Cambridge Milton for Schools	Ode on the Nativity, L'Allegro, Il Penseroso, Lycidas		2 6
	Paradise Lost, Books I. and II.		2 0
	" " " " " " " " " " " "		2 0
More	Utopia	J. R. Lamb	3 6
The Pitt Press Shakespeare for Schools	A Midsummer's Night Dream	A. W. Verity	1 6
	Julius Caesar		1 6
	Tempest		1 6
	King Richard II.		1 6
Scott	Lay of the Last Minstrel	J. H. Flather	2 0

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates for Yearly Subscriptions ..... 20s. including postage.

American Agents for the ACADEMY: Brentano's, 31, Union-square, New York.

Our Awards for 1899.

The "Crowned" Books.

IN accordance with an announcement in our issue of December 16, we have this year extended the scope of the ACADEMY'S Awards to Authors. We have divided the sum at our disposal, One Hundred and Fifty Guineas, into six portions of Twenty-Five Guineas each, which we have allotted to six books, representing various branches of literature, notable for promise, sincerity, and thoroughness in literary art. An author's first book, we remarked in a preliminary announcement, would be the ideal candidate for an award; but we did not bind ourselves to search among first or even second books. Our Awards are:

POETRY.

TWENTY-FIVE GUINEAS to Mr. W. B. Yeats for The Wind Among the Reeds.

FICTION.

TWENTY-FIVE GUINEAS to "Zack" (Miss Gwendoline Keats) for On Trial.

BIOGRAPHY.

TWENTY-FIVE GUINEAS to Mr. Hilaire Belloc for Danton: a Study.

HISTORY.

TWENTY-FIVE GUINEAS to Mr. G. M. Trevelyan for England in the Age of Wycliffe.

TRANSLATION.

TWENTY-FIVE GUINEAS to Mrs. Garnett for her translation of the novels of Turgenev.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TWENTY-FIVE GUINEAS to Mr. H. G. Graham for The Social Life of Scotland in the Eighteenth Century.

Mr. W. B. Yeats and "The Wind Among the Reeds."

MR. W. B. YEATS is one of the most active and prominent leaders of that movement in present literature which goes by the somewhat high-flown title of the Celtic Renaissance. It numbers both poets and prose-writers belonging to the kindred kingdoms of Ireland and Scotland.

None among them has a more genuine, more distinctive and personal note than Mr. Yeats. His work has been slender in quantity: but it has quality. It is artistic and conscientious. His prose inclines to a poetised style: it is good of its kind, but not eminently good. With all its poetic infusion, it has nothing tawdry. With all its self-conscious artistry, the note is not forced: its rhythm is a true prose-rhythm, with none of that terrible bastard movement—like blank verse gone very much to the bad—which makes most writing of this sort anathema. Yet it is not sufficient for a reputation. That reputation must rest on Mr. Yeats's poetry. Here he stands quite alone: a poet he is, and—to our thinking—a poet only. In everything else which he writes he suggests the poet. As poet he suggests nothing outside poetry—the simple essence; not poetic embodiment of this thing or that, but just poetry. His is not a large or wide gift. It is, in truth, an exceedingly contracted gift; but a gift it is, authentically his and no man else's. Whether from singular self-judgment or the good-hap of simple sincerity, Mr. Yeats has practically recognised this. He has known that his gift was small; he has known that his gift was narrow; he has known that his gift was his gift—or he has acted as if he knew, which comes to the same thing; and he has held to it and within it, unswerving and contented as the blackbird on the bough.

In proportion as he becomes, or tries to be, definite, his power passes from him. It is when he is obeying the dictates of an emotion, a sentiment, as insubstantial and uncapturable as a gust of the night, that he achieves his most delicate and evanescent charm. With a true instinct of his own prevailing quality he calls this latest book The Wind Among the Reeds. No less frail and mysterious than such a wind is the appeal of Mr. Yeats's best verse.

"Zack" (Miss Gwendoline Keats) and "On Trial."

IT seems impossible that this simple story of Devonshire folk should fail to arouse enthusiasm among students of good fiction. As you read the pages you feel, beneath the surface of expression, the strong, easy, leisurely pulse of an imagination calmly exulting in its own power. There is no question here of "making the most" of a talent—of piecing it out with ingenuities and painstaking and heavy labours. Clearly, "Zack" has much to give, and she gives it easily. She is exempt from the cares of imaginative poverty. She sees, she feels, she writes, and doesn't count the cost. She can afford to be generous.

In a novel where style and matter have an equal distinction we have only one fault to find. Call it a quasi-fault. To our mind, On Trial is scarcely a novel: it is a short story elongated, and elongated a trifle too much. Towards the middle of it one might urge that an inevitable climax was not being approached with sufficient directness. The incidents cease for a time to be indispensable. Smollett (who was a great man) once wrote: "A novel is a large and diffused picture, comprehending the characters of life, disposed in groups. . . ." &c. We think much of the importance of that phrase "large and diffused." It seems to us to touch the essence of the matter. On Trial is neither large nor diffused. It is an episode. Dan loses a letter, and tries to keep it back from a certain destination; but it reaches the destination. That is all. The mere letter is too continuously prominent. You can't write a novel about the adventures of a letter. It is a short story. Yet there is enough stuff in this short story for half-a-dozen six-shilling novels. Only reviewers know how excessively rare is this quality of plenteous inspiration, and how delightful the sense of security which it induces in those who spend their lives in watching fountains trying not to run dry.

This is Miss Keats's second book. Her first, a collection of short stories, was published in 1898 under the title Life is Life.

Mr. Hilaire Belloc and "Danton: a Study."

MR. BELLOC, although he has but just taken his degree—he was a Brackenbury scholar of Balliol College, Oxford—is already a man of various achievement. He has proved a most eloquent President of the Union, has inspired or helped to inspire a renaissance of Oxford Liberalism, has worked a new vein of humour in The Bad Boy's Book of Beasts and its successors, and he has written Danton. This is really notable among recent historical biographies. It is not particularly learned. Mr. Belloc takes his facts mainly from modern French writers who have gone over the subject, and probably adds less of his own than an older scholar, Mr. A. H. Beesly, whose Danton appeared almost simultaneously with his. But it is a genuine attempt to paint, broadly and in a strong key of colour, a great historical portrait. It aims at doing more than modify our intellectual conception of Danton: it would transform and reconstruct our imaginative notion of him. This is the most difficult task of a biographer who has the traditions to wrestle with. Mr. Belloc accomplishes it, or nearly accomplishes it, not by persuasion, but by sheer impressiveness. He puts all his strength into the great moments. As a rule, his style is not impeccable, inclining too much to paradox, to smartness, to the oracular. But when a real call is made on it, as in the chapter which handles the grim close of Danton's meteoric career, then it rises to the occasion. The narrative becomes large in its movement, stirring through its picturesque qualities, its sureness of dramatic touch. The method has its dangers. It suggests the inevitable comparison with Carlyle. It skirts the exuberant, the bombastic, the grandiose. We can imagine many people disliking Mr. Belloc's book exceedingly. We cannot imagine any competent judge failing to find himself in contact with a vigorous and stimulating mind, and one open to perceptions and to ideas.

Mr. G. M. Trevelyan and "England in the Age of Wycliffe."

MR. TREVELYAN was, as a historian, born in the purple. The son of Sir George Trevelyan and the great-nephew of Macaulay, he renews in a third generation the historical triumphs and the historical ideals of his house. His England in the Age of Wycliffe appeared shortly after his election to a Fellowship at Trinity College, Cambridge, and was at once recognised as a valuable contribution to the study of Church and State in the fourteenth century. It is good historical writing, in more than one way. It has the quality of erudition, for it sums up the results of the author's valuable and painstaking research into the documents of the Peasants' Rising. It has also the quality of interest, for Mr. Trevelyan is of those who feel that history should be written, and not merely compiled; a constructive work, not a précis of records. He has a critical period of the national evolution to tackle, and he brings to the task a vigour of the pen and an ability for correlating details which enable him to produce a satisfactory survey of the whole state of English civilisation at the turning-point. Also, he dares to have enthusiasms, and, without swerving from impartiality, avoids the temper of neutral detachment which leaves so much of modern history drab. Here comes in the touch of heredity, for, in the main, his enthusiasms are his by tradition. He is faithful to the themes of the middle-class domination in England, of Whiggery in State, and Nonconformity in Church. When Macaulay dealt with William of Orange, or Sir George Trevelyan with Charles James Fox, these were the tendencies which occupied their thoughts and excited their admiration. The younger writer approaches them in their beginnings, as they first emerge upon the field of history against the incongruous background of the failing Middle Ages.

Mrs. Garnett's Translation of Turgenev.

OF all departments of literary labour that of translation is, perhaps, the most exacting and the least satisfactory—especially to the translator. In its failure is bitterly condemned as an outrage on the original, while success must expect no more than a condescending and perfunctory approval. Complete success is impossible, or almost impossible, and none knows this better than the translator, who on that account needs in a peculiar degree qualities which are not too often combined—restraint, audacity, and disinterestedness. The skilled and conscientious translator therefore deserves from us a particular encouragement and appreciation. In the region of imaginative literature no more prominent instance of this can be found than Mrs. Constance Garnett, whose English version of Ivan Turgenev, begun in 1894, was completed at the end of last year. To translate the complete works of one of the greatest European masters—an artist, moreover, renowned for richness and beauty of style—was a great undertaking in itself; and the difficulties in the case of Turgenev were enhanced by the notorious complexity of the Russian tongue (so majestic, but so formidable to the foreigner), and by the fact that any English translation must, perforce, on the European stage, challenge comparison with the superb French version prepared under the eye of Turgenev himself. That Mrs. Garnett has conspicuously succeeded in a long and arduous task is beyond doubt. Her translation is faithful and correct. It is full of ingenuities unsuspected by the casual reader; and it has a quiet and modest grace. As we survey the fifteen volumes of the neat and dignified edition we cannot but feel that Mrs. Garnett has deserved exceedingly well of her countrymen. Since Ivan Turgenev is pre-eminently a master of technique, his work must be specially valuable in a country whose writers have, for the most part, been content to under-rate technique. Upon a larger and more human consideration, these novels, which by universal consent are counted among the supreme works of imaginative genius, are the heritage, not of Russia, but of the world; and he who worthily makes that heritage effective to his own race has, indeed, laboured to a notable end.

Mr. H. G. Graham and "The Social Life of Scotland in the Eighteenth Century."

THE task of writing the social history of any period demands two things, at least, in a writer: industry and imaginative sympathy. Without the first he cannot collect the right materials; without the second he cannot give them life and colour and verisimilitude. Mr. Graham has brought these qualities to the task—never before undertaken with such a comprehensive aim—of drawing the social life of Scotland in the eighteenth century, a life widely different, because far more young and crude, than that which we associate with the London and England of Queen Anne and the Georges. He shows us a Scotland in which the gentry were just beginning to drink tea, adorn their rooms with wall-paper, and wear linen next the skin. He sketches the rise of the theatre, art, and a new literature in Edinburgh. The dress, the sports, the eating habits, and the social amenities of the age take life again in Mr. Graham's pages, in which literary style is the efficient, not obtrusive, handmaid of what may be called tessellated history.

"A Midsummer Night's Dream."

WE have all heard of the gentleman in Molière who was more amusing than he had supposed. That is often Shakespeare's situation with regard to ourselves. His innocent blunders have become a source of delight. The mere line on the playbill, "Theseus, Duke of Athens," gives us a pleasing thrill—or would give, had not Mr. Tree (it is his one failure of tact) substituted "Theseus, Prince of Athens." This thrill you get from the strange blend of classic and romantic. One age is refracted through another for the pleasure of a third. So we enjoy a luxury denied to Shakespeare himself. In a footnote to the fifty-second, and last, chapter of his Decline and Fall, Gibbon says: "From these Latin princes of the fourteenth century, Boccaccio, Chaucer, and Shakespeare have borrowed their Theseus duke of Athens. An ignorant age transfers its own language and manners to the most distant times." It does, and in so doing it stores up gratification for a later age which, by acquiring the historic sense, has gained the capacity for being pleased with the incongruous. The incongruities of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" are, of course, not all unconscious: the intrusion of the artisan-mummers into fairyland, the "topical" allusions to Queen Elizabeth from the mouth of a fairy king. But Shakespeare could not have felt, as we feel, the charm in the juxtaposition of the two mythologies, the northern fays and elves and the Greek heroes and amazons; nor can he have anticipated our relish of the quaint in the sight of Warwickshire peasantry clowning in Greek tunic and sandals; nor would that "wood near Athens" have delighted him as it delights us merely because we find good English oak and greensward there and no olive-clad rock. What a comfort (for us) that Shakespeare, after all, was not Bacon! For then he would have entered into the spirit of antiquity—"reconstituted an epoch," as the jargon goes—and balked us of all the pleasure we now get from his free-and-easy confusion of time and place and race. The later stage anachronisms—Garriek's Macbeth in scarlet coat and powdered wig, Gluck's Eurydice in sack and paniers à la Watteau—have their special flavour, too, for the judicious connoisseur; but Shakespeare's quaintness in this kind is more racy and thorough-going—the quaintness of your true Primitive and naïf, your Masaccio and Botticelli. For my part, I should like to see "A Midsummer Night's Dream" given something of the Boccaccio atmosphere. Titania should wear the "bunchy" draperies of the woman on the right-hand of Botticelli's "Birth of Venus"; Peaseblossom and Mustardseed should be little Florentine bambini; and through the "wood near Athens" we should have a glimpse of the dumpy hills and curving stream to be seen behind the Monna Lisa.

But that is another sort of dream, and I have no fault to find with the more traditional setting at Her Majesty's. I say "traditional," but a little hastily; for, after all, what is the tradition here? Probably the play was at first presented with all the crude, garish materialism of a masque. As Mr. Archer rightly says, the play is in form a masque, with Bottom and his friends to play the conventional anti-masque. But a masque is no more dream-like than a Lord Mayor's Show, and by degrees, as people grew to take a less matter-of-fact view of dreams, the demand for something more vague and impalpable in the presentation of this play became urgent. Phelps, at Sadler's Wells, met this demand in a rough-and-ready fashion by the device of a green gauze curtain between performers and public. That is to say, like Johnson when interrogated by an inquisitive lady about ghosts, he "left the subject in obscurity." Now we have artful devices of illumination, electric lights dancing like Will-o'-the-wisps in "inspissated gloom," and so forth. In the last scene a peculiarly uncanny effect is produced by constructing what appear in daylight to be the massive pillars of Theseus's palace as hollow transparencies, which, at the wave of Oberon's wand, glow with coloured fires. As the fairies troop off, the lights die away, and at the end the stage is plunged in darkness. Thus the vision dissolves, leaving "not a wrack behind"—a romantic conception, romantically carried out.

Traditional or not, the fairy scenes are the best things in this revival. Mr. Walter Hann's "Another part of the wood near the sea" is, if one must make a choice, the very best thing. The way in which the natural declivities and acclivities of a woodland clearing have been reproduced shows not merely mechanical skill, but a real, loving observation of Nature. And the naturalness of the "estate" extends, as Sir Anthony Absolute would say, to the "live stock" on it. The fairies are all young children; some of them are mere babes, in very truth, almost small enough to—

Creep into acorn cups and hide them there.

And they are left to romp very much at their will; all suggestion of the artifice and elaboration of a ballet is avoided. Mrs. Tree is, perhaps, a slightly too "smart" Titania, a Queen of Mayfairland; but I really do not think the Oberon of Miss Julia Neilson could be bettered—so gracious is she, so regal, living so manifestly that auguste vie quotidienne, which M. Maeterlinck, in a very different connexion, ascribes to Hamlet. Of the other elements in the cast, three, I should say, err on the side of modernity. Yes, modernity, for there is the paradox; though the incongruous blending of ages be one of the delights proper to this play, it must offer no suggestion of our own age. The enchantment of anachronism must always be accompanied by the enchantment of distance. Now, Mr. Tree, when he dwells, as he does, on the cabotinage of Bottom, when he represents Bottom as anxious in the play-scene to make a speech to the audience, is obtrusively modern. And Miss Sarah Brooke, as Hermia, in the scene of the quarrel with Helena, is obtrusively modern. And Miss Louie Freear, as Puck, is obtrusively modern. There are other things besides these velleities for the modern in the acting both of Miss Brooke and Mr. Tree—and very artistic, tactful things. But the Puck is all modern, hopelessly modern, vulgarly modern—a Cockney Puck, a "cheeky" street-arab Puck, a Puck whom you expect at every moment to break out into "sister Mary Jane's top-note." In short, the Puck is a mistake. . . . But the revival as a whole is no mistake; the intimate charm of the play, the sheer beauty of it, the fresh and blithe spirit of it, are there.

A. B. W.

James Martineau.

HE helped me at every mental and moral crisis of my life. To the young soul, first awaking to a sense of the sadness of loss, came the words as a possession for ever: "God only lends us the objects of our affections; the affections themselves He gives us in perpetuity." In the struggle that comes to many of us later, between the imbibed faiths of childhood and the scepticism of new-born free thought, there was strength and healing in the injunction to "trust to the highest intuitions of our best moments." Worn and wearied with the strain of middle life, and threatened at times with the worst loss of all—loss of faith in self—there came a message from The Tides of the Spirit, gently but forcibly persuasive, by every mental, moral, and physical analogy, that "these intermittent movements of the Spirit are the signs of divine life, not of human weakness."

Dr. Martineau's especial charm lay in a certain stately humility. He expressed with childlike simplicity his unstinted gratitude to all who, in his own words, "have, by their deeds, words, writings, helped us on our heavenward way." To the last he would listen patiently and respectfully to the preaching of some younger man whose best utterances were an echo of his own; and at the age of ninety-three he sent a pathetic acknowledgment of comradeship to one who, as his equal on the score of age alone, had thus addressed him. But with all these gentle and kindly courtesies, and amid the more familiar intercourse of his happy family life and intimate friendships, he still seemed to stand apart in a certain aloofness, which he has himself described as characteristic of souls self-surrendered to God in these words:

Hence the quietude and evenness of all their ways; a certain gentle, solitary air that seems too mild to give out so much power, a half mystic reserve . . . The completest self-sacrifice gives the completest self-possession; only the captive soul which has flung her rights away has all her powers free. Simply to serve under the instant orders of the living God is the highest qualification for command.

The inspirations of Martineau's own life were his absolute trust in God and his fidelity to the ideal Christ. These find utterance respectively in two hymns which he contributed to the collection made by himself as "Hymns for the Christian Church and Home." One begins:

Thy way is in the deep, O Lord,
E'en there I'll go with Thee.

And the other:

A voice upon the midnight air
Where Kedron's moonlit waters stray.

Some might wonder that he who wrote these hymns should be the author of The Seat of Authority in Religion, the conclusion of which leaves but the barest minimum of historical "fact" in the accepted Christian record. But Dr. Martineau was no iconoclast, delighting in his work of destruction, and triumphantly reckoning up the number of idol statues defaced and columns overthrown. He did his work with gentle, even reluctant reverence; and if the earthly temple had to be destroyed, he strove to lay the foundations of another not made by hands, eternal in the heavens, and possibly to be yet reflected on earth as "the Church of the future."

To Dr. Martineau's Huguenot ancestry may perhaps be traced some of the sterner sides of his nature, his fearless independence, his ready sacrifice of all and everything for the truth's sake, his rapier-like thrusts in argument. But the influence exercised by him over the minds and hearts of men, women, and children flowed from his own individuality. There was never the faintest bid for popularity. The test of a public speaker's utterances lies in the effect they produce when read, and here Dr. Martineau never failed. The printed word has all the uplifting charm of the spoken one; and yet who that ever heard him can forget the inspiration of the far-seeing, upward gaze, and the rapid, nervous diction, tempered ever by a professorial reticence and dignity.

In the exquisite prayers forming part of the two concluding services of the ten which he mainly compiled, and of which these two are all his own, he petitions: "Amidst the din of earthly interests and the storm of human passions let the still, small voice of Thy Spirit be inly felt, and, though all else declines, may the noontide of Thy grace and peace remain." The keynote of his teaching was, that if the letter killeth, the spirit giveth life. He was the apostle of spirituality. To me he will always remain one who walked this earth as a spirit clothed with flesh as but with a garment.

E. M. H.

O. P. Pym.

ENTER O. P. Pym to the gallery of Fiction. "O. P. Pym, the colossal Pym, that vast and rolling figure"—these are the opening words of Mr. J. M. Barrie's new novel, Tommy and Grizel, now auspiciously begun in Scribner. Of course we are to be interested mainly in Tommy, and yet Mr. Barrie must begin with Pym, cannot keep his hands, as it were, off the great man, whom he calls the king of the "Penny Number." And worthy he is of the title; there is nothing pettifoggish about Pym. He "never knew what he was to write about until he dipped grandly." It is true that on the evening of our first acquaintance with Pym, his publishers had removed his boots in order to make it easier for him to finish his work at home. That was mere routine. We find Pym on his sofa at 22, Little Owlet-street, Marylebone. We say his sofa, because on this evening he happened to have a sofa. His room at No. 22 was a movable feast, for "he was a lodger who flitted placidly from floor to floor according to the state of his finances, carrying his apparel and other belongings in one great armful, and spilling by the way." Let us look at Pym on his sofa. He "loll'd, gross and massive," with one leg over the back of the sofa, "the other drooping, his arms extended, and his pipe, which he could find nowhere, thrust between the buttons of his waistcoat, an agreeable pipe-rack." His yellow dressing-gown was pulled up and concentrated as a pillow under his head—and what a head!—big and round, "the plentiful gray hair in tangles, possibly because in Pym's last fitting the comb had dropped over the banisters. . . . There was sensitiveness left in the thick nose, humour in the eyes, though they so often watered, the face had gone to flabbiness at last, but not without some lines and dents, as if the head had resisted the body for a space before the whole man rolled contentedly down hill." There you have the portrait of O. P. Pym. Is it not promiseful? Insensibly, almost, we glide into his opinions:

He had no beard. "Young man, let your beard grow." Those who have forgotten all else about Pym may recall him in these words; they were his one counsel to literary aspirants, who, according as they took it, are now bearded and prosperous or shaven and on the rates. To shave costs threepence, another threepence for loss of time—nearly ten pounds a year; three hundred pounds since Pym's chin first bristled. With his beard he could have bought an annuity or a cottage in the country; he could have had a wife and children and driven his dog-cart and been made a churchwarden. All gone, all shaved, and for what? When he asked this question he would move his hand across his chin with a sigh, and so, bravely to the barber's.

Pym's door is haunted by his publishers, "two little round men," who represent the great public—which is to say, the public of nursemaids and milliners and other light, insatiable readers. It is a public that will not be denied. Immense issues, commercial and sentimental, wait on Pym to-night: the new story must be begun. But Pym has no ideas. The very plot of the story is non-existent in Pym's brain. The crisis is becoming unbearable, yet Pym declines to budge. "While all the world waited, this was Pym's ultimatum: 'I shall begin the damned thing at eight o'clock.'" To do Pym justice the situation was sometimes reversed. When Pym had the ideas, and the publishers had the money, Pym would sternly demand his "honorarium," which by the agreement was not due until he had finished the tale. If his request was not listened to, a chapter in the middle of his tale would break off like this:

Several years have passed since these events took place, and the scene changes to a lovely garden by the bank of old Father Thames. A young man sits by the soft-flowing stream, and he is calm as the scene itself, for the storm has passed away, and Percy (for it is no other) has found an anchorage. As he sits musing over the past, Felicity steals out by the French window and puts her soft arms round his neck. "My little wife!" he murmurs. The End, unless you pay up by messenger.

When Tommy became Pym's amanuensis he brought diligence and ideas to 22, Little Owlet-street. The first quality was appreciated by Pym, who was much in need of a careful person at his elbow. "Among the duties of this amanuensis was to remember the name of the heroine, her appearance and other personal details, for Pym constantly forgot them in the night, and he had to go searching back through his pages for them, cursing her so horribly that Tommy signed to Elspeth to retire to her tiny bedroom at the top of the house." No wonder that Pym, struck by Tommy's worth, took more frequent walks round the corner, and that his absences on business became more protracted. Meanwhile Tommy's ideas were luxuriating. He found out that Pym's characters were not flesh and blood, and that opportunities for noble thought and sagacious comment on the springs of human conduct were neglected by Pym. Tommy, working on Pym's orders alone, began to exceed his instructions. "With a pen in his hand and woman in his head he had such noble thoughts that his tears of exultation damped the pages as he wrote, and the ladies must have been astounded as well as proud to see what they were turning into."

One day the inevitable happened. The publishers called and told Pym that he was falling off. Pym dismissed them haughtily, and then sat down "heroically to do what he had not done for two decades, to read his latest work."

At first Pym's only comment was: "It is the same old drivel as before; what more can they want?"

But presently he looked up, puzzled. "Is this chapter yours or mine?" he demanded.

"It is about half and half," said Tommy.

"Is mine the first half? Where does yours begin?"

"That is not exactly what I mean," explained Tommy, in a glow, but backing a little; "you wrote that chapter first, and then I—I—"

"You re-wrote it!" roared Pym, "you dare to meddle with—!" He was speechless with fury.

"I tried to keep my hand off," Tommy said, with dignity, "but the thing had to be done, and they are human now."

"Human! who wants them to be human? The fiends seize you, boy, you have even been tinkering with my heroine's personal appearance; what is this you have been doing to her nose?"

"I turned it up slightly, that's all," said Tommy.

"I like them down," roared Pym.

"I prefer them up," said Tommy stiffly.

"Where," cried Pym, turning over the leaves in a panic, "where is the scene in the burning house?"

"It's out," Tommy explained; "but there is a chapter in its place about—it's mostly about the beauty of the soul being everything, and mere physical beauty nothing. Oh, Mr. Pym, sit down and let me read it to you."

But Pym read it, and a great deal more, for himself. No wonder he stormed, for the impossible had been made not only consistent, but unreadable. . . .

"A few more weeks of this," said Pym, "and we should all three be turned out into the streets."

Tommy went to bed in an agony of mortification, but presently to his side came Pym.

"Where did you copy this from?" he asked. "It is when we are thinking of those we love that our noblest thoughts come to us, and the more worthy they are of our love the nobler the thought, hence it is that no one has done the greatest work who did not love God."

"I copied it from nowhere," replied Tommy fiercely; "it's my own."

Pym's real greatness begins when Tommy's is fore-shadowed. Already we know that when Tommy's Letters to a Young Man About to be Married took the town by storm, and made Tommy the hero of a hundred drawing-rooms, no one was more pleased than "big-hearted, hopeless Pym." We like O. P. Pym.

Things Seen.

The Volunteer.

HE was fair and looked so young that when he announced at the boarding-house dinner table that he had volunteered for active service we did not take the news very seriously. "Can you ride?" I asked. He laughed, and said: "I begin the lessons to-morrow." From that day forward he lived in riding breeches and a Norfolk jacket. He was always late for dinner, and when he took his seat it was with a flushed face, elated or depressed, according to the progress he had made in the riding school. And still we did not take him very seriously. It seemed absurd that such a stripling should be going to the front, and on a horse too. Then he began to buy things—a telescope, a pocket camera, a knife that could do twenty things and none of them properly, a tin of acid drops guaranteed to be thirst quenching, and a pair of khaki puttees, which pleased him more than anything else. I believe he slept in them. Still we did not take him seriously till one evening when he came back in a state of great excitement, and told us that he had passed in riding. We subscribed two shillings each, and gave him a compass with a luminous face. A few days later he told us that he would sail on the following Saturday. It was on the tip of my tongue to ask, "Is your mother going with you?" but I refrained. Even then I could not take his departure seriously.

Two nights before he left he distributed the more bulky of his possessions. I received a patent trouser-press. Later in the evening he sent a message, asking me to come into his bedroom. It was littered with strange clothes, and he was polishing a bayonet with a flannel shirt. He introduced me to an elderly man with a professional air and a pen in his hand. Lying on the table was a document, headed "The Last Will and Testament of—." I signed my name.

In War Time.

"AWFUL Disaster at Colesberg! British Losses!" The quiet Square awoke and shivered!

Then a girl in black stepped out from a little door in the high wall adjoining the Convent.

It was my friend for whom I was waiting.

"You saw your sister?"

"Yes. Oh, it's sad, sad," she broke out, in sudden passion. "Not the mere seeing her behind the grille, not being unable to put one's small gifts in her hand—one gets accustomed to those things in seven years. Not even the pity of her having given up a world whose opportunities she had not guessed at in her three-and-twenty years!"

I did not answer. What was there to say?

"It is a small community," she went on presently. "Twelve have taken the final veil and there are two postulants. Of that number, six have brothers and cousins at the War, not counting friends. One—Grace, my sister—has two brothers and seven cousins. The rest have friends. Last Sunday I went there for Benediction, and afterwards had a 'parlour'—that is, saw my sister. The Mother, too, came in; her veil was, of course, lowered. They drank in my news of the War like thirsty children; their interest surprised me. I searched my memory for details."

She caught her breath.

"Here is my sister's letter," she said. "Read it."

I read by the light of a street-lamp.

"I must rely on you, dear one, to let me know all the war news you can in your weekly letter. Even our Mother does not get the papers. Occasionally some friend may send a 'cutting'—that is all. The men call their dreadful news around our enclosure walls—so often, oh, so often—" and with no other response than a most fervent prayer, if one has the misfortune to hear them."

We looked back, in silence, to the black walls, behind which, also in silence, fourteen women listened, and prayed.

"I told them the news to-day," my friend said; "but to-morrow—?"

Outside the enclosure a remaining street hawker took fresh breath and heart, and altered his cry:

"Grave Disaster! Long Cas-u-al-ty List!"

The Conductor.

WITH many others I was seated in an omnibus. The time was 11 a.m., and the place a crowded thoroughfare in the metropolis. Not very young, accustomed to the country, and somewhat of a novice as regarded town life, a sense of nervousness oppressed me as we passed through one (to me) unknown street after another, never apparently getting any nearer our various destinations. My neighbours seemed to be possessed by calm faith, and were content to leave themselves entirely in the hands of the conductor, but I, being of an anxious temperament, wondered often if I had taken the right omnibus—if I were near my destination, and if I should be able to secure a place when I arrived.

"Put me down at the City Temple," I said to the guard, for the second time.

"In course," he responded, a trifle impatiently. "They all gets out there." Then, turning to my opposite neighbour, he continued: "I was there myself once, and my what a time we 'ad! We larft and we cried, and we 'ad a rare time. I'm going again some dye when it's my turn orf. You see," and he lowered his voice confidentially, "im that preaches is so 'uman, and 'e's not so damned serious as some of those parsons are."

He directed his eyes, almost unconsciously, to the unmistakable cut of my clerical clothes as he spoke, but I bore the scrutiny with calmness, for a word—nay even a look to the wise is sufficient, and I took home with me a lesson which has since borne fruit.

Correspondence.

The Chastity of Flowers.

SIR,—It seems to me your recent correspondent "S. G. O." attempts a very extravagant reading in to Shakespeare's touching lines. When the moon looks with a watery eye the chastity of every little flower is maintained, not violated. The most inappropriate word, violated, would apply more to very fine weather, most favourable to the seeding of flowers, just reversing the lament in the verse. It is also making the flowers too much like human mortals to lament a violation of chastity, which in nature is no violation at all; violation in such cases is only human.

It is impossible to read anything in to the beautiful passages quoted, including Perdita's:

Pale primroses
That die unmarried, ere they can behold
Bright Phœbus in his strength, a malady
Most incident to maids, except in the sense that Shakespeare had an idea of the sexes of flowers. The expression "every little flower" is very significant, for centuries before in the East, in the case of the date and the fig only, the analogy had occurred (I think to Herodotus). The whole of Perdita's talk on flowers in Act IV., Scene III., of the "Winter's Tale" is worth studying in this connexion, and the "streaked gilly flowers," &c., might be read with the "Merchant of Venice," Act I. Scene III. line 72. I see no good reason why Shakespeare should not have hit upon the poetic notion of the sexes of flowers, and have given the men of science the clue to be followed sixty years after. It is the only interpretation to be put on his pathetic verse without reading in to his words what is very far from being there.

On consulting Dr. Murray's New English Dictionary on the word "enforced," I find Shakespeare's "Richard III." quoted. Act III. Scene V. line 9: "Ghastly looks are at my service, like enforced smiles," not violated smiles.—I am, &c.,

W. F. COLLIER.

A Translation.

SIR,—I am inclined to think that some of the artificial forms popular in Spain present the greatest task by reason of their short lines, their simplicity, and their music. Here, for instance, is a petenera:

Por tí me olvidé de Dios
Por tí la gloria perdí,
Y ahora me voy á quedar
Solea triste de mí,
Y ahora me voy á quedar
Sin Dios sin gloria y sin
Por tí me olvidé de Di
Por tí la gloria perdí

Will any of your readers translate it? With apologies to the shade of Cervantes, who held such temerity to be certain of disaster, I give you an attempt of my own, well knowing that the best way to encourage others is by showing a bad example. You will see that the sixth line of the original (perhaps the best) has got away from me altogether, while other failings are no less apparent. But here it is:

For you I put God and all by,
To you I gave honour and all,
And now you have left me to die
Alone with the pains of my fall;
And now you have left me to die
Without even hearing my call,
When for you I put God and all by,
To you I gave honour and all.

—I am, &c.,

ARTHUR MAQUARIE.

"The Redemption of Egypt."

SIR,—In the notice of the above, which appeared in your issue of Saturday last, your reviewer writes: "Such elementary slips . . . should not have escaped the eye of a Master of Arts, who can quote Herodotus in a translation."

It has been pointed out to me that these last words may convey the impression to your readers that I have made extracts from a translation of Herodotus. Will you allow me to say that this is not the case? The translations from the Greek and other authors which are given in The Redemption of Egypt are done by myself, except in the one or two instances where the contrary is expressly stated in the text or notes.—I am, &c.,

Jan. 15, 1900.

W. BASIL WORSFOLD.

From a Reader.

SIR,—Two passages from two masters of literature were recalled to me as I read your issue of last Saturday. Your article on "Made Writing" might have for its text the maxim from Goethe: "The duty of an artist is not to make beautiful descriptions, but to describe beautiful things." When I saw the exquisite couplet on page 9—

Bud doth the rose and daisy, winter done,
But we, once dead, no more do see the sun—

I instantly repeated to myself that pathetic wail of Horace (Carm. IV. vii. 14):

Damna tamen celeres reparant coelestia lumen:
Nos, ubi decidimus,
Quo pater Æneas, quo dives Tullus et Ancus, Pulvis et umbra sumus.

—I am, &c.,

FRANK WALTERS.

Newcastle-on-Tyne: Jan. 8, 1900.

New Books Received.

[These notes on some of the New Books of the week are preliminary to Reviews that may follow.]

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF JOHN
GOWER. Vol. I.

By G. C. MACAULAY.

We have here the first volume of a work which promises to take high rank in the esteem of students of romance and of early English literature. It is singular that no satisfactory text of Gower's Confessio Amantis exists, although the means of producing such a text exist at Oxford. At the desire of the Delegates of the University Press, Mr. Macaulay widened the task which his personal predilections had indicated, and consented to produce texts of Gower's French works as well as his English. Hence the first volume is devoted to the French poems, particularly to the Speculum Meditantes or Mirour de l'Homme, a didactic poem of nearly 30,000 lines. The second and third volumes will contain the English works, and will carry out Mr. Macaulay's main object—the publication of the correct text of the Confessio Amantis. A fourth volume will contain the Vox Clamantis, and other Latin poems. The entire work will be a monument of industry and a demonstration of the splendid resources of the Bodleian Library. (Clarendon Press.)

THE DOWNFALL OF SPAIN.

By H. W. WILSON.

Mr. Wilson brings to the naval history of this war the expert knowledge which enabled him to produce his valuable work Ironclads in Action. The attractiveness of the theme to such a writer is greatly increased by the abundance of data on the American side, so freely furnished to all the world by the U.S. Navy Department. Although Mr. Wilson's main object is to print matter which shall be of use to the naval student, his work is written on broad literary lines and with full appreciation of the tragedy of Spain's utter helplessness. The book is well equipped with diagrams and photographs. (Sampson Low.)

HISTORIC PARALLELS TO L'AFFAIRE
DREYFUS.

By EDOAR SANDERSON.

Mr. Sanderson undertakes to show instances in modern history of "crimes not rivalling the Rennes atrocity, . . . but procedures in which religious bigotry, popular panic, and political rancour, singly or combined, played a leading part." The narratives he offers are those of sufferings of John of Barneveldt, who was beheaded in 1619 at The Hague; the Roman Catholic victims of Titus Oates; Jean Calas, the Protestant martyr of Toulouse, who was broken on the wheel on the false charge of murdering his son; and Lord Cochrane, who suffered extraordinary injustice for assailing naval corruption, and was charged with conspiracy. The book has only an adventitious interest, but it is well and carefully prepared, and is as readable as a novel. (Hutchinson. 6s.)

LAMBKIN'S REMAINS.

By H. B.

This book, by the author of Danton: a Study and The Bad Child's Book of Beasts, is not for everyone. But the Rev. J. A. Lambkin, the fatuous upholder of English respectabilities and upper-class traditions, is a delicious creation. His essays on "Success" and "Sleep," his address on "The Tertiary Symptoms of Secondary Education among the Poor," his "Sermon," and his "Article on the North-West Corner of the Mosaic Pavement of the Roman Villa at Bignor," are full of delightful fooling. (The Proprietors of the J.C.R. at J. Vincent's, Oxford. 2s. 6d.)

THE MYSTERIES OF CHRONOLOGY. By F. F. ARBUTHNOT.

"This very slipshod work" is the author's own description of this book. His frankness need not be taken too seriously, it being Mr. Arbuthnot's opinion that to write a really good scientific work on chronology would take about fifty years. Here the reader, or the student, may find clearly stated the most accepted facts about the date of the Christian era into Europe, about the date of the introduction of "Anno Domini," &c., &c. An interesting chapter discusses in order the dates of the births, accessions, and deaths of our English kings and queens from the Conqueror down. (Heinemann.)

VESPER AND COMPLAIN: A SOGGARTH'S SACRED VERSES.

By THE REV.
MATTHEW RUSSELL, S.J.

In this and its companion volume, Idyls of Killowen, Father Russell has collected all that he wishes to preserve of three volumes of verse now out of print. Many of the verses in this volume deal with the lives and faith of saints, as St. Patrick, St. Monica, St. Thomas Aquinas, and others. (Burns & Oates. 3s. 6d.)

MISSIONARY TRAVELS AND RESEARCHES
IN SOUTH AFRICA.

By DAVID
LIVINGSTONE.

This is the first volume in a new issue of the Minerva Library, to which works not hitherto included will be added. The book derives interest from the fact that it contains Dr. Livingstone's account and indictment of the Boers. The new dress of the Minerva Library is a handsome one of red canvas, with gold design and lettering. (Ward, Lock. 2s.)

ON THE OLD ROAD.

By JOHN RUSKIN.

What Arrows of the Chase did for Mr. Ruskin's scattered letters to the press, these three volumes do for his fugitive articles. The first two volumes contain essays on Art, the third contains literary and other matter. Many of the contents are of great interest, as, for instance, "Pre-Raphaelitism," first published as a pamphlet in 1851; "Letters on a Museum or Picture Gallery," from the Art Journal, 1880; "Railways in the Lake District"; "Samuel Prout," &c., &c. (Allen. 3 vols., each 5s. net.)

A MANUAL OF CHURCH
DECORATION AND SYMBOLISM.

By THE
REV. ERNEST GELDART.

This book has evidently been a labour of love, but yet a great labour. Its aim is to "direct and advise those who desire worthily to deck the church at the various seasons of the year" and to offer "the explanation and the history of the symbols and emblems of religion." The illustrations fill many pages, and equally with the text challenge the criticism of experts. Mr. Geldart is Rector of Little Braxted, and is himself an architectural designer. (Mowbray & Co. 10s. 6d. net.)

CHILD LIFE IN COLONIAL DAYS.

By ALICE M. EARLE.

Only Miss Earle could have produced this book, which is a companion to her Home Life in Colonial Days. Here, as there, one is struck by the rarity and choiceness of the material collected. Years of search and reading, and of what Emerson calls "a catlike love of garrets, presses, and cornchambers, and of the conveniences of long house-keeping," have gone to the making of these beautiful memoirs. (Macmillan. 8s. 6d. net.)

HISTORY OF THE STAFFORDSHIRE POTTERIES.

By SIMEON SHAW.

Simeon Shaw, a not very flourishing author, published this account of the Potteries in 1829. Despite its faults, one of which is its fulsome compliments to every manufacturer mentioned by him, Shaw's book was well worth reprinting. It is full of information on its subject, and of topographical facts. A good unsigned introduction commends the book anew to the world, and gives supplementary information. (Scott, Greenwood & Co.: Pottery Gazette.)

In addition to the foregoing, we have received :

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

Smith (R. R.), The Epistle of St. Paul's First Trial (Macmillan & Bowes)

POETRY, CRITICISM, AND BELLES LETTRES.

Frut (J. P.), The Mind and Art of Poe's Poetry ..... (Allenson) 5/0

POETRY, ETC.

Hudson (Rev. J.), Saint Augustine: Seatonian Prize Poem, 1899
(Macmillan & Bowes) net 2/0
Marble (A. R.), Nature Pictures by American Poets ..... (Macmillan) 5/0

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

Kirkup (T.), A History of Socialism ..... (Black) 7/6

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

Kingsley (Geo. H.), Notes on Sport and Travel ..... (Macmillan) net 8/0

EDUCATIONAL.

Cambridge Series for Schools: Virgil, Æneid, V.; Xenophon, Anabasis, V.; Geometrical Drawing, Part I.; Caesar, De Bello Gallico, V.; Ovid, The Triastia .....
Nicol (J. C.), M. Tulli Ciceronis ..... (Camb. Univ. Press) 2/0
Eve (H. W.), Athalie ..... (Camb. Univ. Press) 2/0
Sergeant (John), Virgil—Georgics, Book IV. ..... (Blackwood) 1/6
Beak (G. B.), A Compendious German Reader ..... (Blackwood) 2/6
Kustner (L. E.), Select Passages from Modern French Authors
(Blackwood) 2/6

CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

Allen (Phoebe), Jack and Jill's Journey ..... (Wells Gardner) 3/6
Lancaster (Veronica), Ann-Mary's Aftermath ..... (Curtis)

MISCELLANEOUS.

Chicken (R. C.), An Index to Deering's Nottinghamia, Vetus and Nova (Frank Murray, Nottingham) net 10/0
Young (E. M.), Apis Matina: Verses Translated and Original
(Macmillan & Bowes)
Ellis (W. A.), Richard Wagner's Prose Works ..... (Kegan Paul) net 12/6
Hayes (M. H.), Among Horses in Russia ..... (Everett & Co.) net 10/6
Hasluck (P. N.), Glass Working ..... (Cassell) 1/0
Parker (T. J.) and Haswell (W. A.), A Manual of Zoology ..... (Macmillan) 10/0
Allen (Phoebe) and Godfrey (Dr. H. W.), The Sun-Children's Budget, Vol. I.
(Wells Gardner) 3/0
Worsfold (W. Basil), The Problem of South African Unity ..... (Allen) net 1/6
The Year's Art, 1900 ..... (Virtue) 3/6

NEW EDITIONS.

Roskin (J.), Præterita. Vol. III. ..... (Allen) net 5/0
Whyte-Melville (G. J.), Holmby House ..... (Ward, Lock) 3/6
Dickens (Charles), Black House ..... (Temple Ed.) 3 vols., each 1/6
Craig (J. Duncan), Real Pictures of Clerical Life in Ireland ..... (Stoek) 6/0
Adeler (Max), Out of the Harly-Barly ..... (Ward, Lock)
Ward (Mrs. H.), The History of David Grieve ..... (Newnes) 1/6

* * * New Novels are acknowledged elsewhere.

Our Weekly Prize Competitions.

Result of No. 17 (New Series).

LAST week we offered a prize of One Guinea for the best character-sketch not exceeding 200 words in length. Competitors have found this task difficult. The best sketch sent in is the following by Miss Gertrude Winter, Beechwood, The Park, Hull, to whom a cheque for one guinea has been sent:

A REAL ART STUDENT.

He was a real art student, and his name was Robinson. This he protested against, and longed for even Brown or Jones, which it has been proved may be made beautiful with prefixes and genives.

He was enthusiastic, and admired very nearly rightly. He was broad-minded, because, though his education was limited, he learned continually and his power of sympathy was immense. "Think like the man you're studyin' and you'll get the hang of 'im," was his argument, and he put it into practice. Studying Nature, painters, and students—thus he gained a great deal. He had not a large vocabulary; good things were either "heavenly," "smart," or "all right," but his way of saying it allowed for a whole dictionary. His "not much there," was equally sufficing when his contempt was raised.

Of his own work we never knew exactly what he thought—if we praised it, he contradicted; if we ran it down, he smiled. When pleased, he softly rubbed the back of his head, and a little tuft shot up, stiffly signalling his contentment. An occasional theatre and cigarettes were all that money could buy.

Art was his all. Happy fellow!

Among other character-sketches received are the following:

THE PRECIOUS GENTLEMAN.

The Precious Gentleman dwells on green slopes apart from the world. His study is hook-clad, and conspicuous in it are Aucassin and Nicolette and a Froben folio of 1531. The glass of its windows is tinted with pink, which to the Precious Gentleman paints a blush on the cheek of youngsters who sing an English song. In the corner is a mechanical Pan which pipes soft Gregorians, and on the table stands a silver-gilt Priapus, with outstretched hands holding a phial of ink. The written words of the Precious Gentleman are arranged as a collector of butterflies arranges his specimens—they are impaled on the point of his pen and conveyed to their allotted positions on the paper. The Precious Gentleman's Lady is Nature, or Nature and his lady are interchangeable, for the hills that he sees on his walks will remind him of her, and a glimpse of her beauty will set him thinking of bunches of ripe cherries. His mission is to supply mankind with "little sacred cells filled with the gold of his stolen kisses." His food is the same as the food of other people.

[C. E. H., Richmond.]

THE INCORRIGIBLE COMPETITOR.

Week after week he competes, goaded by some dim, mysterious, indeterminate æstrum. It is not the poetic impulse which stirs his blood; he is as void of poetry as a blown nightingale's egg. It is not desire of gain, for he never pounces the editorial guinea. It is not love of approval, for he goes consistently unapproved. He knows, dimly, that he is the victim of a debasing habit. Every Saturday he vows he will compete no more. Every Sunday, every desecrated Sunday, he traduces de Musset into doggerel, concocts anacoluthic anagrams, catalogue lists of books suitable for the knapsack or the bedside, or begets epigrams without sting in head or tail. That redeems him. He cannot atone. Drive him to admit that others carve cherry-stones more deftly than he, and his innocent mind emits a schoolboy tag of immemorial Virgil: "Non equidem invidio, miror magis!" Can you not see him with his patient smile, devoid of all envious rivalry? Allow him that thin praise, and dismiss him to his hebdomadal, Sisyphean, inexorable, ineluctable, inexpedible but not unpleasant task; his one weekly reward, to see in print—his initials!

[J. D. A., Ealing.]

We have also received character-sketches from: A. E. C., Brighton; T. E. O., Brighton; G. D., Harley; E. U., London; S. W. (no address); E. C. M. D., Crediton; A. E. S.-M., Brighton; E. S. C., Redhill; G. C., Brighton; H. J., Crouch End; and "Scotia."

Prize Competition No. 18 (New Series).

This week we ask our readers to make lists of six obsolete or rarely used old English words which in their opinion might be revived by authors with advantage. Portions of the review of the New English Dictionary (Glass-coach—Graded) which we print on page 48 will show what we have in view; but, of course, competitors are in no way limited to the letter G.

To each word recommended should be added its meaning and the briefest possible statement of its value, illustrated, or not, by a quotation.

RULES.

Answers, addressed "Literary Competition, The ACADEMY, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Tuesday, January 23. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found in the third column of p. 72 or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. We wish to impress on competitors that the task of examining replies is much facilitated when one side only of the paper is written upon. It is also important that names and addresses should always be given: we cannot consider anonymous answers.

OUR SPECIAL PRIZE COMPETITIONS.

(For particulars see inside page of cover.)

Received: Martlet, Cabrion, Cæcelius, Rose Haydon Bridge.

Special cloth cases for binding the half-yearly volume of the ACADEMY can be supplied for 1s. each. The price of the bound half-yearly volume is 8s. 9d. Communications should be addressed to the Publisher, 43, Chancery-lane.

READY, FRIDAY, JANUARY 26th.

The Sphere.

THE GREAT NEW ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY NEWSPAPER.Edited by CLEMENT SHORTER.*PRICE SIXPENCE.

The First Number of THE SPHERE will be published on January 27, and will be obtainable of all Newsagents and Booksellers, and at all the Railway Bookstalls.

THE S-P-H-E-R-E will contain the most interesting pictures of the War in South Africa, from Sketches and Photographs by our Six Special War Artists.

THE S-P-H-E-R-E will be a bright, up-to-date paper for the home.

THE S-P-H-E-R-E will be printed by Messrs. EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE, the Queen's Printers, on fine paper, and will be got up in all respects in the very best style.

THE S-P-H-E-R-E will spare no expense to illustrate all current events of interest in the finest and most artistic manner.

THE S-P-H-E-R-E will take its place in the front rank of Illustrated Newspapers, and will be a distinct advance in illustrated journalism.

THE S-P-H-E-R-E will not be overcrowded with advertisements. It will appeal to everyone who can afford to take in a sixpenny weekly paper.

Six Special War Artists.

A number of the most distinguished Newspaper Artists, and of the most famous Writers of the day, will contribute to THE SPHERE.

The WRITERS whose work will be found in the First Volume include—

S. Baring-Gould
Robert Buchanan
Shan F. Bullock
Hall Caine
Robert W. Chambers
Miss Marie Corelli
F. Marion Crawford

Mrs. Andrew Dean
Austin Dobson
George Gissing
Thomas Hardy
E. W. Hornung
Jerome K. Jerome
Sidney J. Low

Maarten Maartens
A. E. W. Mason
F. Frankfort Moore
E. Nesbit
W. E. Norris
Ouida
Max Pemberton

"Q."
W. Pett Ridge
Adeline Sergeant
Flora Annie Steel
J. A. Steuart
Mrs. Humphry Ward
Charles Williams

The ARTISTS whose work will appear in THE SPHERE include—

W. D. Almond, R.I.
Stanley Berkeley
A. Birkenruth
Miss Maud Clarke
Oscar Eckhardt
J. Finnemore, R.I.
Hedley Fitton
M. Greiffenhagen
James Greig

Miss Chris Hammond
Dudley Hardy, R.I.
A. Standish Hartrick
John Hassall
G. Grenville Manton
Phil May, R.I.
Sidney Paget
Wal Paget
J. Bernard Partridge, R.I.

Carton Moore Park
Robert M. Paxton
Fred Pegram
Joseph Pennell
Ernest Prater
Charles Robinson
Lynley Sambourne
W. T. Smedley
Lancelot Speed

Solomon J. Solomon,
A.R.A.
E. J. Sullivan
Lance Thackeray
Hugh Thomson, R.I.
F. H. Townsend
Edgar Wilson
T. Walter Wilson, R.I.
W. B. Wollen, R.I.

ON SALE EVERYWHERE, FRIDAY, JANUARY 26th.

Every Newsagent can supply it if it is ordered at once. He can procure all that may be required if he orders at once, but he cannot ensure this after the date of the publication.

FOR a FAITHFUL PICTORIAL RECORD of the WAR see

THE SPHERE.

Publishing Office: 6, GREAT NEW STREET, LONDON, E.C.

CATALOGUES.

SOTHERAN'S PRICE CURRENT
OF LITERATURE.MONTHLY LIST OF NEWLY-PURCHASED
SECOND-HAND BOOKS.

[No. 503, just published for JANUARY.

Post free from

HENRY SOTHERAN & CO., Booksellers,
140, Strand, W.C.; and 97, Piccadilly, W.WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS.14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick St.
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU &amp; CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

W. M. VOYNICH

HAS OPENED AN OFFICE AT

1, SOHO SQUARE, W.,
Where he has on view a COLLECTION of
XV. & XVI. CENTURY BOOKS, EARLY
AMERICANA, &c.The list of Unknown and Lost Books is in Preparation.
Office Hours, 10-1 and 2-5.

WHAT D'YE LACK?

Ask Miss MILLARD, of Teddington, Middlesex, for any Book ever issued since the advent of printing (however rare or plentiful) up to the very last work published; also for any curio or object of interest under the canopy of heaven, for she prides herself on being enabled, nine times out of ten, to supply these wants. She has the largest assemblage of Miscellaneous Bijouterie in the world, and is always a ready, willing, and liberal buyer for prompt cash.

"A MIGHTY BOOK HUNTRESS."—Confirmation by a gentleman of supreme eminence.

Sir HARRY POLAND, Q.C., says: "He in fact wrote it so that she might use it, if he considered the books a great find.... She will have achieved a wonderful success in book-finding."

If a book exists for sale in any book on earth Miss MILLARD (who positively will not fail) will find it; nothing daunts her in this fascinating literary sport. Address all wants
Miss CLARA MILLARD, Teddington, Middlesex.

BOOKS WANTED — 25s. each offered.

Steuenson's Edinburgh, 1879—Tennyson's Poems, 1830—Symonds's Age of the Despots, 1878—Symonds's Essays, 2 vols., 1890—Symonds's Sketches and Studies in Italy, 1879—Inland Voyage, 1878—New Arabian Nights, 2 vols., 1882—Hawthorne Grange, 1847—Wild Wales, 3 vols., 1862—Moore's Alps in 1864—Scrope's Salmon Fishing, 1843—Crowe's Painting in Italy, 5 vols., 1864-71—King Olumpus: an Interlude, 1837. Rare Books Supplied.—BAKER'S GREAT BOOKSHOP, BIRMINGHAM.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.
—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 48-page Journals at one operation.

Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephones 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALIAS, 131, Strand, London, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.—Authors' MSS., Plays, Legal and Scientific Documents, &c., at usual rates. Translations from and into Foreign Languages.—W. T. CURTIS, 19, Harringay Park, Crouch End, London, N.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. 10d. per 1,000 words. Samples and references. Multi-Copies.—Address, Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TRAFALGAR LITERARY and TYPE-WRITING BUREAU (DE MUMET & WALKER), 3, Trafalgar Buildings, Northumberland Avenue, W.C.—Typists, Duplicating, Shorthand, Reporting, Translations (all Languages), Literary Researches, Press Cuttings.

UNIVERSITY of WALES.

MATRICULATION EXAMINATION, 1900.

The University Court will shortly appoint MATRICULATION EXAMINERS as follows:—

SUBJECTS.	PRESENT EXAMINERS.
English Language and the History of England and Wales .....	*Professor J. W. Hales, M.A. *Professor J. K. Laughton, M.A.
Mathematics .....	*R. B. Hayward, M.A., F.R.S. Major P. A. McMahon, R.A., F.R.S.
Latin .....	*E. S. Shuckburgh, M.A. *Professor E. A. Sonnenschein, M.A.
Greek .....	*R. D. Hicks, M.A. *Professor John Rhy, M.A., LL.D.
Welsh .....	H. E. Bethon, B.Sc., LL.
French .....	*Professor Kuno Meyer, Ph.D., M.A.
German .....	*Professor G. M. Minchin, M.A., F.R.S.
Dynamics .....	*H. F. Morley, D.Sc., M.A.
Chemistry .....	*Professor J. Reynolds Green, D.Sc., F.R.S.
Botany .....

The Examiners whose names are marked with * have served for the full period of three years.

Particulars will be given by the Registrar of the University, Brecon, to whom applications must be sent on or before January 30th, 1900.

IVOR JAMES,

Registrar of the University of Wales, Brecon.
December, 1899.THE PRINCESS HELENA COLLEGE,
EALING, W.

Established 1830. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1886.

President.—H.R.H. the PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.

High-class education for the DAUGHTERS of GENTLEMEN, as Resident or Day Pupils. Preparation for University and Art Examinations. Spacious grounds. Supervision in games.

Training department for kindergarten students in preparation for Froebel Union Examination for Teachers.

There is a Home in connection with the College for K.G. Students and for a few children under ten years of age.

LENT TERM will begin MONDAY, January 22nd.

MARGARET WILLIAMSON, Lady Principal.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—AN EXAMINATION FOR FILLING-UP VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th and 22nd instant. For information apply to the BURSAR of St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING
COLLEGE, Cooper's Hill, Staines.

The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for Employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1900. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition—Twelve Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphs Department, One in the Accountants' Branch P.W.D., and One in the Traffic Department Indian State Railway.—For particulars apply to SECRETARY at College.

LONDON LIBRARY,

ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

PATRON.—H.R.H. THE PRINCESS OF WALES, K.G.

PRESIDENT.—THE RIGHT HON. A. J. BALFOUR, M.P., the Vice-President, THE RIGHT HON. A. J. BALFOUR, M.P., the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP of LONDON, HERBERT SPENCER, Esq., the Right Hon. W. E. H. LECKY, M.P., D.C.L.

TAUSTEES.—Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF, Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBURY.

The Library contains about 200,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in Various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year; Life-Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country and Ten to Town Members. Reading Room Open till half-past 6. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition 2 vols., royal 8vo, price 21s.; to Members, 16s.

C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, LL.D., Secretary and Librarian.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO

"THE ACADEMY,"

Consisting of Thirty-seven Portraits of Old and New Celebrities in Literature, may still be obtained, singly, or in complete sets for 3s. 6d., on application to the Office, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Mr. Crockett's Latest Novel.

SECOND EDITION (25,000) NOW READY. 6s.

With 6 Illustrations.

KIT KENNEDY. BY S. R. CROCKETT.
KIT KENNEDY. BY S. R. CROCKETT.
KIT KENNEDY. BY S. R. CROCKETT.
KIT KENNEDY. BY S. R. CROCKETT.
KIT KENNEDY. BY S. R. CROCKETT.
KIT KENNEDY. BY S. R. CROCKETT.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS' AND LIBRARIES.

JAMES CLARKE &amp; Co., 13 and 14, Fleet Street, London.

SECOND EDITION.

LIFE of BISHOP SMYTHIES

By GERTRUDE WARD.

Edited by the Rev. EDWARD F. RUSSELL.

With Portrait, Illustrations, and Map, 290 pages. Price 4s. net.
"We hope that the memoir will have great and wide success."—Guardian.

"Full of charm.... A mine of information and sage counsel concerning some of the most difficult problems and discouraging results which evangelists abroad have to encounter or their supporters at home to discuss."—Athenaeum.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

JUST OUT.

LETTERS from EAST AFRICA,
1895-1897.

With Illustrations and a Map. Price 3s. 6d. net.

THE UNIVERSITIES' MISSION to CENTRAL AFRICA,
9, Dartmouth Street, Westminster.

FORD MADOX BROWN: his Life and Work. By FORD M. MADOX. Published by Longmans. 45 Illustrations. Original price, 42s.; Offered at 12s. 6d. Quite New. Sent on approval.—W. WOODLEY, Bookseller, 27, White Rock, Hastings.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY

(LIMITED).

ENLARGED AND CLASSIFIED CATALOGUE

(Over 600 pages, 8vo, bound in green cloth).

All the Principal Works in Circulation at
the Library

ARRANGED under SUBJECTS.

Forming a Comprehensive Guide to Notable
Publications in most Branches of Literature.

Books of Permanent Interest on POLITICAL and SOCIAL TOPICS, the ARMY, NAVY,
ARTS, SCIENCE, PHILOSOPHY, SPORT,
THEOLOGY, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, and
FICTION. Price 1s. 6d.

Also a FOREIGN CATALOGUE, containing BOOKS in FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN,
RUSSIAN, and SPANISH.

READY JANUARY, 1900.

Price 1s. 6d.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY,

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET;

241, Brompton Road; and

48, Queen Victoria Street, London.

"THE ACADEMY"
LITERARY COMPETITIONS.

New Series.—No. 18.

All readers attempting this week's
Competition (described fully on page
70) must cut out this Coupon
and enclose it with their reply.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW BOOK BY MISS GERTRUDE JEKYLL.
With 53 Illustrations from Photographs by the Author.
8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

HOME AND GARDEN:

Notes and Thoughts, Practical and Critical,
of a Worker in Both.

By GERTRUDE JEKYLL,
Author of "Wood and Garden."

SECOND IMPRESSION.

THE RIVER WAR: an Historical

Account of the Reconquest of the Soudan. By WINSTON SPENCER CHURCHILL, Author of
"The Story of the Malakand Field Force, 1897."
Edited by Col. F. RHODES, D.S.O. With 34 Maps and Plans, and 51 Illustrations from Drawings by Angus McNeill. Also with 8 Photogravure Portraits of Generals, &c. 2 vols., medium 8vo, 36s.

"The book is, to our mind, a long way the first among the literature of the Soudan war. Written throughout in an essay, flowing style, it holds the reader from the commencement."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW BOOK BY THE REV. CANON NEWBOLT.

WORDS of EXHORTATION:

Sermons preached at St. Paul's and Elsewhere.
By the Rev. W. C. E. NEWBOLT, M.A., Canon and Chancellor of St. Paul's. Crown 8vo, 6s.
[On Monday next.]

STUDIES in the CHARACTER of CHRIST. By the Rev. C. H. ROBINSON, M.A., Canon Missioner of Ripon; Reader in Hausa in the University of Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

[On Monday next.]

TRAINING of the YOUNG in

LAWS of SEX. By the Rev. Hon. EDWARD
LYTTELTON, M.A., Head Master of Haileybury
College, Author of "Mothers and Sons," &c.
Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [On Monday next.]

THREE NEW NOVELS.

PARSON KELLY.

By A. E. W. MASON and ANDREW LANG.

With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"This is certainly a book to be read."—Speaker.

"A book of more than common merit."—Spectator.

"Distinctly the book is a success. To speak of 'Parson Kelly' as though it were an effort of mere craftsmanship is to do it an injustice. It is very real artistry. One's interest is held all through."
Daily Chronicle.

"A brilliant novel.....The enjoyment of the book is so keen that it entirely absorbs one.....The Lady Oxford here presented is a brilliant, worthless
'strange woman,' who must henceforth take rank in fiction as a distinct, vivid character."
Pall Mall Gazette.

YEOMAN FLEETWOOD.

By M. E. FRANCIS (Mrs. FRANCIS BLUNDELL).

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It is not often that a reviewer gets through a story of 403 pages practically at one sitting, and is sorry when he has finished, but one reviewer, at least, has done so with 'Yeoman Fleetwood.'.....This novel should increase its author's reputation."
Pall Mall Gazette.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

THE UNDOING OF JOHN BREWSTER.

By LADY MABEL HOWARD.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Lady Mabel's admirably written story is one of the strongest and saddest of the year."—Daily Telegraph.

"A most promising first attempt."—Spectator.

"The story is interesting from beginning to end, and the reader becomes acquainted with some well-drawn characters."—Western Daily Press.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

FEBRUARY, 1900.—Price SIXPENCE.

ONE of OURSELVES. By L. B. WALFORD, Author of "Mr.
Smith," &c. (Continued.)

TWO CENTURIES of AMERICAN WOMEN. By Mrs. LANO.

PRISCILLA. By Mrs. CLEMENT SHORTER.

SOME OLD COUNTRY BOOKS. By G. A. B. DEWAR.

THE QUEEN'S FLIGHT. By EVA GORE-BOOTH.

A COLONIAL'S RETURN. By HENRY MARTLEY.

HUMOURS of ORGAN-BLOWERS. By CUTHBERT HADDEN.

AT THE SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

Every Protestant should Read

Evangelical

Belief.

BY

JOHN BROADHURST NICHOLS

JUST PUBLISHED.

Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth boards.

To this volume was awarded the £100 Prize offered a year ago by the Religious Tract Society for the best exposition of Evangelical belief as opposed to Sacerdotalism.

CONTENTS:

EXTERNAL CHARM OF ROMANISM.
JUSTIFICATION OF PROTESTANTISM.
THE RULE OF FAITH.
PRIVATE JUDGMENT.
THE CHURCH.
THE CHURCH—CATHOLICITY.
THE CHURCH—HER AUTHORITY.
CHRISTIAN MINISTRY.
CHRISTIAN WORSHIP.
THE SACRAMENTS.
JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH.
DISCIPLINE OF THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.
RELATION TO THE UNSEEN.
THE EVANGELICAL OUTLOOK.

"It is the work of a scholar and a writer. Its subject has been hotly contested and thoroughly sifted of late; and yet Mr. Nichols is neither partisan nor stale. His exposition of 'Justification by Faith' is a theological contribution of striking value. His faith in the Evangelical religion is as strong as his grasp of its meaning. For our part this is the book we recommend—not the polemical, but the expository—in the present crisis."—Expository Times.

"The author, from the first page of his volume to the last, shows himself a perfect master of the great subject on which he writes; while the lucidity of his style, the closeness of his reasoning, and the excellent taste he uniformly displays in his treatment of the errors which he antagonises, are calculated to win the regard and attention of his readers, even though some of them may not be in sympathy with Evangelical and Protestant convictions.....On the Protestant question, Mr. Nichols has undoubtedly produced 'the book of the season.'"
English Churchman.

"A capital piece of controversial writing, clearly and ably reasoned."—Scotsman.

"A useful popular outline of the Evangelical argument."—Christian World.

"Every point about a Church—its rule of faith, its relation to private judgment, its unity, its catholicity, its authority, its ministry, its discipline, its sacraments—is tested by the touchstone of Holy Scripture.....We have ourselves drawn attention to the fact that the modern Roman in England is using his Bible as an instrument of propaganda; and we can confidently recommend Mr. Nichols's essay as a useful corrective to this Italian 'wrestling' on the plain words of Scripture."—Record.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY,
56, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

WORKS BY
THE LATE C. W. STEEVENS, War Correspondent of the "Daily Mail."

TWENTIETH EDITION.

WITH KITCHENER TO KHARTUM.

With 8 Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THIRD EDITION.

IN INDIA. With a Map.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

FOURTH EDITION.

THE LAND OF THE DOLLAR.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

[In a few days.]

NEW EDITION.

WITH THE CONQUERING TURK.

With 4 Maps. Demy 8vo, 6s.

[Now ready.]

EGYPT IN 1898.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE "ACADEMY'S" AWARD FOR FICTION IN 1899.

ZACK'S NEW NOVEL.

ON TRIAL. ON TRIAL.

By the AUTHOR of "LIFE IS LIFE."

Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

ZACK'S NEW NOVEL.

ON TRIAL. ON TRIAL.

By the AUTHOR of "LIFE IS LIFE."

Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It seems impossible that this simple story of Devonshire folk should fail to arouse enthusiasm among students of good fiction. Its inspiration is so ample, vigorous, and fresh, and its execution so masterfully free."—Academy.

"So fine, so quietly eloquent, so perfectly proportioned, that any extravagant expression of praise or blame seems equally out of place."
Daily Telegraph.

"We have not read for a long time any piece of prose fiction which impressed us so much."
Pall Mall Gazette.

BY THE LATE

R. D. BLACKMORE.

DARIEL: a Romance of Surrey.

With 14 Illustrations by CHRIS. HAMMOND.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE MAID OF SKER.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

NISBET &amp; CO.'S LIST.

THE BEST STUDY OF RUSKIN'S WORK.

JOHN RUSKIN,

Social Reformer.

By J. A. HOBSON.

With Photogravure Portrait. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.
[Second Edition.]

"A very thoughtful and interesting treatise,"

Spectator.
"Mr. Hobson has in this beautiful and heart-searching analysis of Ruskin's teaching made the crooked straight and the rough places plain,"
*Bradford Observer.*Crowned by the "Academy" as one of the six best books of the year.

DANTON.

By H. BELLOC.

Demy 8vo, 16s.

"Mr. H. Belloc's admirable life will find a place from which it will not be easy to displace it,"

Scotsman.
"One is amazed at this book coming from so young a writer."—*Literature.*OLIVER CROMWELL.

By ARTHUR PATERSON,

Author of "Cromwell's Own," &amp;c.

Demy 8vo, with Portraits, 10s. net.

"Most skillfully and powerfully written,"
Literature."We do not hesitate to pronounce this to be an admirably thoughtful biography.....told with no little discrimination and skill."—*Spectator.*A HISTORY OF ITALIAN UNITY.

1814-1871.

By BOLTON KING, M.A.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Maps and Plans, 24s. net.

"We must pronounce this work of Mr. Bolton King to be the history of the Italian movement.....faithful, sound, and just."—*Spectator.*J. H. FRERE AND HIS FRIENDS.

Edited by G. FESTING.

Demy 8vo, 10s. net.

"A most delightful and valuable book,"
*Manchester Guardian.*THE LIFE OF F. W. CROSSLEY.

By J. RENDEL HARRIS.

Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

[Third Edition.]

"This concise but intensely interesting memoir of one of the noblest and most saintly men of the century... Mr. Rendel Harris has edited with rare sympathy, delicacy, and literary skill."—Spectator.

NISBET &amp; CO., LTD., 21, Berners Street, W.

JARROLD &amp; SONS' NEW LIST.

A NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "QUO VADIS."

IN the NEW PROMISED

LAND. By HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ, Author of "Quo Vadis." Translated from the original Polish by Count S. de SOISSONS. With a new Photogravure Portrait of Henryk Sienkiewicz. 2s. 6d. [Now ready.]MAURUS JÓKAI'S FAMOUS NEW NOVEL.
FOURTH EDITION.

THE POOR PLUTOCRATS.

By MAURUS JÓKAI, Author of "The Green Book."
"Black Diamonds," &c. 6s."For sheer vigour of dramatic incident and vivid excitement there is not one of Jókai's tales that can beat this. In all the qualities which make Jókai's wild Hungarian genius unique, this weird and lurid story is supreme."—Fall Mall Gazette.

THE LIFE-STORY OF MOZART.

A SOUL-STIRRING ROMANCE.

THE TONE KING By

HERIBERT RAU. Translated by JULIA E. S. RAE.
With fine Photogravure Portrait of Mozart. 6s.Second Edition.
The Daily Telegraph says: "He was the wonder of the world, and the narrative of his achievements, deftly built up to completeness by Mr. Rau, is delightful reading throughout."CURTIS YORKE'S LATEST POPULAR NOVEL
THIRD EDITION.

JOCELYN ERROLL. By

CURTIS YORKE. With fine Photogravure of the Author.
Author of "That Little Girl," "Once," "Romance of Modern London," &c. 6s."Curtis Yorke is an experienced and skilful writer; her stories are well constructed and cleverly developed. Her characters are consistent and real. The story is well told and the interest is well sustained throughout."
*Birmingham Gazette.*MISS E. BOYD BAYLY'S NEW MEMOIR OF IDA MELLINGER, theArmenian Missionary. By ELIZABETH BOYD BAYLY.
Author of "Jonathan Merle," "Alfreda Holme," &c.
Cloth, 2s. 6d.; paper cover, 1s. 6d."The record of a singularly attractive and self-sacrificing life very sympathetically written with those vivid and picturesque touches which characterise all Miss Bayly's work."
*Dundee Advertiser.*A NEW BOOK BY THE HON. M. CORDELIA LEIGH.

THE WITNESS OF CREATION

or, Nature Studies from the Book of Job. By the Hon. M.
CORDELIA LEIGH, Author of "Simple Lessons from Nature," &c. 2s. 6d.

London: JARROLD &amp; SONS, 10 &amp; 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.

F. V. WHITE &amp; CO.'S LIST.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSTALLS.

In cloth gilt, price 6s. each.

MRS. L. T. MEADE'S NEW NOVEL.
THE WOOING OF MONICA.By the Author of "The Way of a Woman,"
"The Siren," &c.ADELINE SERGEANT'S NEW NOVEL.
A RISE IN THE WORLD.By the Author of "Blake of Oriel,"
"A Valuable Life," &c., &c.W. CLARK RUSSELL'S NEW ROMANCE.
A VOYAGE AT ANCHOR.

By the Author of "The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor,'" &amp;c., &amp;c.

"This delightful story is in Mr. W. Clark Russell's happiest style."—Scotsman."A new idea which works out very successfully."
*World.*FLORENCE WARREN'S LATEST NOVEL.
A LOWLY LOVER.By the Author of "The House on the Marsh," &c.
"Thoroughly interesting."—*Black and White.*NEW NOVEL BY LUCAS CLEEVE
(Mrs. Howard Kingscote).
WHAT A WOMAN WILL DO.By the Author of "Lazarus," "The Monks of the Holy Tear," &c., &c."Full of smart and bitter writing, readable and amusing in every page."—Academy."Rivets the attention, and interests the reader up to the very last page."—Punch."A really entertaining book."—*Review of the Week.*F. V. WHITE & CO.,
14, Belford Street, Strand, W.C.MACMILLAN & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

NEW WORK BY GOLDWIN SMITH.

In 2 vols., 8vo, 15s. net.

THE UNITED KINGDOM:
A Political History.By GOLDWIN SMITH, D.C.L.,
Author of "The United States," &c.

"MORNING POST."—"We are by no means certain that there is any single book in existence from which the man who wants no dates and details, but intelligent appreciations and broad views, could learn so much of certain phases of the history of England as he would glean from Mr. Goldwin Smith's volumes. And they are eminently readable, full of happy touches, and graphic sketches."

TENNYSON, RUSKIN, MILL,
And other Literary Estimates.

By FREDERIC HARRISON.

Extra crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

"ACADEMY."—"Dealing with so various a range of writers, he holds a level balance in regard to which the man who requires a judiciously combined with catholicism of taste, not in these hasty days too common.... There is seldom more fault to be found with the broad scope and trend of his judgment. This is high praise of essays which compass a large field.... Extremely able."

NOTES on SPORT and TRAVEL.

By GEORGE HENRY KINGSLEY, M.D. With a Memoir by his Daughter, MARY H. KINGS-LEY.

"DAILY CHRONICLE."—"Deeply interesting.... The book is delightful; sparkling with humour; without a thought of malice."

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE LIFE OF CARDINAL MANNING."

LIFE and LETTERS of AMBROSE

PHILLIPPS DE LISLE. By EDMUND
SHERIDAN PURCELL. Edited and Finished by EDWIN DE LISLE, Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. With 2 Photogravure Portraits.

In 2 vols., 8vo, 25s. net.

"DAILY CHRONICLE."—"A carefully edited, excellent contribution to ecclesiastical literature."

THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA.
NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION NOW READY.

SOUTH AFRICA of TO-DAY. By

Captain FRANCIS YOUNGHUSBAND, C.I.E.,
Indian Staff Corps, late Special Correspondent of
The Times in South Africa. With Illustrations.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

APIS MATINA: Verses Translated

and Original. By EDWARD M. YOUNG, M.A., Rector of Rothbury, and Hon. Canon of Newcastle, &c. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s. net.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

Price 1s.—Contents for FEBRUARY.

1. ANTHONY'S FORTUNE. By AUSTIN BECKFORD. Chapters V.—VIII.
2. THE ROMANCE OF THE FUR TRADE. By E. K. OSBORN.
3. A CUSTOM OF THE COUNTRY.
4. THE MONTH OF MOURNING.
5. THE CAMPAIGN OF DOUAI. By Capt. CAIRNES (Royal Irish Fusiliers). Chapters IV.—VI.
6. AN OLD HAND.
7. THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.—I. The Only Way. II. A Letter to the Editor.
8. SOME REFLECTIONS ON THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA. By A SOLDIER.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

Price 1s.—Contents for FEBRUARY.

JOHN. By MAARTEN MAARTENS.

1. THE FLOWER OF THE FLOCK. By W. E. NORRIS. Chapters V.—VIII.
2. A GLASS OF FASHION.
3. A CITY OF THE DEVIL.
4. ROUND MY SMOKING ROOM.
5. HOW DONALD ROY GOT A WHITE HEAD.
6. PARODIES.
7. HOW BROWNE-MARTYN AND I NEARLY MADE OURSELVES RIDICULOUS.
8. GEORGE GASCOIGNE, SOLDIER AND POET.
9. THE BATH COMEDY. By AGNES AND EGERTON CASTLE. Scenes XII.—XIX.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

Illustrated.—Price 1s. 4d.—Annual Subscription, post free, 15s.

The FEBRUARY NUMBER contains—
OLIVER CROMWELL. The Westminster Assembly—The New Model—The Day of Naseby. By the Rt. Hon. JOHN MORLEY, M.P.
PARIS REVISITED. The Governmental Machine. By RICHARD WHILDEN.
GORDON'S REBRIEF. By GERTRUDE F. ORRILL.
SAILING ALONE AROUND THE WORLD.—VI. The Home-ward Trip from the Cape of Good Hope. By Capt. JOSHUA SLOCUM.
And numerous other Stories and Articles of General Interest.

ST. NICHOLAS.

Illustrated.—Price 1s.—Annual Subscription, post free, 15s.

The FEBRUARY NUMBER contains—
TWO VALENTINES. Verse. By THOMAS JENKS.
THE GOLDEN PRIZE. Serial. By CHARLOTTE E. JACKSON.
THE "SOAT-HUBBLERS" FIRST RECEPTION. Story. By MARGARETH NUGENT.
And numerous other Stories for the Young.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LTD., London.

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1447. Established 1869.

27 January, 1900.

Price Threepence.

[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

ON Thursday the mortal remains of John Ruskin were laid in the churchyard of Coniston Village. The natural wish that he should be buried in Westminster Abbey could not be granted if his strict injunctions were to be observed. Long ago he had said: "If I die at Herne Hill, I wish to rest with my parents in Shirley Churchyard, but if at Brantwood, then I would prefer to rest at Coniston." Among the floral tributes sent was a wreath of true Greek laurel from Mr. G. F. Watts, R.A., with this message from Mrs. Watts: "It comes from our garden, and has been cut before three times only—for Tennyson, Leighton, and Burne-Jones."

THE following list, which we take from the Daily News, shows the extent of the popularity of Mr. Ruskin's books. The list refers to those books only which are published in a single volume. Modern Painters and Stones of Venice are still too expensive to be widely popular. The second book on the list, however, consists of selections from Modern Painters. The figures give the number of copies sold since the several books were republished in their present cheaper form:

Sesame and Lilies	...	...	40,000
Frondes Agrestes	...	...	34,000
The Crown of Wild Olive	...	...	31,000
Unto this Last...	...	...	30,000
Seven Lamps	...	...	29,000
King of the Golden River	...	...	22,000
Queen of the Air	...	...	14,000
Time and Tide	...	...	13,000
A Joy for Ever	...	...	12,000
Mornings in Florence...	...	...	11,000
The Eagle's Nest	...	...	11,000

THE touching details of Mr. Ruskin's last hours recall Lockhart's beautiful passage describing the death of Scott. Into the sick room of Sir Walter came the sound of Tweed pouring over her pebbles. Through the turret-window of the room in which Mr. Ruskin had just passed away came the glow of the first sunset he had missed for many a day. "The brilliant, gorgeous light illumined the hills with splendour; and the spectators felt as if Heaven's Gate itself had been flung open to receive the teacher into everlasting peace."

MR. RUSKIN possessed the original MSS. of three of Scott's novels. From a child he had fed on the Waverley novels, and his quotations from and allusions to Scott would fill a volume. He was a boy when the series was drawing to a close, and he has written: "I can no more recollect the time when I did not know them than when I did not know the Bible." Some of his judgments on Scott's work are superbly downright in their admiration. The Battle of Flodden in Marmion he thought "the truest and grandest battle-piece that, so far as I know, exists in the whole compass of literature; the absolutely fairest in justice to both contending nations, the absolutely most beautiful in its conceptions of both." Of certain of the Waverley novels he said that they "are, whatever the modern world may think of them, as faultless throughout as human work can be." Although devoted to Scott, Mr. Ruskin had a fancy for modern stories of a certain kind. The last book from which Mrs. Arthur Severn read to him was Miss Edna Lyall's In the Golden Days.

MR. RUSKIN's annual income from the sale of his books was, for many years, on the average, £4,000. Yet he did not "work" his writings for what they were worth. New editions, which would have been highly profitable, were delayed and delayed until the first editions rose to fabulous prices. It is doubtful if he would have approved the suggestion that the memorial to him should take the form of an edition of his works at a price within the reach of all. Mr. Ruskin's private fortune, derived from his father's capable and honest trade in sherry, was enormous; and it is believed that he gave away not less than £200,000 in his life. He parted with material wealth as one whose spiritual wealth was inexhaustible.

WHAT were Mr. Ruskin's methods of writing? Mr. M. H. Spielmann tells the readers of the American Book-Buyer that Mr. Ruskin disliked the drudgery of the pen, and abhorred proofs, at reading which, indeed, he was a poor hand. Mr. Harrison corrected his punctuation for years, and even set right "strange irregularities in grammar." He liked an inclined desk, and thought a flat table for writing injurious, but in after years he let this doctrine go by the board. It is not surprising that he liked to take a difficult task away to very peaceful surroundings and there wrestle with it. Still, he soon tired.

It must be three or four years now since I was in London, Christmas in the <sup>North</sup> country taking scenery notes, with a white fork and a little bedding, and I don't know London any more, nor where I am in it - except the Strand.

FROM ONE OF MR. RUSKIN'S MANUSCRIPTS.

"Sir Walter Scott," he said, "wrote as a stream flows, but I do all my brainwork like a wrung sponge." He had his peculiarities about payment for his work. When he wrote a certain article, to appear in the Magazine of Art, he would neither give the article for nothing nor receive its market price. He simply insisted on "a penny a line, neither more nor less." This article, on "The Black Arts" (the arts of engraving, &c.), from which we reproduce a sentence of the MS. in facsimile, will be included in Mr. Spielmann's forthcoming biography of Mr. Ruskin.

MR. R. D. BLACKMORE was a writer who ever refused to be gazed at by the public for whom he wrote. He wrote novels for a living, but grew pears and peaches for his pleasure. The novels paid best. Yet even these, it may be suspected, owed most of their success to the author's descriptions of nature. Blackmore drew characters that live, as John Ridd and Lorna Doone and Clara Vaughan bear witness. But the spell which he threw over his readers is inseparable from the West Country settings in which he placed his dramas. He knew Devonshire and all the morning and evening beauty of its lanes and valleys, and his own brisk delight in it went into his writing. He created a Blackmore country, and tourists have streamed thither ever since the days of Lorna Doone. Yet Blackmore was a Berkshire, not a Devon, man.

MR. BLACKMORE lived to be tired of the praises lavished on Lorna Doone. The success of that book was really something of a millstone round his neck. He felt he could not repeat it, yet he felt it was not his best. The devotion of the public to Lorna was a beautiful, yet maddening, obstacle to further progress, which Blackmore never overcame. Only in Perlycross did he again seem to hit the bull's-eye. Not long ago Mr. Blackmore saw his indocile, unswerving readers snap up 150,000 sixpenny copies of their first love. It grieved him, and he returned to his peaches.

IN its obituary notice of Mr. Blackmore, the Times says of Lorna Doone: "Its merits were seen and appreciated at once." This is hardly true of the publishers, for no fewer than eighteen firms, it is said, rejected the book, which the author put away in a drawer for a year. Nor were the public much more discerning when the novel at last appeared. They let it alone until the title got absurdly mixed up with the marriage of Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne. From that day the book began to be inquired for, and its merits soon won the recognition Lorna Doone deserved.

WE have recorded in another column our deep regret at the death of Mr. G. W. Stevens. The love and admiration that he inspired is shown by the messages of condolence that have flashed to this country from all over the civilised world. He was buried at midnight, in order that the officers at Ladysmith might have an opportunity of attending his funeral. Lord Roberts, amid the engrossing character of his present task, found time to telegraph his sorrow. Lord Kitchener has made the following statement to a correspondent of the Daily Mail:

I was anxious to tell you how very sorry I was to hear of the death of Mr. Stevens. He was with me in the Soudan, and, of course, I saw a great deal of him and knew him well. He was such a clever and able man. He did his work as correspondent so brilliantly, and he never gave the slightest trouble—I wish all correspondents were like him. I suppose they will try to follow in his footsteps. I am sure I hope they will. He was a model correspondent, the best I have ever known, and I should like you to say how greatly grieved I am at his death.

The Daily Mail, towards the success of which Mr.

Stevens contributed so much, published the following tribute from Mr. Henley:

We cheered you forth—brilliant and kind and brave,
Under your country's triumphant flag you fell,
It floats, dear heart, over no dearer grave—
Brilliant and brave and kind, hail and farewell.

THE following "In Memoriam" lines accompanied the Morning Post's memoir of Mr. Stevens:

The pages of the Book quickly he turned.
He saw the languid Isis in a dream
Flow through the flowery meadows, where the ghosts
Of them whose glorious names are Greece and Rome
Walked with him. Then the dream must have an end,
For London called, and he must go to her,
To learn her secrets—why men love her so,
Loathing her also. Yet again he learned
How God, who cursed us with the need of toil
Relenting, made the very curse a boon.
There came a call to wander through the world
And watch the ways of men. He saw them die
In fiercest fight, the thought of victory
Making them drunk like wine; he saw them die
Wounded and sick, and struggling still to live
To fight again for England, and again
Greet those who love them. Well indeed he knew
How good it is to live, how good to love,
How good to watch the wondrous ways of men—
How good to die, if ever there be need.
And everywhere our England in his sight
Poured out her blood and gold, to share with all
Her heritage of freedom won of old.
Thus quickly did he turn the pages o'er
And learn the goodness of the gift of life;
And when the Book was ended, glad at heart—
The lesson learned, and every labour done—
Find at the end life's ultimate gift of rest.

ONE word more. An old friend had set Stevenson's beautiful lines to music:

Under the wide and starry sky
Dig the grave and let me lie.
Glad did I live, and gladly die
And I laid me down with a will.

This be the verse you grave for me:
Here he lies where he longed to be;
Home is the sailor, home from the sea,
And the hunter home from the hill.

He said one evening at his happy home in Merton Abbey, before he started on his last journey, that, when out in the Soudan, he crooned himself to sleep night after night with those lines which had been set to music by his friend. It is fitting that he should lie at rest out there in the spacious country, "under the wide and starry sky."

THE American Bookman's "Letter Box" contains the following question this month: "What is the significance of the word decadence when it is applied to style?" It may be worth while to preserve the answer furnished by Théophile Gautier, to whose style, as also to Beaudelaire's, the word was applied in the early fifties:

The style of decadence is nothing else than art arrived at that extreme point of maturity produced by those civilisations which are growing old with their oblique suns—a style that is ingenious, complicated, learned, full of shades of meaning and research, always pushing further the limits of language, borrowing from all the technical vocabularies, taking colours from all palettes, notes from all keyboards, forcing itself to express in thought that which is most ineffable, and in form the vaguest and most fleeting contours; listening, that it may translate them, to the subtle confidences of the neuropath, to the avowals of ageing and depraved passion, and to the singular hallucinations of the fixed idea verging on madness. This style of decadence is the last effort of language, called upon to express everything, and pushed to the utmost extremity. We may remind ourselves, in connexion with it, of the language of the later Roman Empire, already mottled with the greenness of decomposition, and, as it were, gamey, and of the complicated refinements of the Byzantine school, the last form of Greek art fallen into deliquescence. Such is the inevitable and fatal idiom of peoples and civilisations where factitious life has replaced the natural life, and developed in man unknown wants. Besides, it is no easy matter, this style despised of pedants, for it expresses new ideas with new forms and words that have not yet been heard. In opposition to the classic style, it admits of shading, and these shadows teem and swarm with the larvæ of superstitions, the haggard phantoms of insomnia, nocturnal terrors, remorse which starts and turns back at the slightest noise, monstrous dreams stayed only by impotence, obscure phantasies at which the daylight would stand amazed, and all that the soul conceals of the dark, the unformed, and the vaguely horrible, in its deepest and furthest recesses.

MR. GEORGE MOORE has written a play which he has called "A Tale of the Town." It will be produced first at a Dublin theatre.

NEXT week will be performed, for the first time, at the Deutsches Theatre, Berlin, Gerhart Hauptmann's new play, "Schluck und Jauch," written in the Silesian dialect. The plot is described as slight and fantastic—an elaboration of Lamb's little chimney-sweep who found himself in a ducal bed. Schluck and Jauch are boy and girl, and are met on the country road by a fine company from the neighbouring castle bent on amusing themselves. Schluck is invited to the castle, and is treated as if he were a prince. He succumbs to the dazzling illusion, but is finally sent back to his native fields with Jauch for his sweetheart, and a cottage and fields for his support. The burlesque scenes and situations evolved are said to be distinctly comical.

LAST October we gave some account of the retrospects and prospects of M. J. K. Huysmans, and referred to his intention to retire to Ligugé to pass the remainder of his days in solitude. It is now stated that M. Huysmans will definitely join the Benedictine Order on March 19. "On that date," he says, "I shall put on the clothes of an oblate, and shall thus have mounted the first step of the celestial ladder." We note, however, that M. Huysmans does not intend to put off the clothes of a novelist. As an oblate, indeed, M. Huysmans will not have to wear the dress of the order at all times, nor will he live within the walls of the monastery. He will reside in his own house at Ligugé, and one of his first occupations will be to complete his biography of St. Lydwine of Schiedam, and his novel, L'Obat.

HUYSMANS' career has been a strange one. The routine of many years' quill-driving at the Ministry of the Interior did not weaken his capacity for violent mental and spiritual experiences. In La-Bas Huysmans looked down into the fetid abyss of Parisian Satanism. Through pessimism, mysticism, satanism, and what not, Huysmans reached Catholicism. It would be stupid and unjust to question the sincerity of Huysmans' conversion, but one feels that his is a life that must be lived out before it can be understood.

MR. EDWARD MARSTON has this week given some interesting reminiscences to the Daily Chronicle. Charles Reade had a fine way with him when dealing with his publisher. He wanted £3,500 for Hard Cash, and this is how he wrote to Mr. Marston:

Dickens has pronounced it incomparably my best production, and, looking at the research and labour I have bestowed, I should not be compensated by the sum I ask,

... With this fair warning I can only say that I shall be happy to see you here either as negotiator or visitor whenever you have half an hour to bestow on me.

"Happy to see you" is good.

MR. MARSTON seems to regret the demise of the three-volume novel, and his view of the new six-shilling system is compact and interesting:

The truth is this: of an average novel the libraries buy as few as they possibly can, frequently not as many as they used to buy in the three-volume form; and if they will not set the example the public assuredly will not buy. I am aware, of course, that there are exceptions, but only sufficient to prove the rule. In the three-volume days the risk of producing an average novel was reduced to a minimum. Now it can hardly be produced at all, except with a positive certainty of loss, for now there is nobody to buy, and borrow they cannot, because the libraries confine their purchases almost wholly to the books by authors who have been fortunate enough to get a hold on the public. All others—good, bad, or indifferent—are alike shunted. This is, of course, good for the libraries, but surely it is bad for young authors and too venturesome publishers.

YOUNG novelists and would-be novelists might do well to ponder the advice just given by Herr Gustav Freytag to a student who had sent him the MS. of a novel for his opinion. Herr Freytag excused himself for not reading the novel, and then wrote (his words have a direct application to many a young man now in business, or in a non-literary profession, who "thinks seriously of taking to literature"):

Even if you possessed the greatest poetical power, and a talent for narrative as great as that of Walter Scott, Dickens, and others of the best, you ought not at present to think of putting your scientific studies into the background, and risk your future existence on novel writing or other poetical activity. You must first, by serious work and the position it may make for you among your fellow-men, ripen to manhood, and you must gain a certain mastery over life before you can have the right to idealise in an artistic work the fate of man. On the path you now are inclined to follow you will only reap disappointment and probably a speedy decline of your powers.

In the empty and uncertain existence of an "author," you will only learn to know the time imperfectly and from the wrong side. Observation alone does not educate a man, it needs above all a firm position in a circle of worldly interests and clear duties. As a young author you would, after a half-success, only be able to gain a tolerably secure place as a journalist, a profession very unfavourable to artistic creation. My warning is the result of what I have observed during my life of the fate of many young writers, and it is a truth which I have repeatedly had cause to state; for the number of those who, like you, would like to choose the pleasant game of free invention instead of the self-denial and exertion of scientific research, is very great.

Whether your talent is strong enough to support your whole life, I can say as little as any other man. If the impulse you have lasts, and the strength to carry it out, it will in any case break through all obstacles; and, if you now do your nearest duty perfectly, you may trust the future.

ON this subject Mr. Andrew Lang is also pessimistic in Longman's Magazine. Nobody, he bewails, can give to writers "security of tenure":

There are good reasons why educated young men should beware, more than ever, of drifting into either journalism or literature without some more regular profession or occupation or source of income. They may be superannuated at thirty-five, or the "fashionable age" may come to be fixed even earlier. Even novelists with a vogue must see that a vogue is often ephemeral. Above all, times unpropitious for the providers of mere luxuries are coming upon us: and books are the first luxuries which people cut down. The "softness" of the penman's "job" attracts people; it is amusing, too, and offers a promise of notoriety, if not of fame. But it becomes less and less of a stable and permanent job; the recruit of to-day is a veteran (and often not "a useful veteran") the day after to-morrow. Lawyers, doctors, dentists are not superannuated so rapidly. My sermon is accurate, but, like other sermons, will be unprofitable.

AN Edgbaston correspondent asks for the authorship of the following lines:

Thou art dead—who lived so well.
Thou art dead: but who can tell
Of the wondrous blood of thee,
Enriched by thy fertility?
In the veins of each sweet child
Runs a torrent undefiled, &c.

THE Rev. Walter Hobhouse, head master of Durham Grammar School, has been appointed editor of the Guardian, in succession to Mr. Lathbury.

Bibliographical.

RUSKIN, Blackmore, G. W. Steevens, Canon Dixon, and W. E. Tirebuck—all have passed from us since this column last appeared. In the case of Mr. Blackmore and Mr. Steevens there is not much for bibliography to do, the achievement of each having been limited—in the one case from choice, in the other from necessity. In Mr. Ruskin's case the bibliographers had long been on the writer's track. The author of Modern Painters, like all great modern men of letters, had enjoyed fame during his lifetime, and had had both his biography and his bibliography "brought up to date." Canon Dixon, it is safe to say, had no great vogue. His work in verse was known to, and spoken kindly of, by a few, including Mr. Swinburne; but it will hardly attract much bibliographical enthusiasm. The latest volume from his pen that I have handled was his little collection of Songs and Odes, in the "Shilling Garland" (1896). Previously to that we had had (in 1891) a second edition of the most considerable of his performances—Mano: a Poetical History in Four Books, which first saw the light in 1883. In 1891 also we had the fourth (and, I suppose, last) volume of his Church of England from the Abolition of the Roman Jurisdiction. He is enshrined, of course, in that elaborate "omnium gatherum," The Poets and the Poetry of the Century, wherein he is celebrated by that penetrating and authoritative critic, Mr. Alfred Miles. But even that distinction, perhaps, will not secure to him the popular appreciation which, I fancy, whatever they may say, all verse-writers are anxious to obtain. Mr. Tirebuck was a native of Liverpool, where he became connected with the journalistic profession, and was for some years on the staff of the Liverpool Mail. Some six years ago he retired from journalism. He was the author of some critical and biographical works, among which may be mentioned Great Minds in Art, published in Mr. Fisher Unwin's "Lives Worth Living" series in 1888. He also wrote many novels, of which Saint Margaret was the first.

Somebody with leisure should set to work and write the history of the Literary or Dramatic Sequel. Mr. George Alexander reopens the St. James's Theatre on February 1 with Mr. Hawkins's dramatisation of his own Rupert of Hentzau, and the manager announces that he will give, during the "run" of "Rupert," afternoon performances of "The Prisoner of Zenda," so that those enthusiasts who like to pass the afternoon and evening of a day in Ruritania can do so. This is excellent as an idea, however it may prove in practice; and one wonders why something of the sort has not occurred to somebody before. Have modern playgoers ever been invited to witness in the same twenty-four hours representations of the two parts of "Henry IV.," or, still worse, the three parts of "Henry VI.?" Something might be said, from the educational point of view, for playing "Julius Cæsar" in the afternoon and "Antony and Cleopatra" in the evening of a day; but exertion of that sort is impossible, perhaps, to anybody but schoolgirls. Could any average person survive immediately-successive performances of "Our American Cousin" and "Lord Dundreary Married and Settled," of "The Ticket-of-Leave Man" and "The Ticket-of-Leave Man's Wife," and other such daring combinations? In the case of prose-fiction, the thing is different. If the sequel in book form bores you, you can put it down.

My reference last week to the late Mr. C. P. Mason and his educational works has brought me several interesting communications—one, for example, from an experienced schoolmaster in the N.E. district, who testifies eloquently to the merits of Mr. Mason's books on English grammar; another, from a dweller in County Down, Ireland, who was a pupil of Mr. Mason's at Denmark Hill Grammar School between 1853 and 1857, and who evidently has many pleasant recollections of his stay there. "Living in this part of the kingdom," he writes, "I have, through all these years, heard little or nothing of our old schoolmaster or of any of my schoolfellows. Would it be possible to get the 'old boys' of Denmark Hill together? I would go all the way to London for such a re-union." I should be very glad to hear from "old boys" on this subject.

Two correspondents are so kind as to address me on the subject of my remarks on a proposed selection from Mr. George Meredith's prose epigrams. Both remind me of the production in Boston, U.S.A., in 1888 (with an introduction, fifty pages long, by Mr. R. F. Gilman), of an anthology called The Pilgrim's Scrip; or, Wit and Wisdom of George Meredith. I was, of course, aware of the existence of that book, though I have never seen a copy of it. And one of my correspondents, writing from Edgbaston, Birmingham, says: "It may serve to illustrate the short term of life books have in America, when I say that I searched New York and Boston for a copy of this some six or eight years ago, and even in the publisher's own shop was unable to find one."

I can quite believe that "Mr. Richard Mansfield, the New York actor, has written a volume of essays composed of studies in dramatic literature and other matters dealing with the stage." Mr. Mansfield is a very clever man, and particularly nimble with his pen. I have on my shelves a play which he wrote (and produced in America) on the subject of Don Juan. But why call him "the New York actor"? He is not an American. His youth and early professional life were spent in England. He was educated at Derby School, and learned his "art" in the British provinces.

Prof. Goldwin Smith is showing great cerebral activity in his old age. The other day he gave us two solid volumes on the United Kingdom, and now we are promised one on Shakespeare the Man. That naturally reminds us that we still await Mr. Frank Harris's book on the same subject and with the same, or nearly the same, title. Why tarrieth it? Invincible is this desire to penetrate into the personality of the Bard, despite Matthew Arnold's confident assertion that it is not to be discovered. I remember that Mr. Gerald Massey used to lecture a good many years ago on "The Moral Shakespeare." But Mr. Arnold was right, I believe, after all.

It is pleasant to know that "The Golden Legend" (not Longfellow's, i'faith) is to be included in the pretty "Temple Classics," and that the text will be vouched for by Mr. F. S. Ellis. There is evidently a revival of interest in the work, for it is only fifteen months or so since an elegant little volume, called Leaves from the Golden Legend, was put upon the English book market. Mr. Ellis's text, I take it, will be complete.

THE BOOKWORM.

Reviews.

Theology of the Day.

Christian Mysticism (Bampton Lectures for 1899). By William Ralph Inge, M.A. (Methuen. 12s. 6d. net.)

Idealism and Theology: a Study of Presuppositions (Donellan Lectures, 1897-8). By Charles F. d'Arcy, B.D. (Hodder & Stoughton. 6s.)

The Apostle Paul's Reply to Lord Halifax. By Walter Wynn. (Elliot Stock.)

A Free Inquiry into the Origin of the Fourth Gospel. By P. G. Sense, M.A. (Williams & Norgate. 7s. 6d.)

Introduction to the New Testament. By F. Godet, D.D. Translated by William Affleck, B.D. (T. & T. Clark.)

The First Three Gospels in Greek, Arranged in Parallel Columns. By Colin Campbell, D.D. Second edition. (Williams & Norgate. 5s.)

MYSTICISM, in its wide sense—the immediate stretching forth of the soul towards the Divine—is an air breathed by all religions, alike of East and West. Christian mysticism, in these Bampton lectures, Dr. Inge traces through St. Augustine and Plotinus (who, outside the Church, was the perfecter of Plotinism) to Plato, “the father of European mysticism”:

Both the great types of mystics may appeal to him—those who try to rise through the visible to the invisible, through Nature to God, . . . and those who distrust sensuous representations as tending “to nourish appetites which ought to starve,” who look upon this earth as a place of banishment, upon material things as a veil which hides God's face from us, and who bid us “flee away from hence as quickly as may be,” to “seek yonder,” in the realm of the ideas, the heart's true home.

The true Christian mysticism is distinguished from Platonism pure and simple, inasmuch as it “follows St. Paul in choosing as its ultimate goal the fulness of Christ, and not the emptiness of indifferentiated Godhead.”

In an appendix to this learned and temperate treatise Mr. Inge considers the erotic mysticism to the revival of which, particularly among English Roman Catholics, so great an impetus was given by the appearance of Mr. Coventry Patmore's Unknown Eros odes; though of Patmore the Bampton lecturer has nothing to say. His conclusions are eminently sane and uninteresting:

. . . We are forced to remember that in our mysteriously constituted minds the highest and lowest emotions lie very near together; and those who have chosen a life of detachment from earthly ties must be especially on their guard against the “occasional revenges” which the lower nature, when thwarted, is always plotting against the higher.

In Idealism and Theology the Rev. Charles F. d'Arcy reviews the fundamental doctrines of the Christian religion from the standpoint of modern idealism. “Christian theism is the final philosophy”—so boldly does he enunciate his thesis. To him idealism is “the true stepping-stone to an appreciation of the philosophic value of theology.” Christian theism is to be established “by making use of idealism to gain a higher position.” All that is valuable in idealism “will be found to have taken its place in the higher system.” It is not possible to do more in this place than to indicate the standpoint of this notable book. Materialism, as a system, no longer holds what it had won. The fallacy it involves inevitably betrays itself to the earnest thinker. Matter may, indeed, win recognition, but its recognition implies a something, not itself, which recognises it and reasons about it. And that—call it mind or spirit—is, therefore, logically antecedent to it—nay, we are within our right in going further and proclaiming matter to be altogether contingent. We may, if we like, suppose it really to exist; but all we perceive is our own sensations and the relations between them. “Matter is thus explicable in terms of mind, while mind is not explicable in terms of matter.”

Is the world, therefore, phantasmal—a mere show of fireworks let off against a background of nothingness? No, it is real; for it is a common possession: the appeal is to the experience, not of one, but of many. For at this point the idealist breaks away from the tyranny of mere logic, which would identify the universe with the individual percipient, and acknowledges himself to be one of many similar beings. Finally, as the idealist teaches that every element in the material world implies a spiritual principle which makes it possible, so Mr. d'Arcy seeks “to make plain the principles which underlie the possibility of a spiritual universe in which mind stands over against mind and will against will.” This design he works out with an ingenuity that may or may not carry conviction to the reader—for in this matter temperament is everything—but must certainly excite interest and admiration.

We step down on to another plane in opening The Apostle Paul's Reply to Lord Halifax. The general aim of the Rev. Walter Wynn, its author, may be gathered from the title. The Epistle to the Galatians is an eager protestation of the liberty of Christians from the vexatious ceremonialism of the Jewish law. It is possible to apply the argument of its writer against ceremonialism in the Christian churches, at least by way of analogy. Quite a strong case, as is fully realised by the apologists of sacerdotal Christianity, may thus be made out. But Mr. Wynn seems not to understand that the Apostle is addressing himself to the consideration of one particular ceremonial system; and further, that the argument from analogy can render, at the most, but a probable conclusion. His manner, too, is unfortunate; it is singularly ill-fitted to persuade. Neither can one who reverences the genius who did more than any one man, save his Master, to mould the mind of Christendom, easily stomach the wordy, acrimonious paraphrase by which Mr. Wynn, projecting himself into the person of the Apostle of the Gentiles, would present to the English Church Union the true sense of his deathless words. Besides, Mr. Wynn lets his prepossessions run so furiously away with him! St. Paul wrote: “Paul an Apostle. . .” In the course of six solid pages of elaboration, we read: “Peter did not ordain me, nor James, nor any of the church officials at Jerusalem.” Upon which two comments may fairly be made: that the writer of the Epistle does relate that at the conclusion of his three years' retreat in Arabia (upon which he entered shortly after receiving a revelation of his apostolic commission on his way to Damascus) he went up to Jerusalem, and there for some time remained in communion with Peter and other “church officials”—at which time he may very well have received holy orders by the laying on of hands; and, secondly, that the denial of his apostolate does not imply a negation of his priesthood, any more than—to take an historical parallel—in the days of the Great Schism the refusal to recognise a certain papal election implied a doubt as to the episcopal consecration of the putative pope. Of course, it is not for a reviewer in a secular paper to set himself to prove any theory of the Christian ministry. Our attitude towards the questions which rend the National Church at this moment is neutral. Judging Mr. Wynn's paraphrase, therefore, merely upon its merits, we find it ill-adapted to win assent from those to whom it is addressed, and too bitterly declamatory not to meet with a welcome from the more violent of those whose views tally with his own.

Mr. Sense is a man with a theory, which he would crown with a practical corollary. His theory is that the Gospel known by the name of the Beloved Disciple was in its main outline the composition of Cerinthus. Now Cerinthus was a heretic; whose teaching, as we learn from Irenæus, was in effect, that upon the man Jesus descended at His baptism, in the form of a dove, Christ—an emanation tion from the Deity; that at the crucifixion Christ went forth out of the person of Jesus, Jesus died. The author of the Fourth Gospel narrates the descent of the form of a dove upon Jesus at His baptism; he says nothing of the dove's going forth. And here it is that Mr. Sense, breaking boldly away from the traditional respect for the written word, proposes to supply (in xix. 34) for "forthwith came there out blood and water"—". . . and a dove." This startling suggestion he backs by a reference to the authentic history of the martyrdom of Polycarp, bishop of Smyrna in the second century, which throughout preserves a remarkable parallelism with the Fourth Gospel. There it may be read—for despite the ingenuity of mystified commentators the phrase has survived—how, when the flames failed to consume the old man's body, the executioner pierced it with a sword and "there came forth a dove and a quantity of blood." Having made his emendation, Mr. Sense goes through the whole Evangel with a blue pencil, scoring out the passages inconsistent with his hypothesis. These inflations he attributes in bulk to a revision "committee" assembled under Irenæus; and a good deal of rather intemperate language is poured out upon the head of these unscrupulous clergymen. At this point Mr. Sense works himself up into hot anger against a principle which he designates, by a vocable unknown to Dr. Murray, Credonism. This nefarious spirit he discovers at the root of most social evils. He proposes, therefore, the foundation of a society for the practice of Christian virtues (we seem to have heard of something of the sort before) from which even bishops and deans shall not be excluded, but only their distinctive dress. Also that the practice of confession among Roman Catholics shall be created a criminal offence. Mr. Sense thinks "there would be no difficulty" in enforcing this regulation. In spite of his many lapses from good taste and practical wisdom, from correct grammar and orthography (the habit of writing "impassable" when he means "impassible" does not inspire us with confidence in our theologian), Mr. Sense has written an interesting and suggestive book.

Of a very different temper is Dr. Godet's Introduction to the New Testament, of which we have from the hand of Mr. William Affleck a tolerable translation of a part of the second volume. Dr. Godet's first volume comprised the Pauline Epistles. The present instalment discusses the origin of the four Gospels, and treats in detail that according to Matthew. Dr. Godet rejects the theory which, in various forms, is generally favoured by exponents of the Higher Criticism both in this country and upon the Continent—that, namely, which derives the Synoptic Gospels mainly from two sources: the writings of Mark for the narrative parts, and the "Sayings" of Matthew for the teachings of Jesus. Also, with Zahn (History of the Canon of the New Testament), he attributes the formation of the four-fold Gospel, not to the second half of the second century, but to the end of the first. He sees the three authentic biographies emerging from the crowd of more or less puerile documents in which the wilder spirits had clothed their fancies, and receiving at Ephesus the seal of the last of the apostolic band. In the fourth he discerns a document from the hand of the Beloved Disciple himself, designed especially to supplement from the treasure-house of his memory the scanty record of those three years' teaching. Thus the universal Church, by a kind of instinct, singled out those pictures of her Founder which the corroboration of 1800 years has approved. In the quadruple Gospel is revealed the Christ in four several aspects:

That Christ of Matthew, in whom are revealed the riches of the work of God in the past of Israel; that Christ of Luke, a living germ of the future of the regenerated world; that Christ of Mark, acting, speaking, living before our eyes in His glorious and incomparable present; in fine, that Christ of John, hovering above the past, the present, and the future, like the eternal God whose image He is.

The Decadent Cuckoo.

Our Common Cuckoo, and other Cuckoos and Parasitical Birds.

By Alexander H. Japp, LL.D., F.R.S.E. (Burleigh. 6s.)

DR. JAPP has here fulfilled an ambition he shares with other modern naturalists—viz., to write a long book about the cuckoo. To our elders it was a poet's bird: "Loud crieth cuccu" was spring's unmistakable symbol, and this went on till past Wordsworth's day. But Dr. Japp's interest is more scientific than literary, and he doubts if the bards of old would have dared to glorify the bird had his history been known. It is testified by infallible signs that the nation of cuckoos is in decay. First, the males outnumber the females to the tune of seven to one, say some naturalists; others have it twenty. This saps all virtue, for as is well known the domesticities count for as much among the citizens of the air as among us poor plumeless ephemerals. The most affectionate of birds is the bullfinch—tender to his wife, kind to his children, faithful even to a human friend, and, as might be expected, he mates for life. When the last scarlet hips are rotting on the bare hedgerow, you may still see him and the wife he courted in the greenwood eating and roosting together. But the cuckoo is at the other end of the scale. He has not the decency to stick to his wife even for a season, and she spends summer flirting with a succession of males, and laying eggs from about the 9th of April to the middle of June. A lady robin or hedge-sparrow, knowing that she will have to feed and nurse her offspring, takes care that they shall not number more than four or five. The cuckoo doesn't care. Without making a nest she lays her egg at the hedge root, and then flies with it in her mouth to the first home that comes handy. She does not even inquire into the character of the nurse, since her egg has been found among those of over a hundred species, ranging in size from the wren to the wood-pigeon. From so careless and disreputable a parent is it reasonable to expect any but a monstrous progeny? But the young cuckoo, though wicked, is interesting. Indeed he presents to students of evolution a problem that becomes more difficult and fascinating as the facts become more fully ascertained. When newly out of the shell, the naked, feeble, sprawling monster proceeds to shoulder his foster chicks or eggs out of the nest. Long after Jenner's famous observation naturalists refused to believe a story so contradictory of nature's usual methods. If true it meant that an incalculable number of our sweetest and most harmless birds are annually sacrificed to preserve the worthless cuckoo. Further, it is a cardinal doctrine of evolution that a counter instinct is developed to meet every destructive one. Here there is nothing of the kind. Mr. Japp is not only able to reproduce the testimony of witnesses like Mrs. Blackburn and Mr. Hancock, and Mr. John Craig and Mr. Scot Miller—who show the process by a series of instantaneous photographs—but he furnishes proof that the mother acquiesces in this murder of her rightful progeny, and lavishes her kindness on the usurper. So much is now placed beyond the region of controversy. There are naturalists who go further, and say with Tom Speedy that a little bird like the wren will sometimes starve itself to feed the big foster-child, and though this is probably an over-statement, it is certain that many species take kindly to nursing the young cuckoo. Equally well known is it that little birds will sometimes mob an old one, as they do a hawk or an owl.

There is much about the cuckoo that, though curious, is open to plausible explanation. The present writer is of opinion that in regard to variation in cuckoos' eggs there has been much exaggerated writing. Within limits, variation occurs in the eggs of every species of bird; but a collection of nearly two hundred cuckoos' eggs made in the Home Counties during the last three or four years shows no such difference in the markings as a merely book student might expect to see. That a cuckoo can adapt her egg to match in colour those of a particular nest we believe to be a fable. Many of those referred to were placed in the home of the hedge-sparrow; but not one is blue. One cannot dispute that a cuckoo might produce eggs of this colour, but, though Dr. Japp fully accepts it, the evidence of Messrs. Seebohm and Elwes is not conclusive. It amounts to this, that they believed that on breaking one they found on the embryo the characteristic zygodactile foot of the species. But how easy to make a mistake when dealing with the very tiny foot of a chick found in an egg remarkable for its smallness! At any rate, a blue cuckoo's egg is most rare.

But the murderous instinct of the nestling leaves a question unsettled in natural history. It cannot be inherited. If, as is generally supposed, the migration of the cuckoo shows that its original habitat became unsuitable, we may assume that in prehistoric times it hatched out its own young. In India and America the species does so still, though Dr. Japp insists on the evidence that parasitism is growing among them too. At what period, then, in this decaying process does the nestling begin to eject those who would otherwise shorten its food supply? To say that the instinct is supernaturally implanted would be tantamount to asserting that, with one bird at least, the spirit of evil had had his way; and the evolutionary hypothesis is equally at fault. There is nothing to fit the case. Perhaps some brilliant Darwin of the future may be able to suggest an adequate explanation. In the meantime, Dr. Alexander Japp has done excellent service by getting together this body of definite and trustworthy information. We are sorry not to be able to congratulate him on his illustrations—some of the more interesting are badly reproduced, and the list at the beginning is incorrect. There are no pictures on p. 28, and Mrs. Blackburn's drawing is on 13, not 15.

"Battles Long Ago."

The Franco-German War, 1870-71. By Generals and other Officers who took part in the Campaign. Translated and Edited by Major-General J. F. Maurice and others. (Sonnenschein. 21s.)

AFTER the arid Official History of the Campaign of 1870-71 had sufficiently bored even ardent soldiers, a desire arose for a popular account, in which the living forces, national and individual, that "rode the whirlwind" should be more vividly realised. This book, now first made English, is the result. It is an admirable performance, resplendent with knowledge, dignity, and conscience. It must take a foremost place in every military library. But we cannot say that even this book, despite its many and crying merits, appeals to us primarily as a plastic human record. For its human agency is occasionally as impersonal as its events, and both, amazing as they are, astound us with a sense of Brobdingnagian machinery. We are oppressed by the whirr and clang of innumerable wheels and hammers doing their appointed work with the god distinctly out of the contrivance.

But here and there souls whom one can visualise take shape in the crowd of mere names. General von Hartmann, Commander of the Second Bavarian Corps on the field of Wörth, presented the painter Bleibtreu with an unconscious portrait of himself that challenges comparison with the choicest of its kind. He wrote:

It was a heart-stirring thought for me that I had been present at the battle of Waterloo in 1815, and that I had in 1870-71 led an army corps against the enemy, on the 6th of August, in my seventy-sixth year; that I had remained on horseback for fully seventeen hours, at Fröschweiler, Reichshofen, and Niederbrunn, and had had no food all day except a piece of the privates' black bread. I was enabled to do this by the great cause for which I fought. On my jubilee day, on the 1st of December, all the cherished reminiscences of the campaign, of the kindness and hearty sympathy which was shown me in every quarter, and especially by the Crown Prince, came back to me and found expression in words of heart-stirring joy and deep gratitude. The wreath of laurel which my most gracious master sent me at Châtenay, by his Excellency General Blumenthal, lies in my room, on a vase made by Benvenuto Cellini, and the Prince's honour-conferring words, carefully framed, are hung up near it. I thank the Almighty for this beautiful evening of my life, and my prayer is that it may in no way be embittered.

Night has closed over the glorious old man, and in the day that has since dawned his Wörth seems as obsolete as his Waterloo. Nearly thirty years ago a child pored over a slight contemporary record of the war, full of pictures. Now the same eyes explore the pages of this weighty history, again in search of pictures. There is a riotous abundance of them, and they are so much alive as to supply the vitality we sometimes miss in the text. But as combat after combat is disclosed, one is haunted by the notion that one views the battles of a lapsed warfare. Cataracts of sabre and cuirass rave around clubbed masses of men fringed with fire and volleying multitudinous smoke. Hundreds of acres are ridged with bayonets, and at the centre of each frantic line dance the delirious colours. Armies face armies with a turnip-field between them, and blaze away like princes at a battue. Officers cross blades at the head of their battalions like champions in a ballad. And while the majesty of the catastrophe is Miltonic, huge bodies of troops move, as troops probably will never move again, save in destined error, in Miltonic "rhombs, and wedges, and half-moons, and wings." For it is more than possible that the Arcadians of the Veldt are teaching the nations a new Art of War.

History for the General Reader.

The United Kingdom: a Political History. By Goldwin Smith, D.C.L. 2 vols. (Macmillans. 15s. net.)

SOME years ago a team of English cricketers had returned from a tour in Canada, in the course of which they had spent a few days at Toronto. An Oxford tutor asked his pupil who had been of the company, whether they had met Goldwin Smith. "Oh," said the ingenuous youth, "we did meet an old fellow called Smith, who talked a fearful amount of rot." An older generation recalls the brilliant Professor of Modern History at Oxford, and the Joint Secretary with Dean Stanley of the first Universities' (Oxford) Commission of 1854. The present writer remembers with delight a chance meeting with a stranger who turned out to be the quondam Oxford professor, one of the most brilliant talkers of his time. Mr. Goldwin Smith has given the world far too little literary work at any period of his life, and much of what he has done is avowedly of an ephemeral character. His most substantial achievement in point of bulk, to use the writer's own expression, "has been performed by the hand of extreme old age."

Mr. Goldwin Smith may be described as almost the last of our literary historians. There is little or no trace in his works of that laborious research into manuscript and muniment room, which a more scientific age seems to demand from its instructors. To him the merit of his written work would seem to be not in its appeal to new material, but in its literary dress. There is little attempt at a dispassionate statement of facts: the author's political and religious opinions colour every page. Whatever may be the case in his other writings, the author's avowed intention here is "to give the ordinary reader . . . a clear, connected, and succinct view of the political history of the United Kingdom as it appears in the light of recent research and discussion," but a list of the chief works and authors which he has consulted shows us that the research and discussion are not his own, but that of acknowledged masters of the craft. It would then be a captious criticism to say that Mr. Goldwin Smith is not absolutely up to date in his treatment of some important periods and subjects. He has nothing to say of Roman Britain. For him the history of the island begins with the coming of the English tribes. The substance of the few pages that he devotes to the Anglo-Saxon period is drawn entirely from the writings of Dr. Stubbs and Mr. Freeman; but the historical student knows that however much we owe to these two great past-masters in historical craft, recent research has profoundly modified many of their most important conclusions. Dr. Stubbs would probably be the first to acknowledge this. But of any such modifications the reader of Mr. Goldwin Smith's book would be utterly unconscious. Indeed, the very small space of fifteen pages into which the writer has compressed all that he thinks it necessary that the "ordinary reader" should know about the six hundred years before the Norman Conquest, betrays a rather unpardonable ignorance of the modern literature on the subject or of the importance attached by recent investigators to this long period in the making of the nation.

The question of proportion of treatment in narrative history is always a difficult one. Ordinarily the historian accepts the division of mediæval from modern history at the close of the fifteenth century, and divides in the proportion of one-third to two-thirds respectively.

Mr. Goldwin Smith's work extends to eleven hundred pages, of which three hundred bring us to Henry VIII., and the remaining eight hundred are spent on the more modern period. Apart from his evident predilection for recent centuries, the author would defend his division on the ground that "the histories of Scotland and Ireland now mingle their streams with that of the history of England." But considering the title of the book—the United Kingdom—the space given to the rest of the British Isles is disappointingly small. "The title of the United Kingdom," says our author, speaking of the union of the Scottish and English Parliaments in 1707, "was to be 'Great Britain,' which, however, its want of simplicity, combined with the force of tradition, has prevented from effectually displacing that of 'England' in the language of the world." To these influences, despite his evident intention, Mr. Goldwin Smith has unconsciously succumbed. Again, the only excuse on which, in our opinion, the writer might have based his disproportionate treatment of the mediæval and modern period would have been the ground of the imperial growth during the last two centuries. A single chapter of not quite fifty pages, at the end of the book, does not satisfy our sense of proportion. This is not the modern history for the general reader who is filled with the imperial spirit. Perhaps that spirit is of too recent a growth yet to find its historical exponent. We may confidently expect that the English histories of the future, when dealing with the last two centuries, will deal not so much with the obscure and unedifying party politics of the British Parliament as with the marvellous expansion of the nation. Meanwhile, no one would have been so fit as Mr. Goldwin Smith to point the way in which such history should be written. But to our thinking he has lost himself too much in the questions of religion and politics with which historians of past generations chiefly busied themselves. The battles that raged round the names of Arminian and Puritan, Whig and Tory, are too real for him, and he cannot refrain from taking sides. In his hands the great contests of English history far too much assume the form of the "good soldiers" and the "bad soldiers" of our children's games.

But, after all, this method of treating history is only a drawback in the eyes of serious students. To the general reader, for whom Mr. Goldwin Smith intends his book, this partisanship, whether conscious or unconscious, will only lend force to the brilliant and incisive style. Such a reader may rather find a hindrance in the extreme allusiveness which seems to take for granted a very considerable knowledge of the groundwork of historical facts; indeed, the whole two volumes are rather a brilliant essay on English history, with the interpretative interest that belongs to the essay form, than a narrative account of events. To the ordinary reader, then, for whom it was written, we may cordially recommend this literary treatment of the story of England's past. Since the appearance of Mr. J. R. Green's Shorter History of the English People there has been none with such literary finish. The sentences have all the incisiveness of youth; the judgments, though often ingrained with prejudice, represent the thought of a vigorous and able mind. This History will not take a permanent place in English literature; but we are glad that the author yielded to the importunities of his friends. The result is an eminently readable, if somewhat ephemeral, volume.

Light on Darkest Africa.

In Dwarf Land and Cannibal Country. By A. B. Lloyd. (Fisher Unwin. 21s. net.)

THIS, we believe, is a first book. Mr. Lloyd gives a clear, full, and interesting account of his journey across Africa from Zanzibar to the mouth of the Congo in suitable, natural English. If Mr. Lloyd did not realise when he left England, in 1894, how varied are the gifts that the Gospel vanguard is called upon to exercise, he soon learned that a missionary's life is by no means that of a Sunday-school teacher every day of the week. Here is his own view after a few weeks' experience:

He is a teacher, but he must also be a builder, for houses, cattle-pens, stores, and out-houses have to be constructed by the missionary. He must also be a doctor of medicine and a dentist; he must dose the sick natives, who will trust him implicitly to cure them of even leprosy, and he must be able to draw the most solidly-rooted molar that ever grew in the skull of a black man. More than this, he must be his own cobbler, and when his boots wear out he must be able to re-sole them with good understandings and must be content sometimes with nothing, but a few French nails and a piece of cowhide with which to accomplish it. His own socks he must darn, and keep his temper while he does it. . . . He must be his own carpenter and house decorator, as well as furniture maker. . . . But he must also be his own lawyer, accountant, and book-keeper, and when the currency takes the form of cowrie shells, as it does in Uganda (where three hundred tiny covies make a shilling), it is not easy to keep the accounts right. He must marry and divorce, give judgments, and baptize. He must be gardener, cook, and dairymaid; grow his own food and look after his live stock. In addition to all this he is the parish minister to help and comfort all who come to him.

Through all these little trials Mr. Lloyd goes rejoicing along. But he faced many real hardships and dangers as well. Fevers and chills, drenchings and exposure to the burning sun, were frequent incidents of his march up country; and it can hardly have been consoling to know, as he did daily in part of his march up country, that if any of his bearers dropped out from fatigue or laziness they promptly formed part of the next meal of the tribes on either side of his route. Now and then an unfriendly black was apt to stick his spear through the tent side—as one did to a colleague of Mr. Lloyd's, piercing the very bed on which he lay, but happily leaving him un wounded. But more serious and steady peril awaited him when he reached Uganda, for it was the time of the Soudanese rebellion; and he himself was a good deal under fire in the series of fights which happily ended in the breaking of the power of Mwanga and Kabarega last April. This seems a strange entry for a missionary's diary :

I was standing by my men, who were firing volleys at intervals under a very heavy return fire from the rebels, when a bullet struck my hat, piercing the crown and just missing my skull. Then a rush was made upon the left flank, which was occupied by the Waganda, and who retired. It was with the greatest difficulty that I got my men turned in time to meet the attack. My boys, who had accompanied me on this occasion, also displayed great bravery. I was next sent up to the right flank to look after a Sikh who had been badly wounded. I found the poor fellow dying, and while I was by his side another rush was made upon us, and about twenty desperate fellows came charging down upon us, firing as they advanced. However, our Maxim was turned upon them, and they retired a little only to renew their efforts in a similar way; this time the Maxim jaunted and had to be carried to the rear; we turned our flank and a second time repulsed them.

For pages, in fact, Mr. Lloyd is acting as a very capable war correspondent as well as a courageous combatant when he has to take his share. The little word-picture of the Soudanese captain who, after his right arm had been shattered, drew his revolver with his left, and despatched the rebel who had killed his white leader, is one that haunts the reader. But to many the most attractive passages will be those in which Mr. Lloyd tells of his brief intercourse with the Pigmies. His introduction to them was nearly fatal, for he was out shooting for the camp pot when, having failed to make a bag, he saw what he thought was a monkey. He had all but let fly when his "boy" stopped him with "Don't fire; it's a man!" Subsequent acquaintance proved the Pigmies to be pleasant, sharp little fellows. They are only four feet in height, but they are broad-chested, with muscles finely developed, short, thick neck, and small bullet head; the lower limbs were massive and strong to a degree. The chest was covered with black, curly hair, and most of the men wore thick, black beards. Each carried either bow and quiver of arrows, or short throwing spear. Round their arms they wore iron rings, and some of them had these round their necks also. The women were very comely little creatures, and most attractive, with very light skins—lighter even than the men, being a light tan colour; the usual flat nose and thick lips of the negro and black curly hair; but their eyes were of singular beauty, so bright and quick and restless they were that not for a second did they seem to fix their gaze on anything.

From these few extracts it will be seen how pleasantly and picturesquely Mr. Lloyd can describe the incidents of his eventful journey; and the photographs and pictures which accompany his text, in spite of the losses caused by stampeding elephants and the like, deserve the highest praise. On the whole it is a light, bright book on a dark land, containing the unassuming record of a great deal of quiet courage and dominant common sense, such as one would expect from one who can traverse Africa practically unarmed.

The Tragedy.

Oh, the fret of the brain,
And the wounds and the worry;
Oh, the thought of love and the thought of death—
And the soul in its silent hurry.

But the stars break above,
And the fields flower under;
And the tragical life of man goes on,
Surrounded by beauty and wonder.

From "The Man with the Hoe, and other Poems," by Edwin Markham.

Fiction.

In Connection with the de Willoughby Claim. By Frances Hodgson Burnett. (F. Warne & Co. 6s.)

It is not to be denied that Mrs. Burnett can tell a tale, and put into it some imagination. This book is better than the author's recent productions. It is of America, and almost of the present time; and we may hope now that she has finished with her excursions into England and the eighteenth century. When we consider His Grace of Osmond, with its ingenious but sterile invention, and then this large, complicated, spontaneous, forcible picture of a national life which she really understands, we lament that Mrs. Burnett has wasted so much time on things British. The story begins before the Civil War, in a remote village of North Carolina, where huge Tom de Willoughby, estranged from his family by their fault, passes his existence in good-humouredly pretending to keep the post-office and a store. It was inevitable, perhaps, that huge Tom, who had once nearly been a doctor, should usher into the world a helpless girl, and should adopt her—the mother dying and the supposed father deserting. Felicia's queenly life in the rough village is done according to Bret Harte, but done well and sincerely. From such an inception the most elaborate intrigue is made to expand itself, and Mrs. Burnett is obliged, again and again, to throw back in her narrative so that, family by family and group by group, the characters may be fully presented. Felicia ultimately marries a handsome cousin, and the divulging of the mystery of her birth makes a melodramatic chapter in the history of a famous preacher. The whole book is tinged with melodrama, and we are bound to say that the author relies too often upon an effect of pathos, and exhibits a strong prejudice against certain characters. These three defects apart, the matter of the tale is sound, and some of it is brilliant. The recital of Margery's death, and the episode of Susan Chapman are indeed excellent.

Mrs. Burnett writes as crudely as ever, and this is a great pity. She does not always even achieve grammar :

He invested in tons of machinery, which were continually arriving from the North, or stopping on the way when it should have been arriving.

As regards the writing, the most annoying part of the book is the dialogue. When Mrs. Burnett uses dialect her dialogue is quite convincing, but when her characters speak English they usually lapse into something which is as unlike human conversation as it well could be. Thus Margery, describing the minister to her protégée, the mill-girl :

"There is one gentleman who comes sometimes to see Mr. Barnard at the studio. He is so wonderful, it seems to me. He has travelled, and knows all about the great galleries and the pictures in them. He talks so beautifully that everyone listens when he comes in. . . . You would think he would not notice a plain little Willowfield girl, but he has been lovely to me, Susan. He has even looked at my work and criticised it for me, and talked to me. He nearly always talks to me a little when he comes in; and once I met him in the Gardens and he stopped and talked there, and walked about, looking at the flowers with me. They had been planting out the spring things, and it was like being in fairyland to walk about among them and hear the things he said about pictures. It taught me so much."

Margery never talked so. It is merely that Mrs. Burnett has reported her carelessly.

A Kiss for a Kingdom. By Bernard Hamilton. (Hurst & Blackett. 6s.)

THIS novel is a different thing from The Light by which Mr. Hamilton arrived at some sort of reputation. As he says in a quite unnecessary preface, it is founded on "simple fancy." The fancy, in truth, is over simple, and there is no imagination at the back of it. Mr. Hamilton's hero is a broken-down baronet, Sir Ronald Dering, who answers an advertisement for a "gentleman of birth" to assist in a "hazardous business." The advertiser proves to be one Julius Caesar Jones, a stage-Yankoo with an income of a million or so a year. Mr. Jones wants a man with the "English tradition" of fidelity, and he explains himself thus:

"Well, you're honest anyway," he said, gazing forward at the shore growing quickly nearer, "but that's what I value you for. Other people are bound to me only by money, but you also by honour. Now we're alone I don't mind telling you, there's a girl, a beautiful girl, in the States. She's rich herself, but she says Amurricans can't do nothing else but pile up dollars. Well, it's pretty bad when a man of my age is took with a girl, 'specially a smart girl like Clorrie, but when she said that, I said, 'I'd do anything. You're my queen.' 'Very well,' says she, smart as you please, 'make me one. When you can make me a queen I'll marry you.' I couldn't get anything more out of her, but I've got her crown ready, right here in my gripsack, and I guess she won't have long to wait now. Lord, how I've loved that girl. And now we'll be king and queen together, and sit on thrones. In fact, I don't mind being a king myself. It's a great idea of Clorrie's. We millionaires learn how to get, but not how to spend. There's nothing very distinguished in being a millionaire nowadays. There're too many of us. I want to get out of the herd and be a king."

Mr. Jones does, in fact, become king—of the erstwhile Republic of San Marino, but only to be jilted by his Clorinda, and subsequently to be killed. There is much slaughter, of a peculiarly horrible kind, in the book. Ultimately Sir Ronald finds himself king, and then abdicates in order to marry and live peacefully with a lovely creature whom he met at the Café de la Paix in the first chapter.

Taken as a wild narrative, the book is readable and fairly diverting. It is by a clever writer who has yet to learn that few things are more distressing than literary flippancy. The plot is ingenuous; some of the descriptions good, some of the situations dramatic; but all is marred by the author's scampering, sniggering method of narrative.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

SHAMELESS WAYNE.

By HALLIWELL SUTCLIFFE.

Mr. Sutcliffe is the novelist of the Yorkshire Moors, and here, as in Ricraft of Withens, we have a story of elemental passions set in a wild country. The terrific feuds of the Waynes and the Ratcliffes yield page after page that holds the reader. The story opens with these significant sentences: "The little old woman sat up in the belfry tower, knitting a woollen stocking and tolling the death-knell with her foot. She took two and seventy stitches between each stroke of the bell, and not the church-clock itself could reckon a minute more truly." (Unwin. 6s.)

FOLLY CORNER.

By MRS. HENRY E. DUDENEY.

Another strong study of marriage and heredity by the author of The Maternity of Harriott Wicken. The action passes in London and the country, and sombre backgrounds are the rule. A searching eye is brought to bear on sordid social conditions. Says one character: "When I was at the Buttery buying things of the cottagers I had a fixed rule by which I ingratiated myself. If a woman was under fifty I inquired after the baby; over fifty, I inquired after the bad leg. It sounds horrid, but was invariably successful." (Heinemann. 6s.)

A SECRET OF THE NORTH SEA. BY ALGERNON GISING.

A stirring story by the author of The Scholar of Bygate. Wind, and passions rage and range through it. A mother thus prays for her boy: "O mercifu' and powerfu' God! God o' the wind and water, o' the dark as weel as o' the light, have a care o' the lad ye hae taken from me! Guide him thro' the wild waste o' this world, and in Thy ain good time bring him safe back to me." (Chatto. 6s.)

A RISE IN THE WORLD.

By ADELINE SERGEANT.

A readable novel, opening with a committee meeting of the Society for the Help of Friendless Girls, attended by Lady Susan Pierrepont, the Hon. Ida Carruthers, the Countess of Astolat, the Hon. Mrs. Wyndham, and others. A servant-girl case brought forward quickly assumes a dramatic interest. The story of a rash youth's marriage and its sequel. (White & Co. 6s.)

TEMPEST-TOSSED.

By M. E. WINCHESTER.

The hero is a young medical student, born with a silver spoon in his mouth, and indolent in consequence. His loves and fortunes make the story, which is readable enough. (Digby, Long & Co. 6s.)

IN THE NEW PROMISED LAND.

By HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ.

Translations of stories by the author of Quo Vadis are raining on us. This opens on an emigrant ship bound for America. The action passes on the Atlantic, in New York, and in a pioneer settlement. (Jarrold. 2s. 6d.)

NEGRO NOBODIES.

By NOËL DE MONTAGNAC.

"A negro—at least, a Jamaica negro—is frequently a man of such excellent character that one is glad to make his acquaintance. More than this, he can be something of a gentleman. The truth is, there are some fine black people in Jamaica, and here is a book concerning them." M. Montagnac's little book is added to the "Overseas Library." (Unwin. 2s.)

PHARAOH'S BROKER.

By ELLSWORTH DOUGLAS.

Another novel of Mars. The red planet is reached in a projectile by Dr. Anderwelt and a young broker of Chicago, named Isidor Werner, who had made a corner in wheat. Isidor stayed three years on Mars, and on the whole was distinctly bored, and glad to return to Earth. After again cornering wheat, and marrying Ruth, the author announces his intention of visiting Venus. (Pearson Ltd. 6s.)

IN LONDON'S HEART.

By GEORGE R. SIMS.

The inevitable is often the readable. Here we have the lights of London, money-lending, murder, detectives, a twin brother, "just deserts," and then: "A beautiful girl comes laughing through the orange trees, followed by a young man who is carrying her sunshade and her work." (Chatto. 6s.)

THROUGH FIRE TO FORTUNE.

By MRS. ALEXANDER.

The title of this story, by the author of Brown, V.C., reveals its tenor. Lawyers and love, entails and engagements, manors and marriage. (Unwin.)

THE WOOING OF MONICA.

By L. T. MEADE.

A wicked guardian and a true lover woo Monica. The usual complications and the usual ways out of them are cleverly handled by Mrs. Meade. (White & Co. 6s.)

ON BOTH SIDES OF THE LINE.

By PHIL MARIL.

Two love stories and their complications, starting from the schooldays of the two heroes. There is a wicked Earl who is deservedly knocked down in a club. The end of a readable story of infidelity and dissipation is improbably happy. (Redway. 6s.)

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates for Yearly Subscriptions ..... 20s. including postage.

American Agents for the ACADEMY: Brentano's, 31, Union-square, New York.

The Making of Ruskin.

THE mother of John Ruskin was one of those creatures to whom riches or poverty, culture or the comparative want of it, a sunny path or a grey, are of small account: she was "a prudent woman." She had the bright, firm efficiency to which everyone pays homage, seeing in the person so endowed a centre of rightness and a spectacle of sure daily living. What England owes to such women is beyond statistical or philosophical reckoning; it is enough to contemplate a new and illustrious instance. Margaret Ruskin was not of a very good family, and she was not highly educated. Her father was a sailor, who sailed many times from Yarmouth in the herring business, and came home to Croydon to spoil his children in all matters except untruthfulness, which he visited with broom twigs. He died when his children were young. Margaret, a staid, clear-headed girl, and a born housewife, went to Scotland to keep house for the paternal grandfather of her future husband; her sister married a Croydon baker. In after years, when quite a child, Johnny Ruskin noticed—without at all comprehending it—"just the least possible shade of shyness on the part of Hunter-street, Brunswick-square [his birthplace], towards Market-street, Croydon." In the Scottish home Margaret put on stature in body and mind; she became a "faultless and accomplished housekeeper, and a natural, essential, unassailable, yet inoffensive, prude." One knows exactly what Ruskin meant by this description of his mother as an "inoffensive prude"; but he thought it worth while to instruct one or two dense newspaper writers on the subject. "There was a hearty, frank, and sometimes even irresponsible, laugh in my mother, never sardonic, yet with a very definitely Smollettian turn in it." She enjoyed Humphrey Clinker with her husband, and "could exult in a harmless bit of Smollettian reality." She hid no passage in the Bible from her boy, placing trust both in the Bible and in him. While stewardess in the Scottish home she pursued her brisk, careful, and sagacious life, never unbalanced by sentiment, though inclined to take a needless interest in moral philosophy—indeed, Ruskin tells us, in one of the delightful pawky asides of Præterita: "I noticed that [in recalling those days] she never spoke without some slight shyness before my father, nor without some pleasure to other people, of Dr. Thomas Brown."

Photo by] JOHN RUSKIN. [F. Hollyer.

The boy of the house, Ruskin's father, an active, sensitive youth of sixteen, sought the advice of his four-years-older cousin on all occasions; "her sympathy was necessary to him in all his flashing transient amours." He was destined for commerce, but his equipment included Latin, learned thoroughly under Adams of Edinburgh, and he was born in happiest time to see his native city of Edinburgh basking and flaming in the rays of Scott's genius. A frank cousinly relation went on between the boy and girl, until, at three-and-twenty, the young fellow excogitated a notion that Margaret was "quite the best sort of person he could have for a wife." He spoke and was accepted. Ruskin says that his father chose his mother "much with the same kind of serenity and decision with which afterwards he chose his clerks."

They were married after a nine years' engagement, spent by the young man in unremitting attention to his business, and by the young woman in making up, as best she could, arrears of education. When her son came Mrs. Ruskin solemnly devoted him to God, and for years the parents hoped to see their son wear the cloth. Even to his Oxford days the father's forecast of his son was this: "That I should enter at college into the best society, take all the prizes every year, and a double first to finish with; marry Lady Clara Vere de Vere; write poetry as good as Byron's, only pious; preach sermons as good as Bossuet's, only Protestant; be made, at forty, Bishop of Winchester, and at fifty, Primate of all England." It matters not what end the father and mother had in view, the memorable thing is that in their home their son found soil and air for the surest and most auspicious growth. The home on Herne Hill, on the southern fringe of London, shows as a kind of paradise in the descriptions of him who grew there. It was a home of calm and unwasted energies. "The routine of my childish days became fixed, as of the sunrise and sunset to a nestling." John James Ruskin was a merchant in sherry, honest and consummate, with whom everything went well in the best of all possible worlds. The dignity of home life was completely respected, and the child laid up no gnawing, soul-dwarfing memories. Perhaps the essential making of Ruskin is comprised and explained by him in the following passage:

For best and truest beginning of all blessings, I had been taught the perfect meaning of Peace, in thought, act, and word. I never had heard my father's or mother's voice once raised in any question with each other; nor seen an angry, or even slightly hurt or offended, glance in the eyes of either. I had never heard a servant scolded; nor even suddenly, passionately, or in any severe manner, blamed. I had never seen a moment's trouble or disorder in any household matter; nor anything whatever either done in a hurry, or undone in due time. I had no conception of such a feeling as anxiety; my father's occasional vexation in the afternoon, when he had only got an order for twelve butts after expecting one for fifteen, as I have just stated, was never manifested to me, and itself related only to the question whether his name would be a step higher or lower in the year's list of sherry exporters; for he never spent more than half his income, and therefore found himself little incommoded by occasional variation in the total of it. I had never done any wrong that I knew of—beyond occasionally delaying the commitment to heart of some improving sentence, that I might watch a wasp on the window pane, or a bird in the cherry tree; and I had never seen any grief.

In the first volume of Præterita will be found the key and satisfying explanation of all Ruskin's love of the beauty of the world. In those days Herne Hill was beautiful. Infinite smoke has gone up to the sky since, infinite noise and ugliness have circled around the quiet grove on which the Ruskin garret windows looked down. It was the beautiful South London described by Byron in Don Juan, turnpike and orchard and villa graduating townward. Again we quote Præterita:

The house commanded . . . those comparatively smokeless days, a very notable view from its garret windows, of the Norwood hills on one side, and the winter sunrise over them; and of the valley of the Thames on the other, with Windsor telescopically clear in the distance, and Harrow, conspicuous always in fine weather to open vision against the summer sunset.

Even the Sunday suburbanites and rather dismal chapel goings to Walworth were subject to glorious obliterations, for the family travelled much on business and pleasure, and Ruskin could recall such transitions as this—how wonderful to a boy!

Imagine the change between one Sunday and the next—from the morning service in the building, attended by the families of the small shopkeepers of the Walworth-road, in their Sunday trimmings (our plumber's wife, fat, good, sensible Mrs. Goad, sat in the next pew in front of us, sternly sensitive to the interruption of her devotion by our late arrivals); fancy the change from this, to high mass in Rouen Cathedral, its nave filled with the white-capped peasantry of half Normandy!

The boy was an incessant traveller. He accompanied his father and mother through England in a chariot, in unhurried quest of orders for sherry; he paid long visits to Scotland, where he passed his days "much as the thistles and tansy did, only with perpetual watching of all the ways of running water," the water being that of the Tay rushing round the precipices of Kinnoull. Books and pictures became surely and insensibly mingled with all these pilgrimages. Scott gave glory to the North, Miss Edgeworth to Matlock, and Mrs. Sherwood to Tintern and Malvern: "So that there was this of curious and precious in the means of my education in those years, that my romance was always ratified to me by the seal of locality—and every charm of locality spiritualised by the glow and the passion of romance." There came a day when the elder Ruskin brought home Prout's sketches in Flanders and Germany. Father and son gloating over the places depicted, the mother said: "'Why should we not go and see some of them in reality?' My father hesitated a little; then, with glittering eyes, said: 'Why not?'" So they went, coaching it round Europe, paying their way in the most comfortable fashion, keeping all their energies for exclamation and delight. The tour gave the boy his first view of the Alps, and his written recollection of the sight is a joy. They had trundled into Schaffhausen at midnight; they slept, and next day wandered about the place.

It was drawing towards sunset when we got up to some sort of garden promenade—west of the town, I believe; and high above the Rhine, so as to command the open country across it to the south and west. At which open country of low undulation, far into blue—gazing as at one of our own distances from Malvern of Worcestershire, or Dorking of Kent—suddenly—behold—beyond!

There was no thought in any of us for a moment of their being clouds. They were clear as crystal, sharp on the pure horizon sky, and already tinged with rose by the sinking sun. Infinitely beyond all that we had ever thought or dreamed—the seen walls of lost Eden could not have been more beautiful to us; not more awful, round heaven, the walls of sacred Death . . .

I went down that evening from the garden terrace of Schaffhausen with my destiny fixed in all that was to be sacred and useful. To that terrace, and the shore of the Lake of Geneva, my heart and faith return to this day, in every impulse that is yet nobly alive in them, and every thought that has in it help or peace.

And there we may leave the newly-arrived boy and the oft-returning man. It has seemed well to us to go back to the boy and just see him starting on the career, then undreamt of, now the heritage of generations. Ruskin's home-life is scarcely imitable by most parents or children. But the record of it is priceless alike in the substance given to it by the parents, and the beauty of statement conferred on it by the son. It is a vindication of the middle-class home against its shallow critics and traducers. It is a classic instance of the environment into which every unborn child would love to enter; and, quite definitely and undeniably, it is the story of the making of Ruskin.

Ruskin's Prose Style.

WHEN we consider Ruskin as a writer, we must first of all recognise the cardinal fact that he was magisterial. He was not only one of the great masters of Victorian prose, not only one of the great masters of nineteenth-century prose; he was one of the great masters of English prose. He was a classic. He ranks with De Quincey, Landor, Carlyle, with those eighteenth-century masters, so different in aim, and with Raleigh, Milton, Hooker, Browne, and Jeremy Taylor—the earlier masters, some of whom were his masters. His aim and (what is much more important, since high aims are frequent enough) his achievement were from first to last nothing short of the "grand style." And the grand style he attained—his own grand style, which is the ultimate cachet of every writer who reaches the oligarchy of classics.

If, however, we essay to give any account of his style, we are fronted by the difficulty that there are in Ruskin several styles, not merely one. It is the way with every progressive writer. The public has perversely elected to recognise him solely as the author of Modern Painters, and, by choosing certain passages of youthful and sufficiently incontinent eloquence as representative of that book, has formed to itself an idea of "Ruskinese" remote indeed from the matured Ruskin. He was, in our opinion, right in protesting against the assumption that Modern Painters was—even in point of style—his greatest work. The later writings have a far truer, though less clamorous, beauty.

Even in Modern Painters itself (as has been remarked by a delicate critic of Mr. Ruskin's works) there are two styles in conflict. Ruskin had been a scientific student, as well as a student of art; and the scientific side shows itself in the logical and anything but verbose style in which the level portions of the book are couched. There is a manifest effort after clearness and precision. When, on the other hand, his subject-matter gives occasion for some "purple patch" of eloquence, he remembers the seventeenth-century writers, and breaks into those elaborate and vehement passages which support the popular conception of Ruskin. A feminine admirer of his edited a selection from Modern Painters, which he prefaced with his usual benevolence—it is well known. Yet even in such a preface he could not but regret that she had selected preferentially many passages which he did not care to have the public dwell on. In truth, the selection is full of just such passages as those to which we have referred, whereas the master would naturally have chosen more thoughtful or observant work. They are for the most part passages of natural description, and because they represent the popular view of Ruskin cannot be ignored. Nor, for that matter, on their own account. Their defect is, in one word, lack of reticence. Mr. Frederic Harrison has recently noted the over-emphasis of adjectives in such passages; and to this corresponds their outward form, with its too evident endeavour after Nilotic pomps and amplitude of sound. In many cases the sentences are shoreless deluges indeed. He was imitating such men as Hooker, not wisely but too well. The restlessness of adjective, however, is altogether modern; and upon this, more than upon their merits, one may fear the popular approval was founded. Upon this, and upon sensitive sweetness carried here and there to the too-much which is near the sentimental, or the florid. The most successful of these passages were undoubtedly fine, in a deliberate bravura way which we should ungrudgingly applaud, had not their author done so much higher work. The best known is this—a rhapsody on the cloud-forms:

Those war-clouds that gather on the horizon, dragon-crested, tongued with fire—how is their barbed strength bridled? what bits are these they are champing with their vaporous lips; flinging off flakes of black foam? Leagued leviathans of the Sea of Heaven, out of their nostrils goeth smoke, and their eyes are like the eyelids of the morning. The sword of him that layeth at them cannot hold; the spear, the dart, nor the habergeon. Where ride the captains of their armies? Where are set the measures of their march? Fierce murmurers, answering each other from morning until evening—what rebuke is this which has awed them into peace? what hand has reined them back by the way by which they came?"

Fine this is—but to the trained taste has a certain air of effort; not to say that it depends for its effect largely on a cunning pasticcio of Biblical phrases. It is the Ruskin generally admired—not, we think, the greatest Ruskin.

In his work subsequent to Modern Painters the research of precision and lucidity gradually adjusted itself with the romantic instinct; and did so, we think, under the influence of platonic study. The affinity of style in those later lectures is too marked to be accidental. The love of restraint, of terse yet open symmetry had drawn him towards the great Hellenic lecturer whom he often quotes. He acquired something of the Greek's noble limpidity without foregoing his own Gothic spirit of poetry, his own Teutonic love of colour and sensitiveness to external nature. This is for us the authoritative Ruskin; upon this balanced and matured style our estimate of him is based. Let it be said that it is impossible to separate, in this perfected style of his, mechanism from substance. This is as it should be. In the greatest work both are indissoluble; the outward form being the limbs and lineaments of the inward meaning, and without significance apart from it. Despite those leonine roars of invective in which he remembers Carlyle, the true Ruskin is essentially feminine and persuasive. That later style of his is a wonderfully adaptable thing, gracious and pliant, lending itself alike to exposition, description, playfulness, eloquence—all the needs of the lecturer. The old Hellenic verbal teacher was reincarnate in our midst. The sentences were mostly short, unintricate, but ruled by a supreme sense of form. Most subtle and suave, they moved in an atmosphere of exquisite luminosity and clarity. The earlier insistence of adjectives disappears, while the sense of apt and chosen epithet remains. He can be austere in gnostic wisdom, or full of fluent charm in description. And there is no trace of effort. He attains the note of the complete master, the presiding greatness of a sweet and lovely peace. Out of this un-self-conscious style, at grips solely with the explicit delivery of its message, the loftier passages blossom naturally. Such is that on the Cumæan Sibyl of Botticelli in Ariadne Florentina.

Therefore, if anything is to be conceived, rightly, and chiefly, in the form of the Cumæan Sibyl, it must be of fading virginal beauty, of enduring pathos, of far-looking into futurity. . . . She is armed, for she is the prophetess of Roman fortitude; but her faded breast scarcely raises the corslet; her hair floats, not falls, in waves like the current of a river—the sign of enduring life; the light is full on her forehead: she looks into the distance as in a dream. It is impossible for art to gather together more beautifully or intensely every image which can express her true power, or lead us to understand her lesson.

There is no straining after eloquence; but impressiveness is beautifully, because righteously, attained. And the greatness of Ruskin's style at its best is that of most sweet adequacy and entire fulfilment; the adornment not a thing put on, but the expression of an innate grace.

It is, of course, the duty of all good economists, and kind persons, to prove . . . that respect for the dead is not really shown by laying great stones on them to tell us where they are laid; but by remembering where they are laid without a stone to help us; trusting them to the sacred grass and saddened flowers; and still more, that respect and love are shown to them, not by great monuments to them which we build with our hands, but by letting the monuments stand which they built by their own.—John Ruskin in "A Joy for Ever."

G. W. Steevens.

He died at thirty in a beleaguered town thousands of miles from home. The work he did in his few years of life has made his name famous in four continents; yet now, when it is all over, it is the lad himself that lives in the memories of those who knew him. It is strange to think that he whose heart was tender as a girl's, who went to and came home from his campaigns as if they had been summer-day picnics, should be the G. W. Steevens known to the world; but under that modest, amused, enigmatic manner there was grit. He did not talk about what he was going to do, he did it; he was thorough, and he never broke faith; he seemed to do things easily—that was his way; success made no change in him. He was always ready to help others, to give sympathy, to take his share in the interests of his ever widening circle of devoted friends. Through it all that alert, curious, brilliant brain grew, widening and hardening.

GEORGE WARRINGTON STEEVENS.

From a Photograph by Elliot & Fry.

The few years of his working life told upon him, not upon his fine, sweet nature—that never changed—but on his appearance. From the curly-haired boy who came to the Pall Mall Gazette fresh from Oxford, seven years ago, his features developed the keen, resolute look, shown in Mr. John Collier's portrait: battles, and all they mean, brought that. But he himself remained to his friends the child who never grew old; he had all the child's watchfulness, the child's curious interest in the little details of life; he did not speak much in company, but you always knew he was there; he smiled often, but it was the smile of a reflective man, not of a man of action.

He came home from the Dreyfus trial last summer for a fortnight's holiday before starting for South Africa. When Ladysmith was cut off from the world his letters home ceased. It was not known that he had been down with enteric fever till the news that he was recovering was heliographed. The relief of Ladysmith meant that he could be removed to Durban. But it was not to be. One of his last actions before his illness was to send a rose grown in his garden at Ladysmith to the one he loved best—his wife, who devoted her life to him.

Mr. Steevens's Work.

It has been our lot so often to draw attention in this paper to the brilliant qualities of Mr. Steevens's work as a Special Correspondent that we do no more at this time than remark once again upon the happy fortune which laid before his readers so unique a blend of sagacity, sense of colour, forcefulness, and humour. Those arm-chair travellers who prefer to do their globe-trotting by deputy were perfectly safe in Mr. Steevens's hands. He was careful that they missed nothing that was interesting, and he never scamped a description. Not only that: he brought the atmosphere of the country into his pages, giving not merely the particular object but the general spirit.

Consider his industry. For the Daily Mail, a paper only four years of age, he went to America and wrote The Land of the Dollar, to Greece and wrote With the Conquering Turk, to Egypt and wrote Egypt in 1898, to the Soudan and wrote With Kitchener to Khartum, to India and wrote In India, to Rennes and wrote The Tragedy of Dreyfus, to Ladysmith and began From Capetown to Pretoria, doomed, alas! to be unfinished, or finished by other hands. Also, he described Germany in a series of papers, and Paris in a series of papers, and he had begun a new series on London when he left England. And it was all good work, all carefully thought out and shaped, rich in striking phrases, in bold metaphors, in good sense and shrewd insight.

So much for his journalism, by which his name is known, and which often and often overstepped the bounds and became, as in the story of the Battle of Omdurman, literature. Latterly he had been meditating and occasionally working upon a novel, John King, but that, we fear, is only a fragment. One little book, however, he published in 1896, which has not, except by the few, won the recognition it deserves—Monologues of the Dead (Methuen). Here we see the scholar and wit, rollicking in his cleverness. The work is a kind of imaginative gloss upon Gibbon: one by one emperors and other great Romans and Greeks are set up by Mr. Steevens to reveal their innermost thoughts. The medium of the monologue is a fascinating one, and Mr. Steevens handled it with amazing dexterity and with a boldness that almost takes one's breath away, as when Vespasian is given the manner of speech of a vulgar vestryman, or the mother of the Gracchi talks like the late Rose Leclercq in a cynical comedy. But the end justifies the means: Mr. Steevens made his creatures live, even if one may demur now and then to their characterisation. We quote three brief passages from this little volume. This is Alcibiades:

What's that just put in at the quay? The despatch packet from Athens, if I know her. I wonder what the dirty democrats have got to say this time. Give me the tablets; I believe I'm general-admiral. "The Athenian people to Alcibiades, son of . . ." O furies! O earth and hell! O, plague rot the beasts! . . . Ha, ha, ha! I'm not general-admiral after all, it seems . . . Superseded by Styx! Superseded, when to-morrow I was to do the filthy dogs the best turn of their lives! A board of ten and Diomedon for the interim command! Where's Diomedon? O yes, I knew you would be somewhere near. You, you, you're commander here, you morning star of war, and you're a blockhead and a timorous fool to boot, if it's any service to you to know. Take the fleet and the army to hell, inspired Diomedon, by all means. You'll find me there to welcome you. Here, where are my people? Get out a pinnace. Yes, there goes Antiochus, of course, licking his new master's broken boots. I sail to-night for my castle in the Chersonnese. And this is the cursed Government I was idiot enough to save four years gone! Put the girls aboard—that new girl Phryne with them. Three or four of you go into the city and offer the rhapsode—the tolerably good rhapsode; you know him, I suppose, dolts?—offer him a talent to come too. If he won't, carry him. He shall recite me the Wrath of Achilles. Ha, ha! Run her out there, lads, handsomely, handsomely.

Thus Xanthippe talks to a stranger who has questioned her concerning Socrates:

Well, and then you know what he did when he was in prison. You must know that, because Plato put it in a book. I don't like Plato; he stares so hard and steady at you, just like Socrates used to, till you don't know where to look. But about the prison; you know what he did the last night? Gossiped with his young men, and me and the boys outside, crying our eyes out. Well, then, when we went in, I just burst out, bad husband and all as he'd been to me, I couldn't help it. Any wife worth the name would have done the same in my place. Then what does he do, the cruel wretch, but have me sent away—carried out by his men friends, I trouble you. You wouldn't catch me crying for him again. Then dying without leaving me an obol! If it hadn't been for Plato, we should have all starved, and he did about as little for us as he well could.

What say? I've forgotten the most important thing about him? Well, I like that. If his own wife didn't know him, who should, I'd like to know? A philosopher? A philosopher! Ah, I don't know; I can't tell you anything about that.

And here are some of Caligula's ravings:

I am perpetual: perpetual am I! I shall pile up all the gold of the world and swallow it. I shall cut the throats of all the world, men and women and babies, and drink the blood. Then I shall wax and swell till I burst through heaven and squash the stars like flies on the walls of space. Then I shall shove down outwards, and extend on and on, for ever and ever and ever. There will exist nothing, nothing at all; only I. Great, perfect, only, all I! Oh! I . . . I . . . I . . .

The Monologues of the Dead were published in 1896, but written earlier, and contributed partly to the National Observer, where much of Mr. Steevens's uncollected work is to be found, and partly to the New Review. That is to say, they were written when their author was somewhere in the early twenties. A man who, having such a wonderful University record as Mr. Steevens, could do such work then, and in his late twenties could become the trump card of the leading London democratic newspaper, must have had a great and unique career before him.

The Amateur Critic.

[To this page we invite our readers to contribute criticism, favourable or otherwise, of books new and old, or remarks on striking or curious passages which they may meet with in their reading. No communication, we would point out, must exceed 300 words.]

How I Think of Blackmore.

I DON'T want to know what the newspapers are saying about him. The friend who said, "Blackmore is dead," said it very quietly, as such a thing about such a man should be said, and he told me he was grown old when he left this noisy place for the smiling placidity of the Elysian Fields. But I am not to be persuaded of his age: to me he is imperishably young, and brave, and good; one who loved lovers, and all fair and gracious and wholesome things. Novelists and poets who keep out of the crowd, to be seen of it, are wise. Once I passed an evening with a distinguished poet, and I have never since been able to read his poetry with just the same pleasure; he said a thing that made me see his feet of clay, and the spell was broken. And quite lately I was in the company of an equally distinguished novelist, and now his books have lost something of their charm for me. But there has been no such fatal intimacy in the case of Blackmore: the enchantment of his imaginative atmosphere remains. You need not begin to say he was this or that as a writer; I am so poor a critic that, if I listen, I shall not heed. I know nothing of his personal life, but I do know and love his books, and I know, too (or at least believe), that in creative art the artist must needs reveal his true, his profoundest self. There is a great, strong calm, a lucid honesty about him, and in fretful moments I like to be under his influence. I think of him as one who worked in the ideal way—the remembrance in tranquillity. Surrender to him is so easy that I have come strangely to fancy the touch of his hand on mine. He says to me: "Be not over anxious." He has little of the spirit of revolt, so he is not for all seasons; he is not of the greatest, I suppose. He cannot appall me in the deeps: he has never brought me to my knees by taking me to the mouth of hell. But in the quiet ways he is a very gentle, solacing guide. He is a scholar, and writes like a gentleman. His is the style of absolute sanity; and the treasures of the humble are in his thoughts. He has sweetened many an hour for me, lifted me gently out of many a psychologic morass. I can read him in bed, and there is no ironical smile when I wake and see him lying beside the Bible. He is so clean and manly, and so English in his prejudices. He is the last of the supreme painters of old-fashioned heroes and heroines; he loves the country; from the wayside comes his cheery voice: "Good morning, Cripps; good morning to you!" I can hear him call. And so I am not going to let myself be disenchanted. I shall continue to think of him as one living in a beautiful old English garden, now radiant in the sunshine of spring, summer, autumn, now mystical under hoarfrost and the winter moon—and the lovelier mystery of lovers' secrets. And I am sure there is an orchard; for do I not see the apple blossoms on a sapphire sky? And I am sure there is a farmyard; for do I not see those glorious Aylesburys waddling down to the horse-pond? So let me think of him! And if it is not all quite right—well—after all, the most precious things in life are one's idealised thoughts of good men.

V. BROWN.

Ruskin on War.

WHAT a bewildering teacher Ruskin is! To think that he of all men should favour war. Just now I picked up The Crown of Wild Olive, and on page 116 I find this passage:

All the pure and noble arts of peace are founded on war; no great art ever yet rose on earth, but among a nation of soldiers. There is no art among a shepherd people, if it remains at peace. . . . There is no great art possible to a nation but that which is based on battle.

I for one do not read Ruskin for his opinions. I read him for his magnificent prose. Again and again his phrases arrest and gladden one like a sudden burst of sunshine. In the same volume is a passage that always leaps to my mind whenever I read of the swift awful killing of brave men in South Africa:

The more I thought over what I had got to say, the less I found I could say it, without some reference to this intangible or intractable question [as to whether his audience believed or disbelieved in Eternal Life]. It made all the difference, in asserting any principle of war, whether one assumed that a discharge of artillery would merely knead down a certain quantity of once living clay into a level line, as in a brickfield; or whether, out of every separately Christian-named portion of the ruinous heap, there went out, into the smoke and dead-fallen air of battle, some astonished condition of soul, unwillingly released.

How it tells, especially the last lines! There is style, there is temperament, there is literature!

CHARLES QUARTERMAIN.

Correspondence.

"Love's Comedy."

SIR,—Permit me to correct an erroneous statement which, through no fault of yours, occurs in your reference to my forthcoming translation of Ibsen's Love's Comedy in last week's ACADEMY. You say that having been "asked by the Daily Mail for a specimen of his translation" I "obliged with" the passage which you quote. I am not a reader of the Daily Mail, and I have not seen, or desired to see, the reference to me in its columns upon which your statement is doubtless based. But I am bound to say that if the Daily Mail has incurred any "obligations" in the matter, at my hands, it is by publishing this extract from my work, without my authority or knowledge, as if it directly emanated from me. I have had no communications whatever with the Daily Mail, or with anyone to my knowledge connected with it, on this or any other subject, at this or any other time. In May or June last, however, I did supply this extract to an acquaintance in the Press, with leave to make use of it, which he did shortly afterwards in an American paper. I do not therefore blame the Daily Mail for having published the extract, which it had a right to do, but for completely disguising the circumstances under which it came by it; and even here I conceive that the editor was merely misled by one of his purveyors of "information."—I am, &c., Jan. 24, 1900.

C. H. HERFORD.

Other Versions.

SIR,—Mr. Arthur Maquarie's poetically-charming translation will probably have the effect of deterring others from entering the lists. But, with all due respect, I hold him to have erred by not being more literal.

The following lines will be found fairly exact as a translation, though they may lack beauty:

For you I threw God from my mind,
My hopes of bright heaven I threw,
And now I find myself left
Without God, without heaven—or you:
For you I threw God from my mind,
My hopes of bright heaven I threw.

It is an agreeable change to find anyone trying to arouse a little interest in the rich literature of the Peninsula.—I am, &c.,

Jan. 22, 1900.

R. E. G. S.

SIR,—The following seems to me a closer translation than Mr. Maquarie's of the Spanish rondel, and I think would sing better, one of the objects of the original. Can he fix the date?

For thee my God forgot,
For thee my honour lost,
Now there remaineth not
That love of priceless cost.
Lo, there remaineth not
Thee, God, nor honour's boast;
For thee I God forgot!
For thee my honour lost!

—I am, &amp;c.,

Jan. 20, 1900.

AMES SAYLE.

The Chastity of Flowers.

SIR,—It seems your correspondent, Mr. W. F. Collier, errs as much in one way as "S. G. O." does in another. The passage round which the discussion has arisen is:

The moon methinks looks with a watery eye;
And when she weeps, weeps every little flower,
Lamenting some enforced chastity.

Now, I think if Shakespearo, whose descriptions of nature are as accurate as they are beautiful, had intended the "chastity" to be that of the flowers themselves he would not have employed the indefinite "some," but would have written:

. . . weeps every little flower,
Lamenting its enforced chastity.

The "chastity" is not that of flowers, but of human beings, or perhaps fairies, and the crux lies solely in the meaning of "enforced," and not in a question of botanical knowledge at all; although I am willing to believe, on the evidence of other passages, that Shakespeare divined the sexes of flowers.

On reference to Schmidt we find that Shakespeare used the word enforced very often, and in the following senses: to constrain, compel, provoke, obtain by force, to open with violence, urge, demand, lay stress upon, put in act with severity, and to violate.

I think it will be found, however, that where the expression is employed in direct reference to feminine chastity the sense is invariably that of violation. See "Henry V.," V. ii., 328; "Richard III.," III. vii., 8; "Cymbeline," IV. i., 18; and "Lucrece," 1623.

Mr. Collier's example, "an enforced smile," is beside the mark. One cannot compare a smile to chastity.—I am, &c., S. WELLWOOD.

Cathcart: Jan. 20, 1900.

[This correspondence must now cease.—ED. ACADEMY.]

New Books Received.

[These notes on some of the New Books of the week are preliminary to Reviews that may follow.]

RICHARD WAGNER'S PROSE
WORKS. Vol. VIII.

TRANSLATED BY WILLIAM ASHTON ELLIS.

Mr. Ellis has now achieved his long and remarkable task of doing Wagner's voluminous prose works into English. In this volume he gives us posthumous writings and fragments of Wagner, "embracing all but half a century, from the first æsthetic criticism of youth . . . to the last philosophic reflection of the master within two days of immortality." (Kegan Paul. 12s. 6d. net.)

DRAMATIC CRITICISM.

BY J. T. GREIN.

Many playgoers, and particularly those who hold advanced ideas, will be glad to have in volume form these criticisms on plays and dramatic questions of 1898. They include papers on "An Academy of Acting," "The Grave Responsibilities of Dramatic Criticism," &c. Among the plays considered are Sudermann's "Johannes," "Pelleas and Melisande," "The Ambassador," "Cyrano de Bergerac," "Robespierre," &c. A preface and a better arrangement of the title section of the book would have been an improvement. (John Long.)

LIGHT AND SHADOWS OF A LONG EPISCOPATE.

BY DR. HENRY BENJAMIN
WHIPPLE.

Dr. Whipple was, and is, the first Bishop of Manitoba. The interest of the book centres, of course, in Dr. Whipple's well-known work among the Indians. In the fierce Indian wars of the sixties he played an important part as a peacemaker, and the pages in which he recalls these stirring years are remarkable reading. (Macmillan.)

THE MIRAGE OF TWO BURIED CITIES.

BY JOHN FLETCHER HORNE, M.D.

This work makes no pretensions to profound scholarship. It is as a "mere tourist" that Dr. Horne has visited and studied Pompeii and Herculaneum, and the book before us is really an expansion of a brochure on the same subject which he wrote years ago. As a popular, well-illustrated account of the buried cities of Vesuvius, Dr. Horne's work is full of excellence—is, indeed, a fascinating book. (Hazell, Watson & Viney, Ltd.)

EXPERIMENTS ON ANIMALS.

BY STEPHEN PAGET.

Mr. Paget is not himself directly interested in his subject, but, as Secretary of the Association for the Advancement of Research by Medicine, he has had to give close attention to its polemical aspects. His aim is to state, and prove, the good that has resulted from the researches condemned by the Anti-Vivisection party. Lord Lister contributes a brief introduction. (Unwin.)

POTTERY AND PORCELAIN.

BY FREDERICK LITCHFIELD.

Although this beautiful book is an expansion of Mr. Litchfield's handbook on the same subject, it is virtually a new work. It embodies all the information of the handbook, but the list of Ceramic factories, with their marks and monograms, has been lengthened, and revision and augmentation are the rule everywhere. Carefully arranged, and admirably illustrated from choice examples in public and private collections, the book forms an alluring guide to its subject. (Truslove, Hanson, & Comba, Ltd. 15s. net.)

AMONG HORSES IN RUSSIA.

BY CAPTAIN M. H. HAYES.

Captain Hayes has produced a small library of books on the horse. In this new work he tells us that he is the first foreigner who has been allowed to visit the Remount Depôts of the Russian Cavalry Reserve. The information he collected in those visits is the core of the book; but there is much pleasant chit-chat besides. Having now studied horses in England, India, and Russia, Captain Hayes hopes to visit Australia and New Zealand on the same congenial errand. (R. A. Everett & Co.)

OLD LONDON TAVERNS.

BY EDWARD CALLOW.

Mr. Callow has drawn upon the treasures of a long memory. In 1845 he was a City clerk, taking his meals at the old City chop houses, of which few examples remain. In these pages, transferred with revision from the columns of the City Press, Mr. Callow talks about all the old taverns and coffee houses and eating houses he can remember, and some which he cannot. The book is clearly arranged and fairly well illustrated. (Downey & Co. 6s.)

A KIPLING PRIMER.

BY FREDERIC LAWRENCE KNOWLES.

This is the second study of Mr. Kipling's writings issued within a year. We believe that a third is on the way. The book before us was originally prepared for American readers. Mr. Knowles considers Mr. Kipling's characteristics under such heads as "Originality," "Imperialism," "Treatment of Nature," "Characterisation," "Mastery of the Short Story," &c. More than half the book is devoted to a descriptive index of Mr. Kipling's writings. (Chatto.)

ST. PETER IN ROME.

BY ARTHUR STAPYLTON BARNES.

The intention of Mr. Barnes is succinctly expressed in the last sentence of his book. He "will feel himself amply rewarded if he has . . . contributed something to the historical basis on which we hold it to be a most certain fact that the prince of the apostles lived and died in Rome, and is buried beneath the glorious dome of the greatest church that Christendom has ever known." (Sonnenschein.)

THE YEAR'S ART, 1900.

ED. BY A. C. R. CARTER.

The twenty-first issue of this indispensable handbook has a series of portraits of the more prominent workers in Decorative Art. An article on "Applied Art," by Mr. Edward F. Strange, appears for the first time. (Virtue.)

In addition to the foregoing, we have received :

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

- Hogg (Quintin), The Story of Peter, From Bethsaida to Babylon (Marshall & Son) 5/0
 Conder (Col. C. R.), The Hebrew Tragedy..... (Blackwood)
 Miller (Edward), A Textual Commentary upon the Holy Gospels (Bell & Sons) 5/0
 Banks (John S.), The Development of Doctrine..... (Kelly)

POETRY, CRITICISM, AND BELLES LETTRES.

- Masterman (Charles F. G.), Tennyson as a Religious Teacher... (Methuen) 6/0
 Mellows (E. G.), The Story of English Literature..... (Methuen) 3/6
 Bell (J. J.), Songs of the Hour..... (Scotts Pictorial Pub. Co.) 1/3

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

- Conybeare (Edward), Alfred in the Chronicles..... (Stock)
 List (Franz), Life of Chopin..... (Reeves)
 Hurley (Lewis R.), Francis Lieber..... (Columbia Univ. Press) net 7/6
 Crofton (H. T.), A History of the Ancient Chapel of Stretford. Vol. I. (Chetham Society)

EDUCATIONAL.

- Pendlebury (Charles), A Short Course of Elementary Plane Trigonometry (Bell & Sons)

NEW EDITIONS.

- Fesquellé (L.), Lessons in French..... (Cassell)
 Coleridge (S. T.), The Rime of the Ancient Mariner..... (Gay & Bird) 5/0
 Brons (Charlotte), The Professor, with an Introduction by Mrs. Hamphrey Ward..... (Smith, Elder) 6/0

* * New Novels are acknowledged elsewhere.

Candidates for the Vocabulary.

Our Weekly Competition.

Result of No. 18 (New Series).

In response to our invitation for new words—or rather for old words worthy of revivification—a crowd of claimants reach us. The best list, we think, is that sent by Mrs. G. Browne, 39, Rodney-street, Liverpool, because at least four of her words are not mere synonyms, but convey a meaning not now conveyed by any one word. Unless a synonym is a very good or pretty one (as “bird-alone” for “solitary,” for example), there is no advantage in adding it to the vocabulary. Thus “yare,” which someone advocates, is no better than “nimble,” its equivalent. This is Mrs. Browne’s list:—

1. Elamping. Enlightening like a lamp. A word suitable for cyclists.

“As when the cheerful sun, elamping wide,
 Glads all the world with his uprising ray.”

G. Fletcher.

2. Commorient. Dying together. A good word in time of war. “To which may be added equal and common constellations, the same compant and commorient fates and times.”—Sir G. Buck.

3. Bejade. To weary. “But if you have no mercy upon them, yet spare yourself lest you bejade the good galloway.”—Milton.

4. Fulvid. Tawny yellow. Too poetical a word for this century, perhaps.

“And colours to the life depaint
 The fulvid eagle with her sun bright eye.”

Moré’s “Psychozia.”

5. Fardel. A package, bundle, burden, &c. “You could hardly cross a street, but you met him puffing and blowing with his fardel of nonsense under his arm.”—Dryden.

6. Fridge. To dance or play about. “The little motes or atoms that fridge and play in the beams of the sun.”—Hollywell (1681).

To Mrs. Browne a cheque has been posted. Other lists besides hers and those quoted below contain each one or two words with strong claims to be taken again into use. Among them we find: “Dimpsee,” n. “twilight”; “Tirrines,” n. “fits of passion”; “Inwyt,” n. “conscience”; “Resplend,” v. “to be resplendent”; “Wimple,” v. “to wind like a brook”; “Cantelous,” adj. “crafty”; “Purle,” v. “to ornament with trimmings”; “Lurdane,” adj. “stupid.”

Other lists follow:

1. Assentation. Flattering, lip assent. According to Trench the word was last used by Bishop Hall: “It is a fearful presage of ruin when the prophets conspire in assentation.”

2. Malapert. A word whose meaning lies between insolent and pert.

3. Maugre. As the English language is too monosyllabic, this preposition might be used instead of the periphrasis “in spite of.”

4. Gentleness. The character or qualities of a gentleman. We have no abstract noun with this significance.

5. Oerpart. Shakespeare uses the participle oerparted of an actor unable to sustain his rôle.

6. Ansoil. This word could be used for “absolved,” “discharged,” in cases where there is no sense of legal acquittal.

[F. G. C., Hull.]

Each of the following words, now fallen into desuetude, is to be found in the writings of old masters, and each, I think, conveys a shade of meaning distinctly its own, which would be lacking in the substitution of any single word in popular use at the present time:

1. Squiny. In the sense of squinty, awry, crooked.
2. Royish. In the sense of mean, mangy, despicable.
3. Imp'ne. In the sense of to wager.
4. Poison. In the sense of plenty, abundance.
5. Sortance. In the sense of adequacy, suitability.
6. Squarer. An argumentative, contentious person.
7. Hook. In the sense of to harbour or shelter.
8. Subdolous. In the sense of deceitful, subtle, sly.

But there were only to be six.

[C. R. B., Shirley.]

1. Agnize. To acknowledge or confess.

“... I do agnize
 A natural and prompt alacrity.”

Shakespeare’s “Othello.”

2. Birdalone. Solitary. “Then fared she forth birdalone.”—William Morris.

3. Dole. Grief. “Then made they all great dole because of hym.”—Malory.

4. Latered. Delayed. “As when a man is latered or tarried.”—Chaucer.

5. Noyaus. Hurtful. “There is a virtue that is called fortitudo or strength that is an affection through which a man despiseth noyous things.”—Chaucer.

6. Wanhope. Despair. “Now cometh wanhope that is despair.”—Chaucer.

[E. U., London.]

1. Algate (conjunction). Expresses the idea “at any risk,” “at all costs,” by a single word.

“And that to late is now for me to rewe,
 To Dyomede algate I wol be trewe”—Chaucer.

2. Busk (verb). To prepare oneself, to get ready to go. No word in present use quite expresses the idea. “Busked hem to the boure.”—Piers the Plowman.

3. Derworth (adjective). Combines the ideas of affection and value. “It is as derworth a dremery,” &c.—Piers the Plowman.

4. Hade (noun). A better word than either “deceit” or “slope” to describe the descent of a hill.

5. Litherness (noun). Want of moral courage—an English anagram, e.g., in perhaps a slightly different sense. “Let her [Philosophy] hardly remit this vocal litherness unto evill.”—Florio’s “Montaigne.”

6. Wanhope (noun). Hope which has turned to despair. “Well ought I sterve in wanhope and distresse.”—Chaucer’s “Knight’s Tale.”

[A. T. G., Malvern.]

Answers received also from F. M. D., London; E. S. H., Bradford; “Abbot,” Winchester; E. T. P., London; T. C., Buxted; E. L., Burton; G. M. P., Birmingham; C. W., London; M. A. C., Cambridge; M. A. W., Watford; G. N., Bristol; S. C., Brighton; E. H., Didsbury; S. B. F., Crediton; R. M. C., Whitby; M. B. C., Egham; and C. S. J. C., Edinburgh.

Prize Competition No. 19 (New Series).

EVERYONE knows Lamb’s Popular Fallacies, in which he takes one by one certain well-worn aphorisms, as “Enough is as good as a feast,” “Handsome is as handsome does,” and so forth, and riddles them until they have not a leg to stand on, at any rate, as accurate generalities. We offer a prize of a guinea to the best exposure of a popular fallacy on similar lines. In no case must 150 words be exceeded.

RULES.

Answers, addressed “Literary Competition, The ACADEMY, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.,” must reach us not later than the first post of Tuesday, January 30. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found in the first column of p. 92 or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. We wish to impress on competitors that the task of examining replies is much facilitated when one side only of the paper is written upon. It is also important that names and addresses should always be given: we cannot consider anonymous answers.

OUR SPECIAL PRIZE COMPETITIONS.

(For particulars see inside page of cover.)

Received: Nottim, Eboracum, The Outsiders, Lorentia, Moods, Warrington, Bouillon de Garcon.

THE Publishers of a high-class Monthly Magazine are seeking a smart, energetic young GENTLEMAN to take charge of the Advertisements.—Apply, stating previous experience, to "ADVERTISER," "ACADEMY" Office, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

JAMES YATES, ex-Public Librarian, Leeds, F.R.H.S., M.L.R., M.L.A. (U.S.), is prepared to undertake the ARRANGING and CATALOGUING of PRIVATE & LIBRARIES. For terms and testimonials as to capacity and trustworthiness from typical men as late Mr. Bernard Quaritch, Dr. Richard Garnett, British Museum, and others, address 15, Park Lane, Leeds.

CATALOGUES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS.

14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick St.
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.

New fully detailed CATALOGUE sent post free on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

W. M. VOYNICH

Has OPENED an OFFICE at

1, SOHO SQUARE, W.,

Where he has on view a COLLECTION of

XV. & XVI. CENTURY BOOKS, EARLY
AMERICANA, &c.

The List of Unknown and Lost Books is in Preparation.
Office Hours, 10-1 and 2-5.

BOOKS WANTED.—25s. each offered.—
Stevenson's Edinburgh, 1879—Tennyson's Poems, 1830—
Symonds's Age of the Despots, 1875—Symonds's Essays, 2 vols.,
1890—Symonds's Sketches and Studies in Italy, 1879—Inland
Voyage, 1878—New Arabian Nights, 2 vols., 1892—Hawback
Grange, 1847—Wild Wales, 3 vols., 1882—Moore's Alps in 1864—
Scorpe's Salmon Fishing, 1843—Crowe's Painting in Italy, 5 vols., 1864-71—King Glumpus: an Interlude, 1837. Rare Books
supplied.—BAKER'S GREAT BOOKSHOP, BIRMINGHAM.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.
—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class
Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet
Street, E.C.4., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines
for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built
Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page
Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence
New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices free. Advertising and Publishing Departments connected.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

TYPE-WRITING.—Authors' MSS., Plays,
Legal and Scientific Documents, &c., at usual rates.
Translations from and into Foreign Languages.—W. T. CURTIS,
10, Harringay Park, Crouch End, London, N.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately
done. 10d. per 1,000 words. Samples and references.
Multi-Copies.—Address, Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on
DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums
on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

"THE ACADEMY" LITERARY COMPETITIONS.

New Series.—No. 19.

All readers attempting this week's
Competition (described fully on page
91) must cut out this Coupon
and enclose it with their reply.

WIMBLEDON HIGH SCHOOL.—Mrs.
J. T. TRENCH receives GIRLS as BOARDERS at Lyndenhurst, Woodside, Wimbledon. Reference permitted to Miss Hastings, Head Mistress, the Marquis and Marchioness
of Lansdowne, Bishop and Mrs. Barry, Col. and Mrs. Chenevix
Trench, and others.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, Cooper's Hill, Staines.

The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for Employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40
Students will be admitted in September, 1900. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition—Twelve Appointments
as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphs Department, One to the Accountants' Branch
P.W.D., and One to the Traffic Department Indian State
Railway.—For particulars apply to SECRETARY at College.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY

(LIMITED).

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of
all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN
SPANISH, and RUSSIAN BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA
per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS
per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUB-
SCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis
and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in
TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY,
SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SUR-
PLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN,
SPANISH, and RUSSIAN BOOKS.

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; 43, Queen Victoria

Street, E.C., LONDON;

And at Barton Arcade, MANCHESTER.

A CHARMING GIFT BOOK!

6s., claret roan, gilt, Illustrated.

LONDON IN THE TIME OF THE DIAMOND JUBILEE.

London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Llangollen: Darlington & Co.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S. Maps by BARTHOLOMEW.

Fcap. 8vo.

ONE SHILLING EACH.

Illustrated.

THE VALE OF LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J.
PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING;
A. W. KINGLAKE, and Sir THEODORE MARTIN K.O.B.

BOURNEMOUTH and NEW FOREST.

THE NORTH WALES COAST.

BRECON and its BEACONS.

ROSS, TINTERN, and CHEPSTOW.

BRISTOL, BATH, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

BRIGHTON, EASTBOURNE, HASTINGS, and ST. LEONARDS.

LLANDUDNO, RHYL, BANGOR, BETTWSYCOED, and SNOWDON.

ABERYSTWYTH, BARMOUTH, MACHYNLETH, and ABERDOVEY.

BARMOUTH, DOLGELLY, HARLECH, CRICIETH, and PWLLHELL.

MALVERN, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, GLOUCESTER, and CHELTENHAM.

LLANDRINDOD WELLS and the SPAS of MID-WALES.

1s.—THE HOTELS of the WORLD. A Handbook to the leading hotels throughout the world.

"What would not the intelligent tourist in Paris or Rome give for such a guide-book as this, which teaches so much that is outside the usual scope of such volumes!"—The Times.
"The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.

SECOND EDITION, ENLARGED, 5s.—60 Illustrations, 24 Maps and Plans.

LONDON AND ENVIRONS

By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.

With an additional Index of 4,500 References to all Streets and Places of Interest

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & CO.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Ltd., The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

SHAMELESS WAYNE. By Halliwell Sut-
CLIFFE. 6s.

THROUGH FIRE to FORTUNE. By Mrs.
ALEXANDER. 6s.

A WHITE WOMAN in CENTRAL AFRICA.
By HELEN CADDICK. With 16 Illustrations. Crown
8vo, cloth, 6s.

FOOTBALL, HOCKEY, and LACROSSE. By BETTY PEGAN, TINSLEY LINDLEY, J. C. ISARD, and H. PREVOST BATTERSBY. (The Sports Library.)
Fully Illustrated. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

A NEW NOVEL by HÉLÈNE GINGOLD.
THE CHILLINGFIELD CHRONICLES. By the Author of "Deayze," "A Cycle of Verse," &c. With Photogravure Portrait of the Author as Frontispiece.
Cloth, 6s. A story of English life in the reign of Queen
Anne. Full of incident and adventure.

A REPRINT OF A FAMOUS POEM.
THE ASCENT of MAN. By Mathilde
BLIND. With an Introduction by ALFRED RUSSELL
WALLACE. Edition de Luxe, 10s. 6d. "A work of great courage, and it is all the more welcome on account of its freshness of theme and the many felicities of thought and expression with which it is starred."—Glasgow Herald.
Illustrated List sent free on application.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 1012.—FEBRUARY, 1900.—2s. 6d.

SHOT, SHELL, and BULLETS.—"THEY DIE NOT."
By R. L. A.—THE TORY FUTURE.—BUSH-WHACK-
ING.—II. By HUGH CLIFFORD.—A LIGHT of THESE DAYS.—FROM A COUNTRY-HOUSE IN NEW ZEA-LAND. By Mrs. BOYD.—LORD JIM: A SKETCH
CHAPS. X., XI. By JOSEPH CONRAD.—THE LOW NILE
OF 1899, AND THE COTTON CROP OF 1900.—MARIA
JOSEPHA. By G. S. STREET.—NEW TROUT-FISH-ERIES. By JOHN BICKERDYKE.—ODD VOLUMES.—
III. By Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, BART., M.P.—
MUSINGS WITHOUT METHOD.—ONE MAN, ONE BOOK—
THE USE and ABUSE of DIARIES.—A HERBARIUM OF POETS AND STATESMEN—SIR ALGERNON WEST'S CONFESSIONS.—THE IN-DISCRETION of NICKNAMES.—THE DANGERS of DINING OUT.—
PANTOMIMES NEW and OLD.—PATRIOTISM BEHIND the FOOT-LIGHTS.—JOURNALISM and the WAR.—G. W. STERNS.—A WORD to CONSERVATIVES.—THE WAR OPERA-TIONS in SOUTH AFRICA.—III.—SOUTH AFRICAN POLITICAL PROSPECTS.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH and LONDON.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman,
experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by
letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 151, Strand, London, W.C.

CATALOGUES.

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS of FREE LIBRARIES.—The FEBRUARY CATALOGUES of Valuable SECOND-HAND WORKS and NEW RE-MAINERS, offered at prices greatly reduced, are Now Ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & SON, Library Department, 136, Strand, London, W.C.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick St.
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

W. M. VOYNICH

Has OPENED an OFFICE at

1, SOHO SQUARE, W.,

Where he has on view a COLLECTION of

XV. & XVI. CENTURY BOOKS, EARLY AMERICANA, &c.

The List of Unknown and Lost Books is in Preparation.
Office Hours, 10-1 and 2-5.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING and PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.
—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 32, or 64-page Journals at one operation.

Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

MUDIE'S LIBRARY

(LIMITED).

SUBSCRIPTIONS for 3 Months, 6 Months, and 12 Months

CAN BE ENTERED AT ANY DATE.

THE BEST and MOST POPULAR BOOKS of the SEASON are NOW in CIRCULATION.

Prospectuses of Terms free on application.

BOOK SALE DEPARTMENT.

Many Thousand Surplus Copies of Books always on SALE (Second Hand). Also a large Selection of

BOOKS IN LEATHER BINDINGS

SUITABLE FOR

BIRTHDAY and WEDDING PRESENTS.

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; 43, Queen Victoria Street, E.C., LONDON;

And at 10-12, Barton Arcade, MANCHESTER.

"THE ACADEMY"
LITERARY COMPETITIONS.
New Series.—No. 20.

All readers attempting this week's Competition (described fully on page 112) must cut out this Coupon and enclose it with their reply.

THE PRINCESS HELENA COLLEGE,
EALING, W.

Established 1820. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1886.
President—H.R.H. the PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.
High-class education for the DAUGHTERS of GENTLEMEN, as Resident or Day Pupils. Preparation for University and Art Examinations. Spacious grounds. Supervision to games.

Training department for kindergarten students in preparation for Froebel Union Examination for Teachers.
There is a Home in connection with the College for K.G. Students and for a few children under ten years of age.

MARGARET WILLIAMSON, Lady Principal.

MISS LOUISA DREWRY gives LECTURES, Readings, and Lessons in English Language and Literature and kindred subjects; Examinations; and Helps Students by Letter and in her Reading Society. She has time for more SCHOOL-CLASSES and PRIVATE PUPILS.—143, King Henry's Road, London, N.W.

PELMAN'S SCHOOL of MEMORY-TRAINING requires REPRESENTATIVE to VISIT PROVINCIAL TOWNS. Graduate preferred. Must have business capability. References required.—Apply, by letter only, to THE SECRETARY, 70, Berners Street, London, W.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, Cooper's Hill, Staines.

The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for Employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1900. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition—Twelve Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphs Department, One in the Accountants' Branch P.W.D., and One in the Traffic Department Indian State Railway.—For particulars apply to SECRETARY at College.

TYPE-WRITING.—Authors' MSS., Plays, Legal and Scientific Documents, &c., at usual rates. Translations from and into Foreign Languages.—W. T. CURTIS, 10, Harringay Park, Crouch End, London, N.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. 10d. per 1,000 words. Samples and references. Multi-Copies.—Address, Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TRAFALGAR LITERARY and TYPE-WRITING BUREAU (DE MOMET & WALKER), 3, Trafalgar Buildings, Northumberland Avenue, W.C.—Typing, Duplicating, Short-hand Reporting, Translations (all Languages). Literary Researches. Press Cuttings.

TYPE-WRITER.—AUTHORS' MSS. COPIED with accuracy and despatch. Carbon Duplicates. Circulans, Examination Papers, &c.—Miss E. TIGAN, 23, Matfield Park Villas, Haverstock Hill, N.W.—Established 1884.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 151, Strand, London, W.C.

BOOKS WANTED.—25s. each offered.—Stevenson's Edinburgh, 1879—Tennyson's Poems, 1830—Symonds's Age of the Despots, 1875—Symonds's Essays, 2 vols. 1890—Symonds's Sketches and Studies in Italy, 1879—Inland Voyage, 1878—New Arabian Nights, 2 vols. 1882—Hawback Grange, 1847—Wild Wales, 3 vols. 1862—Moore's Alps in 1864—Scrope's Salmon Fishing, 1843—Crows's Painting in Italy, 3 vols. 1864—King Glumpus: an Interlude, 1837. Rare Books Supplied.—BAKER'S GREAT BOOKSHOP, BIRMINGHAM.

FOR SALE.—12 Vols. of ROBERTSON'S HISTORIES—Charles V., Scotland, America. "New Edition," 1817. Bound in leather. In perfectly good condition.—Address Mrs. M., Office of the ACADEMY.

PUBLISHING COMPANY.—FOR SALE, 200 £1 SHARES, yielding 10 per cent. at 21s. Lot £200. Aggregate dividends last six years, 55 per cent.—Address Mrs. W., 9, Champion Grove, Deumark Hill, London.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

MONTHLY, PRICE HALF-A-CROWN.

The CONTEMPORARY REVIEW
CONTENTS FOR FEBRUARY.

LESSONS of the WAR. By MILES.

RECOLLECTIONS of JAMES MARTINEAU. By FRANCES POWER COBBE.

PERSONAL IMPRESSIONS of DR. MARTINEAU. By PHILIP H. WICKSTEED.

THE TRAGEDY of ERRORS. By the Hon. AUBREON HERBERT.

THE ETHICS of CRITICISM. By ROBERT BUCHANAN.

SAMOA. By R. WARDLAW THOMPSON.

FOOD-STUFFS as CONTRABAND of WAR. By THOMAS BARCLAY (Member of the Institute of International Law).

FRENCH WOMEN in INDUSTRY. By ADA CONE.

THE K-FOLK, the Q-FOLK, and the P-FOLK. By Professor R. S. CONWAY, Litt.D.

EUGENE FROMENTIN. By NORMAN HAFSGOOD.

THE AMERICAN NEGRO of TO-DAY. By PHILIP ALEXANDER BACKE.

A CRY for CAPACITY. By H. W. MASSINGHAM.

London: THE COLUMBUS COMPANY (Limited), Columbus House, 43 and 45A, Fetter Lane, E.C.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY

No. 276.—FEBRUARY, 1900.

THE "CONFUSION WORSE CONFOUNDED" at the WAR OFFICE. By the late General Sir GEORGE CHESNEY. With an Introduction by SPENSER WILKINSON.

THE MILITIA. By the Right Hon. Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P.

THE MILITIA BALLOT. By the Right Hon. VISCOUNT DE VESCI, late Coldstream Guards and Lieut.-Colonel Commanding Honourable Artillery Company.

OUR PEACE TRAINING for WAR. GUILTY or NOT GUILTY? By Colonel LONSDALE HALE.

DR. MIVART on the CONTINUITY of CATHOLICISM. By the Rev. Father CLARK E. S.J.

THE TWO REPORTS of the LICENSING COMMISSION. By the Right Hon. Sir ALGERNON WEST, K.C.B., Vice-Chairman.

THE GEORGICS of VIRGIL, Book II, lines 459-512. By the Right Hon. LORD BURGHCLERE.

THE NEW MYSTICISM in SCANDINAVIA. By Miss HERMIONE RAMSDEN.

ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING and the MUNICIPALITIES. By A. A. CAMPBELL SWINTON, M.Inst.C.E.

HARMONIC LITERATURE. By JOSEPH H. CHOATE, Junior.

ANCIENT EGYPTIAN CERAMIC ART. By HENRY WALLIS.

SOME STRAY SHOTS and a MORAL. By R. B. TOWNSEND.

IN the ALPS of DAUPHINE. By Miss GERTRUDE LOWTHIAN BELL.

NEUTRALS and the WAR. By JOHN MACDONELL, C.B.

THE NEWSPAPERS. By Sir WEMYSS REID.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LTD

LONDON LIBRARY, St. James's Square, S.W.

Patron—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G. President—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.
Vice-Presidents—The Right Hon. A. J. BALFOUR, M.P.; the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP of LONDON; HERBERT SPENCER, Esq.; the Right Hon. W. E. H. LECKY, M.P., D.C.L.
Trustees—Right Hon. LORD AVEBURY, F.R.S.; Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBURY, K.G.; Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.

Committee—Rev. Canon AINSIE; Dr. J. H. BEIDOE; Sir F. W. BUSTON; Prof. LEWIS CAMPBELL; J. W. COURTPOPE, Esq., C.B.; EARL of CERWE; AUSTIN DOBSON, Esq.; SYDNEY GEDGE, Esq., M.P.; Sir R. GIVEN, K.C.B., F.R.S.; EDMUND GORSE, Esq., LL.D.; Mrs. J. R. GREEN; FREDERICK HARRISON, Esq.; Sir C. P. LEBERT, K.C.S.I.; Sir C. M. KENNEDY, C.B., K.O.M.G.; Rev. STANLEY LEATHES, D.D.; SIDNEY LEE, Esq.; W. S. LILL, Esq.; SIDNEY J. LOW, Esq.; FRANK T. MARZIALS, Esq.; Sir GEORGE MIVART, Esq., F.R.S.; Sir F. POLLOCK, Bart.; Rev. Dr. RICE; H. R. TEDDER, Esq.

The Library contains about 200,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year; Life Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country and Ten to Town Members. Reading Room open from Ten to Half-past Six. CATALOGUE, FIFTH EDITION, 2 vols., royal 8vo, price 21s., to Members, 18s.

C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, LL.D., Secretary and Librarian.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE NEW WORK ON MR. RUSKIN.

READY ON MONDAY NEXT,
price 5s.

JOHN RUSKIN.

A Sketch of his Life, his Work, and his Opinions.

WITH

PERSONAL REMINISCENCES.

By M. H. SPIELMANN.

CONTAINING

NUMEROUS PORTRAITS and OTHER
ILLUSTRATIONS, and a Paper by Mr.
Ruskin, entitled "The Black Arts."

NOTICE.—MEMOIRS and COR-RESPONDENCE of LORD
PLAYFAIR, by Sir WEMYSS
REID, has been REPRINTED to meet the large demand,
price 21s.

"There is not a dull page in the record; there are many extremely interesting pages, and some vastly entertaining stories."—Vanity Fair.

SIR ROBERT PEEL.

By LORD ROSEBERY. 2s. 6d.

"The little monograph of an estimate of Peel's personality is animated by vivid and luminous insight."—Daily Telegraph.

* A Second Impression of this Work is now on sale.

NOTICE.—Mr. D. H. PARRY'S
New Work, THE DEATH or GLORY BOYS: the Story of the 17th Lancers, is NOW
ON SALE, price 6s.

"We have here the story of a most distinguished regiment told by 'one of them.' How it first came into life in 1759, under Col. John Hale, a great friend of the noble Wolfe; how it was dressed, and lived, and fought up to this very date, when it is girding itself for fresh African frays as a part of the sixth division."—Pall Mall Gazette.

OUR RARER BRITISH BREEDING BIRDS:

Their Nests, Eggs, and Summer Haunts.

By RICHARD KEARTON, F.Z.S.
With about 70 Illustrations from Photographs taken direct from Nature by CHERRY KEARTON. 7s. 6d.

"The illustrations are as beautiful as they are valuable. The book is a unique contribution to our knowledge of British birds."—Bookman.

NOTICE.—Mr. A. T. QUILLER
COUCH'S New Novel, THE SHIP of STARS, 6s., has been TWICE REPRINTED to meet the large demand.

"It is splendid art, and throbs with emotion and life. We have waited a long time for 'The Ship of Stars.' It was worth waiting for."—Bookman.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LTD., London, Paris,
New York, and Melbourne.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.

In demy 8vo, tastefully printed in old-face type, and appropriately bound in cloth, gilt lettered,
price 7s. 6d.

ALFRED in the CHRONICLERS.

By the Rev. EDWARD CONYBEARE, Author of "A History of Cambridgeshire."

SECOND EDITION.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

THE BEST SOCIETY.

And other Lectures.

By the late J. JACKSON GOADBY, F.G.S., Author of "Timely Words," "Bye-Paths in Baptist History," &c.

In crown 8vo, with 2 Portraits, cloth, price 5s.

THE LIFE of CHARLES TOMLINSON,

Of Highgate, F.R.S., F.C.S., &c.

By his Niece, MARY TOMLINSON.

In crown 8vo, cloth, illustrated, 5s.

JOSIAH VINEY:

A Record of his Life and Work

By HENRY JOHNSON, Author of "Myles
Standish," "From Scrooby to Plymouth Rock,"
&c. With a Preface by the Rev. R. LOVETT,
M.A. A Portrait and 4 Illustrations.

"An account of Mr. Viney's life which will be much appreciated by those who knew him."

Christian World.

"Friends of Mr. Viney will find much to interest them in this memoir."—Independent.

NEW NOVELS.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

FATHER FOX: a Story of the Present Day. By DOROTHY MARTIN.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

NARCISSUS; or. an Anglican Altar Sacrifice. A Novel. By JOHN BEDE.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

THE LADY ISABEL: a Tale of Social Life in the Olden Time. By A. HAMMOND.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

CHARLES WAVENDON, and Others. By CARYL J. BLUNT.

"The story shows considerable literary ability.
The author has collected an interesting assembly of characters, and the tale is developed on original lines."—Glasgow Herald.

"We consider that such a manly and straightforward book cannot fail to do good."

Leeds Mercury.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

LOAVES and FISHES. By BESSIE REYNOLDS.

"The story is exceedingly attractive, not only on account of its literary worth and interest, but because of the high-toned Christian atmosphere which pervades the book."—Dundee Advertiser.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row,
London, E.C.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE STORY OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

In 2 vols., large crown 8vo, with 16 Portraits and 4 Maps, 18s.

THE

GREAT COMPANY, 1667-1871.

BEING A HISTORY OF THE HONOUR-ABLE COMPANY OF MERCHANT AD-
VENTURERS TRADING INTO HUDSON'S
BAY. Compiled from the Company's Archives; from Diplomatic Documents and State Papers of France and England; from the Narratives of Factors and Traders; and from many Accounts and Memoirs.

By BECKLES WILLSON.

With an Introduction by

LORD STRATHCONA AND MOUNT ROYAL,

Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company.

TRAVELS IN SOUTHERN ARABIA AND THE SOUDAN.

With a Portrait, 24 Full-Page Illustrations, and 6 Maps. Demy 8vo, 18s.

SOUTHERN ARABIA.

By the late

THEODORE BENT, F.R.G.S., F.S.A., Author of "The Ruined Cities of Mashonaland," "The Sacred City of the Ethiopians," &c.,

And Mrs. THEODORE BENT.

NEW VOLUME OF DR. FITCHETT'S IMPORTANT PATRIOTIC WORK

HOW ENGLAND SAVED EUROPE:

The Story of the Great War (1793-1815).

By W. H. FITCHETT, B.A., LL.D.,

Author of "Deeds that Won the Empire,"
"Fights for the Flag," &c.

To be completed in 4 vols., crown 8vo, with Portraits,
Facsimiles, and Plans, 6s. each.

Published To-day, with 16 Portraits and 15 Plates,
crown 8vo, 6s.

VOLUME III. THE WAR IN THE PENINSULA.

Volumes Previously Published.

VOLUME I. FROM THE LOW COUNTRIES TO EGYPT. With 16 Portraits and 8 Plans. Crown
8vo, 6s.

VOLUME II. THE STRUGGLE FOR THE SEA.
With 16 Portraits and 6 Plans. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SPECTATOR.—Exactly the sort of history desired by the million. The work is worthy of the author of "Deeds that Won the Empire" and "Fights for the Flag."

PUNCH.—"Mr. Fitchett handles a glowing pen, and illuminates as with torchlight the field on which opened Pitt's long struggle with Napoleon."

* * Volume IV., completing the work, will be published very shortly.

THE STONES of PARIS, in HIS-TORY and LETTERS. By BENJAMIN ELLIS
MARTIN and CHARLOTTE M. MARTIN. With 40 Illustrations by Fulleylove, Delafontaine, and from Photographs. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 18s.

ILLUSTRATED LIBRARY EDITION OF SIDNEY LEE'S "LIFE OF SHAKE- SPEARE."

1 vol., medium 8vo, profusely illustrated with Photo-gravures, Facsimiles, Topographical Views, &c., 10s.

THE LIFE of WILLIAM SHAKE-SPEARE. By SIDNEY LEE, Editor of "The Dictionary of National Biography."

* * Also the FOURTH EDITION, in Cheaper Form, with Illustrations, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO.,
15, Waterloo Place.

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1448. Established 1869.

3 February, 1900.

Price Threepence

[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

Two unpublished plays by M. Masterlinck, entitled respectively "Sister Beatrice" and "Oviana and Bluebeard," are being translated into blank verse by Mr. Bernard Miall, the original text being in unrhymed hexameters. The "Sister Beatrice" of the former play is none other than the truant nun of Mr. Davidson's "Ballad," both poets having borrowed the story from the Flemish legend. The French versions of the plays are being set to music.

The Siege of Ladysmith, by Mr. G. W. Steevens, will be published by Messrs. Blackwood at an early date. It will contain the letters he sent home from his arrival at Cape Town till the day when he was struck down by enteric fever and could write no more. At a later date a volume will be issued containing his London, Paris, and Berlin letters. A memorial edition of his works will be published towards the close of the year. The first volume will include a memoir by Mr. W. E. Henley, and a selection of the articles Mr. Steevens wrote for the National Observer, Blackwood's Magazine, the New Review, &c. The Memorial Edition, which will be published by Messrs. Blackwood, will contain all his best work.

WE have already given some account of the clever and amusing contents of the Ladysmith Lyre. It was edited, says the Natal Witness, by Mr. G. W. Steevens. It is not difficult to infer who was the author of "The Diary of a Citizen." Here are a few of the entries:

November 21.—Hear good authority that gunner of Long Tom is Dreyfus.

November 22.—Dreyfus rumour confirmed.

November 23.—Hear good authority that gunner of Long Tom is Russian.

November 24.—Gunner of Long Tom believed to be Esquimaux.

November 26.—Boers broke Sabbath, firing on our bathing parties. Believe they were so infuriated by sight of people washing that they quite forgot it was Sunday.

November 27.—Boers opened fire at breakfast time from forty-seven new Long Toms. Oh, Lord!

DR. FURNIVALL will be seventy-five years old on the 4th of next February, and it is proposed that the congratulations of his friends take shape (1) in a personal present, (2) in a Festschrift, and (3) in a public endowment. Dr. Furnivall's fondness for sculling suggests a boat as an appropriate personal present. For the Festschrift, to the contents of which English scholars in both Europe and America will contribute, Professors Skeat, Napier, and Ker have promised their editorial services. These first two objects are already provided for by Dr. Furnivall's personal friends. For the public endowment a public subscription is of course necessary. This endowment is to be a fund which shall put the Early English Text Society on a firm financial basis.

IN the new Fortnightly Mr. George Moore takes an affecting farewell of London as a centre of art. With a velvet delivery, and an assurance worthy of an archdeacon, he chastises us in tones of languid regret. Thus:

For some time the necessity of explaining the intentions of the Irish Literary Theatre has been pressing upon us. So I take advantage of the publication of my play, "The Bending of the Bough," to explain why Mr. Martyn, Mr. Yeats, and myself prefer to have our plays produced in Dublin rather than in London. . . .

It is because we believe London to be too large, too old, and too wealthy to permit of any new artistic movement, and this belief rests upon knowledge of the art history of the world and some experience of London theatrical conditions. . . . We have therefore turned our backs upon London as men turn their backs on a place which has ceased to interest them. But we did not decide on our homeward journey without having considered the reformation of London. After some doubts, some hesitation, it suddenly came upon us that it was impossible. It was suddenly borne in upon us that England had produced her dramatic literature (since Shakespeare only two plays have outlived a generation); England seems to us to have reached the age of manhood, an age at which a nation ceases to produce art, for art belongs to the youth of a nation as empire belongs to its manhood, if it attains to manhood. . . . For some reason, so deep in the heart that we cannot define it, the glory of empire does not compensate for the loss of the song and the bust; without them the crown is incomplete and its glory the pallor of ashes. We become aware of this as we cross Trafalgar-square. . . .

Dear man!

MRS. MEYNELL'S book on Ruskin, to which she is devoting herself to the exclusion of all other work, will hardly be ready before the end of February. In form it will be something of a text-book, Ruskin's principal books being analysed and considered in separate chapters.

C. K. S., in his excellent Literary Letter in the Sphere, with which we are glad to renew acquaintance, states that Mrs. Grant Allen is about to open a bookshop in St. George's-street, Hanover-square. The Sphere, the first number of which was published after we had gone to press last week, is a welcome addition to the ranks of illustrated weekly papers. It is a handsome, well-designed production, and shows every sign of endurance and success.

MR. JAMES LANE ALLEN, author of that strong and beautiful story The Choir Invisible, has just finished a new novel. It is called The Reign of Law: a Story of the Kentucky Hemp Fields.

WE learn from an American paper that David Harum is selling largely in the Kansas belt, where it is advertised as "by that popular young author, R. Kipling."

A COMMITTEE is being formed for the presentation of a testimonial from members of the Press to Mr. E. F. Knight, of the Morning Post, who lost his arm while acting as correspondent for that journal in South Africa.

MA. RUSKIN has gone, and Count Tolstoy is openly preparing to go. "Although I am much better," he has just said to an interviewer, "my health is far from good. The end draws near. But I am quite untroubled thereat, and I go gladly forth to meet the inevitable." In the meantime, Tolstoy has something to say about things so mundane as the drama and literature. He considers the drama to be decadent. "There is a great deal of talk about Ibsen. I have read his last drama, 'When We who are Dead Awaken.' It is simply a delirium, and is devoid of life, character, and dramatic action. Thirty-five years ago such a drama would have been stifled by a cutting parody in the Press, and the piece would have been ridiculed to death. How can one now speak of the serious tasks before the theatre? They are at an end." Literature, the Count thinks, is as good as dead: "the daily Press has destroyed it."

A CORRESPONDENT writes: "It may possibly interest you to know that some time ago I bought at a 'sale of household effects,' at a Scottish watering-place, a volume containing Ruskin's Poems, Arrows of the Chase, and another for sixpence!" That was a good bargain. A few years ago a small knot of bookish young men established a small club which they called the "Treasure Trove Club," of which the fundamental idea was this: that the members should dine together once a fortnight, and that after a modest feast each member should produce a book which he had picked up for a sum not exceeding sixpence. The "finds" were even more surprising than the one mentioned by our correspondent; and the discussions that followed were often delightful.

"PUBLISH IT." That was all that Colonel Baden-Powell wrote on the proofs of his little book on Scouting, when he posted them to Messrs. Gale & Polden from Mafeking. The little package arrived safely in London in the same wrapper in which it had gone out, only reversed. The book must have passed, says the Daily Mail, through the Boer lines. It is now in its fiftieth thousand. Nearly everyone going to the front wants it, for it is the best work on its subject, and one chapter was actually written at Mafeking. Messrs. Gale & Polden give a South African address where the book can be obtained. This runs: "Pritchard-street, Johannesburg (after British occupation)."

THE new number of the Anglo-Saxon contains several contributions of literary interest. Mr. H. D. Traill exploits his gift of parody and analogue in a sketch called "The Unflinching Realist." Very wittily does Mr. Traill hit off some of the literary affectations of the day. The realist, Amiel Ingham, had so much originality and "so many other qualities ending in 'ality' that it was a little singular that his style should not have come to him by nature." Yet styles came to him, and Mr. Traill illustrates them. Amiel would feel an inspiration to write thus:

She wavered to him pityingly on a little sigh.

It was but the swaying of the sapling-tip—no more: stem of purpose still straight, and deep roots of resolve immovable below.

But Rodemont, man-like, triple-brazed in vanity, saw only the flickering of the frond.

He would have clasped her. Mimosa shrank from him, elusive.

"Not, cousin, if I know it," she flashed. And then Rodemont knew, and cursed his confidence. She had tried to temper the blow to him; but he had chosen to meet it, full face, thwack on sconece, after Dame Fortune's oldest-fashioned way of hinting to us that she is adverse.

"And when he wrote like this," says Mr. Traill, "the resemblance of his style to that of the illustrious Mr. Surriehill appeared to him to be purely fortuitous."

MR. W. H. MALLOCK, impressed by the resemblance, which has been noted by scholars, and by FitzGerald himself, between the philosophy of Omar Khayyám and that of Lucretius, has versified parts of Lucretius in the metre employed by FitzGerald in the Rubaiyat. The idea of thus reducing both poets to "a common literary denominator" is curious and, on the whole, felicitous. Moreover, Mr. Mallock's verses justify his experiment. They have a fine movement, and are full of haunting phrases and stanzas. Indeed, Mr. Mallock's are the best verses we have met with in a magazine—nay, in a new book of verse—for a long time. Lucretius was the Roman poet of science: he held that men have no souls that can survive their bodies; and in his poem, "Concerning the Nature of Things," he unfolded "the gospel of the everlasting death." Here is part of Mr. Mallock's poem:

Globed from the atoms falling slow or swift
I see the suns, I see the systems lift
Their forms; and even the systems and the suns
Shall go back slowly to the eternal drift.

Those blue and shining seas in delicate haze
Shall go; and yonder sands forsake their place;
And where they are, shall other seas in turn
Mow with their scythes of whiteness other bays.

Behold the terraced towers, and monstrous round
Of league-long ramparts rise from out the ground,
With gardens in the clouds. Then all is gone,
And Babylon is a memory and a mound.

Where is the coolness when no cool wind blows?
Where is the music when the lute lies low?
Are not the redness and the red rose one,
And the snow's whiteness one thing with the snow?

Death is for us, then, nothing—a mere name
For the mere noiseless ending of a flame.
It hurts us not, for there is nothing left
To hurt: and as of old, when Carthage came

To battle, we and ours felt naught at all,
Nor quailed to see the invading ruin fall
On all our quiet homes, nor heard our fields
Shaken beneath the hordes of Hannibal,

But slumbered on and on, nor cared a jot,
Death to the stress, and tumult, though the lot
Of things was doubtful, to which lords should fall
The rule of all—but we, we heeded not—

So when that wedlock of the flesh and mind
Which makes us what we are, shall cease to bind,
And mind and flesh, being mind and flesh no more,
Powdered to dust go whistling down the wind,

Even as our past was shall our future be.
Others may start and tremble, but not we,
Though heaven be darkened with the dust of earth
Or all the earth be sunk beneath the sea.

SIR WALTER BESANT recently deplored the freedom with which authors attack each other: his whipping-post being Mr. Buchanan's article on Mr. Kipling in the Contemporary. We do not know with what feelings Sir Walter will read the speech which Sir Edward Clarke delivered at the Browning Settlement the other day. After discoursing on the delights of reading, Sir Edward came to present-day literature, and putting a sting into the tail of his speech, said out loud:

It was humiliating to think that in the year just closed perhaps the two most notable books published were that shocking production of Mr. Swinburne's, Rosamund, Queen of the Lombards, the manuscript of which ought to have been burned; and another book, almost as bad—here referred to Stalky & Co. To come down to those productions from the works he had spoken of was a depth of degradation in regard to which he sincerely pitied the boys of the present day. They had, however, a remedy, and that was to avoid following literature down to the gutter into which it had run.

ALTHOUGH the Echo de Paris is one of the most truculently anti-English papers in Paris, it is proud to regale its readers with good English fiction. Thus, at the present moment, Mr. Kipling's The Finest Story in the World is running in its columns. While that draws to a close, the following promise of more good things from perfidious Albion is held out to Parisians:

Immédiatement après la PLUS BELLE HISTOIRE DU MONDE, de RUDYARD KIPLING, nous commencerons la publication de :

TESS D'URBERVILLE

PAR

THOMAS HARDY

est l'histoire infiniment touchante, suave et tragique, d'une jeune paysanne issue d'une très ancienne et très aristocratique famille de l'Angleterre tombée peu à peu dans l'indigence et l'oubli.

En même temps qu'un roman d'amour, Tess d'Urberville offre une admirable peinture, sans analogue en France, de la vie des champs. Les émotions de l'héroïne se manifestent dans un milieu rustique, tour à tour plein de fraîcheur poétique et de farouche grandeur, où les travaux de la campagne, merveilleusement observés, se déroulent en puissante harmonie avec les phases successives de ses douleurs et de ses joies idéales.

Tess d'Urberville est peut-être le chef-d'œuvre du très célèbre romancier Thomas Hardy.

In the Century Magazine there is a capital article, entitled "The West, and Certain Literary Discoveries; or, How Fiction may be Stranger than Truth." The writer, Mr. E. Hough, points out that novels of the West are written in the East, and without knowledge. Incidentally he gives this accurate chaffing recipe for a New England novel:

In order to write a novel of New England life, it is necessary that one have at hand a mortgage, a spinster of rather slender habit, a young man who went away, and a quiet graveyard. These, with accessories such as an old settle or two, a tall clock, and a household interior of wax-like neatness, will always serve to meet a certain standard in books descriptive of life in New England, and from books of such nature a great many persons gain a portion of their knowledge of that region. It may be urged that such a knowledge must of necessity be a narrow and imperfect one. This is perhaps true. Yet you shall not change this thing!

SIMILARLY, the West is written up by East writers who imagine vain things about cow-punchers and red shirts and revolvers. Mr. Hough sadly points out that one fact about the West which these writers overlook is the simple one that the West no longer exists. It costs a thousand dollars now to kill a grizzly, and you may not kill a buffalo at all. In a generation the face of things has been changed. Miles of wire, and of railroad, have crossed the plains, tearing the antelope and frightening the buffalo. We could quote some fine passages of description, notably one in which the writer found a single line of wire fence crossing a boundless, untenanted wilderness, issuing from the horizon and fading into the horizon opposite. We will quote, however, a few sentences in which Mr. Hough criticises "that slovenly form of literary art, the realism of which necessitates a continual search for 'local colour.' The literary market demands this. It is not necessary to have a knowledge of a field. The writer finds nothing in the environment immediately about him, because he already knows it too well. He goes into a new field, his senses receive a fillip, and he—writes. It is not always necessary for him first to see and think, not to say first to sympathise and understand. True, such work does not endure. No great book was ever written in such haphazard fashion. Yet at the hands of such crude craftsmanship as this the West has certainly suffered."

Here Mr. Hough touches larger issues, and there is wisdom in what he says. The great novelists have never been curious searchers for local colour.

A CORRESPONDENT has sent us an appreciation of Mr. Tirebuck's work, whose death we briefly acknowledged last week. The communication is too long to print, but we find room for a few extracts: "His most ardent admirers felt that his best was yet to come. They could not but feel that parts of his work were greater than the whole—to use a seeming paradox. Everywhere there were indications of a power to body forth character, to create a fitting atmosphere, to give movement and solidarity in the record, but the power came and went like blown flame. It is not too much to say that there is fiction of a very high order in some of Mr. Tirebuck's books—notably in Miss Grace of All Souls and Sweetheart Gwen. Mr. Tirebuck was greater than his work. His right foot, as it were, was never really put foremost. The singularly sweet seriousness that was his; the quiet impressiveness; the curious way he had of entangling common things in a transforming web of fancy; the winsome, affectionate manner; the deep-sea soundings that dropped suddenly into his ordinary conversations; the gentleness that charmed while it plainly indicated that it had no kinship with weakness; the absolute refinement of feeling; the flow of delicate and quaint humour, and—in days like ours, perhaps, most notable of all—the humility and disinclination to advertise himself, although he very much believed in himself; these are known only to the friends who have loved and lost him."

THE method of buying books by instalments, through the agency of a newspaper, has proved so popular that we are not surprised to see new enterprises announced. The latest offer of the kind is made by the British Weekly, which undertakes to supply lots of 100 or 50 books in the Bohn Library on the instalment plan. Thus a reader may have 100 volumes and a copy of Webster's International Dictionary for twelve guineas, in twelve monthly instalments; and fifty books on proportionate terms. An excellent feature of the scheme is that each purchaser may select what volumes he will from the Bohn Library, which now includes nearly 800 standard works. Seldom has a better chance occurred of forming, or completing, a good private library.

WE have received copies of two volumes of a new edition of the poems of Richard Crashaw, from so unlikely a spot as Bedale, in Yorkshire. It is really refreshing to find that down there, at Bedale, Crashaw's poems have been lovingly edited and accurately printed. The editor, Mr. J. R. Tutin, writes a modest and rather naïve preface, in which he adopts the editorial we, and ends a paragraph with the word "of." But Mr. Tutin's work is genuine and valuable. His task has been mainly to present the best text of the poet, to arrange his poems in the best order, and to print them in the orthography of the present day. Every page has been worked up in a leisurely way, almost as rare in these days as the apparition of Bedale on a title-page.

LOOKING through the larger of Mr. Tutin's volumes, containing "The Delights of the Muses," "Steps to the Temple," &c., we are glad to renew our acquaintance with Crashaw's Divine Epigrams. Here are three examples :

DIVES ASKING A DROP.

A drop, one drop, how sweetly one fair drop
Would tremble on my pearl-tipp'd finger's top !
My wealth is gone ; O go it where it will,
Spare this one jewel ; I'll be Dives still !

TWO WENT UP INTO THE TEMPLE TO PRAY.

Two went to pray ! O, rather say,
One went to brag, th' other to pray ;
One stands up close and treads on high,
Where th' other dares not send his eye.
One nearer to God's altar trod,
The other to the altar's God.

ON THE MIRACLE OF LOAVES.

Now, Lord, or never, they'll believe on Thee ;
Thou to their teeth hast proved Thy Deity.

MESSRS. MUDIE'S new catalogue, just out, presents some notable improvements on previous issues. In it books are for the first time classified under subjects as well as under authors ; hence subscribers can quickly look up works under Arts, History, Poetry, Sport, Travel, &c. It is the intention of Messrs. Mudie to make this classification more detailed and useful from year to year.

A CLEVER little "tautological tale," by Miss Grace Fraser, is published in the February St. Nicholas. Miss Fraser begins by declaring that she dreamed she was Dr. Roget, the author of the Thesaurus of English Words. All who know that useful work will appreciate the narrative of her dream, in which "a gentleman behind me was admonishing me to hasten, with the words :

'Come, come, my good fellow, bowl, trundle, roll along !'

'H'm,' thought I, 'what it is to be stout ! Quoting my very words, is he ? I'll show him !' And turning, I exclaimed :

'Go ! begone ! get you gone ! get away ! go along ! be off ! off with you ! get along with you ! go about your business ! go your way ! avaunt ! aroyn ! away with you !'

'Whew !' cried the saucy man. 'What an irascible, susceptible, excitable, irritable, fretful, fidgety, peevish, hasty, quick, warm, hot, touchy, testy, pettish, waspish, snappish, petulant, peppery, fiery, passionate, choleric fellow it is !'

This annoyed me.

'Sir,' I said, 'you shall not ridicule, deride, laugh at, mock, quiz, rally, flout, twit, roast, taunt, or make game of me ; this is ill-treatment, annoyance, molestation, abuse, oppression, persecution, outrage, of a kind that I shall not stand !'

The man apparently wanted to fight, for he continued meditatively : 'What a corpulent, stout, fat, plump, chubby, chub-faced, lubberly, hulky, unwieldy—'

This was more than flesh and blood could stand."

Exciting incidents followed, but finally the conversation, "which could hardly be called a model of conciseness, brevity, terseness, compression, condensation, or pithiness, came to a close, termination, conclusion, finis, finale, finish, determination, and end."

Bibliographical.

THE example Mr. George Alexander has set in preparing and publishing an illustrated history of the theatre over which he presides is one which ought to be followed. Let each actor-manager in London do the same—that is to say, when he has anything to record, which is hardly the case with, say, Mr. Tree (at Her Majesty's) and Mr. Wyndham (at the theatre named after him). Truth to tell, the old theatres in London are but few. The Lyric, the Shaftesbury, the Comedy, the Prince of Wales's, Daly's, Terry's, are comparatively mushrooms. But there is a good deal to be told about Drury Lane, Covent Garden, the Strand, the Olympic, and even about the Vaudeville, the Opera Comique, the Globe, and the Criterion, which, though by no means ancient, has made its mark upon the drama of to-day. Drury Lane found an historian in Edward Stirling, the playwright ; but his work is scrappy at the best : moreover, it is much out of date. The Chronicles of the Gaiety, as we all know, have been written, down to quite recent times, by Mr. Hollingshead. The late E. L. Blanchard told the story of many of our theatres in successive issues of the Era "Almanack" ; he did not, however, collect and reprint his work, and so the only available accounts of London theatres generally, in volume form, are Mr. Michael Williams's Some London Theatres, Past and Present, published in 1883, and Mr. Barton Baker's London Stage, brought out in 1889.

Are Anthony Trollope's novels bought nowadays ? Read, no doubt, they may be at the public and circulating libraries ; but do people purchase his stories ? To the best of my knowledge, none of them have been reprinted in the 'nineties ; and in the 'eighties the reprints were confined, apparently, to a baker's dozen out of all his imaginative progeny. It may well be that the time has come for a reissue of his fictions ; but, if I were the publisher, I should make a careful selection for the purpose. The "Barchester" series, we may take it, will live ; but how about the many tales put forward by their author after the Last Chronicle of that cathedral town ? Like Mrs. Oliphant, Trollope probably never wrote a wholly worthless story ; but for the merely mediocre there is no life nowadays or hereafter. Trollope has lately enjoyed the distinction of being praised both by Mr. Stephen Gwynn and Mr. C. K. Shorter. One wonders, however, whether these writers have not commended the fertile Anthony somewhat as Calverley eulogised the organ-grinder :

But I've heard mankind abuse thee ;

And perhaps it's rather strange,

But I thought that I would choose thee

For encomium as a change.

So we are not to have a new Life of Leigh Hunt from the pen of Mrs. Thornton Williams, or any one else. Candidly, I do not think any such work is needed. We have Hunt's autobiography, to begin with ; we have his correspondence (edited by his son) ; and we have the monograph, by Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse, in the "Great Writers" series. It seems hardly worth while to write another biography in order to prove that Hunt was not the "original" of Harold Skimpole. At the same time, I hold that the prevailing opinion of Hunt's work and influence in literature is lower than his deserts, and implies a limited acquaintance with his products. The fairest estimate of him as a writer is contained, I think, in Alexander Smith's Dreamthorpe.

It is to be feared that the theatrical newspapers, whatever their other merits, do not cultivate a very close acquaintance with published literature. I notice that in its current number the Era (the Bible and Prayer-Book of "the profession") commits itself to the statement that "Aglavaine and Selysette" is the name of the new one-act play by Maurice Maeterlinck. Now, we know that "Aglavaine and Selysette" is in five acts, not one, and that an English translation of it was published two and a half years ago. The Era, therefore, perpetrates two inaccuracies in one short sentence.

More Meredithiana. A courteous correspondent, writing from Liverpool, tells me that in 1898 he printed, "for private circulation only," a Calendar of Meredithian Philosophy. This I have not seen, but my correspondent promises that I shall have the opportunity of inspecting a copy, and, in that case, I may describe it to my readers. All these things go to show how sharp an impression Mr. Meredith's "philosophy" has made upon his English-speaking contemporaries.

THE BOOKWORM.

Reviews.

The Art of Mr. Israel Zangwill.

They that Walk in Darkness. By Israel Zangwill.
(Heinemann. 6s.)

MR. ZANGWILL is that rarity—a man who knows the homeless race not merely by a few columnar figures, standing grandiosely in the world's history, as Disraeli knew them; not by philosophical induction, as George Eliot was more or less obliged to know them; but by being a Jew, by living the Jew life, by loving the Jew language, and (it cannot be impertinent to add) by loving the Jew religion. You read that Mr. Zangwill was head boy in the Jews' Free School in Spitalfields; that he remained at the school as a teacher; and that, in the leisure afforded by his laborious occupation, he studied to such purpose that he graduated B.A. at London University with triple honours before he was twenty-one. The character of Herbert Strang, the gold medallist in The Master, shows that Mr. Zangwill is the last person to claim that the promise of brilliant success in letters was held out by his academic successes. Indeed, he began—shall we say, as a Jew?—flashily. The Premier and the Painter, written in collaboration with Mr. Louis Cowen, is just what you would expect during that period of insincerity when an abnormally clever writer is plotting to hit the public taste. Yet it is a work to be viewed indulgently, inasmuch as it is delightfully droll. It is the history of events which took place after an exchange of environments effected by two people who were, physically, almost the doubles of each other. One is the prime minister, the other an artisan. The history is written from the point of view of remote posterity. Characters such as Lord Bardolph Mountchapel and Sir Stanley Southleigh give the book the characteristics of a transparent roman à clef, and the way is clearly pointed for a serious burlesque like Mr. Max Beerbohm's 1880. The book would have gained artistically if the footnotes—one of its most amusing features—had been more numerous. Nothing could be more ludicrously typical of a certain kind of sober history than the footnote on Mr. George R. Sims:

A popular journalist and dramatist of the period—afterwards member for a Metropolitan borough. Not to be confounded with Sims Reeves, a famous bass, not a baritone (as the author of Social Life in the Reign of Victoria affirms), who seems to have been referred to among his friends by his Christian name.

So far, and even in The Bachelors' Club and The Old Maids' Club, we see Mr. Zangwill an entertainer of the public, scarcely an artist. His sense of humour is an asset upon which he draws at random. He is at times as fatuously foolish as the young clerk making himself agreeable at a tea-party. Yet he can also write so witching a line as "I lent him the shilling with which he cut me off." An atmosphere of balderdashery surrounds the Club books, and all apparently because Shakespeare punned! It is not an atmosphere which a cultivated person can breathe with patience, however close together may be the intermittent flashes of real sprightliness. A peep into Ariel confirms one's opinion of the inequality of Mr. Zangwill's humour. Listen to this. It is the "new version" of the Lord of Burleigh:

He is thought a bold highwayman
By the village maiden's pa,
Who may hang as high as Haman
Though he boldly laughs Ha! Ha!

Is it not shocking—parody in the pit, so to speak? But the series entitled "Ariel's Press Cutting Agency"—a series of newspaper pages imitated both typographically and as regards literature from various "esteemed contemporaries," were delicious essays in that difficult art. Ariel died February 5, 1892, and Mr. Zangwill proceeded to the publication of a really great book. The Children of the Ghetto is a veritable epic of London Jewry. It is overladen with effects of melodrama; it insists on entering our sympathies by a sort of pugilism. But how it glows and tingles with life! how copious is its information! Note, too, how the story depends on the local colour. His sophisticated and voluble Jews of the West are but stuffed men, however, compared with his Malkas and Moses Ansells. Pinchas, the Hebrew poet who replied "it shall be all besom" when the actor-manager reminded him that a broom should figure prominently in his play, is a marvellous portrait. Any of the figures in the Club books must needs shrivel up if set beside him, for he is, like one of Leighton's models, drawn from the very bones—a genius, a wind-bag, a colossal egoist, a child. Reb Shemuel, devout and recklessly generous, is a portrait which almost convinces one of the reasonableness of Judaism in spite of the reaction of his belief upon the fate of his daughter. A perusal of The Children of the Ghetto and the other Ghetto books strikingly illustrates the rooted Judaism of their author. Even now we can hear Hannah slam the door in her lover's face, and listen to his mockery of the law which prohibits a Cohen from marrying a woman who has got Gett. Yet Gentiles though we are, and deeply sensible of the tragedy of this love, we feel as the Celts felt when one of their number was called by the Ninth Wave, that David Brandon had to go forth alone and see his Hannah no more. Hannah was right in obeying the Rabbis, though all the Rabbis were wrong. It is the tragedy of the agnostical martyr. Once a Jew always a Jew would indeed seem to be one of Mr. Zangwill's convictions. One recalls four death-bed scenes at least where erring Jews yield up their ghosts to the slow music of orthodoxy. No one knows better than Mr. Zangwill that the religious sense is indestructible, and that there is no such thing as "emancipation" from it. For the rest he would seem to be in sympathy with the poet who exclaimed:

Children of men! the unseen Power, whose eye
For ever doth accompany mankind,
Hath look'd on no religion scornfully
That man did ever find.

The remarkable little story in his last book about the Jewish mother who took her blind boy to Rome to be healed by the Pope, and a chapter (VII. of Book II.) in The Master, may be cited in this connexion.

In The Master Mr. Zangwill turned his back on the Ghetto. It is the story of an artist's struggle to succeed, and of the moral conflict which ensued on his success. From working in a saw-mill Matthew Strang proceeds, via house-painting and bird-stuffing, to exhibiting in the Royal Academy. It is a very hard climb, and described with so much circumstantiality that the reader shares the fatigue of it. Marriage makes Matthew a hostage to fortune—marriage without love. Not even Douglas Jerrold has depicted with more relentless realism the special terror wielded by the feminine nagger than Mr. Zangwill in Rosina. She has intoxicated Matthew once as women do; anon she fades; she has no secrets, no resources of intellect. And Matthew falls in love again. It is his author's decision that he shall not leave Rosina; it is the one note of Judaism in the book: as a man has sown, so shall he reap—a noble note when a man sounds it to himself. So Matthew gives up his sensual dream, and paints as he had never painted before. The book contains several vivid portraits of artists, and a great deal of clever studio talk. Yet one would not exchange Colthurst for Matthew or Culpepper or any other of Mr. Zangwill's artists, for about Lucas Malet's stutterer is a charm of more intimate humanity. Matthew, the self-taught, listening intelligently to a German song while he is swimming, is a little too Crichtonian. To return from particularisation, he is a little too vague as a man, however important he may be as a "master." The Nova Scotian local colour of the first part of the story is admirably vivid. Here, at least, is a man who paints.

In They that Walk in Darkness, his latest book, Mr. Zangwill returns to the Ghetto, the Ghettos of the world. It has been said that he is repeating himself. This is scarcely true; but it is true that his Jewish love of sublime effects is a little undisciplined. He invites us to trace the decay of his imagination by comparing "Satan Mekatrig" with "Bethulah." There is no decay, and "Bethulah" is more delicate work than "Satan Mekatrig," which is a decade younger. Satan disports in "an unspeakable eeriness, an unnameable unholliness"; and it is easy to believe, as one listens to one claptrap effect after another, that the story is in very truth the product of youth. But is "Bethulah" quite good enough? A blaspheming Jew, spending his nights with Satan, and rescued by his wife's prayers, is an ambitious theme; a virgin waiting at the grave's gate to give birth to the Messiah is a theme either to be treated with such irony as only an agnostic of genius can command or with such pity as only a poet of genius can express. Mr. Zangwill is not agnostical enough, he is not daring enough, he is not poetical enough for his theme. Grant that the story has imagination, you must admit its inconclusiveness, its artificiality. But The Keeper of Conscience is worthy of the hand that drew Rosina and Malka. The coarse and vulgar natures whom Salvina, the board-school teacher, tries to keep in seemliness are felt by the pained reader to be fundamentally stronger than she; it is their very identity which they vindicate in their shameless triumph over their mentor.

To sum up, Mr. Zangwill is the unrivalled exponent of the modern Jew. Jews who read him admit it: there are other Jews who cannot bear with him, but who do not deny his accuracy. He has the gift of minutiae. He has tapped the wealth of higgling, sordid lives. He has a tenderness rare in philosophers. He knows the pathos of toil and of atrophy in the midst of strenuousness. His women are drawn with the hand of native chivalry. Such women as Hannah and Debby and Ruth cannot die, though it be a mortal hand that shaped them. The genius of patience is his, for to tell what you know is so hard a thing. Even he had first to write his topsy-turvy romance and Club books. But at last, instead of at first, he writes like an artist of what he knows—the thing he knows being a special world full of symbols and shibboleths, at which the public pricks up its ears. And this world is at home. To travel widely is to see things with splendid perfunctoriness; to talk to everybody is to litter one's language with argot. Hence—with genius—Mr. Kipling. Mr. Zangwill, tireless in pursuit of his race all over the world, is still at home, for they are homeless, and his argot is of stately origin. Hence—with genius—another great man, and a far more intellectual one. But it is just that intellectuality which makes him less great than he might be. The man of ideas has not quite learned how to become the artist in expression, partly because he has the lecturer's abnormal fluency. His metrical gift, however, evinced in the fine sonnet on the two greatest Jews of all time, which serves as a prelude to Dreamers of the Ghetto, and the remarkable achievement in choral prose at the end of that work ("Chad Gadya"), suggests that he may yet realise his own perfect definition of Art—"a revelation of beautiful truth through the individual vision."

The Making of a Book.

Cæsar's Conquest of Gaul. By T. Rice Holmes. (Macmillan. 16s.)

In a singularly interesting preface to this monumental book, Mr. Holmes tells how he came to make it. He set out with the simple and kindly object of writing an English narrative of the Gallic wars which should induce school-boys to believe that there is really good reading in the Commentaries. He looked forward to an easy task, a recreation after serious historical toil. He was undeceived. He had not reckoned, as he thinks, with the character of his material; in reality, with his own temperament. Unfortunately for himself, but fortunately for historical science, Mr. Holmes has the instinct for doing things thoroughly. He began to fill in Cæsar's gaps, and then all was up with trifling.

In the first place, the very narrative of the Commentaries raises more questions than it solves. Whatever Cæsar's object in writing them was, it certainly was not to explain everything to an inquisitive modern.

He has left many questions obscure—questions of geography, of ethnology, of sociology, of religion, of politics, and of military science. To throw light upon these questions, and to explain the difficulties in his language, has engaged the labour of a host of scholars—geographers, antiquaries, anthropologists, ethnologists, archaeologists, military specialists, philologists, learned editors; and the works which they have produced, the greater part of which are scattered in the learned periodicals of foreign countries, would fill a large library. If the bulk of these works are mainly controversial or exegetical, if they are largely devoted to the discussion and elucidation of ancient texts, yet on this point or on that many of them are virtually original authorities. They contain scraps of genuine information, which enable one to fill up gaps in the memoirs of the conqueror. Excavators have discovered disputed sites. Coins, inscriptions, rusty weapons, and even skulls have added items to our store of knowledge. Soldier-scholars, trained to observe the geographical features of a country, have travelled, Commentaries in hand, through the length and breadth of France, and Belgium, and Alsace, and Switzerland; and, if prejudiced zeal or local patriotism have often misled them, their united efforts have not been in vain.

Furthermore, Mr. Holmes was bound to be curious on certain points which lay outside his main theme, but were at least implied by it. Who were the Gauls? What were their ethnological relations to their German, their Iberian neighbours? To what level of political, of religious culture had they advanced before the Conquest?

Once launched on these lines, Mr. Holmes "read on year after year." His bibliographical note gives some idea of the formidable mass of printed matter through which he has waded. In the result, the "English narrative," as may be guessed, shows but small beside the vast mass of illustrative, controversial, and critical matter with which it is accompanied. This amounts to a complete survey, not only of the history of the conquest in its minutest detail, but also of every possible aspect of the pre-history of unconquered Gaul. The narrative occupies an hundred and fifty out of eight hundred and fifty pages. It is followed by a long essay on the nature and object of the Commentaries, and of Cæsar's credibility as an historian. This Mr. Holmes defends vivaciously against numerous attacks. Then come elaborate and profoundly learned sections on the races of Gaul, on the geographical names in the Commentaries, on the sociology of Gaul, on the military structure of Cæsar's army, and, finally, a series of discussions on one moot point after another, to the number of about a hundred, which the historian's own account of his campaigns affords. Finally he tops up, at the end of the preface, with a note on "The Busts of Cæsar," and another in which he pulverises an unfortunate recent edition of the Commentaries for some hasty theories with regard to Colonel Stoffel's military excavations on the sites of Avaricum, Gergovia, and Alesia.

Of the total outcome of Mr. Holmes's labours we do not attempt to offer a critical opinion: that is work for a Mommsen. To the pains with which he has summed up a vast mass of erudition—gathered together, most of it, from innumerable and often profitless monographs, programmes, and periodicals; to the judicial temper in which he has sifted his material, and to the lucid manner in which he has set forth the outcome, we can at least bear witness. It is a book with which every future scholar, English or Continental, who touches the subject must reckon. Let us conclude by quoting, as a specimen of Mr. Holmes's manner, a passage from the close of his long inquiry into the alleged mala fides with which the Commentaries were written:

No history is absolutely true; and Caesar assuredly made mistakes. He is often laconic to a fault: he often writes with a looseness of expression which was natural in a busy man who did not write for cavillers, who made large demands upon the intelligence of his readers, and who, moreover, had not the fear of modern critics before his mind: he was sometimes either uncritical or careless in reproducing the statements of his lieutenants; writing as a politician, not as a historian, he may have thought it discreet to withhold valuable and interesting information: he doubtless exaggerated, consciously or unconsciously, the numbers of his enemies, and the losses which he or his lieutenants had inflicted upon them: he may have glossed over a mistake or two; he may have concocted a partial narrative of the one defeat which he himself sustained; and I am willing to believe that his memoirs leave upon the mind an impression of his prowess, if not of his character, more favourable than would have been produced by the narrative of an impartial and well-informed historian. I am willing to believe that, if he had had a solid political object to gain, he would have had recourse, as we are told that Bismarck had recourse, to brazen mendacity. Mendacity is a weapon which, in this wicked world, no statesman can afford to do without. I do not claim for Caesar that he had the passion for truth that inspires Mr. Rawson Gardiner. Even Mr. Baring Gould would hardly maintain that if Caesar could have armed himself for his duel with Pompey by garbling the history of the Gallic war he would have resisted the temptation. Only the temptation was not there. On the whole, Caesar could afford to tell the truth. He did full justice to his lieutenants: he wrote generously of his enemies; and I see no reason for believing that he was ashamed of anything he had done.

The Child and the Colony.

Child Life in Colonial Days. By Alice Morse Earle. (Macmillan. 8s. 6d. net.)

THIS is a companion and supplemental volume to Miss Earle's delightful book, Home Life in Colonial Days. It is written and illustrated on the same plan as that work, and resembles it in the wealth of its rare collected information, its museum-like surprises. Miss Earle rightly points out that she gives us the fruits of many years of search, and of what Emerson calls "the catlike love of garrets, presses, and cornchambers, and of the conveniences of long housekeeping." Miss Earle has her hobby, and her books could be written by no one else.

The children of the Pilgrim Fathers! How little one has thought of them—those wide-eyed, twice dependent, children who crossed the Atlantic with their stern parents. It is delightful to learn from an old chronicler that they landed on a June day, "with a smell on the shore like the smell of a garden." Dark and deathful days were to follow. The conditions of life proved too rough at first for the younglings; the winters nipped them at their birth. The child that was born in winter had need to be born, not made, a Spartan. Within a few days of his coming he was baptized in the meeting-house with water obtained by breaking the ice in the christening bowl. It seems incredible, but it was so. Judge Sewall, the grand old judge of Whittier's "Snowbound," diarised as follows under January 22, 1694:

A very extraordinary Storm by reason of the falling and driving of Snow. Few women could get to Meeting. A Child named Alexander was baptized in the afternoon.

Alexander the Great could hardly have stood that. In old family Bibles Miss Earle has found the saddest records of child mortality, yet it is a question whether the children perished most of privation or of the nostrums with which they were dosed. In 1647 a shocked observer wrote "a Most Desperate Booke against taking of Phissick"; it was ordered to be burned.

But if children died in heartrending numbers they were born in numbers that ensured the continuance of the race. Families of twelve to well-nigh thirty children were common. Sir William Phips was one of twenty-six children. Green, the printer of Boston, was the father of thirty. Franklin had sixteen brothers and sisters. The Rev. Cotton Mather had fifteen children. Mme. Austin, of Narrangansett, had sixteen children, all of whom lived to seventy years or more. And so on, and so on. The children received names packed with religious significance. "Mr. Buck celebrated the Pelegging, or dividing of Virginia into legislative districts, by naming his third child Peleg." A widow of a barber-surgeon who had died in the snow in his endeavour to reach a distant patient, named her child—very beautifully and sadly—Fathergone. In the Roper family Seeth was a common name. It was plucked by a pious Roper from the text, "The Lord seeth not as man seeth." "My child shall be named Seeth," was his exclamation, as he closed the family Bible. An entry in Judge Sewall's diary: "I named my little Daughter Sarah. Mr. Torrey said, 'Call her Sarah and make a Madam of her.' I was struggling between Mehetable or Sarah." How long the struggle might have lasted we know not, but the usual searching appeal was made to the Bible, and the good judge adds: "When I saw Sarah's standing in the Scripture, viz.: Peter, Galatians, Hebrews, Romans, I resolv'd on that suddenly." The children of Roger Clap were named Experience, Waitstill, Preserved, Hopestill, Wait, Thanks, Desire, Unite, and Supply; and Richard Gridley named his three successive infants Return, Believe, and Tremble.

The children were sent regularly to the cold school-houses, and the parents supplied logs as part of the school pay and as the only assurance of their children's warmth when at lessons. The child of a parent who failed to send his tale of firewood was banished to the coldest part of the schoolroom. Paper was scarce, and the children did their sums on birch bark, which they took from the fragrant woods. The importance of the birch tree in the colonial educational system cannot, therefore, be easily exaggerated. Birch trees were wofully plentiful, and "Massachusset's schools resounded with strokes of the rod." Queer, cruel chastisements were in vogue. The "flapper" was a piece of leather, six inches broad, with a hole in the middle, and fastened to a stick. "Every stroke on the bare flesh raised a blister the size of the hole in the leather." A brutal Boston schoolmaster bastinadoed his boys. A boy would be sent out to cut a branch from a tree; the cut end was then split, and his nose placed in it, making him suffer and look ridiculous. Miss Betty Higginson, who ran a school in Salem, used to make a child hold a heavy dictionary by a single leaf, and woe to the child who allowed the leaf to tear. It is only fair to record Miss Betty's generous reward of real merit: she would, on occasion, divide a single strawberry into six portions and divide these among the good scholars; to the very best boy or girl she gave a "bussee"—that is to say, a kiss.

Girls fared badly at school, and when more enlightened days came a farmer expressed the older feeling in these words: "In winter it's too far for girls to walk; in summer they ought to stay at home to help in the kitchen." The back-board, not the black-board, was the chief instrument of girls' training. Stays and coats were stiffened with ribs of wood and metal, and the race of women became erect and flat-chested, as their portraits show.

The story of Puritan life is always the story of a growing gaiety. In 1684 Increase Mather could preach against "Gynecandrical Dancing, or that which is commonly called Mixt or Promiscuous Dancing of Men and Women, be they elder or younger Persons together." But such preaching became more and more futile. Dancing, however, was taken seriously. A maiden who forgot her turn in a country dance at the Philadelphia Assembly was thus reproved by the M.C.: "Give over, Miss. Take care what you are about. Do you think you come here for your pleasure?" Sermons against dancing ceased, and "Ordination-balls" became an institution in the Church. But in Miss Earle's pages we never stray far from the wholesome restraints of the old order; we peep shyly at the world, and are kept from the flesh and the devil.

Urquhart of Cromartie.

Sir Thomas Urquhart of Cromartie. By John Willcock. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. 6s.)

RECENT times have shown the oddest sort of revival of the fame of Sir Thomas Urquhart, the translator of Rabelais, as all men know him, the most fantastic creature of mediæval romance and mediæval imaginativeness, as a few are now beginning to recall. In truth Urquhart may almost be said to have been the last of the mediævalists. The age to which he was born was emphatically the beginning, the throwing open of the gates, as it were, of modernity. Cromwell and the Restoration do not sound particularly mediæval. Yet here was one of that age who practically, despite an extraordinary literary capacity, subscribed nothing original of any sort or kind to the advance of any modern thought, or to anything which should be in the least to the advantage of posterity. Milton was writing Paradise Lost, Shakespeare was dead, Bacon had published De Augmentis and the Novum Organum; yet here was a man belonging to an age subsequent to that of these men, himself at one time a prisoner in the hands of the Lord Protector, a man of amazing keenness and subtlety of intellect, learned, accomplished, and living every ounce of his life, standing with his back turned most deliberately upon the times with which he was contemporary, and intent upon nothing but the curious love and intimate researches of an age that was as dead as Sisera. It is for that reason that we are persuaded that, had he never translated Rabelais, his name would never have emerged from the roll-call of his own generation. Everything he did, all his dreams and desires, came to the world a century and a half old. They were stillborn; and all the fantastic powers of his vivid and vital brain would not save his theories from their necessary fate.

Yet the man himself must always have extraordinary fascinations for the student. An imagination at all times bordering upon absolute intoxication, an acquisitive power over words to which Shakespeare's vocabulary can alone be compared, a belief in himself of the sublimest and most complacent kind, an aspiring and scheming brain which reeled off panacea after panacea for nothing less than the whole universe—he would not have been content with a bauble less splendid—a dreamer, a poet, a soldier, a mathematician, a traveller, a wit, a scholar, a theorist, a philanthropist (in speculation), a philosopher, a lover of fine dress, and a man of most elegant and charming presence—what picture could be more engrossing or more provocative? Thanks to his translation of Rabelais we have the desire and the wish to make the acquaintance of so volatile and exquisite a spirit; for, as we have said, save for that amazing work, it would likely have gone hard with Urquhart's lasting fame. Yet, again, if we perpend, his Rabelais was still part of his innate—we say innate, because there is no sign in his life that he consciously fought for an ideal—mediævalism. For Rabelais points both ways—backward to the abuses of history, forward to the remedy of those abuses. And it is only reasonable to suppose that Urquhart was rather attracted to the backward pointing of his great hero than to the voice of the prophet.

Mr. John Willcock, in his endeavour to portray the character and undertaking of Sir Thomas Urquhart, has made rather than written a book. He has gone to the works of the Knight of Cromartie for his material, and he is not sparing of quotation. But we cannot conscientiously say that he has done his work well. It is good that a book of this kind should have been written, but it might have been so much better done. A great deal of the comment is merely fatuous. Let us speak by the card. It appears that in the sixteenth century vacations were suppressed at the Aberdeen University. Mr. Willcock actually adds a footnote to say that an "eminent Yorkshire educationist" introduced "the same rule into the establishment under his charge." Mr. Willcock refers to Mr. Squeers! "One of the ways," says he, "in which the elder Sir Thomas succeeded in impoverishing himself and his family was in becoming bail for people who absconded." This he "infers," because there is record that it happened once. Mr. Willcock describes Portia as "the fair critic"; and a little later on, again in a footnote, in all seriousness he trots out Mr. Micawber and Uriah Heep as illustrations of outright historical facts. These are all eclipsed, however, by the remarkable statement: "It is probable that he died much sooner, a victim in all likelihood to fiery restlessness of spirit. This conjecture is, however, improbable." How can a man bring himself to think so loosely? When Mr. Willcock is playful he can gambol like any ichthyosaurus. "One of them [the Muses]," he writes, describing a picture, "seems inclined to give Sir Thomas a sprinkling; but refrains either because it was unnecessary or for fear of spoiling his nice new clothes." Mr. Willcock's reference to Browning's enjoyment of "a jolly chapter of Rabelais" "over a bottle of Chablis" is: "Some have turned over Rabelais and searched for the jolly chapter in vain, and have, perhaps, attributed their failure to the want of a bottle of Chablis." Comment is superfluous. Finally, a little specimen of Mr. Willcock's grammar: "François Rabelais was born in Touraine, according to the date usually given, and which there is reason," &c. In a word, Mr. Willcock has not, as a matter of fact, produced a worthy book on Urquhart. His writing is loose, his criticism is a trifle vague, and his humour is deplorable. We should have looked to the chapter on the translation of Rabelais as the most interesting in such a work; but we grieve to say that it is extremely thin, containing no novelty either in style, in thought, or in criticism. (In spite of a grammarian's protest, the present writer thinks that "either" and "or" may be applied to any number of qualities, for the simple reason that you may have any number of alternatives, or because there are more than two colours!) Page after page of this chapter, which is by no means a long one, consists simply of quotation from the translation—no less, that is, than twelve pages out of twenty-six. The remainder is to quite an appreciable extent gathered from other writers—Mr. Tytler, Sir Theodore Martin, and others; while Mr. Willcock's own contributions to the subject seem to us of quite insignificant value. In a word, the true Life of Urquhart, which shall be a brilliant summary of the man and his writings, has yet to be written.

Fluent and Unselective.

Rue. By Laurence Housman. (The Unicorn Press.)

To go about with a perpetual pencil, so to speak, ready to jot down perpetual little poems upon the smallest thought or impulse, is a perilous way of writing, and to commit them wholesale to print is a perilous way of publishing. We do not say that Rue was written in this way; but it contains far too much evidence of fluent and unselective composition. A poet should look askance at some of the moods which present themselves for verse, or at least he should be exacting as to the results. The remark as to the "perpetual pencil" was rather called forth by the appalling facility of versifiers in general at the present day than applied literally to Mr. Housman's book. We are, and have been, consistent admirers of Mr. Housman's poetry. In his first volume of religious poems, especially, we found a distinguished quality of compact and novel thought, taking one by surprise in its union with a quick and original fancy. But it is impossible not to express the fear that Mr. Housman is writing too much, or rather too fast. His books of late have followed on each other's heels; and Rue, in particular, comes when we had scarcely risen from the review of The Little Land. Quick publication, we are aware, may be deceptive. It may result from the accumulated store of years, not from hurried production. But the internal evidence of Mr. Laurence Housman's books tends to confirm our misgiving. The Little Land was distinctly more loose, less full of matter, than his previous volume, and this, we are sorry to say, is weaker than The Little Land. The Little Land, moreover, was leavened by some fine work, and one quite notable bit of work in the shape of the strikingly-lovely "Cupid and Christ." Here we have found no such radiant star. It is by way, apparently, of being a sequence; but the connecting thread is in the poet's mind; it is not made out—nor does it seem Mr. Housman's intention it should be made out—to the reader. That would matter little were the poems individually of interest. Our complaint is not that Mr. Housman has become cheap, or careless, or essays the modes of easy popularity; it is that he has become diluted. Of the poems which compose Rue we must needs say that they are thin. And that is exactly what we should expect from too much writing.

There is the old air about the poems, the point and neatness of expression; poem after poem wakens expectations of matter to come; but it fails, and we finish with a sense of disappointment. The thought, the idea, is not quite distinguished enough. A little more, you often feel, would have done it;

But the little more, and how much it is!
And the little less, and what worlds away!

as Browning sang. We want that little more of Mr. Housman, and with a little less production he might surely give it us, as he has done before.

Another point in some of these poems is their difficulty. Mr. Housman has always been fond of curiously-knitted expression (in the higher sense of the word "curious"), and partly, perhaps, it is this carried to some interior extreme which accounts for the deficiency. Still more, we think, it is a complete failure to realise how little he has done to put his reader at the same mental standpoint with himself—the same initial standpoint. Of course, a poet may play the trick of stimulating his reader by keeping him in the dark up to the final stanza, and then bursting the meaning on him like an apex-bud. Mr. Housman does it at least once; but it is perilous, and cannot, moreover, account for all the difficulty we experience. There is a poem on page 17 which we have read several times; and the apparent insanity of each individual stanza can only be surpassed by the apparent insanity of the whole. The central conception remains in Mr. Housman's mind, and finds no way into the poem, which is like programme-music without the programme. What is meant by such an image as—

Day drew forth its mandrake-root?

In Mr. Housman's better vein is such a poem as "An Empty Hermitage," with its fine idea regarding the prayer-hollowed stone:

Who knows in what dark anguish ailed
Yon soul of flesh and bone?
The prayer, because the spirit failed,
Hath carved itself in stone.

Would all were like that! But though Rue shows that Mr. Laurence Housman remains a poet, it is not the best we expect from him—and still expect.

"Practical John."

According to My Lights. By John Hollingshead. (Chatto & Windus. 6s.)

MANY of the papers in this book are very short, very thin, and have lost the interest they had upon their first appearance in newspaper or magazine. But they make pleasant reading, because of the genial personality behind them, the personality of a man who has known both success and failure, and has taken both with a delightfully cynical optimism. To most of us Mr. Hollingshead is known mainly as the manager of the Gaiety Theatre, the guardian of the "sacred lamp," the caterer of popular amusements. "Caterer" is the word he would use; for he has no illusions as to elevating the masses; he only wants to let them enjoy themselves in their own manner and pay in their own way. But he has played many parts in his time. Not only has he managed the Gaiety and rented a Rowton cubicle; he has been the friend of Thackeray and Dickens, and the two most interesting papers in his book are concerned with the famous editors for whom he wrote. Thackeray, it seems, had no head for business; but he had very long legs. Mr. Hollingshead remembers him on the box-seat of an omnibus. "I have often seen him going through Regent-street, in the middle of the day, with one of his long legs hanging down far below the foot-board." For the Cornhill Thackeray tried "(hard for him) to get a new set of writers together." But at the inaugural dinner "it was Tom, Dick, and Harry shaking hands with Bill, Sam, and Bob, and our chief standing before the fire smiling, with his hands under his coat-tails." "It's no use," he said, "trying to get new men; there's only a certain number of cabs upon the stand." Of Thackeray's manner of work Mr. Hollingshead has some curious observations. He had a secretary in Onslow-square, "a feeble secretary, but a good companion," who had acted in the same capacity to Carlyle. But Thackeray seems to have fled from his secretary:

He wrote a very small, neat hand, and used slips of note-paper. These he would often gather up and put in his coat pocket, leaving his secretary at work, and stroll down to the Athenæum Club. Here, if he could get a comfortable table and was not waylaid by any gossip, to whom he was always ready to give an attentive ear, he would pull out his slips and carry his story a few steps further. In an hour or two he would again collect the scattered papers and go on to the Garrick Club, where, if not interrupted, he would resume his writing. This habit of composing in public frightened many of the old club fogies, who thought they were being caricatured for posterity, and no doubt helped to get him blackballed at the 'Travellers'.

Dickens, for whom Mr. Hollingshead acted as Champion Outdoor Young Man on Household Words, "was as great a contrast to Thackeray in appearance as he was in his writings. Dickens was a short, upright man of spare figure, who held his head very erect, and had an energetic, industrious, not to say bustling appearance." He was supposed to do all his literary work between ten in the morning and two o'clock:

But when he was struggling with a new and perhaps difficult story, this hard and fast rule was relaxed. At two o'clock he would start on these monotonous twenty-mile walks, undertaken with a mistaken idea that intellectual work required to be balanced with a plentiful amount of physical exercise. His walks were always walks of observation, through parts of London that he wanted to study. . . . He was a master in London; abroad he was only a workman.

Mr. Hollingshead thinks this physical exercise helped to kill Dickens before his time:

He knew and felt that he had earned his tombstone in Westminster Abbey. That he retired to this resting-place so soon as he did I fully believe was mainly due to his mechanical walks, and the exhaustion and excitement caused by his "dramatic readings." A day or two before he died, I am told on good authority, he was found in the grounds of Gadshill, acting the murder scene between Sikes and Nancy.

There are other curious reminiscences in Mr. Hollingshead's book; but the two opening articles on Dickens and Thackeray are by far the most interesting.

Other New Books.

SIDELIGHTS ON SOUTH AFRICA.

By ROY DEVEREUX.

In this little book Mrs. Devereux gives a most readable series of impressions of all the chief centres of interest in South Africa. Cape Town, Kimberley, Mafeking, Pretoria, Johannesburg, Pietermaritzburg, not forgetting Zanzibar, Portuguese and German East Africa, are all sketched, and very ably sketched too. But one regrets that a writer who has so fine a fancy and so good a gift of hitting off both scenes and men should fill so much of her book with statistics and dry arguments easily found in the works of reference. This little pen-picture of Oom Paul shows her perspicacity and her fairness at once:

The spectacle of an ignorant peasant imposing a vexatious rule over an educated multitude strikes one as a relic of barbarism, the subsistence of which is, after all, the greatest testimony to President Kruger's ability. His is the strength to sit still—that invulnerable strength which only comes from the lack of learning and of imagination. . . . The younger generation of Boers who disagree with his policy either fear to oppose it or are powerless to do so. The Executive tolerate his despotic will because of what he has done for the land, believing that the end of his activity is not very far off.

And here is a pretty sketch of the view of Table Mountain from the sloep of Groote Schuur, Mr. Cecil Rhodes's South African home:

In the foreground is a series of terraces that mount the grassy hill, radiant with red salvia, and golden with orange trees. Two giant cedars, standing like sentinels on the summit, throw a trellis of frail black branches across the background of the mountain. It rears its height in dreamy opalescence against the sky, which is always here the bluest of things blue.

These are samples of Mrs. Devereux's style. Anyone who can detach his mind from war details for a moment will have a very clear and up-to-date idea of the land we are battling for after reading these picturesque sidelights on South Africa. (Sampson Low & Co.)

FINLAND AND THE TZARS, 1809-1899.

By J. R. FISHER.

That a barrister-at-law wrote Finland and the Tzars is evident on every page of this most judicial contribution to English literature dealing with Finland. "Of late years," says Mr. Fisher, "one or two ladies have written bright and readable sketches of travel in Finland, but these writers could naturally devote but little space to the political and historical questions that have now come to the front." To these questions Mr. Fisher gives full and exhaustive treatment in a work which is certainly not primarily bright and readable, though once and again the wisdom in it brightens into wit, as when, in dealing with the notorious "Tartars" episode of the spring of last year, there is made this comment: "It was a reversal of the Napoleonic mot: they scratched the Tartar and they found the Russian." It is in connexion with that episode, duly set forth in all its grotesque hideousness, that Mr. Fisher so far throws off the stern restraint which he has imposed upon himself as advocate for Finland as to use the expression "blackguardly tactics." Having used that expression, however, he characteristically adds that no one would wish to hold "respectable Russian publicists or officials, still less the Emperor himself," responsible for the tactics thus described. Yet to some of us the saddest aspect of the Finnish question is that really quite respectable Russian publicists and officials, and with them another quite respectable person, would seem to have succumbed to a form of delusional insanity which makes them, how wise and fair soever in other directions, quite unable to distinguish here between fair and foul. If Mr. Fisher refrains from comment on that staring fact with a view to conciliating those potent persons, and thus helping towards a consummation devoutly to be wished for, well and good. Well and good, too, if he hopes to win credence when he writes that while there are comprehensibly points concerning which disputes "might honestly arise" between Russia and Finland, "it is beyond all possibility of argument that the question of conscription is not one of them." The fact is, that only after reading and weighing the admirable arguments put forward by Mr. Fisher in dealing with this matter will it cease to be with many—as it has heretofore been with the present writer—a rooted belief that the Panslavists here stood on very strong ground. In sum, while Mr. Fisher is perhaps at his best, as he is certainly at his bravest, in dealing with the army question between Russia and Finland, his book throughout is good and profitable reading. (Arnold.)

THE RACES OF MAN.

By J. DENIKER.

Dr. Deniker's contribution to the "Contemporary Science" series falls into two parts. To adopt a current but not very valuable distinction of terms, the first half is anthropology, and the second half ethnology. That is to say, the first half is an account of the distinctive characters of man as a species of the animal world, in which stress is laid at once on such characters as relate him to and differentiate him from other mammalian species, and on those which, by the greater or less amount of variability which they present, afford a basis for the further subdivision of the species into varieties or races. These variable characters range, of course, from such physical ones as head-form, hair-colour, and eye-colour, to such psychical ones as social organisation and methods of war and commerce—a wide field, which Dr. Deniker surveys in a most learned, orderly, and suggestive fashion. The second half deals with the distribution and relationships of existing races, and with the assumed pure human varieties, or, as the writer prefers to call them, "somatological units," which went to form these. It, therefore, covers much the same ground as Mr. Keane's Man, Past and Present, reviewed a few months ago in these columns. Dr. Deniker, however, although evidently acquainted with the work of Mr. Keane and of the great Italian ethnologist with whom Mr. Keane has so much in common, Prof. Sergi, gives in many respects a very different treatment of the vexed question of the origin of the European peoples. Instead of the threefold classification of Homo

Europeus, Alpinus, and Mediterraneus, which they posit, he suggests a more elaborate one implying six principal and four secondary races. Between them the two books give a very fair idea of the present position of science with regard to this difficult problem. A forthcoming work by Prof. Ripley will perhaps take the matter further. (Scott.)

SPANISH LITERATURE IN THE ENGLAND OF THE TUDORS.

BY JOHN GARRETT
UNDERHILL.

This is a thesis for a Columbian degree: it belongs, therefore, to a class of work very familiar in Germany, but almost unknown in our own country. Somewhat painfully and tediously written, it contains the results of genuine research, and should provide useful material for future historians of sixteenth-century literature. Mr. Underhill traces the history of Spanish influence upon English writers from the time of the Humanists to the close of Elizabeth's reign with the greatest minuteness, but he makes no attempt to magnify his office unduly. Indeed, he does not conceal his opinion that the extent of this influence as compared with that either of France or Italy was very slight. Three or four names sum up the most of it: there was Ludovicus, or Luis Vives, the Humanist, who began to lecture at Richard Foxe's fine new college of Corpus Christi, Oxford, early in the century; there was Antonio de Guevara, to the English translators of whose terribly "faked" historical writings we owe the beginnings of Euphuism; there was Montemayor, whose pastoral romance of "Diana" afforded a model for Sidney's "Arcadia," and provided Shakespeare with hints for plots; finally, there were the innumerable pamphleteers of adventure, whose artless chronicles formed the basis of Hakluyt's immortal "Voyages." To all of these Mr. Underhill does full justice, and earns the gratitude of the student with a bibliographical appendix which must have been truly laborious in the compiling. (Macmillan.)

THE "HAMPS TEAD ANNUAL."

EDITED BY G. E. MATHESON AND S. C. MAYLE.

This interesting "annual" has again descended from the heights into London, reporting Hampstead's beauty, Hampstead's culture, and Hampstead's pride in its notable inhabitants of old. Among this year's contributors are Prof. Hales, Dr. Garnett, Canon Ainger, and Mr. Arthur Waugh. Canon Ainger writes a biographical appreciation of Miss Margaret Gillies, who painted a miniature portrait of Wordsworth at Rydal Mount. She painted no fewer (we grieve to say that Canon Ainger says "no less") than five portraits of the poet, in two of which Mrs. Wordsworth appeared. Miss Gillies's residence in Church-row, Hampstead, during some of the later years of her life, brings her record within the scope of the Annual. Prof. Hales's paper on the sign of the "King of Bohemia," which occurs on an old inn in the Hampstead High-street, is quite a solid historical essay. Dr. R. F. Horton discourses on "suburbanity"; after pointing out that Hampstead now contains as many free citizens as did Athens, and that "man for man they are as good or better," he inquires why Athens was "wreathed with beauty and genius and glory," while Hampstead has only villa culture and an Annual.

The most literary paper in the volume is Dr. Garnett's "Notes on Some Poets Connected with Hampstead," and the most interesting point in this paper is the author's attempt to identify the source of Keats's famous lines about "stout Cortez," and "a peak in Darien" in his sonnet on Chapman's Homer. Dr. Garnett thinks that Keats must have read a certain foot-note to Wordsworth's "Excursion" in which Wordsworth refers in kindly terms to a crazed poet named William Gilbert, author of "The Hurricane." Wordsworth quotes a note appended by Gilbert to a passage in that poem. It is this note of Gilbert's Dr. Garnett suspects to be the source from which Keats took his grand simile:

Like stout Cortez, when with eagle eyes
He stared at the Pacific—and all his men
Looked at each other with a wild surmise—
Silent upon a peak in Darien.

Gilbert's passage is not unworthy to have inspired a poet. This is it:

A man is supposed to improve by going out into the world, by visiting London. Artificial man does; he extends with his sphere; but, alas! that sphere is microscopic; it is formed of minutiae, and he surrenders his genuine vision to the artist, in order to embrace it in his ken. . . . But, when he walks along the river of Amazons, when he rests his eye on the unrivalled Andes, when he measures the long and watered savannahs, or contemplates from a sudden promontory the distant, vast Pacific—and feels himself a freeman in this vast theatre, and commanding each ready produced fruit of this wilderness, and each progeny of this stream—his exaltation is not less than imperial.

Dr. Garnett's surmise is supported by the fact that the "Excursion" was published in 1814, three years before Keats's sonnet appeared.

Books of Travel.

No one who read and enjoyed Three in Norway is likely to need incitement to buy Peaks and Pines (Longmans). Mr. J. A. Lees is as sprightly and entertaining as ever. The humours of "roughing it" and his love of Nature race for the reader's attention, and his drawings are amusing where they are not intentionally artistic. Another excellent book on roughing it, in grim earnest this time, is Mr. Harold Bindloss's A Wide Dominion (Fisher Unwin), which describes the experiences of those who are yearly opening up the undeveloped corners of Canada. A journey undertaken under far more comfortable conditions is Miss Phibbs's Visit to the Russians in Central Asia (Kogan Paul). With a party of English ladies and gentlemen, under a special permit from General Kuropatkin and the escort of courteous Russian officers, she and her companions travelled as far as Samarkand. Her pictures of the sights of Central Asia, her deft allusions to their old-world glories and heroes, and her friendly view of Russia's mission in those parts, combine to make her little volume most interesting. The photographs are well chosen and admirably reproduced. Equal praise may be bestowed on the excellent photographs contained in Dr. Arthur Neve's Picturesque Kashmir (Sands & Co.). The author has spent eighteen years in Kashmir, and here gives an itinerary of various trips within and beyond its borders to Thibet, into which he and his friends penetrated so far as to Ladak. As a medical missionary he has much knowledge of the human nature of Kashmiris and Dogras, Chitralis and Tibetans: but it is of the beauties of Nature in that land of magnificent mountains that he has most to tell us. Similarly Mr. Jozef Israels, in his Spain (John C. Nimmo), has found most suitable material for his sketch-book, and some thirty-nine of his sketches are reproduced. The veteran Dutch painter—he is over seventy-six—depicts with vivid brush and agreeable garrulity what took his eye in his tour through Spain. Illustrations abound also in the account of the Victoria Nyanza (Swan Sonnenschein & Co.), by Lieutenant Paul Kollman. But their interest is ethnographical rather than artistic, for they are mostly sketches of the various native utensils, weapons, &c., which the author has brought home with him from German East Africa. His accounts of the various tribes are conscientiously complete, and likely to prove useful to students in the future.

Fiction.

One Queen Triumphant. By Frank Mathew.
(John Lane. 6s.)

THIS novel, of which one of the chief scenes is the execution of Mary Queen of Scots, brings to mind that great neglected historical novel of Balzac's, Sur Catherine de Medici, the first part of which gives a superb picture of the same Mary and the tragic close of her brief idyll as the young wife of Francis II. of France. Mr. Mathew has this in common with Balzac, that his principal concern is with character rather than event. He can draw a great character on great lines. His Elizabeth, the principal person in the book, is well done. She is no conventional swaggering Bess, but a woman of true overmastering force, imposing herself upon you as an authentic creation. Mr. Mathew's sense of style helps him to render her "royal" speeches extremely effective:

"You speak despairingly," she said smiling. "You are free. You would do well to leave England. Sail to-morrow, if you like, but return. You will forget this brief fancy. Remember how the philosopher Thales was asked when a man should marry, and answered, 'A young man not yet, an older one not at all.' These fooleries will please you less when you hear creeping Time at your gate. I am past my relish for them. I am glad of it. I was not moulded to dandle babies, croon lullabies to them, and please them with idiotical talk; no, nor to woo a man's tenderness and be a toy for his leisure. Cherish your freedom. When you are unfit for toil it will be time to enfeeble yourself with amorous dallying. Here comes the dainty witch," she went on, as Mistress Winifred entered. "Child, the still moonlight has a home in your heart through all the troubled day. In this February dusk you are April, with cheeks heralding the dawn of the roses."

There is no fustian about this. Mary is not so good, possibly because in her case Mr. Mathew has too much tried to be subtle. But the narrative of her execution is noble.

The book is episodically so good that one closes it with a sense of keen disappointment, for Mr. Mathew, though he has gifts, does not know how to use them fully. What he lacks is constructive power, a feeling for cumulative effect. One's idea is that, through some failure of technical equipment, he is continually missing fire. We are inclined to urge that Mr. A. E. W. Mason should give him a few lessons in the savoir faire of fiction. He plans his intrigue so clumsily that at the back of the reader's mind is always the lurking fear: "Has some important point escaped me?" He also allows himself sometimes to be pretty in a feeble, unoriginal manner. The sugary close of the novel, and the constant employment of the "Nut-Brown Maid" song, and the vaticina-tory use of the "Morte d'Arthur" are instances of this.

She Walks in Beauty. By Katharine Tynan.
(Smith, Elder & Co. 6s.)

PRESUMABLY this novel is meant for "girls of all ages." It is constructed according to a recipe with which Mrs. Hinkson has made us familiar, and which, though she by no means originated it, has been greatly improved under her accomplished hands. If the novel for girls must be written at all, it could not easily be better than this. For Mrs. Hinkson has not only grace, she has humour, Irish humour. The characters and scenes are usually Irish, and she can contrive a scintillation of sparkling wit as well as any Irishwoman that ever wrote. It is on that account that we are inclined to pardon the too-saccharine quality of much of the novel, and the conventionality of many of the people in it. We can even pardon the scene in which

Mr. Graydon, impecunious heir to a title and wealth, goes to see the stern "old lord" in the aristocratic square, and chats with the man-servant (who had married the house-keeper), "'Why, it is Master Archie!' he said, quavering. 'Master Archie after all those years!'" We can even pardon the final scene in which the sister of the heroine (so that all may be duly happy) herself proposes to that other old lord whom the heroine had jilted in favour of "Sir Anthony," her first love.

The humour—unfortunately it cannot be cut out in sections for quotation—saves the book, and indeed almost lifts it into the category of literature; but we doubt if it is the humour which will chiefly appeal to the book's special audience. It is rather the sweetness which will captivate. As thus:

"After to-day I will not call you darling till I have the right before all the world. After to-day. I meant to have held my tongue, but you bewildered me, Pamela. You are not angry with me?"

"No," came almost in a whisper.

"Lift up your eyes to me and say it. That is right. How beautiful your eyes are, Pamela! Say 'Tony' now."

"Tony."

"Dear Tony."

"Dear Tony."

"How sweetly you say it! It is like silver in your voice. But, come now, we will go home. I have to be wise, you know. Ah, Pamela, Pamela, why did you bring me to the Wishing Well?"

Mrs. Hinkson has a tact, a "touch," an "indefinable something," which carry her through these impossibly ideal episodes of girlish and boyish love with positive brilliance. A single slip, one error of literary discretion, and the scene might be either mawkish or ludicrous, or both. But that error is never committed. We regard She Walks in Beauty as a most adroit and successful essay in a branch of fiction full of peculiar and special difficulties.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the week's Fiction are not necessarily final.
Reviews of a selection will follow.]

THE LOST CONTINENT.

By CUTCLIFFE HYNÉ.

There is almost a sense of loss in a book by Mr. Cutcliffe Hyne where Captain Kettle does not figure; but as this work tells of the splendour and the disappearance of the mythical continent of Atlantis a place could not well be found for the redoubtable Captain. Those who like a story crowded with adventures, where mammoth beasts and priests with occult powers over the forces of nature jostle one another, will like The Lost Continent. In the end Atlantis is submerged by the sea. Only two people survive. They sail away in an ark to repopulate the world. A spirited, incredible yarn. (Hutchinson. 6s.)

ONORA.

By ROSA MULHOLLAND.

Lady Gilbert's new story, like those which have preceded it, is intensely Irish, and prettily and sympathetically written. It is a happier book than her last, Nanno, which was gloom throughout. Onora is an Irish peasant girl, who after many privations comes at last to good fortune. (Richards. 3s. 6d.)

A COURT TRAGEDY.

By ALBERT D. VANDAM.

A story within a story, telling of a German Court and the curious fatality attending performances of "Othello" at the State theatre. On the eighth day after every performance a death occurred in the Royal Family. (Chatto & Windus. 3s. 6d.)

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates for Yearly Subscriptions ..... 20s. including postage.

American Agents for the ACADEMY: Brentano's, 31, Union-square, New York.

"The Best Hundred Books for Children."

THE list of one hundred books for children, just compiled by the united efforts of nearly a thousand readers of the Daily News, is interesting, but it is hardly admirable. This list has been used by the judges as their touchstone in judging the prize of £10; for, according to the terms of the competition, the award was to go to the sender of the list approximating to it most nearly.

First, of this plébiscite list. It is interesting because it shows what nearly a thousand readers regard as (here we quote the Daily News' original announcement) the "Best Hundred Books for Children" selected with "the immediate object of furnishing suggestions which may possibly be of use to the Corporation of West Ham in a most excellent scheme which they have on foot: the establishment of a Children's Library for the use of their borough."

It will be noted that under the express terms of the Competition all competitors were constituted literary advisers, so to speak, to the West Ham authorities. They were not asked to determine what are now the most popular books in the nursery. They were asked to advise as to what books should be placed in the hands of children by a responsible body, anxious to form a good library for children.

Here, then, is the plébiscite list, with the number of votes given to each book:

Robinson Crusoe .....	921
Andersen's Fairy Tales .....	877
Alice in Wonderland .....	867
Tom Brown's Schooldays .....	811
Pilgrim's Progress .....	824
Grimm's Fairy Tales .....	817
Little Women .....	757
Arabian Nights .....	730
Little Lord Fauntleroy .....	727
Alice Through the Looking-glass .....	723
Waterbabies .....	712
Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare .....	706
Uncle Tom's Cabin .....	703
Treasure Island .....	703
Swiss Family Robinson .....	691
Ivanhoe .....	670
Gulliver's Travels .....	659
Westward Ho! .....	632
Jungle Book .....	675
Wide Wide World .....	620
Aesop's Fables .....	617
Heroes .....	605
Hereward the Wake .....	484
Masterman Ready .....	484
Jackanapes .....	467
Carrots .....	460
Eric .....	427
Kidnapped .....	406
Last of the Mohicans .....	382
Lays of Ancient Rome .....	356
Story of a Short Life .....	355
The Tallman .....	349
Little Men .....	344
Blue Fairy Book .....	341
Black Beauty .....	337
St. Winifred's .....	336
Madam How and Lady Why .....	315
Mr. Midshipman Easy .....	331
Stories from Homer .....	328
King Solomon's Mines .....	327
Children of the New Forest .....	322
The Rose and the Ring .....	320
David Copperfield .....	315
A Flat Iron for a Farthing .....	306
Twenty Thousand Leagues under the Sea .....	302
The Daisy Chain .....	301
John Halifax, Gentleman .....	280
Tanglewood Tales .....	287
The Old Curiosity Shop .....	284
Uncle Remus .....	283

Coral Island .....	282
Second Jungle Book .....	280
Parables from Nature .....	278
At the Back of the North Wind .....	277
Jessica's First Prayer .....	275
Don Quixote .....	273
A Peep Behind the Scenes .....	270
Boy's Own Annual .....	265
Ministering Children .....	261
Red Fairy Book .....	258
Child's Garden of Verse .....	254
Round the World in Eighty Days .....	252
Good Wives .....	245
Feats on the Field .....	244
Lamp-lighter .....	243
Lorna Doone .....	243
From Log Cabin to White House .....	241
The Cuckoo Clock .....	236
The Little Duke .....	236
Dickens's Christmas Books .....	235
Helen's Babies .....	234
Longfellow's Poems .....	230
Oliver Twist .....	230
Scott's Poems .....	221
The Vicar of Wakefield .....	216
Fairyland of Science .....	215
Vice Versa .....	213
In the Days of Bruce .....	212
Heir of Redcliffe .....	211
Queechy .....	210
Fifth Form at St. Dominic's .....	206
Three Midshipmen .....	205
Dove in the Eagle's Nest .....	205
Kentworth .....	205
Peter Simple .....	204
Misunderstood .....	202
Sweetheart Travellers .....	201
Child's History of England .....	200
Christmas Carol .....	200
Sandford and Merton .....	199
The Schenbergs-Cotta Family .....	198
Christie's Old Organ .....	197
Six to Sixteen .....	197
Pickwick Papers .....	192
Jan o' the Windmill .....	191
A Gentleman of France .....	190
Girl's Own Annual .....	185
Voyage of the "Sunbeam" .....	185
Quentin Durward .....	183
Little Meg's Children .....	179

The most conspicuous feature of this list is the enormous dominance of fiction. No fewer than eighty-nine of the books named come under this head. Thus, only eleven books are left to represent science, travel, biography, poetry, natural history, and what not. A pretty commentary on the wisdom of the many-headed! The conviction grows that this "standard" list reveals simply the books which are believed to be most popular with children. Indeed, we are disposed to accept it as a fairly veracious statement of the obvious reading-tastes of the nursery. But as an advisory document compiled for transmission to West Ham the list is a failure. As a matter of fact, it has already reached West Ham; and Mr. A. Cotgreave, of the West Ham Library, has given his views upon it. These are just what we should have anticipated. Mr. Cotgreave feels "bound to say that, after due consideration, I believe that the larger number would more merit the title of popular than of best." Mr. Cotgreave holds, and we agree with him, that a children's library—formed, as any such library should be, with a mingling of sympathy and sagacity—ought to include "a fair proportion of interesting and simple works of a higher order than mere story-books." He adds, "I therefore regret to see how entirely these instructive books are excluded from the competition lists from which your analysis is made." Certainly, nothing would be a lamer action on the part of the West Ham authorities than the adoption of the Daily News plébiscite selection—a selection for which, of course, our contemporary is not responsible. To dismiss it, it contains: 89 stories, 4 books of poetry, 2 books of science, 1 book of travels, 1 biography, 3 annuals (mainly fiction).

We now come to the list which—by approximating most closely to the plébiscite list—has taken the prize. It was sent in by Miss May Price Williams, and its agreement with the standard list is represented by the fraction  $\frac{61}{100}$ ; that is to say, it names sixty-one books which are approved by the united wisdom of all the competitors, and thirty-nine books which are not so ratified. It is on these thirty-nine that we at once concentrate our attention, and we are not surprised to find that the competitor who has shown by at least sixty-one inclusions that she understands the more obvious tastes of children, is alive to their rarer tastes and aptitudes. We find that Miss Price's unrated thirty-nine books include such capital stuff as the following:

Life of Our Lord (Mrs. Marshall).	Tales of a Grandfather.
Little Arthur's History.	Homes Without Hands.
The Story of the Heavens.	Men Who Have Made the Empire.
Glaucois.	Under Drake's Flag.
Evenings at Home.	With Clive in India.
How I Found Livingstone.	Book of Nonsense.

Miss Price's list is better than the standard list inasmuch as it combines sympathetic knowledge of what children like in the way of stories, fancy, and fun, with a certain good judgment of what they may be led to like in the way of histories, deeds, and natural wonders.

The Daily News has published one of the unsuccessful lists—sent in by Miss Grace Mackay. This deserves the praise awarded to its workmanlike qualities. It is impossible, without more space than we can afford, to compare Miss Mackay's list with the plébiscite and "champion" lists. It will be found in the Daily News of January 30. But it has many good inclusions, and if it errs, it is on the side of solidity; yet four books of natural history can hardly be too many in a hundred, nor six books of travels, nor five of biography, nor three of poetry.

It is amazing to find how few of all the many hundreds of children's books which have poured from the press in, say, the last ten years have been included in the lists. The proportion of such books is almost infinitesimal, and whether we take the fact in connexion with the plébiscite list or the "champion" list, the fact is significant.

Paris Letter.

(From our French Correspondent.)

L'Agonie de l'Amour, by Edmond Jaloux, is a brilliant and an artistic novel, which, in its own form, casts upon the wearisome wave of decadent literature words of wisdom and truth. The writer has the greatest defect of the hour—too much style, and he abuses metaphor. When clouds blot the sun, he compares them to a crowd of dwarfs grouped on the breast of an assassinated god. His phrases are too bejewelled, his prose is too perfumed, too tufted, if I may borrow a French word. With a larger manner, less brilliance and more simplicity, M. Jaloux might aspire to become a great novelist, for this remarkable book contains all the essential elements of literature. Ideas of solid value abound, the satire is forcible and arresting, the characterisation admirable, the lesson penetrating and convincing. Dialogue is always more sparingly used in French fiction than in ours, and here it serves but to reveal the character and temperament of each figure in the book. Of course there is the usual charge of indiscretion to be brought against M. Jaloux. He follows his miscreant hero too faithfully, and shows him to us in places and in moods, knowledge of which we would infinitely prefer to dispense with. But this is part of French sincerity. While English novelists depict all their heroes as saints or inoffensive sages, and suppress all indication of the brute which slumbers in every man, the French prefer to tell the truth about themselves. They are apt to go too far, we know, for on this ground the reader gains by the writer's reticence. Still, as the object of L'Agonie de l'Amour is to show us what a vile and heartless and futile thing the mere man of literature may become, M. Jaloux' indiscretion is part of the pungent lesson of his satire. Luc d'Hermony is a poet, a brilliant young man of letters, with all the modern and contemptible taint of his calling. All life for him is literature, and consumed by this shallow and miserable mania of words, he has ceased to be capable of an honest or virile sentiment. His single quality is the sincerity with which he values himself. "Is it my fault," he bitterly asks, "if I belong to a race unquiet and suffering, impoverished and powerless, which has no passions?" and the last line is a still bitterer cry, when he falls most infamously: "Am I then a crapulous beast?" and recognising the fact, adds: "Very well, then, I am a crapulous beast, and I can't change myself."

The tragedy lies in the fact that the poor wretch honestly aspires to rise to better things. In the first chapter we find him at war with his books, bored and unhappy. "Books," he cries, "are like men. Few have a soul." He stamps on them, and kicks them furiously about his study. Modern novels, he laments, have ruined life for him. He has been the servant of a desolating and subtilised literature, which has only procured him disgust and apathy. He cannot love nor burst the shackles of a "moi" that has become his prison. When he thinks of Byron, Shelley, and Chateaubriand with envy, he says: "Ah, they suffered, but their sufferings were profound and superb. Their lives were full to overflowing, whereas I have come too late into a world without the unexpected, where there are no longer even Red Indians." At a symposium of choice decadent spirits, he bursts out against the absurd legend of love. "Love is but the awakening of all that slumbers in us of barbarous, animal and primitive. The day it enters our life we become stupid, vain and jealous; we betray our friends, our time is passed in the most mediocre occupations, we endure humiliations, outrages, dishonour even." This is where M. Jaloux inserts his excellent sermon. Among all these cynical and blighted youths, with nothing to live for except art and literature, which have utterly demoralised and unmanned them, is a grave and earnest fellow, a doctor, Apremont. Somebody has defined love as a microbe, the element of fermentation and dissolution in society; and Apremont breaks out in a just and eloquent indignation. Love he calls "the terrible and mysterious breath which comes from the depth of the centuries, from the brazier wherein Troy was burnt and Dido killed." What have their mere sensual experiences to do with love? he asks, and forces them to admit that they know nothing about the mighty passion. Debauch was all they understood; they were cowards, retreating before the intensity of life, frightened of loving, frightened of suffering, frightened of responsibility. Under the mask of youth were lines and wrinkles of premature age. Wrapped up in themselves, full of envy and the thirst of success and money and luxury, they were incapable of sacrifice, of devotion, of generosity: their thoughts, their speech were simply bad literature. And then when Luc, in his moral distress, consults him, Apremont continues his sermon in still more eloquent tones. The entire chapter is admirable. Love, he preaches from illimitable experience, is not the gross, sensual affair Luc regards it, but the eternal need of the human heart. To be lifted above the animals we must live for somebody, devote ourselves, find our centre of existence in another soul; our vocation should be to love, to console, to help another. Happiness consists in making the happiness of another. Instead of marrying two fresh young lives, full of illusions, to-day the rule is to marry an ignorant, delicate, and sensitive girl, with ardent heart and an immense desire to devote herself, to a man morally aged, abominably selfish, tired of life, surfeited with experience, disillusioned, with heart as wrinkled as his visage, sometimes cruel, ever jeering against sentiment, worn by pleasures and deceptions. Is it wonderful, he asks, if, under such circumstances, the wife should seek a warmer and fresher sentiment elsewhere? and are not such unions made exclusively in the interest of adultery? The fault lies with men, he bitterly adds. Ennui is the mortal disease of the hour; the only cure is to return to purer, holier, and more natural sentiments. "Love simply," he abjures Luc; "devote yourself, give up this eternal mania of analysis, and make a young woman the aim and end of your existence." Wishful to profit by this excellent advice, Luc looks round inquiringly. He stumbles upon a celebrated Norwegian with extreme hope. But the delightful Norwegian only cares for rum and brandy. Then, in despair, he goes off to his native Provence, and here he fondly believes he has found the word of his destiny. He persuades himself that he has fallen in love with an exquisite young girl, and that he is redeemed. It proved but a radiant illusion. He soon perceived that his romantic love was only literary reminiscences. He was too saturated with literature for an honest emotion. Not even this cultivated love can lift him out of the old state of powerless and bitter egoism. Geneviève dies of a galloping consumption. Then her lover discovers the nothingness of his sentiment for her. His behaviour is monstrous. He is stupefied by his own want of feeling. "Drunk with unsatisfied anger, he flung invectives at the Deity, whom he only remembered in his hours of fury, and then merely to cast upon somebody the burden of his suffering." In telling himself that he could not possibly survive Geneviève he had almost a physical impression of his falsehood. He felt it was not true, he knew himself so well. This is the tragedy of this powerful study. The hero is a humbug and a blackguard, who would, if he could, be a hero and a sage; and he is horribly conscious of the fact. His sense of bereavement, in the face of the death of his betrothed, is, he knows quite well, artificial. He loathes himself, because he understands how differently Geneviève would have mourned his death; and returning from her funeral, he is placidly running after an unknown woman. "I am a blackguard," he moans, and continues his course.

H. L.

Comedy or Farce?

THE recent production of "She Stoops to Conquer" has inaugurated at the Haymarket Theatre a season of "old English comedies." Of this play, too seldom seen in London, one may say with enthusiasm that it is worthy of its renown. After 127 years, behold Goldsmith teaching the art of true laughter to a generation which has forgotten broad English humour in the sinister and monotonous futilities of "adaptations from the French." The play has undoubtedly earned the right to be called a masterpiece of mirth. At the same time, there is a noticeable tendency, as often with a classic, to apply to it the wrong terminology, and to praise it for qualities which it does not possess. To begin with, Mr. Austin Brereton, in a brochure given with the programme, describes the play as a "comedy." He also remarks: "The characters are types, not caricatures; therefore they are as much relished, because they are felt to be true, to-day as yesterday." Further: "The character-drawing is superb. The story and incidents are extremely interesting, and there is the same fidelity to nature" [as in "The School for Scandal"].

Now, in calling Goldsmith's play a "comedy," Mr. Brereton, of course, followed universal custom. But is it a comedy? If it be, then the word "farce" may be erased from the dictionary as useless. The distinction between comedy and farce is that, while comedy must be faithful to nature and probability, farce may use any means towards the end of hilarity. A comedy should show the effect of character on character, of character on event, and of event on character. It may be either serious (on this side of tragedy) or humorous, or both. "Cymbeline" is a comedy, and "Un Mariage sous Louis XV.," and "An Enemy of the People." But in the category which contains these there is no room for a piece like "She Stoops to Conquer." To ask the audience to accept it as either possible or nearly related to nature would be to insult their intelligence. Goldsmith's aim was pure fun. He arrived at it, but not by the route of comedy. What he wrote was a farce. After the first scene, which is introductory, everything is sacrificed to mirth. And even the first scene, dramatically ineffective, has to be bolstered up with the interjected horseplay of Tony's passage across the stage. The inn scene, sharply and clumsily divided into two halves, is simple farce from start to finish, and there we see that Goldsmith is about to avail himself of the old haggard farce-motive, Mistaken Identity. Thenceforward no semblance of probability is maintained. The plot gathers way, and, guided by Tony, plunges headlong into a rollick of gorgeous mirth. Some of the improbability (to use the polite term) might have been avoided, or at least glossed over, with ordinary care. For instance, it is inconceivable that Marlow never looked at Miss Harcastle's face during their first interview. Some better device could surely have been invented to explain his subsequent acceptance of her as a barmaid. But Goldsmith seemed not to trouble himself about technique. The Vicar of Wakefield is one of the worst-constructed novels ever written by a man of genius.

As for his alleged character-drawing, where is it? Is it to be discovered in Marlow, who is labelled only by his freedom with harlots and his diffidence with modest women? Or in Hastings, as colourless a beau garçon as ever stepped the boards? Or in testy Harcastle and his vain old wife, conventional figures both? Or in Kate and Constance, who, wenches of equal and similar sprightliness, might change places with no damage to the piece? If there is character-drawing in "She Stoops to Conquer," it is confined to Tony Lumpkin, who is decidedly the most human puppet of the crowd. One may admit that Tony has an existence apart from the mere intrigue; his colleagues have not.

A single character, however, will not make a comedy. And "She Stoops to Conquer" is not a comedy. It certainly has, to quote Mr. Brereton, "a high and enduring place in our estimation," but that place is by no means due to its "truth to nature." That place is merely due to the fact that Goldsmith set out to be farcically humorous, and was farcically humorous. He must have said to himself: "At all costs I will make 'em laugh." He did make England laugh, as England has not often laughed before or since. Hence, and for no more serious reason, his immortality as a dramatist!

E. A. B.

Things Seen.

The Ferret-Lover.

I.—A FORAY.

THE half-moon had a star over it, and the top of the throne of "that starred Ethiop queen" was visible amid reposeful clouds, but the earth clasped a deep darkness to its bosom. "Just the sort of night to catch them," said the man; "my ferret's famishin' for a sparrow." He led with a lantern, and, when they were come to the farmyard, he whispered to the boy: "If you funk it because you hear a bark I'll kick you black and blue." But nor dogs nor poultry were surprised. The man picked out a hayrick the eaves of which he could reach with his hands. "Are the birds up there?" the boy asked. "You keep quiet!" The man scratched the hay. "I see them." He held up the lantern, and ran its light across the eaves. "They'll fly out!" said the boy. "No, they won't; they're dazed by the light." He gave the boy the lantern, and, standing with his breast to the rick, put up his hands. A bird flew out; something fluttered faintly. "Have you got one?" "Yes, but it's been starved." He broke its neck with his finger and thumb, and threw it away. Again he put up his hands, stretching himself on tiptoe; and again there was a feeble fluttering. "This one'll do; nice and fat." He killed it, and thrust it in his pocket. "I do believe," said the boy admiringly, "you could catch another." "Easy," answered the man; "but one's enough for his supper, and he likes them fresh. Give me the lantern."

II.—THE FEEDING OF THE FERRET.

They returned to the house; and the man, sitting before the fire, plucked the sparrow clean, letting its feathers fall inside the fender. Then he broke all the bird's bones. "Crack, crack," he said, looking at the boy. "What for do you break its bones?" "Because they might choke him. Why shouldn't he have his supper dressed in proper style?" They went into the scullery, and the man lifted the lid of a box. The big dog-ferret stood up on its hind legs, and the man, making a ring of his finger and thumb round its neck, pulled it out and let it crawl up his breast. The boy gazed open-mouthed on the long white creature, fascinated by its sinewy strength and relentless purpose; the beautiful undulations of its body were horrible to him; the dead-luminous pink of its eyes, peering through the man's beard, suggested incredible, illimitable evil to his imagination. "I donno if he's lookin' at me or not," he gasped. "Do he like to be kep' in the dark?" "Of course he does. How do you s'pose he'd live, you fool?" The man, having stirred the straw, and taken out an empty saucer, stroked the ferret affectionately, and then, on a sudden, glaring horribly at the boy, put its head in his mouth. The boy shrieked, and the man called him a name. "As if I'm frightened of him! I dug him out of a hole once, and there he was, with seven rabbits killed, and him on top of them, fast asleep, gorged with blood." He unbuttoned his waistcoat and let the ferret creep in on his flesh. "He's cold, poor old fellow; but he'll be all right when he gets his fill of blood." He let the ferret down into the box, and dropped in the naked sparrow. "You'll not see a scrap of it left in the mornin'." The boy said: "When I'm a man I'll keep a ferret, like you."

Correspondence.

The Poetry of Spain.

SIR,—As some of your readers expressed an interest in the poetry of Spain, I send you the following specimen, which seems to me peculiarly characteristic.

The translation of the poem given in the ACADEMY of January 20 was so successful that perhaps some one may be able to render these lines into English verse.

I should be glad if any of your readers could supply the date and the author.

Un pajarito qué yo tenía
Se me escapó,
Y una muchacha qué me quería
Se me murió;
Así son todos en este mundo,
Así son todos como estos dos;
Unos se marchan, otros se mueran,
Y el hombre dice: vaya por Dios!

The following is merely a literal translation:

A little bird I once possessed
Escaped from me,
And a woman who loved me
Died.
All things in this world are so,
All things are even as these two,
Some depart from us, the others die,
And a man says: It is the will of God!

—I am, &c.,
Holm Chase, Ashburton, Devon:
Jan. 30, 1900.

E. FORSTER.

Heine's Grave.

SIR,—Anent the paragraph in the ACADEMY of December 30, the writer is mistaken in naming the Parisian necropolis of Père Lachaise as being the place of interment of Heinrich Heine. There one may find the graves of Molière, La Fontaine, Racine, Honoré de Balzac, Béranger, and Alfred de Musset, but Heine rests in the cemetery of Montmartre—"trim Montmartre," as Matthew Arnold has described it.

Thither I went one bright Sunday in the summer of 1893, and, not without difficulty, found the poet's grave, marked by a plain tombstone with a simple inscription thereon: "Henri Heine," and beneath the illustrious name, "Madame Henri Heine." A beautiful wreath of artificial flowers had been placed there as a token of admiration.

The bust by Hasselrius, besides commemorating the centenary of Heine's birth (he was born December 23, 1799, and died February 17, 1856), should be an adornment to the poet's resting-place.

The grave of Théophile Gautier is but a short distance from that of Heine.—I am, &c.,

Edinburgh: Jan. 17, 1900.

ALWYN.

Arnold's School Series.

SIR,—In a notice of our Selections from Tennyson's Poems, edited by the Rev. E. C. Everard Owen, you say: "Mr. Churton Collins is general editor of 'Arnold's School Series,'" and proceed to criticise "his method of commenting on Tennyson."

As this may create an erroneous impression, will you kindly permit us to state that Mr. Churton Collins had nothing to do with the preparation of our Selections from Tennyson, and that he is not the general editor of "Arnold's School Series"?

Mr. Collins kindly acted as the general editor of our School Shakespeare, and of a small series called "Arnold's British Classics for Schools"; but the Selections from Tennyson are not included in the latter series.—I am, &c.,

EDWARD ARNOLD.

London: Jan. 23, 1900.

Words Worth Reviving.

SIR,—The public service done by you in endeavouring to revive certain good old words induces me to trouble you with three lists of six words each. Three guests of mine were discussing your recent competition. They agreed that the requirements were too vaguely stated for any list to be very useful; as the poet, the thinker, and the lover of a fine sonorous prose would all have different root ideas of words wanted. On this basis we draw up: List A, of words the poet would welcome as new rhyme-endings; List B, as making for more accurate thought-expression; and List C, for expressive or impressive sound:

LIST A.

Cote ... ..	Enclosure, shelter.
Thole ... ..	Suffer, endure.
Rede ... ..	Counsel, advice.
Blea ... ..	Complexion, aspect.
Dwine ... ..	To fade gradually.
Pleach ... ..	Intertwine.

LIST B.

Inwit ... ..	Intuitive knowledge.
Outwit ... ..	Acquired knowledge.
Buxom ... ..	"Willing," good-natured.
Ruly ... ..	Taking kindly to discipline.
Fay ... ..	For fairy (which is incorrectly used).
Kitting ... ..	For kitten (a pure English diminutive instead of a hybrid form).

LIST C.

Calenture ... ..	Feverish heat.
Gyre ... ..	Circular course.
Spoorn ... ..	To run before the wind.
Stour ... ..	Battle.
Leman ... ..	Mistress.
Rood ... ..	The Cross.

—I am, &c.,
Jan. 26, 1900.

P. C.

New Books Received.

[These notes on some of the New Books of the week are preliminary to Reviews that may follow.]

THE GREAT COMPANY (1667-1871). BY BECKLES WILLSON.

MR. WILLSON's two volumes are of a convenient size, well illustrated, and handsomely stamped with the arms of the Company. No pretensions to exhaustiveness are made, and Mr. Willson refers in generous terms to the progressing works of two rivals. An interesting point about this great Company, which was established under Charles II., is that "it did not go forth among the natives with the Bible in its hand. Evangelisation was not even one of its excuses. Yet it was a true friend to the Red man. . . ." (Smith, Elder. 18s.)

THE HISTORY OF THE LIFE OF
THOMAS ELLWOOD.

EDITED BY C. G. CRUMP.

Thomas Ellwood, Quaker, is known to the world as the pupil of Milton, and, above all, as the friend who, after reading Paradise Lost in manuscript, said to the poet: "Thou hast said much here of Paradise Lost, but what hast thou to say of Paradise Found?" Milton expressly gave Ellwood credit for having thus suggested Paradise Regained. Ellwood's autobiography is almost a classic, and as a picture of early Quakerism and a revelation of character it has been continually "called up higher" by bookmen who can recognise a "document." Mr. Crump furnishes an historical introduction to this complete reprint of Ellwood's book. (Methuen. 6s.)

A VARIORUM EDITION OF SHAKESPEARE. EDITED BY HORACE HOWARD FURNESS.

This edition of Shakespeare's plays is, without question, America's greatest literary gift to England. In this volume of 420 pages we have Much Ado about Nothing, preceded by one of Mr. Furness's delightful prefaces. We have a sneaking sympathy with Mr. Furness when he writes of Shakespeare: "His life was so gentle and so clear in the sight of man and of Heaven that no record of it has come down to us; for which failure I am fervently grateful, and as fervently hope that no future year will ever reveal even the faintest peep through the divinity which doth hedge this king." (Lippincott. 18s.)

SOUTHERN ARABIA.

BY THEODORE BENT AND MRS. THEODORE BENT.

The journeys recorded in this book were undertaken in 1889 and afterwards by Mrs. Bent and her late husband—the distinguished traveller. The narrative is partly from Mrs. Bent's pen and partly from her husband's; but, wisely, there has been no attempt to separate or distinguish these portions, the authorship of which is often revealed by internal evidence. An excellent portrait of Mr. Bent is given as frontispiece. (Smith, Elder.)

A HISTORY OF GOTHIC ART IN ENGLAND.

BY EDWARD S. PRIOR.

This nobly produced book will probably give experts cause to wrangle, for Mr. Prior runs a-tilt at the doctrine that French architecture was the mother of all the Gothics; and again, he will not allow that there was a central Masonic Guild whose organisation monopolised design. He has found "rather national and local variations than European solidarity in Gothic, and would wish to point to the constant English tradition as proof, since the Conquest, of a native craftsmanship, free alike from Continental importation and Masonic dictation." (Bell & Sons.)

VILLAGE LIFE IN CHINA.

BY ARTHUR H. SMITH.

Dr. Smith's long missionary experience of China has enabled him to write this book about Chinese village life, which will be welcomed by readers of his Chinese Characteristics. The book is well and plentifully illustrated by photographs. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. 7s. 6d.)

THE GRAMMAR OF SCIENCE.

BY PROF. KARL PEARSON.

This second edition of a great work has been revised and enlarged by its author. It now contains two entirely new chapters on Natural Selection and Heredity, embracing a popular account of Prof. Pearson's own more recent work in this direction.

In addition to the foregoing, we have received:

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

Robertson (J. M.), Studies in Religious Fallacy ..... (Watts & Co.) 3/6

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

Harley (Lewis R.), Francis Lieber ..... (Columbia Univ. Press)
Tomlinson (Mary), The Life of Charles Tomlinson ..... (Stock) 5/0

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

Caddick (Helen), A White Woman in Central Africa ..... (Unwin) 6/0

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

Hertz (Heinrich), The Principles of Mechanics. Translated by D. E. Jones and J. T. Wallev..... (Macmillan) net 10/0
Zittel (Karl A. Von), Text-Book of Paleontology. Translated and edited by Charles R. Eastman. Vol. I..... (Macmillan) net 25/0
Palgrave (R. H.), Dictionary of Political Economy. Vol. III.; N-Z..... (Macmillan) net 21/0

EDUCATIONAL.

Baker (A. T.), Outlines of French Historical Grammar ..... (Dent) net 3/6
Pearce (J. W. E.), Tales of Ancient Thessaly ..... (Blackwood) 1/0
Balfour & Co., How to Tell the Nationality of Old Violins ..... (Salfour & Co.) 2/6

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mair (William), Speaking ..... (Blackwood) 3/0
Hope (A. R.), Half-Tax History: Chronicles of School Life ..... (Black) 3/6
Kingsley (G. H.), Notes on Sport and Travel ..... (Macmillan)
Oxford (M. N.), A Handbook of Nursing ..... (Methuen) 3/6
Hundel (Fritz), New Pocket English-German Dictionary ..... (Pitman)
Calverley (W. S.), Notes on the Early Sculptured Stones and Monuments in the Present Diocese of Carlisle ..... (Wilson)

Blumhardt (J. F.), Catalogue of the Hindi, Panjabi, and Hindustani MSS. in the Library of the British Museum ..... (B. Museum)
Stapylton (H. E. C.), Second Series of Eton School Lists ..... (Drake) net 21/0
Wyllie (Major H. C.), The 95th (The Derbyshire) Regiment in the Crimea ..... (Swan Sonnenschein) net 1/6
Estlake (Allan), The Oecida Community ..... (Longmans) net 2/6
Lyttelton (Rev. the Hon. E.), Training of the Young in Laws of Sex ..... (Longmans) net 2/6
Fegan (J. H. C.), and Others. Football, Hockey, and Lacrosse ..... (Unwin) 2/6
The Folk-Lore Society. Vol. XLIII. .... (Folk-Lore Society)
Catalogue of a Collection of Objects Illustrating the Folklore of Mexico ..... (Nutt)
The Boyle System of Ventilation ..... (Boyle & Son)
The Anglo-Saxon Review. Vol. III. December, 1899 ..... (Lane) 21/0

NEW EDITIONS.

Tennyson (Lord), The Princess, and Other Poems ..... (Dent) 1/6
The Bibelota: Some Meditations of Marcus Aurelius ..... (Gay & Bird) 2/6
Defoe (Daniel), A Journal of the Plague Year ..... (Dent) 1/6
Montgomery (Florence), Transformed ..... (Macmillan) 6/0

Our Weekly Prize Competitions.

Result of No. 19 (New Series).

WE asked last week for the exposure of some more Popular Fallacies, on the lines made familiar by Charles Lamb, in a space not exceeding 150 words. In consequence of this request a number of venerable and highly respected proverbs have come in for a bad time. The prize, we think, is due to Miss M. A. Woods, The Pleasance, Watford, Herts, for her treatment of the adage, "Speech is silvern; Silence golden." Here is her thesis:

This overpraises a merely negative attitude. Man lives to express himself; or rather, by means of the thing he calls "himself," to express some greater thing behind it. Silence may be noble, but too often it is ignoble—the result of pride or fear. The reticent man is a miser who hoards his money lest he should spend it unwisely; a sailor who hugs the shore rather than launch out into the deep. Even the good forget that the world suffers less from things said than things unsaid. In noble hands silence is made subservient to speech; it gathers strength, like the lull in the storm, for a mightier onset, or waits kneeling for a new inspiration. Silence prepares for speech, as the snows prepare for the bloom and fruitage of summer, and has no other value. Surely we should reverse our proverb, and say: "Silence is silvern; speech golden."

Other interesting fallacies follow:

That "We are all aiming at the same place."

"True! true!" assents the parson absently to this everlasting adage on the lips of his parishioners. Why discuss the fallacy with "Noakes, Stoakes, Styles, Brown, and Thompson?" Yet he muses, "The same place." Noakes's ideal is probably convivial, "a tavern with five fiddles going." Mrs. Stoakes's aim is stereotyped in the epitaph:

"Don't weep for me friends, don't weep for me never:
I'm going to do nothing for ever and ever!"

Dreamy Miss Styles yearns with Baudelaire, "J'aime les nuages. . . les nuages qui passent. . . les merveilleux nuages." Gammer Brown with that "solar look" envisages "a truth the brilliant Frenchman never knew." Doctor Thompson is of the religion of all sensible men, which (Disraeli says) sensible men never reveal. The parson ejaculates, with a smile, "Videbunt faciem Ejus" "All aiming at the same place?" "À tantôt, mes amis, Je crains que non!" [R. F. McC., Whitby.]

That "Tis better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all."

This is the cry of the disappointed suitor. It is the fictitious balm for his wounded dignity, and by it he thinks to preserve his self-esteem in the eyes of the world. Misguided creature! Why, it is as though a man, insisting on bathing in a dangerous spot, after being carried away, and only rescued in a semi-animate condition, were with his first returning breath to gsssp, "Well, I had my bathe, anyhow!" Again, do we not repent when, after feasting on trifle or mince pie, we are reminded by internal discomfort that such delicacies are not always to be eaten with impunity? I for one should smile at anyone who asserted that it was better to have incurred the penalty of injudicious indulgence than to have subsisted on plainer fare. No, the only reason "to have loved and lost" is valuable is that it, like the bather's peril or the gourmand's pangs, unpleasantly warns you to avoid doing anything of the sort again. And can to have had an unpleasant, if salutary, warning be better than to have never needed it? [E. C. W., Oxford.]

That "Good wine needs no bush."

Whether this was true or not in the "good old days" (which, perhaps, need a "bush" themselves to indicate their antiquated merits), it is certainly a fallacy now. However good the wine may be, it must be pointed out to a blind and careless generation, who discover nothing for themselves, by flaming posters, brilliant sky-signs, and endless postal communications. The most important "bush" of these days is the one known botanically as "Pressia Speciosa." It is absolutely a necessary one for statesmen, actors, artists, and authors. Poor Mr. Balfour has had several "bushes" lately, covered with thorns, which but a short time since offered him their sweetest flowers. Still, a prickly bush is better than none. Another world may recognise our goodness without one. This one will inevitably pass us by. [H. S., London.]

That "Procrastination is the thief of time."

To say that "Procrastination is the thief of time" is both unjust and illogical. For to defer is to prolong; to prolong is to lengthen—in other words, to add to; so that we can prove, and that most conclusively, that procrastination, or the art of not doing to-day what can be done to-morrow, actually increases the time at our disposal. To secure the full enjoyment that is to be derived from an ill-spent day it is necessary to constantly remind ourselves of that which we ought to do and are not doing. For by that means our time is doubled, and every moment stolen from unpleasant duty becomes more precious; and that which is precious we cling to, and do not lightly lose. The thief of time! Nay; it is the very forge of time, time measured, not by minutes, but by heart-beats.

[G. M. P., Birmingham.]

That "Honesty is the best policy."

It is a matter of right principle, not of policy at all. A man is honest in his dealings with his fellow-men in proportion to his sense of honour, not to his desire of success. In a world of "rings" and "corners," of bogus companies and other forms of gambling, where light scruples make heavy pockets, and the serpent's wisdom prevails, the upright man wins Fortune's prizes in spite, not because, of his honesty. This proverb may possibly keep sordid souls, whose only inducement to be honest here is the hope of gain hereafter, in comparatively straight paths. But to Mr. Worldly Wiseman it is unbusiness-like, to Mr. Valiant-for-Truth it is contemptible; it is a fallacy, not a proverb; one man's wit, possibly, but few men's wisdom.

[G. N., Bristol.]

That "Honesty is the best policy."

This links together two incongruous things. Policy implies compromise; honesty scorns it. Honesty insists on right in any case; policy is content with expediency. The proverb reduces honesty to prudence. Honesty cannot consider what will be gained, but only what must be done. Reward may ensue, but the thought of it can never give to honesty its cue. The man who thrives through honesty will become corrupt if he adopts it in order to prosper. The fallacy of the aphorism is in taking the result and suggesting it as a motive. Honesty finds its reason in the moment of its call. It makes no conditions; it may fail or suffer, but it cannot calculate. It is an impulse; whereas policy is a plan. The proverb indeed lifts policy into a higher region, but it is false in supposing that honesty can make its choice by reference to considerations of advantage.

[H. W., Malton.]

Answers received also from M. S., Manchester; G. M., London; M. S., Manchester; R. W. M., London; C., Redhill; D. E. B., London; J. D. W., London; P. W. R., Birkenhead; J. D. A., Faling; F. E. W., London; A. H., Darlington; B. R., London; E. E., Bala; G. H., Glasgow; W. G., Chalfont St. Giles; F. G. C., Hull.

Competition No. 20 (New Series).

A CORRESPONDENT writes: "Might I suggest for a competition in the ACADEMY a list of the best mottoes for bookcases for different subjects"? We adopt the suggestion, and offer a guinea for the best set of mottoes for the following four bookcases: (a) History, (b) Poetry, (c) Fiction, (d) Biography. The quotations must be from English authors, and should be short enough to be really employed for the purpose named.

RULES.

Answers, addressed "Literary Competition, The ACADEMY, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Tuesday, February 6. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found in the first column of p. 93, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. We wish to impress on competitors that the task of examining replies is much facilitated when one side only of the paper is written upon. It is also important that names and addresses should always be given: we cannot consider anonymous answers.

OUR SPECIAL PRIZE COMPETITIONS.

(For particulars see inside page of cover.)

Received: Kingston, Norma, The Outsider, Eros, Ydrak, Paradox, Dr. A., Merope, Athmar, Tory.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO

"THE ACADEMY."

The following have appeared, and some of the numbers containing them can still be obtained; or Complete Sets may be had separately for 3s. 6d.:—

BEN JONSON.	WILLIAM COWPER.
JOHN KEATS.	CHARLES DARWIN.
SIR JOHN SUCKLING.	ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON.
TOM HOOD.	HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.
THOMAS GRAY.	ANDREW MARVELL.
ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.	ROBERT BROWNING.
SIR WALTER SCOTT.	THOMAS CARLYLE.
SAMUEL RICHARDSON.	PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.
THOMAS DE QUINCEY.	CHARLES DICKENS.
LEIGH HUNT.	JONATHAN SWIFT.
LORD MACAULAY.	WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY.
ROBERT SOUTHEY.	WILLIAM BLAKE.
S. T. COLERIDGE.	SIR RICHARD STEELE.
CHARLES LAMB.	ALEXANDER POPE.
MICHAEL DRAYTON.	DOUGLAS JERROLD.
WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR.	FRANCIS BACON.
SAMUEL PEPYS.	HENRIK IBSEN.
EDMUND WALLER.
WILKIE COLLINS.
JOHN MILTON.

A CHARMING GIFT BOOK!

6s., claret roan, gilt, Illustrated.

LONDON in the TIME of the DIAMOND JUBILEE

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co. Llangollen: DARLINGTON & Co.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S.

Maps by BARTHOLOMEW.

Fcap. 8vo. ONE SHILLING EACH. Illustrated.

THE VALE OF LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J. PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING; A. W. KINGLAKE; and Sir THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B.

BOURNEMOUTH and NEW FOREST. THE CHANNEL ISLANDS.
THE NORTH WALES COAST. THE ISLE OF WIGHT.
BRECON and its BEACONS. THE WYE VALLEY.
ROSS, TINTERN, and CHEPSTOW. THE SEVERN VALLEY.
BRISTOL, BATH, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.
BRIGHTON, EASTBOURNE, HASTINGS, and ST. LEONARDS.
LLANDUDNO, RHYL, BANGOR, BETTWSYCOED, and SNOWDON.
ABERYSTWYTH, BARMOUTH, MACHYNLLETH, and ABERDOVEY.
BARMOUTH, DOLGELLY, HARLEOH, GLOUCESTER, and PWLLHELL.
MALVERN, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, GLOUCESTER, & OHLTENHAM.
LLANDRINDOD WELLS and the SPAS of MID-WALES.

1s.—THE HOTELS of the WORLD. A Handbook to the leading Hotels throughout the world.

"What would not the intelligent tourist in Paris or Rome give for such a guide-book as this, which teaches so much that is outside the usual scope of such volumes!"—The Times.

"The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.

SECOND EDITION, ENLARGED, 5s.—20 Illustrations, 24 Maps and Plans.

LONDON AND ENVIRONS.

By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.

With an additional Index of 4,500 References to all Streets and Places of Interest.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & CO.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., LTD.
The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers'.

SOUTH AFRICA AND THE WAR.—BOOKS TO READ.

Third Edition, with a new Prefatory Chapter dealing with the events which have induced the present crisis.

IMPRESSIONS OF SOUTH AFRICA.

By the Right Hon. JAMES BRYCE, M.P.

With 3 Maps, and with the Text of the Transvaal Conventions of 1881 and 1884. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION NOW READY.

SOUTH AFRICA OF TO-DAY.

By Captain FRANCIS YOUNGHUSBAND, C.I.E.,

Indian Staff Corps. Late Special Correspondent of the Times in South Africa. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD, London

THE BOOK OF THE HOUR. THE TRANSVAAL FROM WITHIN.

A Private Record of Public Affairs.

By J. P. FITZPATRICK, Author of "The Outspan."

With Index. 1 vol., 10s. net. Eighth Reprint, completing 30,000 copies.

Mr. Chamberlain replying to a Westmorland correspondent, who complained of the want of a printed defence of the Government's policy in the Transvaal: "I refer you to Mr. Fitzpatrick's book."

THE MEN OF THE HOUR.

1. F.-M. LORD ROBERTS.

2. LORD KITCHENER OF KHARTUM.

Portraits by WILLIAM NICHOLSON.

Lithographed in colours, mounted on card, 2s. 6d. each; framed, 6s. each.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

NEARLY READY.

In crown 8vo, Picture Cover, price 1s.

THE BOER IN PEACE AND WAR.

By ARTHUR M. MANN,

Author of "The Truth from Johannesburg."

WITH MANY ILLUSTRATIONS.

NOTICE.—This book is likely to have an exceptional sale, and orders should be sent in at once as they can only be executed in the order of their receipt.

London: JOHN LONG, 6, Chandos Street, Strand.

And every Bookstall and Bookseller in the Kingdom.

THE STANDARD HISTORY OF SOUTH AFRICA.

GEORGE MCCALL THEAL, LL.D.

Formerly Keeper of the Archives of Cape Colony, and at present Colonial Historiographer.

THE HISTORY OF SOUTH AFRICA.

With Coloured and other Maps and Plates.

Vol. I.-II.: History of South Africa under the Dutch East India Company: 1652-1795. 2 vols., 30s.

Vol. III.: 1795-1834. 15s.

Vol. IV.: 1834-1854. 15s.

Vol. V.: 1854-1872. The Republics and Native Territories. [Reprinting. 15s.]

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., Limited, London.

First Edition nearly exhausted! IN THE LAND OF THE BOERS.

By OLIVER OSBORNE.

Illustrated.

Crown 8vo. Special Design on cover. 2s.

The cheapest and most readable volume yet published on the Transvaal. The price brings it within reach of all classes of the community.

R. A. EVERETT & CO., 42, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

W. GLAISHER, Discount Bookseller, 265, High Holborn, London.

	Cash Prices.
Bryce's Impressions of South Africa. New Edition, brought up to date. (Pub. 6s.)	4 6
Theal's South Africa (Story of the Nations). Entirely New Edition. (Pub. 5s.)	3 9
Carter's Narrative of the Last Boer War. New Edition. (Pub. 10s. 6d.)	8 0
Worsfold's Story of South Africa. (Pub. 1s. 6d.)	1 2
Fitzpatrick's Transvaal from Within .... net	10 0
&c. &c. &c.

Apply for GLAISHER'S Extensive CATALOGUE of Publishers' Reminders at Reduced Prices.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

SOUTH AFRICA. By GEO. MCCALL THEAL, LL.D. 5s.
HOW TO READ WAR NEWS. Hints to Readers of Despatches, &c. 1s.
THE LIVES OF ROBERT AND MARY MOFFAT. By their SON. 6s.
PAUL KRUGER AND HIS TIMES. By F. R. STATHAM. 7s. 6d.
THE POLITICAL SITUATION. By OLIVE SCHREINER. 1s. 6d.
A PRIMER OF SOUTH AFRICAN HISTORY. By GEORGE MCCALL THEAL, LL.D. 1s. 6d.
MR. MAGNUS: A South African Novel. By F. R. STATHAM. 6s.
TROOPER PETER HALKET OF MASHONALAND. By OLIVE SCHREINER. 2s. 6d.
THE CAPTAIN OF THE LOCUSTS. By A. WERNER. 2s.
KAFFIR STORIES. By W. C. SCULLY. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.
MR. THOMAS ATKINS. By the Author of "How to be Happy Though Married." 6s.
FIFTY YEARS OF THE HISTORY OF THE REPUBLIC IN SOUTH AFRICA. By J. C. VOIGT, M.D. 2 vols. 25s. net the set.
London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

ALL INTERESTED IN THE TRANSVAAL

SHOULD READ THE

ILLUSTRATED AND THOROUGHLY REVISED EDITION,

With 12 Full-Page Illustrations by MAURICE GREIFFENHAORN, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., of

JESS, by H. RIDER HAGGARD.

"The story is a capital one, and the interest never flags for a moment. The author knows his ground thoroughly, and his vivid descriptions of Transvaal scenery and his clever sketches of the inhabitants are all admirable."

"The scene is laid in a locality which Mr. Haggard evidently knows well—the Transvaal; and the result is a vividness of description, both of men and things."—Globe.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE.

SOUTH AFRICA. Further Correspondence relating to the Affairs in South Africa down to the 18th January. By post, 2s. 5½d.

SOUTH AFRICA. Correspondence relating to the Defence of Natal. By post, 4d.

LIST OF BLUE BOOKS ON SOUTH AFRICAN AFFAIRS

Dating from the Sand River Convention to the present date, affecting specially the Transvaal, sent on application.

London: East Harding Street, E.C.

THE TRUE HISTORY OF THE WAR.—Part I.

BEING THE

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES

FROM THE

General Commanding-in-Chief

THE FORCES IN

SOUTH AFRICA.

Reprinted from "The London Gazette"

Of JANUARY 28th, 1900, in a convenient form for binding with future issues. NOW READY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

HARRISON & SONS, Publishers of The London Gazette, 45, St. Martin's Lane, and all Booksellers.

THE PROBLEM OF SOUTH AFRICAN UNITY.

By W. BASIL WORSFOLD, Author of "The Redemption of Egypt," &c.
A lecture delivered at the Imperial Institute in December, 1899, with added notes and table of population.

Foolscap 8vo, 6d. net; cloth, 1s. net.
Review of the Work.—"Supplies all the information required for an intelligent study of the question."

A BOOK ON THE TRANSVAAL.

BOERS AND LITTLE ENGLANDERS.

The History of the South African Conventions of 1881 and 1884.

By JOHN PROCTER, Barrister-at-Law.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

London: GEORGE ALLEN, 156, Charing Cross Road.

BEST PRINTING ON BEST PAPER.

C.I.V. PORTRAITS

NOW APPEARING IN THE

"TRANSVAAL IN WAR AND PEACE."

EVERY THURSDAY. PRICE 6d.

London: H. VIRTUE & CO., Limited, 26, Ivy Lane.

FOR OTHER BOOKS ABOUT SOUTH AFRICA, see page 130.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

MACMILLAN'S LIBRARY OF ENGLISH CLASSICS.

Edited by A. W. POLLARD.

A Series of Reprints of Standard Works in Library Form.

Demy 8vo, cloth elegant, price 3s. 6d., net per vol.

LE MORTE D'ARTHUR, Sir THOMAS MALORY'S BOOK OF KING ARTHUR, and of HIS NOBLE KNIGHTS of the ROUND TABLE. [Just ready.

PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED.

BACON'S ESSAYS; COLOURS of GOOD and EVIL; and ADVANCEMENT of LEARNING. 1 vol.

SHERIDAN'S PLAYS. 1 vol.

Other Volumes to follow.

"Good reprints of masterpieces always merit a welcome, and it will be strange if these do not receive it. The volumes are in size a largish octavo, bound in an agreeable dull red, relieved by a border of gold. The type is large and clear, and the material weight unusually light.....Admirably produced reprints."

Morning Post.

"The size of page, the quality of paper, the style of type, and the binding adopted, are thoroughly praiseworthy.....The reprints in this 'Library' promise to be the cheapest as well as best in the market."

Globe.

"The series starts with Sheridan's Plays, and a very handsome book it is; in size a large octavo, agreeably bound in red, and surprisingly light in the hand."—Daily Mail.

New Volumes of the Uniform Edition of RUDYARD KIPLING'S Prose Works.

FROM SEA to SEA, and other SKETCHES. LETTERS of TRAVEL. By RUDYARD KIPLING. In 2 vols. Extra crown 8vo, red cloth, gilt tops, 12s. [Ready on Tuesday.

New Novel by R. W. CHAMBERS.

THE CAMBRIC MASK. By R. W. CHAMBERS, Author of "Aches of Empire," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready on Monday.

MALAY MAGIC. Being an Introduction to the Folklore and Popular Religion of the Malay Peninsula. By WALTER WILLIAM SKEAT, of the Civil Service of the Federated Malay States. With a Preface by C. O. BLAGDEN, Member of the Royal Asiatic Society and formerly of the Straits Settlements Civil Service. With numerous illustrations. 8vo, 21s. net.

WAGERS of BATTLE, 1854-1899. Verses by FRANKLIN LUSHINGTON and HENRY LUSHINGTON. Crown 8vo, sewed, 1s. net.

OLD FRIENDS at CAMBRIDGE and ELSEWHERE. By J. WILLIS CLARK, M.A., Registrar of the University of Cambridge, formerly Fellow of Trinity College. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE PRINCE: a Play. By ADOLPHUS ALFRED JACK. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. [Ready on Tuesday.

Macmillan's Three and Sixpenny Series
NEW VOLUMES.

BY CHARLES DICKENS.

LITTLE DORRIT. With 40 illustrations by PHIZ. A Reprint of the First Edition. With an Introduction, Biographical and Bibliographical, by CHARLES DICKENS the younger. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

BY EGERTON CASTLE.

CONSEQUENCES: a Novel. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

FREDERICK WARNE & CO.'S LIST.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, 3s. 6d.

JOHN RUSKIN:

His Life and Teaching.

With BIBLIOGRAPHY and PORTRAIT

By J. MARSHALL MATHER.

"It would be difficult to obtain a more lucid and comprehensive idea of John Ruskin and his life work in a small compass than can be assured by a careful study of that admirable little monograph. 'In its revised and enlarged form' says the Spectator, 'the book is a most excellent aid to the understanding of the very nature of the great art critic and philosopher, as well as of the brilliant productions of his pen. Mr. Mather only claims for his little volume that it is an outline of Ruskin's life and teaching intended for those who are purposing a careful and detailed study of his works, but it is so excellently done, with so firm a touch and so clear a perception of essentials, that to those who have no time for the detailed study referred to it will give a most useful, interesting, and just idea of the great teacher and his work.'"

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

POPULAR STUDIES OF NINETEENTH CENTURY POETS.

By J. MARSHALL MATHER.

"For popular reading we know of no volume better calculated to give a fair idea of the nineteenth century poets than the one before us."—Eastern Daily Press.

To Think is to Live.

Small crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

THE ART OF THINKING.

By T. SHARPER KNOWLSON.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE: "A short time ago one of our most distinguished statesmen, in giving an address on education, said: 'What you want to develop in your race is the art of thinking, and thinking is an art which stands a very good chance of perishing from amongst us altogether. The risks to which independent thinking is exposed, when you come to reckon them up, are manifold and dangerous. I think the Press, with all its merits, is one of the greatest enemies of independent thinking.'.....People read a great deal more than they use to do—there is more to read—but they think less."

NOW READY, NEW EDITION.

Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 668 pp., 7s. 6d.; containing 30,000 Quotations, and a most complete Classified Index.

DICTIONARY OF QUOTATIONS.

From Ancient and Modern, English and Foreign Sources.

Including Phrases, Mottoes, Maxims, Proverbs, Definitions, Aphorisms, and Sayings of Wise Men, in their bearing on Life, Literature, Speculation, Science, Art, Religion and Morals.

SELECTED AND COMPILED BY THE

Rev. JAMES WOOD,

Editor of "Nuttall's Standard Dictionary."

"Never before have materials so widespread been collated into a single volume, and the work has besides the unique distinction of including something like a representative collection of quotations from the modern writings which hitherto have hardly been laid under tribute for such a purpose at all."

Liverpool Courier.

London: FREDERICK WARNE & CO.,
15, Bedford Street, Strand.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

WILL BE READY ON MONDAY NEXT.

SAVOLA:

A Tale of the Revolution in Laurania.

BY

WINSTON SPENCER CHURCHILL,

Author of "The River War," &c.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW BOOK by MISS GERTRUDE JEKYLL.

HOME and GARDEN: Notes and

Thoughts, Practical and Critical, of a Worker in Both. By GERTRUDE JEKYLL, Author of "Wood and Garden." With 53 illustrations from Photographs by the Author. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"A book to receive with gratitude and to keep."
Illustrated London News.

SECOND AND CHEAPER EDITION.

A HISTORY of SPAIN from the EARLIEST TIMES to the DEATH of FERDINAND the CATHOLIC. By ULICK RALPH BURKE, M.A. Edited, with Additional Notes and an Introduction, by MARTIN A. S. HUME, Editor of the "Calendar of Spanish State Papers," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 16s. net.

MICHEL de l'HOSPITAL: being the Lothian Prize Essay, 1890. By C. T. ATKINSON, Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford; late Demy of Magdalen College. Crown 8vo, 4s. net.

"A Brilliant Novel."—PALL MALL GAZETTE.

NEW IMPRESSION.—FIFTH THOUSAND.

PARSON KELLY.

By A. E. W. MASON and ANDREW LANG.

With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"An excellent novel, written with spirit and a true literary touch."—St. James's Gazette.

"Parson Kelly 'is a capital story, well found, well invented, and strong in the ever admirable quality of vraisemblance. It is also an interesting illustration of collaboration....The book is by far the most notable of Jacobite romances and thoroughly enjoyable."—Westminster Gazette.

"The enjoyment of the book is so keen that it entirely absorbs one....The Lady Oxford here presented is a brilliant, worthless 'strange woman,' who must hereafter take rank in fiction as a distinct, vivid character."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW IMPRESSION.—FOURTH THOUSAND.

YEOMAN FLEETWOOD.

By M. E. FRANCIS (Mrs. FRANCIS BLENDALL.)

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It is not often that a reviewer gets through a story of 400 pages practically at one sitting, and is sorry when he has finished, but one reviewer, at least, has done so with 'Yeoman Fleetwood'....This novel should increase its author's reputation."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"'Yeoman Fleetwood' will, I am sure, take its place among the best novels of the year. The descriptions of Brighton under the Regent are specially admirable, and Mrs. Blendall tells us in the preface how she came to know this part of her subject so well. The character of Simon Fleetwood is one of the noblest in recent fiction, and the book as a whole will greatly enhance the author's reputation. To many readers it will come as a fresh revelation of Georgian history."—Skech.

NEW IMPRESSION.—FIFTH THOUSAND.

SOME EXPERIENCES of an IRISH R.M.

By E. E. SOMERVILLE and MARTIN ROSS, Authors of "The Real Charlotte," "An Irish Cousin," "The Silver Fox," &c.

With 31 Illustrations by E. E. Somerville.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Everyone who wants to laugh should read 'Some Experiences of an Irish R.M.'"—Guardian.

"We can warmly recommend this book as a sure antidote for melancholy; it is brimful of brilliant wit and harmless mirth; it is a tonic for the dyspeptic and a stimulant to the healthy mind. A more amusing book has not been written for many a year."—Pall Mall Gazette.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1449. Established 1869.

10 February, 1900.

Price Threepence.

[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

ON Tuesday last an important first night was held at Christiania, the occasion being the initial performance of Ibsen's new play, "When We who are Dead Awaken." The performance, we learn, was an entire success, the first and third acts producing a strong impression.

THE play of "Hamlet," according to the printed copy of 1603 known as the First Quarto, will be acted by the Elizabethan Stage Society, on Wednesday, February 21, at 8.30 o'clock, at the Carpenter's Hall, London Wall. The text of the play where corrupt and imperfect will be revised from the First Folio. The performance will be given on an Elizabethan stage in Elizabethan costume, and on this occasion the women's parts will be played by boys, as in Shakespeare's time. The original music will be revived on instruments of the sixteenth century under the direction of Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch.

MR. CONRAD's beautiful story, "Youth" (which appeared in Blackwood in 1898), his "Heart of Darkness" (which appeared in the same magazine last year), and "Lord Jim" (which is just ending) are about to be published by Messrs. Blackwood, under the title Three Tales.

MR. W. E. HENLEY's spirited verses, "England, my England," which we quoted recently, have been set to music by Mr. Ernest A. Dicks. The words and score are published by Messrs. J. Curwen & Sona.

A JOURNALISTIC situation of some interest is piquantly hit off in "The New Who's Who," a page contribution to Messrs. Hatchard's Books of To-day and Books of To-morrow:

INGRAM, Sir William, Proprietor of Illustrated London News, Sketch, Spear, &c. Publication: Shorter edition of 'De Amicitia,' 1900. Motto: 'Dum Sphæreo Sphæro.'

SHORTER, Clement King, late editor of Illustrated London News, Sketch, &c. Founded The Sphere, 1900. Pseudonym: Nicholas Breakspear.

SEVERAL correspondents have sent us versions of the Spanish poem printed in our correspondence columns last week. Here is Mr. Walter Gurner's translation:

A little bird that I held dear
Flew away.
My love who loved me yester-year
Died one day.
So the course of love must run;
All things fade beneath the sun;
Life is doomed ere yet begun;
And we say, "God's will be done!"

In answer to Mr. Forster's inquiry as to the author, Mr. Arthur Maquarie writes: "I don't happen to be able to give any assistance in discovering the author of the original, but it is by no means necessary to suppose that he is known even in Spain. One cannot look to learn names in anthologies of popular verse of this sort, for though there is at present a custom for strolling trovadores to sell printed copies of their songs (at halfpenny a sheet), great numbers of those now in books may have had to pass through a hundred mouths before finding themselves there."

MANY rumours are afloat as to the new morning paper which Mr. C. Arthur Pearson is about to establish. We can state with authority that it will be called The Daily Express, it will be ready in a few weeks, it will cost a halfpenny, and Mr. Pearson, not C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd., will own it.

THE competition among halfpenny morning papers shows signs of being as keen as that among sixpenny illustrated weeklies; for last Monday the Morning Leader, enlarged and improved, inaugurated a new series, with several interesting features.

THREE poets during the past week have expressed themselves on the War. Mr. William Watson reduced his opinion to the following parable which he contributed to the Morning Leader:

A certain man, quitting his own house, went to lodge in the house of another, and there demanded to have voice and authority in the ordering of the whole household.

And the other said: "No. You are free to remain or to depart, but this is my house, and I will suffer in it no second master out-mastering me."

So the lodger called unto his brave and gallant kinsmen to bludgeon that householder into submission.

MR. STEPHEN PHILLIPS sounds a larger note in the poem he sent to the Daily Chronicle. It is called simply "A Man":

O for a living man to lead!
That will not babble when we bleed;
O for the silent doer of the deed!
One that is happy in his height;
And one that, in a nation's night,
Hath solitary certitude of light!
Sirs, not with battle ill-begun
We charge you, not with fields unwon,
Nor headlong deaths against the darkened gun;
But with a lightness worse than dread:
That you but laughed, who should have led,
And tripped like dancers amid all our dead.
You for no failure we impeach,
Nor for those bodies in the breach,
But for a deeper shallowness of speech.
When every cheek was hot with shame,
When we demanded words of flame,
O ye were busy but to shift the blame!
No man of us but clenched his hand,
No brow but burned as with a brand,
You! you alone were slow to understand!
O for a living man to lead!
That will not babble when we bleed;
O for the silent doer of the deed!

MR. AUSTIN DOBSON contributed these touching lines to last week's Sphere, illustrated by a remarkable drawing by Mr. Hartrick:

O undistinguished Dead!
Whom the bent covers or the rock-strewn steep
Shows to the stars, for you I mourn, I weep,
O undistinguished Dead!
None knows your name.
Blackened and blurred in the wild battle's bront,
Hotly you fell . . . with all your wounds in front,
This is your fame!

MR. WILLIAM ARCHER says that if he were a poet he would write an ode to Mr. Mauser. In an article in last Monday's Morning Leader he gives his reasons for this quaint aspiration. It has revealed to him a great deal about his country and himself. Nicholson's Nek was the eye-opening, heart-reaching incident. Mr. Archer concludes as follows:

That the blot of unredeemed disaster should blur back through all our military history—that it should appear to dim the glories of Wellington and Marlborough—was perhaps natural enough. But what have Shakespeare and Milton, what have Newton and Darwin, to do with Tommy Atkins and his fortunes? Do they not dwell in an ampler ether, a diviner air? They ought to, no doubt; but I found that, in my own instinctive conception, they did not. It was not only the existing generation that seemed to have suffered humiliation—it was the whole Pantheon of the past. Nay, in some still more inexplicable fashion, the physical beauties of England seemed to have fallen into eclipse—a light had vanished from her valleys, lakes, and woodlands; her castles, cathedrals, universities appeared less stately and less reverend. In short, I realised that the idea of "England" was to me nothing but a many-faceted jewel of pride, whereof no one facet could be dimmed but the others must pale in sympathy. And this the Mauser bullet taught me.

But Mr. Archer does not tell all. Having learned these things, he straightway went out and enrolled himself in a corps of volunteers.

APROPPOS "P. C.'s" list, in our last issue, of old words worth reviving, Mr. Eyre Hussey sends us the following as "an illustration of the extreme value of resuscitated verbiage." We should first state that the new words suggested by "P. C." were:

Cote	...	Enclosure, shelter.
Thole	...	Suffer, endure.
Rede	...	Counsel, advice.
Blee	...	Complexion, aspect.
Dwine	...	To fade gradually.
Pleach	...	Intertwine.
Inwit	...	Intuitive knowledge.
Outwit	...	Acquired knowledge.
Buxom	...	"Willing," good-natured.
Ruly	...	Taking kindly to discipline.
Fay	...	For fairy (which is incorrectly used).
Kitting	...	For kitten (a pure Eoglish diminutive instead of a hybrid form).
Calenture	...	Feverish heat.
Gyre	...	Circular course.
Spoom	...	To run before the wind.
Stour	...	Battle.
Leman	...	Mistress.
Rood	...	The Cross.

Mr. Hussey's amusing illustration follows:

The wind howled as it slammed the front door behind me and left me to stour with its icy blast. Outwit led me to recollect that if I took a gyre the contest would at least be drawn, for then, in the latter portion of my short journey, I could spoom. As I entered the churchyard the rood upon the chancel roof stood out clearly cut against the sky; one tiny star gleamed above it like the wand-tip of some celestial fay.

The black branches of the yew trees bent and skipped like some gigantic kitting. It was a lonesome spot; but what matter? Was I not there to meet the buxom leman of my heart?

Still, human nature cannot thole everything. I was compelled to seek some cote, for in the calenture of anticipation I had, contrary to the rede of inwit, left my ulster at home.

I waited in the porch; it was lonesome, but I am ruly by nature, and knew well enough that Sophia was often late.

I pictured her with the rosy blee upon her face dwining as she stood before me with pleached fingers to beg forgiveness—

(To be continued when a suitable supply of language is furnished. Impatient readers may as well know that, owing to cold weather, Sophia displayed her inwit by staying at home.)

MR. ANDREW LIANO's recent observations on the shortness and uncertainty of literary reputations find an echo in the February American Bookman. The Bookman has just completed its fifth year. Reviewing one short lustrum of its existence, it heaves a sigh of fatigue and bewilderment:

During that brief time many literary reputations have risen and waned; men and women whose names were household words in 1895 have, in the beginning of 1900, reached a commonplace acceptance even more cruel than their original obscurity; books that two or three or five years ago stirred the female subscribers of the village library to wire pulling and intrigue, and the occasional male subscriber to blasphemy, now repose undisturbed upon the shelves. There is infinitely more downright irony in this, the commonplace record of half a decade, than Washington Irving put into his Mutability of Literature.

THE Bookman illustrates its remarks by stating that in a town library not twenty-five miles from New York the two copies of Trilby possessed by the library have not been borrowed for six months; and it adds:

A magazine writer was recently asked to contribute a paper on Bohemian Paris to a new review. The works suggested as deserving treatment in such an article included Henry Murger's La Vie de Bohème, W. C. Morrow's Bohemian Paris of To-Day, The Stones of Paris, and several others. But of Trilby, that book which brought home to American and English readers all the romance, the poetry, the charm of the southern half of the French capital as no other book has ever done, and probably as no other book will ever do, no mention was made. The slight was in no way intentional. Trilby had simply been forgotten.

BUT if books are short-lived, their writers commonly attain to longevity. Mr. William Roscoe Thayer, writing in the Forum, shows that the average age of literary men in the nineteenth century has been distinctly high. Take novelists, for instance. Mr. Thayer gives this table of twenty-six novelists and the ages they reached:

Augier, 79.	Reade, 70.	Ebers, 60.
Irving, 76.	Heyse, 69 (living).	Scheffel, 60.
Conscience, 71.	A. Trollope (67).	Flaubert, 59.
Meredith, 71 (living).	Collins, 65.	Dickens, 58.
P. de Kock, 71.	Mayne Reid, 65.	Daudet, 57.
Auerbach, 70.	Cooper, 62.	Marryat, 56.
Andersen, 70.	Du Maurier, 62.	Thackeray, 53.
Bulwer, 70.	Hawthorne, 60.	Sue, 53.
Balzac, 51.	Maupassant, 43.

The average age of these writers is sixty-three years. Forty-six poets attained the average of sixty-six years. The ages of forty "men of letters" work out to the average of sixty-seven years. Historians live even longer; the average of thirty-eight of them was seventy-three years. Mr. Thayer includes musicians, philosophers, agitators, statesmen, and intellectual women in his survey; and his inference is striking:

The assumption has been that modern conditions are destructive to the vitality of just this upper class of brain-workers. The fact is, that these persons lived on an average sixty-eight years and eight months—that is, nearly thirty years longer than the population as a whole. Were we to double the number of names the result would not be very different.

AN inquiry of some literary interest concerns boys and girls. The following question, among others, was put to a large number of school children, and their answers, which were given in writing, have been examined and compared: "Which man or woman of whom you have ever heard would you most wish to be, and why?" The list of answers includes Shakespeare, Sir Thomas Lipton, and Mr. Kipling. The boy who wanted to be Kipling gave the sensible reason: "Because he writes about soldiers who fight now, and not historical pieces like Shakespeare and Scott."

THE adventures of a story. In the New York Literary Life of January appears the following paragraph:

KIPLING.—During Kipling's illness Henry James was one night riding home in a cab from his club in London. The news had just come that the crisis was passed, and the great writer on the road to recovery. As he stepped out on the sidewalk, Mr. James handed the paper he had bought to the cabman. "Kipling's all right," he said. The cabman took the paper, and leaned down with a puzzled look on his face. "I don't seem to know the name o' the 'awse," he said.

Our readers will remember that this story first appeared in the ACADEMY. But the incident did not happen to Mr. Henry James. It was the personal experience of one of our staff—quite a humble person. The story flew to the ends of the earth—the New York version is a mere ricochet.

THE New York Bookman makes the following curious parallel between the late Mr. Bellamy, the author of Looking Backward, and Mr. Edwin Markham, the author of "The Man with the Hoe":

When Mr. Bellamy wrote Looking Backward he wrote it simply as a good story, a bit of imaginative writing, and with no particular intention of promulgating a new form of Socialism. But as soon as the book leaped to its extraordinary success, thousands upon thousands of impressionable persons insisted upon seeing in it a new sociological gospel. Then Mr. Bellamy himself began to feel that he had unwittingly done a great thing, and that he must have been inspired when he composed the pages of his novel. Then he practically gave up literature and started a crank paper, and gave his time and his talents to the foundation and encouragement of clubs for the propagation of the theories set forth in Looking Backward. What was the result? The faddists who took up the Bellamy craze soon grew tired and dropped both it and him; his paper failed; and he himself died, a literary wastrel and a sociological joke.

Mr. Edwin Markham's work is, of course, of a very different character from Bellamy's. "The Man with the Hoe," which America read as it has not read any new poem for years and years, is an appeal to mankind to do something to lighten the burden of the agricultural slave, to widen his outlook and stimulate his higher feelings. The volume containing this and other of Mr. Markham's poems has just been published in England.

And now here is poor Mr. Markham going the same way. His "Man with the Hoe" was very good verse. He doubtless wrote it as he might at a less mature age have written about The Girl with a Bean. From a literary standpoint it is all right. But now he has become persuaded by his admirers that the poem is full of hidden meanings, of profound lessons, of unutterable things, and he is going about the country explaining to "social reform clubs" just what those hidden meanings are. No doubt he is enjoying himself hugely, and the people who belong to the clubs will for a day or two speak with bated breath of his soul-searching elucidations; but to us it is all so pathetic! Why cannot every human being have a little of the saving sense of humour? Poor Mr. Markham!

THERE lies on our table a book on which half a dozen visitors have already cast a longing eye. It is a large quarto, bound in a rich brown canvas, admirably stamped, with end-papers of a dusty old-gold; the edges are tinted in brick colour; and the whole appearance of the volume is excellent. It suggests a work on the stained-glass windows of Nuremberg; or a budget of Provençal songs, and their old-time musical scores; or a series of readings from Confucius for family use—in fact, anything grave and stately. It is, however, none of these things; but is the new illustrated Catalogue of the Boyle System of Ventilation. As a volume for the drawing-room table we commend it. Messrs. Boyle & Son should come into the book business at once.

WHEN receiving a testimonial at University College last week, Dr. Furnivall expressed the opinion that the English language was destined to be the universal language of civilisation. In face of the following statement, we take leave to doubt it:

The "Congregation" of the University of Chicago has adopted the following minute:

Resolved, That the adoption by the Board of the University Press, for use in the official publications and journals of the University, of the list of words with changed spelling, accepted by the National Educational Association, be approved.

The list of words thus "reformed" is as follows:

Program (programme).	Catalog (catalogue).
Tho (though).	Prolog (prologue).
Altho (although).	Decalog (decatalogue).
Thorofare (thoroughfare).	Demagog (demagogue).
Thru (through).	Pedagog (pedagogue).
Thruout (throughout).

Seriously, this divergence of spelling between English and American English is very unfortunate at a time when the two nations are, more and more, reading the same books, and when every notable author in the one country commands readers in the other.

LIBRARIANS take their work seriously. But card-catalogues and cross-references are not everything, and we feel some sympathy with a writer in Scribner's who complains that librarians are too mechanical and are apt to provide their libraries with everything except that atmosphere of peace and leisure necessary to the browser.

Let us suppose that the browser meets the cold glance of the young woman in shirt-waist and eye-glasses, who, at the circulating desk, is handling books with up-to-the-minute movements that indicate that this is no world to moon in. The browser's mood changes, and with the result that he finds it difficult to draw the two ends of the magic circle that before encompassed him together again.

This clearly is not as it should be. The perfect librarian is a subjective being. . . . He is subdued to the reverence of what he works in, and has the student's perceptions, discreet and catholic. He helps to create the ambient with which a library should be permeated, and even to those who have no feeling for the right spirit of the place his manners and personality are an instruction, unconsciously absorbed, and leading them to a humaner attitude.

The humaner attitude is perhaps coming. At any rate, it is a good sign that librarians are becoming playful at their own expense. In the Library World a writer gives ten good stock statements useful to librarians who are suddenly called upon to explain a decrease of borrowings to their committee. The last reason is worth quoting for its delightfully-mixed reasoning and probable success.

We have to draw attention for the first time since the opening of the library to a decrease in the total number of books circulated during the past year. This decrease, however, is entirely due to the fact that the demand has so far exceeded the supply that hardly any of the more popular books were to be found on the shelves, so that it has been a customary thing for borrowers to go empty-handed away. This, though pulling down the issues, is an eloquent testimony alike to the zeal of our readers and the urgent need for more books.

A LITTLE magazine, bearing a close likeness to the Quartier Latin, has just been begun at Oxford under the title the Quad. Mr. Dent is the London publisher. The following neat and reasonable quatrain meets the reader's eye at the start :

TO THE READER.

We ask you (as our labours' modest meed)
Firstly to buy, and, secondly to read :
Then, having bought and read with kindly eyes,
Thirdly, and not till then, to criticise.

MESSRS. WARD, LOCK & Co. will in future publish, from their offices in Salisbury-square, the Road, and its affiliated publications : The Road Coaching Album, The Road Coach Guide, and The Road Coaching Programme. The monthly periodical, the Road, will shortly enter upon its tenth year of existence, and the occasion will be celebrated by adding to its attractiveness and utility.

MR. QUILLER-COUCH thus dedicates his Historical Tales from Shakespeare to Mr. Swinburne :

TO ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE
WHO WITH THE NEAREST CLAIM AMONG LIVING MEN
TO APPROACH SHAKESPEARE CONFIDENTLY
HAS WITH THE BEST RIGHT SET THEM THE EXAMPLE OF REVERENT AND HUMBLE STUDY.

Bibliographical.

THE rumour that Mr. Bret Harte contemplates the publication of a second series of Condensed Novels is one that all lovers of prose parody will hope to find true. The first series, which came out in 1867, was called Sensation Novels Condensed; but it is to be assumed that the forthcoming travesties will have a wider range, the "sensation" novel being by no means the most striking feature of our present-day fiction. No ; what we want is parody of our Marie Corelli, our George Moore, our George Egerton, and so forth ; and Mr. Harte might well give some of his attention to the younger persons of both sexes who have distinguished themselves lately by startling novelty of subject, style, and treatment. The field to be covered is broad and rich—much broader and richer than that in which Thackeray wrought in his Novels by Eminent Hands.

The last few years have witnessed an agreeable revival of interest in the verse written by the sisters Louisa and Arabella Shore—the "A. and L." of publications dating several decades back. The death of Miss Louisa Shore suggested the issue in 1896, by Mr. Lane, of the Poems of that lady, prefaced by a memoir from her sister's pen and an "appreciation" from that of Mr. Frederic Harrison. Then came, in 1897, Poems by A. and L., issued by Mr. Grant Richards, and, in 1898, from the same house, Hannibal, the mammoth dramatic poem by Miss Louisa Shore. The forthcoming First and Last Poems of Miss Arabella Shore will probably bring to a close this brief but interesting series of Shore volumes. The deceased sister had, I think, a genuine poetic vision, but very little of the "faculty divine." Her powers were not sufficiently cultivated.

The announced new edition of the third Lord Shaftesbury's Characteristics of Men, Manners, Opinions, and Times should be welcome to many. It is by no means de trop. The work itself is one of those which are more often talked about than read. Few know, for example, that it is a collection of seven distinct literary efforts—including a "letter," an "inquiry," a "philosophical rhapsody," "miscellaneous reflections," and so forth—published separately at varied intervals. It appeared as a whole in 1711 and again in 1713. Gray wrote about Shaftesbury as a philosopher in rather scornful fashion (see his Letters). Pope, who was a friend of Shaftesbury's, thought, it will be remembered, that the Characteristics "had done more harm to revealed religion in England than all the works of infidelity put together."

A London morning paper, "noticing" a new edition of the works of Shakespeare, mentions that it has "a pleasant biographical introduction by Mr. Henry G. Bell." This "Mr. Henry G. Bell," were he living now, would be annoyed at the reduction of the second word in his name from "Glassford" to mere "G." There was a time when Henry Glassford Bell was a person of some potency in the literary world, and especially in that part of it which lies north of the Tweed. Some of us remember him best by a "poem" on Mary Queen of Scots, which used to be by far too great a favourite with the reciter-demon. Still, even the perpetration of this "poem" scarcely justifies one in describing him now as "Mr. Henry G. Bell."

Mr. Wilson Barrett is rapidly acquiring a name in the literary as well as in the theatrical arena. That he turned his "Sign of the Cross" into a prose narrative we all know ; then came his "novelisation" of his "Daughters of Babylon," but in that he had the co-operation of Mr. Hichens. Now he comes forward with a tale called In Old New York, in which he has collaborated with Mr. Elwyn Barron. This, I believe, is a "novelisation" of a play by Messrs. Barrett and Barron which has not yet faced the footlights. Mr. Barron is already known here through his Manders, published in this country about sixteen months ago.

Mr. Israel Gollancz was happily inspired when it occurred to him to reprint, along with In Memoriam, in the "Temple Classics" series, the poetical remains of Arthur Hallam. We must not forget, however, that the credit of reprinting these remains in recent years belongs to Mr. Le Gallienne, who, in 1893, republished not only Hallam's poems, but his essay on the poems of Tennyson. Mr. Le Gallienne's little volume, which was issued by Messrs. Mathews & Lane, is, indeed, the best possible companion to In Memoriam, and I hope it is still in the market.

By way of motto to his new book, In the Valley of the Rhone, Mr. C. W. Wood prints the well-known lines :

Noiseless falls the foot of time
That only treads on flowers.

These he attributes to "Spenser"—a rather unfortunate misprint. And yet how natural on the part of a compositor ! Who reads nowadays the works of that Hon. William Robert Spencer whose vers-de-société were once in everybody's mouth ? It is not the first time that the two men have been confused, as students of Charles Lamb will remember.

Studies in Dedications—the title of Miss Arnold-Forster's new book—is a little misleading. It makes one think at once of literary dedications, whereas it is of church dedications that the lady writes. It will be remembered that Mr. H. B. Wheatley contributed a pleasant little volume on The Dedication of Books to the "Book-Lover's Library."

THE BOOKWORM.

Reviews.

Santo Virgilio.

The Unpublished Legends of Virgil. Collected by Charles Godfrey Leland. (Elliot Stock.)

BAYLE, in his article upon Virgil—a plague upon the probable accuracy of pedantry which writes Vergil!—remarks: “Il n’y a rien de plus ridicule que ce que l’on conte de sa magie, et des prétendus prodiges qu’il fit voir aux Napolitains.” After which trenchant and terse verdict there follows, as usual, one of those delightfully colossal notes, which, for very wantonness of erudition, always remind us of Burton. But that magie and those prodiges have been the theme of laborious scholarship, and found to be of much significance. Signor Comparetti, of Florence—perhaps the most variously learned of living men—has, in his work on Virgil in the Middle Ages, given us once for all the finest word of scholarship upon the matter; and now there comes to us from Florence a little work, by way, as it were, of supplement to that masterpiece. Mr. Leland, creator of Hans Breitmann, translator of Heine, anthropologist among American Indians and European gypsies, has of late devoted himself to a singular, a fascinating, an (to put it Germanwise) in-difficulties-and-doubts-abounding field of investigation. A few years ago he published his Roman Etruscan Remains in Popular Legend, wherein he claimed to show that in Italy there exists, side by side with Christianity, a most venerable and primitive Paganism; not the formal civic religion of ancient cultured Rome, but a thing of the villages and woods and fields and vineyards—a true product of lusty, wild Mother Earth—never spoken of in senatorial edicts, nor merged into the hierarchical order of State religion. Etruria—that mysterious region of a vanished civilisation—was its chief home; and its practices remain, in the form of sorcery and magic, wizardry and incantation, witchcraft and necromancy, in the present Italy of to-day, dying, doomed to die, yet discoverable by research and patience still. In a word, that popular body of beliefs and superstitions, whereof the old classics, by tantalising glimpses, make us well aware as having prevailed in classic Italy, has never perished from the soil of Italy. Impoverished, contaminated, debased, jealously hidden out of sight, it is still there. Have patience and cunning, and you will find it in the hearts and upon the lips of withered crones, of peasants versed in ancestral folklore. It will reach you in the rudest of Italian dialects, and from the least modernised of Italian districts; but it also lurks even beneath the shadow of Santa Croce, at Florence, and of St. Peter’s, at Rome.

Mr. Leland is incapable of dulness, but he has his defects. He is vivid, picturesque, dramatic, exciting, at the expense of orderliness, sobriety, method. He gives us a brilliant bundle of notes and sketches, rather than a finished book. He would sooner be careless than pedantic, inaccurate than dogmatic. He is a writer whose veracity one cannot question, but whose authority one hesitates to quote: he is more enjoyable than useful. It is sometimes hard to make up one’s mind whether or not he wishes to be of real assistance to the scientific student of anthropology. His light-hearted indifference to precision infects his proof-reading: we shrink, in the present volume, from misprints which make Browning unmeaning, Martial both unmeaning and unmetrical. Another flaw, or fault, derogatory to any serious and courteous scholar, is his constant girding at the Christian religion, especially in its Catholic form, in a vein of humour which entirely fails to be humorous, and which would still be offensive even if successful. But let us turn from this, and come to the more alluring theme of Santo Virgilio.

Signor Comparetti devotes his great work to the study of the mediæval Virgil as he appears in the literature of the learned, and of that literature as applied to the amusement of the less learned and the illiterate. He speaks of little else but what can be read in extant MSS. or print, and gives but a few lines to the Virgil whose transmogrified phantom flits yet in living legend underived from literary sources—that is, of course, to say, not immediately and consciously derived, but traditional. Mr. Leland, struck by this fact, set himself to collect, by his usual methods, Virgilian legends alive among the people, with the result that he presents to us some fifty tales; and it is safe to say that many, if not most, of them are assignable to no known source in the mass of mediæval Virgilian legend extant as literature. Obviously, the mediæval writers, of whatever kind, who have preserved for us the fantastic Virgil of popular myth could not record all they knew or heard; and there came a time when such legends ceased to be collected. But they did not therefore cease to be handed down among the people; and the popular Italian memory, which is a museum of confused relics, and the popular Italian imagination, which is a factory of things fanciful or grotesque, have between them produced these extraordinary narratives, wherein the medley mediæval conceptions of history and science and the supernatural are in full vigour. Recorded at the close of the nineteenth century, they essentially belong to the ages which made “Virgil, Duke of Naples,” the contemporary of Homer and of King Arthur and of the Soldan of Babylon: they descend in spiritual and imaginative lineage from the times when

Son nom, balbutié par les hommes nouveaux,
Fit se lever, dans les ténèbres des cerveaux,
Lauré d’or et de feu, le fantôme d’un mage.
Le peuple, qui vénère encore son image,
Broda sur sa mémoire un étrange roman
De sorcier secourable et de bon nécroman.

Assuredly, it is as “sorcier secourable et bon nécroman” that this “translated” Virgil figures in Mr. Leland’s books; he has still the “white soul” that Horace loved, and is still, despite his strange transformations, the Virgil over whose tomb at Puteoli, so they sang in the churches of Mantua, Saint Paul wept and said: “Ah, what manner of man had I not made of thee had I but found thee living, O prince of poets!” True, he is frolicsome, prankish, as well as helpful and benevolent; but then, as Faustus felt, if you are a magician, the temptation to merry jests and practical jokes is irresistible. Here, with one exception, he does nothing quite unworthy of the Virgil whom primitive and later Christianity hailed as the herald of the Nativity, the first discernor of the Star of Bethlehem, the Virgil who chaunted in his inspired “Pollio” the Desire of the Nations, Him who should come. There is nothing of the Virgil whom harsher spirits accused of working wonders “by witchcraft and nigramansy thorough the help of the devylls of hell.” This, according to one of Mr. Leland’s stories, was the fashion of Virgil’s own coming, and it is exquisitely imagined of him whom Renan calls “le tendre et clairvoyant Virgile.” There was a lady of Rome called Helen, the world’s wonder for beauty, but she would not wed for terror of childbirth; she therefore fled to an impregnable tower far without the walls; but—and here, as Mr. Leland notes, we have the Danaë myth—Jupiter descended as a shower of gold-leaf, and it fell into her cup, which she had no fear to drink.

But hardly had Helen drunk the wine before she felt a strange thrill in all her body, a marvellous rapture, a change of her whole being, followed by complete exhaustion. And in time she found herself with child, and cursed the moment when she drank the wine. And to her in this way was born Virgil, who had in his forehead a most beautiful star of gold. Three fairies aided at his birth: the Queen of the Fairies cradled him in a cradle made of roses. She made a fire of twigs of laurels, it crackled loudly. To the crackling of twigs of laurel was he born; his mother felt no pain. The three each gave him a blessing; the wind as it blew into the window wished him good fortune; the light of the stars, and the lamp and the fire, who are all spirits, gave him glory and song. He was born fair and strong, and strong and beautiful; all who saw him wondered.

It is characteristic, this mingling of Helen, Danaë, Jupiter, the Fairies, Rome; elsewhere in the piece we have the King of the Magicians, the Emperor, and the Turks. It were nothing wonderful if we also had Abraham, Socrates, Julius Cæsar, and the Pope, all meeting in this wonderland out of time and space. We should be grateful to Mr. Leland had he rescued for us no more than the perfect passage quoted, so unconsciously superb and glittering a praise of the everlasting Virgil. And there are other things in the book hardly less beautiful, together with a mass of legends depicting, in a strain of innocent jocularity, this Virgil of the mediæval phantasy, saint and mage. In this aspect, the work, as we have said, is a complement to Signor Comparetti's elaborate study; but it also continues Mr. Leland's studies in the survival of that secret paganism ineradicable, at least in spirit, from the thrice haunted earth of Italy. Here are spells, incantations, remembrances of infinitely ancient deities and powers, which at once impress the reader as far older in spirit than the tales and legends in which they are embodied; as older, not only than the historic Virgil, but older than the first foundation and walls of Rome. "Naturam expellas furca, tamen usque recurrit": worship of "Madre Natura" is in some form inevitable. With the educated it turns to poetry or a poetical pantheism; with the less sophisticated it abides as something much more practical.

No poet has shared the astonishing fate of Virgil: no other writer of antiquity has been so familiar a name to Christianity. Signor Comparetti has supplied an abundance of historical reasons why this should be so, and, as all scholars know, a special veneration began, even in his lifetime, to gather round the person, and upon his death, round the tomb, of him whom Rome regarded as the laureate and paramount poet of Rome; in his own realm he held the throne, wore the laurel and the imperial robe. History explains why, even in after ages insensible to his essential greatness, he retained the pre-eminence. And yet that veneration, which is at its noblest height in Dante, at its lowest in certain of the most inensate myths concerning him, seems to have about it an inner propriety and congruity and significance. For the poet of imperial Rome is also the poet of human sadness and mortal longing; in him is the craving for a Golden Age, the apprehension of suffering and death, the feeling of fatality, the sense of the mystery of things, the mingled exultation and melancholy of man, the haunting appeals of nature, the mystical meanings of beauty, the manifold marvel of existence. Virgil is one of his own pale ghosts, stretching forth his hands toward "the farther shore," and dreaming of a world regenerate; he embodies the prophetic soul

Of the wide world dreaming on things to come.

"The chastest poet and royalest that to the memory of man is known," as Bacon calls him, has a note of universality, a kinship with all the race of man. The "courteous" Virgil, as Dante loves to say, has a dignity of compassion, a priestly bearing, an ever gracious and majestic utterance. In a sense far deeper than that of mediæval writers or modern peasants of Italy, he is a magician, an enchanter, touching hearts to tears and thoughts of reverence. Like Plato, he sometimes seems trembling upon the borders of Christianity, groping for it wistfully, filled with the emotions of desire which it satisfies. Grotesque as often were the travesties made of him, in his mediæval character of supreme thaumaturgist and lord over the wisdom of the universe; absurd as it may sound to hear him spoken of to-day as a great "signor," something between Simon Magus and Saint George, and Haroun Alraschid and Don Quixote and Prospero; yet we are not taken utterly aback by the unique destiny which has effected this. For in the melancholy majesty of his mighty line we commune with the "white soul" which, at the height of Rome's magnificence, was not of that age, but of all ages, in virtue of an intense humanity. If he did not, in man's service, control the powers of nature, none has more profoundly expressed and praised them, the august workings amid which man lives. If he did not with authority go about doing good to men, none has more fully and perfectly given a voice to the infinite longing of their souls, nor spoken with a tenderer austerity.

The Ancestor of Liberalism.

George Buchanan ("Famous Scots" Series). By Robert Wallace. Completed by J. Campbell Smith. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

THIS contribution to the "Famous Scots" series is at once interesting and disappointing. Dr. Robert Wallace (to give him the title by which he was formerly known) was the late editor of the Scotsman, an able man, whose competence as a biographer of Buchanan does not need the certificate here given it by Mr. Campbell Smith. It is shown in the biography itself. His purpose, as he tells us, was to condense and popularise the work of Dr. Hume Brown "and the other scientific biographers" of Buchanan; while he disclaims for himself any originality of research. But he handles his subject like a man who is master of it, and his style has a vivacity for which we have probably to thank the editor rather than the theological student. He is overmuch given to explaining away the most trifling allegations of defect in his hero, and claiming for him a well-nigh ideal standard of character; but that is a malady most incident to biographers, and we are disposed to take it good-humouredly.

The trouble is that we have not enough of it. It is a fragment. Its author's death causes it to break off in the very outset of the biographical portion proper, leaving behind a torso. The biographical section is indeed continued by Mr. Campbell Smith, who brings it to a summary conclusion, apologising for the lack of facts regarding Buchanan; and this is all, with the addition of an explanatory epilogue and super-explanatory prologue. Mr. Smith's prejudices, as it happens, are only less strong than his language in expressing them, and are curiously mixed. He will hear no words against Mary Stuart, but he launches vituperative epithets worthy of M. Henri Rochefort and the Intransigeant against all monks and Queen Elizabeth. Franciscans are "the solid, well-fed, red-faced exponents of infallible truth." As for Elizabeth, she is "one of the cleverest, falsest, most hateful of women of all history"; and it is well Mary was no worse than she was "in a world with her royal cousin and rival flaunting her fictitious moral and physical beauties at the head of it, and getting prematurely canonised as the Good Queen Bess." Therefore, he concludes, "let the modest and honest muse of History cease howling and canting about her (Mary's) crimes, and try to refrain from lavishing eulogy upon her kindred in position and in blood—Henry VIII., the Royal Bluebeard, and his inconstant and deceitful daughter." From all which it will be gathered that the quality of Mr. Smith's censures is not strained.

The valuable portion of the book is therefore limited to a monograph on the genius and character of Buchanan, which—good though it be—is hardly sufficient to equip the book for its place in the series. One would have expected some account of Buchanan's writings, beyond the general reference to them in the opening, such as Dr.

Wallace evidently intended to give at a later stage; and this, one thinks, at any rate Mr. Smith might have supplied. As it is, the book is far too incipient to be satisfactory—and in a degree that might have been further remedied.

George Buchanan was a man whose work is important enough to merit modern recollection. By a singular chance, one of the most learned men of the sixteenth century was long remembered chiefly as a jester—a Scotch Joe Miller—in virtue of a very terrible jest-book which passed under his name. Though he had the reputation of a humorist in life, Dr. Wallace's specimens of his humour prove chiefly Dr. Wallace's want of it. This George Buchanan, whom the modern world has somewhat forgotten, was of an old but poor Stirlingshire family, a lad whose first tongue was the Gaelic. What would Agricola have said had he been told that a descendant of the wild Caledonians, the very Afridis of his day, would in time to come be a poet in the Roman tongue, the tongue of Virgil and Catullus, nay, write history in it like his own friend Tacitus? For that and much more was George Buchanan. He was a great scholar in an age when the Scaligers and Casaubon lived, when it was no easy thing to be a great scholar; he was a powerful satirist; a keen controversialist; he wrote a valuable history; he mingled with men of affairs and was secretary to political assemblies; he flogged a king, and founded "Liberal principles"—at least, in the political order. Going very young to the university of Paris, he spent nearly all his early life on the Continent, except for an interval during which he was in Scotland, first as tutor to the Earl of Cassilis, and afterwards in the same capacity towards a natural son of James V. He taught at the university of Guyenne, where he had Montaigne for pupil; and it was on the Continent that he made his name—a European name—as a scholar and as the finest Latin poet of his day. Latin poetry was no such trifling then as it now appears. When many of the European languages were still half-barbaric, and there was no such thing as a literary public, it was only in Latin that a man could acquire a polite reputation as a poet. And Buchanan wrote as a poet, not as a mere Latin versifier. His Latin poetry not only receives the applause of modern scholars, but—what is a far higher guarantee of its poetic power—one of his poems was pronounced by Wordsworth to be equal to anything in Horace.

It was midway through his career when he landed in Scotland, about the same time as Mary Stuart, and began the rearing of his Scottish—and modern—reputation. He was all things to all men; read Livy with Queen Mary—who would take naturally to the Gallicised Scotsman—and chatted with the reforming nobles. But it was to the Reformation that his sympathies were given, and it was in its cause that he wrote most of his later works. He broke with Mary, and received distinguished political employment from her adversaries in the events which followed. He even drew up for them a too famous accusation against the Stuart queen. We do not think that Dr. Wallace successfully defends this act. Conviction might force Buchanan to oppose the cause of his patroness; but it could not oblige him to take away her fair fame. He was made tutor, after her English imprisonment, of the young King James VI., and held the office nominally till his own death.

But his great achievement of this period—greater than the history of Scotland, which time has necessarily put out of date—was his book De Jure Regis, put forth to defend the proceedings of the reforming nobles. It became, throughout Europe, the store-house of those political principles on which modern Liberalism rests. In virtue of this it is, chiefly, that this account of Buchanan appeals to modern readers. For this humorous, versatile, choleric phræneur, statesman and scholar-poet in his day, was virtually, so far as any one man could be said to be, the founder of modern Liberalism.

Principal Caird.

The Fundamental Ideas of Christianity. By John Caird, D.D., LL.D. With a Memoir by Edward Caird, D.C.L., LL.D. Two vols. (Maclehose.)

THESE "Gifford Lectures," left unfinished at Principal Caird's death, continue the argument of his Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion, which appeared as long ago as 1880, and which is recognised on all hands as probably the best statement existing of the Hegelian view as to the relations of philosophy and religion. That work dealt with the broadest outlines of its subject, the arguments for the being of God, the "necessity of religion," the development of the religious consciousness, and the connexion of religion with morality. The present Lectures go further, and taking up one by one the distinctively theistic and Christian doctrines—the Moral Government of the World, the Divinity of Christ, the Atonement, the Origin of Evil, the Future Life—attempt, still upon Hegelian lines, to present these in a form in which they may be justified before the bar of reason.

It will be doing the memory of Principal Caird no injustice to say that the sheer intellectual qualities displayed in the book are less striking than the spiritual fervour and grace of rhetorical style with which they were written. For the impression which you gather from the Master of Balliol's excellent "Memoir" of his brother is; that even in the opinion of those who knew and loved him best, he was less an original thinker than a great preacher. His part in the idealistic reaction of the last half century was no small one; but it was rather in the liberalising of theology than in the spiritualising of philosophy. The former task was for T. H. Green, for R. L. Nettleship, for the present Master of Balliol himself, for Prof. Wallace; Principal Caird was destined to do something of the same work in the Church of Scotland which Dean Stanley did, or essayed to do, in the Church of England. In the earlier days of his ministry, his lack of unction in preaching the specific dogmas of Calvinism awoke a suspicion of his "soundness," and although he came to attach more importance to dogma in his later life, yet even then he kept what he regarded as "essentials" before him, and "was almost indifferent to the causes of disagreement between the main denominations into which the Christian Church is divided." He was a bold man who, when consenting to address a congregation of U.P. Scotchmen, told them plainly that "he would not take the trouble of crossing the street in order to convert a man from their denomination of Christians to his own."

The testimony to his oratorical gifts is unanimous. "He spoke," says his brother of him in his youth, "with an earnestness and vehemence, with a flow of utterance and a vividness of illustration which carried his hearers by storm. . . . They were too much moved to be critical." The more chastened and reasoned eloquence of his riper years was not less impressive. Dean Stanley considered a sermon of his delivered at Balmoral "the best single sermon in the language"; and to the last he never lost the power to move and influence his audience. Withal a man of single purpose and unconscious simplicity,

He was, I think, the most modest man I ever knew in his estimate of his own abilities and acquirements; and his great power as a speaker never seemed to awake in him any feeling of self-satisfaction. It was, indeed so habitual and, I might say, natural to him to move men by his gift of speech that he never seemed to attach any special importance to it. On the other hand, he was apt to idealise and over-estimate the gifts of others, especially if they had any knowledge or ability which he did not himself possess.

A Victim of Sore Thunderbolts.

Hugh Latimer. By R. M. Carlyle and A. J. Carlyle. (Methuen.)

"My father was a yeoman and had . . . a farm of three or four pound by the year at the uttermost, and thereupon he tilled as much as kept half-a-dozen men. He had walk for a hundred sheep; and my mother milked thirty kine. He was able and did find the king a harness, and himself and his horse, while he came to the place that he should receive the king's wages. . . . He kept me to school, or else I had not been able to have preached before the King's Majesty now. . . . He kept hospitality for his poor neighbours, and some alms he gave to the poor."

These homely words we quote out of the mouth of Master Latimer, as he spoke them, in the days of his prosperity, before the court of Edward VI.

In 1509 he was elected a fellow of Clare Hall, Cambridge. Warham was Archbishop of Canterbury, and a good friend to him; so was Fox, Bishop of Winchester. Henry VII. sat on the throne, and Cardinal Morton was his principal adviser. The new learning was already enlarging the outlook; the mediæval luminaries, St. Thomas and Duns Scotus, were in eclipse; and Cambridge, more than Oxford, was sensitive to the zeitgeist. Yet at the time when Latimer was pursuing his studies he was "as obstinate a Papist as any was in England"; and, indeed, it was characteristic of his whole career that he approached the controversies in which the age was entangled from the side of life and of utility. He sounded the keynote of his life's symphony in his sermon on The Card, preached in 1529 before his own university. It was a denunciation of those who leave "necessary" works and "bestow the most part of their goods in voluntary [i.e., supererogatory] works." In 1531 he was appointed by the King to the parsonage of West Kingston, Wilts, where he had "more business, what with sick folk and what with matrimonies, than he should have thought a man should have in a great cure"; so that he wonders "how men can go quietly to bed which have great cures and many, and yet peradventure are in none of them at all." He soon fell under suspicion, and was summoned to London for examination by the Bishop's court. There was made an attempt to involve him in heresy; for when a very crafty and cunning question had been put by a certain one,

"I pray you, Master Latimer," said he, 'speak out, for I am very thick of hearing.' I . . . began to misdeem and to have an ear to the chimney [which was covered with an arras]. And, sir, there I heard a pen walking in the chimney behind the curtain."

Nevertheless, he prospered. He preached before the King and by his honesty did so win him that he was appointed to the see of Worcester. He was one of the bishops deputed to draw up the Institution of a Christian Man; and when Queen Katharine's confessor, Forest, was roasted alive for maintaining the papal supremacy, Latimer improved the occasion. Thenceforward he continued steadily to approach the ideals of the Continental reformers.

He denounced "solemn and nocturnal bacchanals and prescript miracles"; he preached in unmeasured terms against "our old purgatory pickpurse that was swaged and cooled with a Franciscan's cowl upon a dead man's back." But the promulgation of the Six Articles, affirming the whole of the Roman doctrine except only the authority of the Pope, drove him to resign, and presently turned upon him the keys of the Tower. "Marry, sir, this was sore thunderbolts!"

Returning to public life in the next reign, he preached in 1548, 1549, 1550 against the evils of the day. Particularly he denounced the covetousness by which the ruin of the yeomanry was being wrought, though this, in fact, was no more than the application to agriculture and cattle-raising of economic laws which in these days are recognised as sound. He declares—strangely enough—that learning is no longer patronised as in the days of Popery. As to the judges, he likens himself to Esay, who denounced the unjust judges of Israel. He knows very well how the thing works: "Somewhat was given to them before, and they must needs give somewhat again; for Giffe-gaffe was a good fellow: this Giffe-gaffe led them clean away from justice." For such there lacks a Tyburn tippet, though it were my Lord Chief Justice himself. His brethren of the clergy are not spared.

Came Mary; came Pole; came bulls of absolution, reconciliation, and what not. Came also a pursuivant to summon Latimer to the Royal presence. Whither he went, said he, "as willingly, being called by my Prince to render an account of my doctrine, as ever I was at any place in the world." He was lodged first in the Tower; at Oxford the prison in the Corn Market, known as Bocardo (after one of the figures of the syllogism), was the meet abode of this impugner of the ancient logic. There he enjoyed the company of Ridley and Cranmer, and together they confirmed themselves in the conviction that in the New Testament was no warrant for the doctrine of a corporal presence in the sacrament. And there Latimer in his exercises "did so inculcate and beat the ears of the Lord God as though he had seen God before him and spoke unto Him face to face."

Of the examination of the three in St. Mary's Church we can here give no particular account. Only, we quote Strype's description of this poor old clergyman—who had forgot his logic, whose memory was gone and his tongue unused for twenty years to use Latin—at the moment of his appearing before his judges:

He held a hat in his hand, he had a 'kerchief on his head, and upon it a night-cap or two, and a great cap such as townsmen used with two broad flaps to button under his chin; an old threadbare Bristow freez gown, girded to his body with a penny leather girdle, at which hanged by a long string of leather his Testament; and his spectacles without case hanging about his neck upon his breast.

The proceedings seem to have been somewhat huddled, and their result, consummated six months later, is familiar to every English child. It was one point at which the English Reformation touched heroism. The lurid record kept the hearts of Englishmen hot against the appeal of the Roman Catholic Church for three hundred years: not even the madness of the Powder Plot was so efficacious.

The work of the joint authors has been done with admirable efficiency. There is positively nothing in the record that could hurt the feelings of any reader, whatever his convictions on the dogmatic questions involved. It is the story, told to a great extent in his own words, of an honest old Englishman who was content to give his body to be burned for what he doubted not to be the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Mau's Pompeii.

Pompeii; its Life and Art. By August Mau. Translated into English by Francis W. Kelsey. With numerous Illustrations from Original Drawings and Photographs. (Macmillan. 25s.)

To the list of about five hundred books relating to Pompeii in Furchheim's Bibliotheca Pompeiana, published 1891, there are by now several important works to add. Prof. Sogliano's learned Guide de Pompéi came out last April at Rome, and M. Pierre Gusman's magnificent édition de luxe, entitled Pompeii: la Ville, les Mœurs, les Arts, was published at Paris in December. We now have the latest, which is a translation, specially prepared for English readers by an American gentleman, of a new German MS. by Prof. Mau, similar in some respects to the work that appeared in Germany about three years ago.

It would be absurd here to describe Pompei's history and destruction; all know its modern aspect. It is only necessary to refer to the late Senator Fiorelli, who died in 1896, aged seventy-two; who was in charge of the excavations till 1875, when he went to Rome as Superintendent-General of Museums and Excavations; and was succeeded by Michele Ruggiero, followed by Giulio de Petra, and now by the actual Director of the Pompeian excavations, Prof. Sogliano, de Petra being Director of the Naples Museum and of the excavations in the province.

The twelve plates of this volume are beautifully soft and clear, and the plans and 263 illustrations all that can be desired. The restorations are very different from the fanciful and absurd attempts in Dyer's Pompeii: in that of the Forum Mau has rightly taken a suggestion from a marble relief; and another of the Greek temple and southern houses and walls of the city, by Weichardt, who happens to be the German Emperor's architect, is both beautiful and reasonable. The description of the Basilica restored is more trustworthy than that in older works, but it can never be thoroughly satisfactory owing to the insufficiency of the remains. Quite in the best German vein is the excellent comparison between the busts of Zeus from Otricoli and Pompei; thorough, clear, and pleasant reading, it is summed up by declaring that "the Pompeian god is more a sovereign; the Zeus of Otricoli is more poetic, more divine."

We knew already that Prof. Mau had shown the building to the west of the Stabian baths to be the town reservoir. But we notice several serious omissions; among others, there is no plan, view, or description of the temple lately excavated between the Basilica and the Porta Marina. This, according to Dr. Sogliano's Guide, is named the temple of Augustus, while M. Gusman claims it for that of Venus; and, as his reasons seem good, and we know that there were priestesses to Ceres and Venus in Pompei, we are inclined to agree with the latter. It is remarkable also in so complete a work that there is no mention of the few wells that have been found, of which the list, with depths, was given by FitzGerald Marriott's Facts about Pompei in 1895. Nor are Mason's Marks more than referred to; and the authorities quoted omit mention of both Richter's list in Antike Steinmetzzeichen (1885), and the later and only complete series of reproductions in twelve pages of Marriott's work. Moreover, all references to the identification of the Family Portraits of the inhabitants of the houses by the latter author, portrayed both by him and in Gusman's elaborate Pompeii, seem to be strangely ignored.

The chapter on "Three Houses of Unusual Plan" is interesting, but there is little about the extremely unique, five-storied, terraced cliff-houses in Regione VIII., 2, 14 to 23, such as is given in Facts about Pompeii; though a slight description of the older-excavated and smaller house, known as that of Giuseppe Secondo, is given as an example. Among new subjects described in full, however, are the country villa at Boscoreale and the House of the Vettii, excavated in 1894-95. Prof. Mau naturally describes everything, when possible, from the point of view which he has made peculiarly his own—i.e., that of the style of decoration from which the comparatively later buildings can easily be classed under four periods; the successive, gradual development of these styles indicated by Marriott is here investigated on wider lines; and the fascinating origins pointed to are as far off even as Rome, Alexandria, and Antioch, which is news for the elder school of British Archaeologists. These latter have too long ignored the four distinct styles of Pompeian and Roman house decoration, and are especially perversely ignorant of that delicate variety of the third style, which Mau, in his well-known German works, but not in this, distinguishes as the "candelabrum." His chapter on "Painting and Wall Decoration" is of the utmost value, that being Mau's strong point, as we know from his Geschichte der decorativen Wandmalerei in Pompeii.

In speaking of "Sarno" limestone it would have been better to say Sarnus; and a few other orthographic flaws exist. But in spite of defects and omissions, this valuable and substantially-bound book has much that is new, and is the most thorough and extensive work on Pompei in all its many aspects that has yet appeared in the English language.

The New Dooley.

Mr. Dooley in the Hearts of his Countrymen. By F. P. Dunne. (Richards. 3s. 6d.)

WE have from time to time said so much about Mr. Dooley that it is needless again to lay emphasis on the great merits of this laughing satirist and philosopher. Our readers know already how we regard him. His new book shows no falling off: his wit is as nimble as ever, his eye as quick to note incongruities, his satire as well directed and as brilliant. In one respect Mr. Dooley in the Hearts of his Countrymen has an advantage over Mr. Dooley in Peace and War, which preceded it: for whereas the earlier book was almost exclusively American in application, the new one gives several chapters to the Dreyfus case and to English subjects.

For most readers the cream of the volume will be these Dreyfus chapters. Certainly Mr. Dooley never approached a scandal with more gusto and levity, and never left it so thoroughly exposed. His own evidence—as contained in an imaginary address to the Court at Rennes—shows his excellent good sense no less than his excelling gift of ridicule. Though he writes in English (of sorts), Mr. Dooley is not an Anglo-Saxon. Fortunately for his readers he is a Celt, and is thus in a position to hit all round. From the salutary lecture which Mr. Dooley delivered to Col. Jouaust we take the following passage:

"Th' throuble is, mong colonel, lady an' gentlemen, that it ain't been Cap Dhryfuss that's been on thrile, but th' honor iv th' nation an' th' honor iv th' ar-rmy. If 'twas th' Cap that was charged, ye'd say to him, 'Cap, we haven't anny proof again ye; but we don't like ye, an' ye'll have to move on.' An' that 'd bs th' end iv th' row. The Cap 'd go over to England an' go into th' South African minia' business, an' become what Hogan calls 'A Casey's bellows.' But, because some la-ad on th' gin'ral staff got caught lyin' in th' start an' had to lie some more to make th' first wan stick, an' th' other gin'erals had to jine him f'r fear he might compromise thim if he wint on telling his fairy stories, an' they was la-ads r-runnin' newspapers in Paris that needed to make a little money out iv th' popylation, ye said, 'Th' honor iv th' Fr-rinch people an' th' honor iv th' Fr-rinch ar-rmy is on thrile'; an' ye've put thim in th' dock instead iv th' Cap. Th' honor iv Fr-rance is all right, me boy, an' will be so long as th' Fr-rinch newspapers is not read out iv Parce,' I says. 'An', if th' honor iv th' Fr-rinch ar-rmy can stand thim pants that ye hew out iv red flannel f'r thim, a little treachery won't injure it at all,' I says. 'Yes,' says I, 'th' honor iv Fr-rance an' th' honor iv th' ar rmy'll come out all r-right,' I says; 'but it wudden't do anny harm f'r to sind th' honor iv th' Fr-rinch gin'erals to th' laundhry,' I says. 'I think ye'd have to sind Gin'ral Mercceer's to th' dyer's,' I says. 'Ye niver can take out th' spots, an' it might as well all be th' same color,' I says. 'Mong colonel,' I says impressively, 'so long as ivry man looks out f'r his own honor, th' honor iv th' counthry'll look out f'r itself,' I says. 'No wan iver heard iv a nation stealin' a lead pipe or committin' perjury,' I says. 'Tis th' men that makes up th' nation that goes in f'r these diversions,' I says. 'I'd hate to insure again burglars th' naytional honor that was guarded bs that ol' gazarbo,' says I, indicatin' Mercceer with th' tos iv me boot."

The Dreyfus Case is, perhaps, the best thing in the new volume, but we recommend also particularly "A Hero who worked Overtime," "The Optimist," "The Performances of Lieutenant Hobson," and, for true Irish exaggeration and irresponsible fun, "The Union of Two Great Fortunes."

Other New Books.

HOME AND GARDEN.

BY GERTRUDE JEKYLL.

Wood and Garden, Miss Jekyll's first book, kept us in the open air: in Home and Garden, its sequel, or companion volume, we are taken indoors as well, and are regaled with more intimate and personal conversation and reminiscences than the author offered before. Otherwise the books are very much alike: the same charm is in both, the same love of Nature, the same striking good sense and distinguished taste. Perhaps the most interesting passages in Home and Garden are those describing the building of Miss Jekyll's house at Munstead. The building of the house in which the rest of one's life is to be spent is a serious business not to be lightly entered upon, and few experiences are more interesting than this can be to almost everyone, whatever their temperament. But to a mind so active and sound and luminous as Miss Jekyll's the spectacle, nay, the drama, of home-building is absolutely absorbing and full of significance. Nothing is too small for her notice and approbation. She revels in every office, however mean, that assists forward steady and thorough completion. While her house was building Miss Jekyll occupied a little cottage eighty yards away, where she could feast upon the sounds of the men at work. "How well I got to know them!" she remarks, and adds this list, which there can be few of our readers so aurally unobservant as not to recognise vividly:

The chop and rush of the trowel taking up its load of mortar from the board, the dull slither as the moist mass was laid as a bed for the next brick in the course; the ringing music of the soft-tempered blade cutting a well-burnt brick, the muter tap of its shoulder settling it into its place, ended by the down-bearing pressure of the finger-tips of the left hand; the sliding scrape of the tool taking up the over-much mortar that squeezed out of the joint, and the neat slapping of it into the cross-joint. The sharp, double tap on the mortar-board, a signal that more stuff was wanted. Then, at the mortar-mixing place, the fat-popping of the slaking lime throwing off its clouds of steam; the working of the mixing tool in the white sea enclosed by banks of sand—a pleasant sound strangely like the flopping of a small boat on short harbour wavelets; the rhythmical sound of the shovel in the sloppy mortar as it turned over and over to incorporate the lime and sand.

The house itself, judging from the photographs reproduced in this book, is in external design what it should be. That it is a piece of honest thorough English—shall we say Ruskinian?—work is demonstrated by the simple fact that it is Miss Jekyll's property. An owner who can feel thus about the timber which is employed will not be put off with anything but the best labour:

Then there is the actual living interest of knowing where the trees one's house is built of really grew, the three great beams, ten inches square, that stretch across the ceiling of the sitting-room, and do other work besides, and bear up a good part of the bedroom space above (they are twenty-eight feet long), were growing fifteen years ago a mile and a half away, on the outer edge of a fir wood just above a hazel-fringed hollow lane, whose steep saudy sides, here and there level enough to bear a patch of vegetation, grew tall Bracken and great Foxgloves, and the finest wild Canterbury Bells I ever saw. At the top of the western bank, their bases hidden in cool beds of tall fern in summer, and clothed in its half-fallen warmth of rusty comfort in winter, and in spring-time standing on their carpet of blue wild Hyacinth, were these tall oaks; one or two of their fellows still remain.

That passage is typical of Miss Jekyll's mind. It is inspired by what we might call the Saner Sentimentalism. The architect of Miss Jekyll's home, though he comes in for many eulogies, is yet left unnamed by her. We are tempted to commit an indiscretion and say that it was Mr. Lutyens.

Home and Garden is not inferior to Wood and Garden, and all persons who own the one will need the other. They reveal together one of the most interesting and attractive personalities to be found in recent literature. (Longmans. 10s. 6d. net.)

IMPRESSIONS OF SPAIN.

BY JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

This, we fear, is book-making pure and simple. From 1877 to 1880 Lowell was American minister at Madrid, and while holding that office he sent home a number of official despatches. From these a selection of some eighty pages, enclosed in double lines with side titles, has been made, prefaced by sixteen pages by Mr. Adey—in Lowell's day American chargé d'affaires at Madrid—and five by Mr. J. B. Gilder, who "introduces" the book. We learn that on Lowell's arrival at Madrid the leading Government organ welcomed "the poet Russell equally with the diplomatist Lowell," while another paper alluded to him playfully as "José Bighlow." But Spain was a disappointment to the lover of Don Quixote (who first learned Spanish in order to be able to read that work) and his writing in this volume is a disappointment to us. The Lowell of the golden and honeyed mouth is not here. The observation shown in these passages from his despatches may be sound, but the matter, comparatively speaking, is always dull, and, speaking positively, is often dull. A good special correspondent for a paper makes far better reading and not much inferior prose. Here are a few—exceptionally characteristic—words concerning a bull-fight:

The broad avenue to the amphitheatre was continually blocked by the swarm of vehicles of every shape, size, colour, and discomfort that the nightmare of a bankrupt livery stableman could have invented. All the hospitals and prisons for decayed or condemned carriages seemed to have discharged their inmates for the day, and all found willing victims. And yet all Madrid seemed flocking toward the common magnet on foot also. I attended officially, as a matter of duty, and escaped early. It was my first bull-fight, and will be my last. To me it was a shocking and brutalising spectacle, in which all my sympathies were on the side of the bull.

(Putnam's.)

AMONG HORSES IN RUSSIA.

BY CAPTAIN HAYES.

This is less an equine book than those with which Captain Hayes made his reputation. It is gossip, reminiscence, recreation. It stands in the same relation to The Points of the Horse that an evening at the hippodrome does to a day with the Pytchley. But Captain Hayes is always entertaining, and his new volume, loosely written, slangy and happy-go-lucky as it is, will give "horsey" people a few agreeable hours. The author first went to Russia in order to gain information as to the exact kind of horses needed by the Chevaliers Gardes at St. Petersburg, the supply of which he had undertaken. While on this visit he broke in a young horse in the presence of the Grand Duke Nicholas, the Inspector-General of the Russian Cavalry, a feat which led to his employment as a horse expert in various capacities. The narrative of his experiences is full of spirit, although the gallant captain's prose model, we regret to state, is more often Mr. John Corlett than, say, Mr. Matthew Arnold. He speaks of "doing himself well" on Haut Sauterne, port and green Curaçoa, of "gees," of "fagging" at his books, and so forth. But what matter? The picture given of Russian cavalry life is the fullest that we know, and Captain Hayes's photographs are extremely interesting. Here is the account of a bad Baltic Province stable boy named Lüpke:

Acting on the advice of Sorel, who had been in the circus with Lüpke, I gave this Baltic Province boy a tenner to stimulate him in looking after the grey gelding. He admired so much the breeches I rode in that I gave him a fellow pair to them. Then he got so uneasy in his mind over a scarf-pin that I let him have it, lest he would do the gelding an injury. My only consolation now is that he got the order of the boot from the Grand Duke, and that the circus girl, whom he married, wears the metaphorical and possibly my breeches. If I could only learn that she stuck the pin into him I'd be quite happy. The way nice horses get messed about by incompetent people is sickening.

Captain Hayes is excellent company throughout. (Everett.)

SPORT IN SOMALILAND.

BY JOSEPH POTOCKI.

Few departments of literature enjoy such magnificent editions as the department of Sport. Even the poets scarcely surpass sporting writers in glory of binding and illustration. Another sumptuous volume on African sport now reaches us—the record of the big game expedition of a foreigner. Mr. Joseph Potocki is a young Pole who left England in the autumn of 1895 to go hunting in the "Horn of Africa," otherwise Somaliland, a country which was not long ago unknown and utterly inaccessible, but which is now, thanks to English and Continental sportsmen, quite a fashionable resort for those who wish for wilder shooting than the rest of the world provides. Mr. Potocki started from Berbera, and worked his way due south to Hargeisa and Farfanyer, and then, marching eastwards, struck north again by way of Hodayu to Berbera and the coast. The book, which is an excellent record of sport, is translated from the Polish by Mr. Jeremiah Curtin; and, as far as can be judged by one innocent of the Polish tongue, is smoothly and readably done. But the illustrations are the most valuable part of the book. The frontispiece is a coloured portrait of the author, and there are fifty-eight coloured illustrations, eighteen page-photogravures, seven text figures, and a map. The pictures are wonderfully good, and the studies of lions, leopards, rhinoceroses, elephants, and such like, are drawn with far more knowledge and truth than is usually the case in books on shooting. This is a volume which no one who has ever gone abroad in pursuit of big game will care to be without. (Rowland Ward.)

PICTURES OF TRAVEL, SPORT, AND ADVENTURE.

BY "THE OLD PIONEER."

Another good book on sport is this work by Mr. George Lacy, "The Old Pioneer," which deals with hunting in the Amaswazi and Gaza countries of South Africa, the Hot Lake District of New Zealand, the gold-fields of Victoria, the diamond-fields, Basutoland, the Orange Free State, the Transvaal, and Natal. Such a list of semi-savage countries should satisfy even the most exacting appetite, and "The Old Pioneer" has certainly had no lack of adventure. He calculates that he has travelled about 190,000 miles, of which five thousand were done on foot, eight thousand on horseback, and twenty thousand in cart or coach. As everyone is now trying to pronounce South African names correctly, it may be as well to record, on the authority of "The Old Pioneer," that the name De Villiers is the Smith of South Africa, and is pronounced "Filgee," for some unknown reason. Mr. Lacy traded a good deal in the Orange Free State and among the Boers, and found that a fine barrel-organ which he had bought from an eccentric Englishman helped him greatly in his trade. He and his companions used to play it after outspanning at a house. The organ was afterwards sold to Mosheh, the great Basuto chief, and it helped to solace his declining years. Mr. Lacy recounts his adventures with a good deal of freshness and spirit, and is altogether a most cheery companion. The book is well illustrated with reproductions from photographs. (Pearson Ltd.)

Fiction.

Shameless Wayne. By Halliwell Sutcliffe.
(Fisher Unwin. 6s.)

HERE, in the big way of big passions, we seem to have the genuine market-place article. The book is in the true spirit of romance: the reader is never brought quite down to life, and never taken quite away from it. The pages resound with the shock of the last feud of the houses of Wayne and Ratcliffe; and nature, in her most violent and gigantic moods, fills the background. Each family has a fair daughter: so there is fierce and lawless love. Each is barbaric, revengeful: so there is much bloodshed. In the end the home of the Ratcliffes becomes a shambles; the last fight is vividly described, and the Yorkshire moor would be the sweeter when the carcasses were underground. The tale will have an attraction for certain minds. It is diffuse, but that will be no bar to its popularity, for readers of this sort of thing like plenty of it. The work is strong, wholesome, and honest. The slaughtering has a downright manly vigour that makes one think of a thoroughly English stand-up fight; and at least one reader wanted to have a look in at that final splendid rumpus! It is capital reading; but one misses the note of awe. Killing may or may not be tragic, but death always has its own peculiar grandeur; and the act of slaying can surely have no artistic importance unless it appals. In Mr. Sutcliffe's new book men are slain right and left and there's an end of it; the wind wails over the moor, the skies are majestically terrible, but the President of the Immortals seems to be sound asleep all the while. The characters are not analysed: they are painted; and with a tragic motive—the feud begins with the dishonour of a woman and the murder of her husband—we require something more than surface anguish. Shameless Wayne, on the murder of his father, "sobbed as men sob once only in their learning of life's lesson." We are not moved: a strong man sobbing is an awful sight, but it is not enough to tell us that he sobbed. And Wayne never learned life's lesson except through the operation of his animal instincts, which scarcely make for intelligence. In short, in Shameless Wayne we have the fabric of both tragedy and romance. The romance is very good, but the tragic veil remains unlifted.

Folly Corner. By Mrs. Henry E. Dudeney.
(Heinemann. 6s.)

ONE reads this book under the insistent impression that it is the work of an extremely clever woman. As a story it is really interesting, and its interest does not depend upon the surprises of an intricate plot, but on the adequate development of a dramatic theme. The dialogue of the chapter in which the mysterious gaol-bird (a fascinating degenerate) suddenly confronts Pamela and Jethro at Folly Corner might be used almost bodily on the stage. The writing is generally vigorous and often brilliant; the comedy is first-rate. Gainah is a remarkable creation, and the dullest reader will realise Mrs. Clutton as a living being. It is, in fact, in the objective medium, a successful novel. The scene is laid in the Weald of Sussex, and the natural scenery is admirably done. Mrs. Dudeney wisely refrains from trying her hand at the Sussex dialect. The people, however, do not appear to have been so intimately studied; the present writer knows the county from end to end, and he finds it difficult to believe that during Pamela's drive with Farmer Jayne "every small girl they met bobbed her little skirts in the dust." Mrs. Dudeney is rather hard on cockneys; but this is cockneyism, stark, staring. Had the story appeared anonymously, the sex of its author could easily have been guessed. A young man is "hideous in his Sunday clothes" (he is merely driving past, and there is no reason whatever why his clothes should be mentioned), and Pamela is "one of those mercurial women who can be made happy by a bar of French chocolate, and miserable by a shabby hat." Does it need a mercurial temperament in woman to be made miserable by a shabby hat? A graver objection is that this does not at all harmonise with what we are told about Pamela. And let Mrs. Dudeney try to imagine George Eliot (say) writing about a countryman's "hideous clothes"! Which brings us to the gulf between subjective and objective art. Nor does Mrs. Dudeney's dashing fancy seem to take kindly to the simile: "Her basket was three-parts full of seed-pods—like the fingers of dainty gloves stretched over bones," is not felicitous. She nevertheless reaches at times the expression of insight, or at least of poetic observation: "The anemones were widely blown, with the quiet watchfulness which comes before death." Sometimes she comes near to spoiling her picture by an excessive use of adjectives: "They went up the path to the brooding house in its tangle of ivy and its unpruned jungle of ancient plum-trees." This house is overdressed; and what kind of a thing would a pruned jungle be? Cleverness, indeed, exceptional cleverness, is all that can be assigned to Mrs. Dudeney's new novel. It is deficient in the highest qualities of imaginative creation. Her people compel a considerable interest. But one is rarely caught up in that fervent sympathy which makes one feel that all hearts have been opened, and that there is no more to be said.

The Man's Cause. By Ella Napier Lefroy ("E. N. Leigh Fry"). (Lane.)

MRS. LEFROY'S book belongs to that almost obsolete category, the novel with a purpose—oh, but quite naked and unashamed. Need we say that the purpose, in this case, is to educate public opinion in the matter of masculine continence? A very laudable purpose; and seeing that the public at large dislikes tracts and is greedy for stories, who shall blame the vehement propagandist who selects the more appealing mean? Also from the day when a man wrote the lamentable history of Job this has been so. Besides, Mrs. Lefroy does apologise. "I know," she says in effect, in the person of Mrs. Chesney, the amiable and accomplished widow, recently set free from the "smothering horror" of an uncongenial marriage—"I know I am in the way to bore you, but what can a poor woman do who has had it laid upon her to say these things and, if possible, to make herself heard?"

So Mrs. Chesney, "a woman who knows a sight too much," is dumped down in the midst of a house-party of familiar types. The weakly animal is there, the bestial, the ecclesiastical worldly, and some tailor-made young women. There, too, is the distinguished author of "Triumph's Evidences," a collection of essays. To the essayist, as a congenial spirit—to whom, indeed, she owes it that in a fit of revulsion against the "smothering horror" she had not some years ago made away with herself—the lady explicates her views at large. Common-sense views enough, it may be confessed, if a trifle superficial: the laws of heredity, for instance, are, to the mind of this reformer, "remarkably plain and straightforward." Having frustrated, by very outspoken remonstrances, a certain number of marriages to which the tailor-made young ladies had been basely tempted, and having been proved absolutely right in those cases in which her advice was disregarded, the sprightly widow winds up the story by forgetting the stain set upon her by her previous loveless union in favour of the author of "Triumph's Evidences."

The book is pleasant to read, and in places comes near wit.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

THE HEART OF THE DANCER.

BY PERCY WHITE.

A melodrama redeemed by a light touch, and a sense of gay aloofness that does not desert the author of Mr. Bailey-Martin, even when he is describing tragedy. A dancing girl, a decadent poet, a military hero, a foreign prince, a young woman—plain, rich, good—these are the people of the book, and their love affairs are its backbone. It is all quite readable; it is not in the least memorable; and when you have finished you just want to say to the author: "Thank you for a pleasant evening." (Hutchinson. 6s.)

BY WILSON BARRETT AND ELWYN BARRON.

IN OLD NEW YORK.

A novel founded on a play by the same authors. It tells of the nobility of a young Dutchman who, after a life of self-sacrifice, is slain in a duel by the young man he has done most to befriend. There are, indeed, three duels in the book and a horse-race (in which the favourite is shot dead a few yards from the winning-post). The authors have not quite succeeded in excluding limelight from their pages. (Macqueen. 6s.)

THE CHAINS OF CIRCUMSTANCE.

BY T. W. SPEIGHT.

An ingenious melodramatic story by a skilful hand at such fabrications. The central character is our old friend the respectable merchant with a past. A figure from this past visits him in an early chapter, they scuffle, the merchant kills him with a paper-weight, and the merchant's head clerk buries him in a cellar. From that moment the merchant is in the hands of blackmailers, and remains there until it is discovered that the figure from the past was not really killed and buried at all. (Digby, Long. 6s.)

WITH SWORD AND CRUCIFIX.

BY E. S. VAN ZILE.

A florid romance of French adventurers in America in the seventeenth century. "'Beware the omnipresent ear of the Great Order, Monsieur Le Comte!" exclaimed La Salle, rising to his elbow and searching the shadows behind him with questioning eyes. . . . 'Where I go are ever savages or silence, but always in my ear echoes the stealthy footfall of the Jesuit.'" Later, Indians and Spaniards are added to the mixture. (Harper. 6s.)

UNDER THE LINDEN.

BY GILLAN VASE.

A staccato, sentimental German story. The heroines are twain, two twin sisters Otilia and Gertrud, and life goes not too happily for them until the day when, side by side, they die of their own accord by asphyxiation; but sadness is mixed with gaiety in this curious and very feminine romance. (Digby, Long. 6s.)

GRACE WARDWOOD.

BY "ATHENE."

A happy-go-lucky, genial Irish story, written sometimes in the present tense and sometimes in the past, rambling, sentimental, and always right-minded. It is dedicated to the author's mother and "to all who love a Christmas tale told in the delightful warmth and pleasant light of the crackling blaze of the Yule log, and who bring to the entertainment a pure heart, clean hands, and a clear conscience." (Dublin: Duffy.)

THOU SHALT NOT—

BY STANTON MORICH.

In the first chapter Mr. Calvert, a Clapham pietist and City speculator, turns out to be a forger and thief. He is removed to prison for fourteen years, leaving a young second wife and a daughter of about the same age. The story is concerned with the two women, life on the stage, and seamy people. The end is happy, but the way thither is rather muddy. (Pearson.)

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates for Yearly Subscriptions ..... 20s. including postage.

American Agents for the ACADEMY: Brentano's, 31, Union-square, New York.

The Book of the Winter Season.

It is red, but it is not Red Pottage. Red Pottage is bulky: the book of the winter is only four and a half inches by three and a half, and a quarter of an inch thick. It has only 138 pages, and it tells no story; has no characters save one—the author; is not written, in the literary sense, at all; and has but one picture, and that a very poor one. And yet within a week or so fifty thousand copies were sold, and it is being sold at this moment at a prodigious rate. It is called Aids to Scouting,* and the author is he whose full style is Bt.-Col. R. S. S. Baden-Powell, F.R.G.S., 5th Dragoon Guards, but who, by all who know him, and by all who admire him (and who does not?), is called simply "B.P." "B.P.," then, is not merely the invincible and resourceful commanding officer at Mafeking; he is also the most popular author of the 1899-1900 publishing season.

Why do we now pick up a modern military novel with only languid attention? Because war, so far as the outsider can judge, is no longer—if ever it was—an interesting pursuit for rank and file. The Commanding Officer, one supposes, has an absorbing enough time in preparing his plan of action; but thereafter the progress of the campaign is in the hands of men in packs. Emergencies may, of course, arise in which individual resource will be tried to the uttermost that adventurous man can want; but they are rare, and for the most part the soldier is a cog in the machinery, a thing quite apart from its motive power. That is why one has come to look to stories of modern war without any of that rapture which is excited in us by a romance of courage, cunning, and address such as The Three Musketeers. D'Artagnan, we feel, would be no better to-day, in a mêlée on Spion Kop, than the stupidest recruit from Little Pedlington. Not all his wit could save him from the true aim of a Boer sharpshooter, nor would avail aught the might of Porthos, the craft of Aramis, or the steel wrists of the Count de la Fère. It is this dread fact which has caused our makers of romance to hark back to the '45 and earlier times, or to invent German kingdoms where hand-to-hand contests and intrigue are still possible.

But the perusal of "B.P.'s" tiny red book reminds us that in excepting the Commanding Officer as the only one who finds in war full interest and full scope for his genius we have made a mistake. There is still another figure, belonging usually to the other extreme of the army—the scout. In modern warfare, it may be roughly said, the Commanding Officer and the scout divide between them almost all the opportunities for individual resource and interest; and perhaps the scout has the best of it. After all, if he fails he is only a scout, whereas the Commanding Officer. . . . Novelists who have their eyes open for the possibilities of the present conflict will do well to give the scout full attention, and by way of paving the way they should read this little book without delay, for though it will go in the waistcoat pocket, most of the romance of modern war is between its scarlet covers. Here is a passage to the point:

Use deep shadows of bushes, trees, and banks as much as possible. In danger lie close to the ground so that you can see anyone moving against the stars. Use your ears as much as your eyes.

By squatting low in the shadow of a bush, and keeping quite still, I have let an enemy's scout come and stand within three feet of me, so that when he turned his back toward me I was able to stand up where I was and fling my arms round him.

D'Artagnan, then, is not yet extinct! There is still use for the strong arms and the stealthy tread, still employment for the brain of the opportunist. Again:

Sleep whenever you can get the chance in safety, because there is no work that is more trying than the continual alertness required in scouting. But when you sleep be careful not to be caught napping. I believe it to be a matter of practice that a man can not only wake himself at any hour he may wish to, but also that he can sleep so lightly as to be awakened by the slightest sound or by the movement of anyone near him. It is a habit with me; as is also that of taking ten minutes' sleep here and there, and waking up as refreshed as if I had had a couple of hours' rest.

When sleeping be careful to have your revolver fastened to you by its langard. Many men sleep with it under their head or pillow, and as that is where a thief would naturally look for it, a better place is under or behind your knees, where it is safe and ready to your hand.

General Buller has been commenting lately in his despatches on the disregard of scouting shown by the ordinary British officer. After reading "B.P.'s" little book it seems to us a marvel that anyone enlists to be anything but a scout. The scouts have all the fun. To use "B.P.'s" phrase, they enjoy the best sport in the world.

But it is not only potential scouts and novelists who will be interested by this book. A man of peace might do much worse than permit Bt.-Col. Baden-Powell to quicken his observant faculties for him. Bloodless scouting might become a popular and serviceable pastime for pedestrians in a dull country. Measuring a river with the eye, after "B.P.'s" rules, would pass half an hour very capably. This is his plan:

Select a tree or other object on the opposite bank and one where you stand. Then move off at a right (square) angle to these and pace a distance—say, 100 yards; plant a mark (your sword will do) and go on half as much again (another 50 yards). Then turn at right angles to your original line and walk away from the river, counting your paces until you bring the sword in line with the tree on the opposite bank. The distance you have paced since turning will be one-half of the distance across the river. Thus, if you find you have paced 90 yards, the river is 180 yards wide.

(It is unfortunate that in the edition of the book which we possess there should be two serious errors on this page. They are, it is true, pointed out in an errata slip, but errata slips are often disregarded. A third error is in the diagram, the measurements of which do not tally with the results.) To measure one river is, however, to measure all rivers. More varied fun will come from the game of deduction. The author gives a specimen pacific morning's work of his own. This is Example II.:

While following the tracks of the rickshaw, I noticed fresh tracks of two horses coming towards me, followed by a big dog.

They had passed since the rickshaw (over-riding its tracks). They were cantering (two single hoof-prints, and then two near together).

A quarter of a mile further on they were walking for a quarter of a mile. (Hoof-prints in pairs a yard apart.) Here, the dog dropped behind, and had to make up lost ground by galloping up to them. (Deep impression of his claws, and dirt kicked up.)

* Aids to Scouting. By Bt.-Col. R. S. S. Baden-Powell. (Gale & Polden. 1s. net.)

They had finished the walk about a quarter of an hour before I came there: (Because the horse's droppings at this point were quite fresh; covered with flies; not dried outside by the sun.)

They had been cantering up to the point where they began the walk, but one horse had shied violently on passing the invalid in the rickshaw: (Because there was a great kick up of gravel and divergence from its track just where the rickshaw track bent into the side of the road, and afterwards over-rode the horses' tracks.)

DEDUCTION.

The tracks were those of a lady and gentleman out for a ride, followed by her dog.

Because had the horses been only out exercising with syces they would have been going at a walk in single file (or possibly at a tearing gallop).

They were therefore ridden by white people, one of whom was a lady; because, 1st, a man would not take a big, heavy dog to pound along after his horse (it had pounded along long after the horses were walking); 2nd, a man would not pull up to walk because his horse had shied at a rickshaw; but a lady might, especially if urged to do so by a man who was anxious about her safety, and that is why I put them down as a man and a lady. Had they been two ladies, the one who had been shied with would have continued to canter out of bravado. And the man probably either a very affectionate husband or no husband at all.

The Amateur Critic.

An Articulate Colony.

UNDER this heading in the ACADEMY of January 13 the reviewer quotes the following words from Mr. Reeves's book: "Of . . . poetic . . . talent . . . there is yet but little sign. In writing they (New Zealanders) show facility often, distinction never." As far as the poetry goes I humbly demur to this sweeping dictum. Chance, nearly three years ago, put into my hands a book of poems, entitled Poems by a New Zealander (Kegan Paul), and it is in this slim and green-backed little book that I find evidence of the "distinction" which has been denied to New Zealand writers of the past and present. I have no idea whether "A New Zealander" is a man or woman, but I have no hesitation in saying he (or she) is a poet, and to support my statement will quote from an "Ode to England," the England called "Home," but hitherto, "save in dreams," unvisited by the poet. The difference in the seasons is noted, but—

'Tis only that the months wear different hues,
And change for us wan violets to warm sheaves.
November here forgets her early dews,
Dun fogs and frost: she gives us lingering eves,
Incessant roses, ever lovely views
By peak and vale; is prodigal of leaves;
Busies the eager bees from morn till night;
Love fledglings, downy chickens, dragon flies,
And the bright creatures of the summer skies,
And in the first red cherries hath delight.

"Incessant roses" is summer painted in two words. I give one more quotation (from a "Song"), and hope that these two examples of how the Muse is tended in Greater Britain may send other readers to a book of verses not unworthy to stand beside those of Lindsay Gordon and A. B. Paterson on our bookshelves:

Take what thou wilt, thou canst not take away
My joy in loving thee!
Love doth not spring nor perish in a day;
And though thine cease to be,
Mine still lives on, to be its own sure stay,
Its own unasked felicity.

H. G. H.

A Man and his Work.

A NOTICEABLE feature which may be met with in almost all the obituary notices of the late Mr. R. D. Blackmore is the prediction that his fame will depend solely on Lorna Doone. The fact of this book's great popularity above his other novels is emphasised as if it was the singular fate of Mr. Blackmore to have won the approval of the public but once. Yet, if one reflects, it is by no means a rare thing for an author to be associated with one book. Others he may have produced—as did Mr. Blackmore—of even greater merit than the work which brought him his fame; but the public is obtuse in matters of taste, and often as not it refuses to divide the honours of its first choice with late comers. Take the case of Mr. Shorthouse, who continues to be described as "the author of John Inglesant," notwithstanding that there are several other brilliant works bearing his name, but, unhappily for the public, they are too little known. This attempt to summarise a man and his work in a single sentence has the disadvantage of popularising but one book, and that one not necessarily the best. Its origin is not far to seek: when a book first arrests the public attention, its author cannot be more than a mere abstraction to the general; in the second stage he gains a notoriety as its author; the third stage in the author's progress, in which his personality is regarded apart from his writings, is only reached by a favoured few. No doubt, once upon a time it was "Mr. John Milton, the author of Paradise Lost," until his work became duly focussed in the public mind, when he was "John Milton the Poet." Thackeray is still known as the author of Vanity Fair, although he wrote Esmond and The Newcomes; and Charlotte Brontë as the author of Jane Eyre, though Villette is her really great novel. But this I hope, that to future generations the name of Blackmore will bring to mind not only Lorna Doone but a dozen delightful novels.

JONATHAN DEAN.

"Peg Woffington."

A GOOD many people have doubtless been reading Charles Reade's Peg Woffington lately, incited thereto by the publication of Mr. Hugh Thomson's illustrations. I wonder whether many have noticed two rather curious inaccuracies.

In Chapter II, Cibber, speaking in the green-room of the Covent Garden Theatre, says: "When I was young two giantesses [Mrs. Bracegirdle and Mrs. Oldfield] fought for empire upon this very stage. . . . They played Roxana and Statira in the 'Rival Queens.'" Now this contest, which was immediately followed by Mrs. Bracegirdle's retirement from the stage, took place in 1707, not at the Covent Garden Theatre, which was not opened till 1733, but at the Haymarket. The rivals, too, appear to have played not Roxana and Statira together, but Mrs. Brittle, in "The Amorous Widow," on successive nights.

The other is, perhaps, a smaller matter. The date of the tale is (Chapter I.) "about the middle of last century"; and as Mrs. Bracegirdle, who was alive at the time, died in 1748, it cannot be later than that year. In Chapter VII. we find Mrs. Woffington going by coach to Hercules Buildings, Lambeth, pursued by Sir Charles Pomander and Mr. Vane. Other land journeys to and from the same place are mentioned later. But Westminster Bridge was not opened till 1750; and it is very improbable that any-one would go from Covent Garden to Lambeth by way of London Bridge, the only bridge till that at Westminster was built. Water would certainly be taken for part of the way. Of course there was the Horseferry; but it is not likely that it would be used for such journeys.

Such are the pitfalls that beset the writer of romances who brings in real persons, with their fixed and inexorable dates.

C.

Correspondence.

Ruskin on War.

SIR,—The opinion of John Ruskin upon any subject must necessarily be of great interest and importance. For the moment the question of War versus Peace is all-pervading, and, in addition to the reference to the subject which Mr. Charles Quartermain has pointed out in your last issue, in The Crown of Wild Olive, may I remind you of another in the third volume of Modern Painters? I believe it was written at the time of the Crimean War, and the sentiments expressed therein go far to prove that Ruskin's opinion on the subject was a settled one—an opinion, not a hasty thought. I venture to quote the following:

I believe war is at present productive of good more than of evil. I will not argue this hardly and coldly, as I might, by tracing in past history some of the abundant evidence that nations have always reached their highest virtue, and wrought their most accomplished works, in times of straitening and battle; as, on the other hand, no nation has ever yet enjoyed a protracted and triumphant peace without receiving in its own bosom ineradicable seeds of future decline. I will not so argue this matter; but I will appeal at once to the testimony of those whom the war has cost the dearest. I know what would be told me by those who have suffered nothing, whose domestic happiness has been unbroken, whose daily comfort undisturbed; whose experience of calamity consists, at its utmost, in the incertitude of a speculation, the dearth of a luxury; or the increase of demands upon their fortune which they could meet fourfold without inconvenience. From these, I can well believe, be they prudent economists or careless pleasure-seekers, the cry for peace will rise alike vociferously, whether in the street or senate. But I ask their witness, to whom the war has changed the aspect of the earth, and imagery of heaven, whose hopes it has cut off like a spider's web, whose treasure it has placed in a moment under the seals of clay. Those who can never more see sunrise, nor watch the climbing light gild the Eastern clouds without thinking what graves it has gilded, first, far down behind the dark earth-lines, who never more shall see the crocus bloom in spring, without thinking what dust it is that feeds the wild flowers of Balaclava. Ask their witness, and see if they will not reply that it is well with them, and with theirs; that they would have it no otherwise; would not, if they might, receive back their gift of love and life, nor take again the purple of their blood out of the cross on the breast-plate of England. Ask them: and though they should answer only with a sob, listen if it does not gather upon their lips into the sound of the old Seyton war-cry—"Set on."

—I am, &c.

GUY WILFRID HAYLER.

Capenhurst, Chester: Feb. 1, 1900.

The Decadent Cuckoo.

SIR,—Allow me, in thanking you for the excellent review of my cuckoo book, to say that the illustrations are all given in it. That which should have been placed at page 28 was, by the binder, put at an earlier page; and, in the list of illustrations, page 15 is an unfortunate misprint for 13. Your inserting this may save others who already have the volume from being puzzled, and these errors are put right in later copies. I exceedingly regret they should have occurred.—I am, &c.,

ALEXANDER H. JAPP.

National Liberal Club, Whitehall Place, S.W.

"Ariel's Press Cutting Agency."

SIR,—Your references, in the current issue of the ACADEMY, to Mr. I. Zangwill's "delicious essays in the difficult art" of parody are so extremely flattering to me, that I cannot deny myself the pleasure of writing to say that it was I, not Mr. Zangwill, who contributed to Ariel the series of "press cuttings" which you praise so highly. They have been attributed to my friend Mr. Zangwill, I know, by a variety of papers of less consequence than the ACADEMY, and I hope I may not be considered unduly vain for not allowing the statement to pass without contradiction in the magisterial columns of the ACADEMY. For I recognise that some people may not think so generously of those bagatelles as your reviewer does. I know one person who does not. Yet it is a gratification to him to know that he is not the only one by whom they are still remembered.—I am, &c., Feb. 7, 1900.

EDWARD MORTON.

Our Weekly Prize Competitions.

Result of No. 20 (New Series).

WE asked last week for mottoes for four bookcases containing respectively works of History, Poetry, Fiction, and Biography. The quotations were to be from English authors, and suitable to be really employed for the purpose named. The following series, sent by Miss Evelyn Underhill, 3, Campden Hill-place, London, W., seems to us the most suitable:

History—

History is Philosophy teaching by examples.—Bolingbroke.

Poetry—

The crown of literature is poetry.—M. Arnold.

Fiction—

An honest tale speeds best, being plainly told.

"Richard III." iv. 4.

Biography—

In books we find the dead, as it were, living.

Richard de Bury.

Replies received also from: T. C., Buxted; D. H. W., Pwllheli; R. D. B., London; E. B. V. C., London; E. C. W., Oxford; C. W., London; J. A. S. B., Edinburgh; H. A. W., Portobello; E. L. E., Rochdale; A. S. W., Westward Ho!; A. M. P., Lincoln; C. S., Brighton; G. N., Clifton; M. H. M., London; W. D. E., Wimbledon; A. T., Reigate; E. T., Manchester; Miss G., Newtown; L. C., Cambridge; F. L., Manchester; R. G. W., Kirkby-Ravensworth; F. E. W., London; L. P., Inverness; D. C. R., Birkenhead; E. E. L., Leicester; H. J., London; T. M., Rundle; E. H., Didsbury; D. S., London; Miss G., Reigate; B. G., Barnsbury; H. B., London; Mrs. W. H. P., Alton; S. C., Brighton; F. M., London; J. R., Aberdeen; G. R., Aberdeen; F. M. D., London; S. S., Cambridge; A. D. B., Liverpool; A. C., Edinburgh; D. C. R., Birkenhead; R. W. D. N., London; M. A. C., Cambridge; G. B., Liverpool; R. W. M., London; C. E., Edinburgh; L. K., Highgate; and E. F. M. C., Whitby.

Competition No. 21 (New Series).

EVERY family where writing games are popular has some game of home manufacture. We offer a prize of a guinea to the description of the best original writing game—that is to say, of the best game for an evening party in which paper, pencils, and brains are involved. The word original would not exclude a good adaptation of a well-known game, which is the form that home-made games often take.

RULES.

Answers, addressed "Literary Competition, THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Tuesday, February 13. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found in the second column of p. 132, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. We wish to impress on competitors that the task of examining replies is much facilitated when one side only of the paper is written upon. It is also important that names and addresses should always be given. We cannot consider anonymous answers.

OUR SPECIAL PRIZE COMPETITIONS.

(For particulars see inside page of cover.)

Received during the week: Isis, Grangemouth, The Outsider, Erin-go-bragh, Lancet, Unfledged, Kingston, Narcissus, Tredegar.

New Books Received.

[These notes on some of the New Books of the week are preliminary to Reviews that may follow.]

AMERICA TO-DAY.

BY WILLIAM ARCHER.

Last year Mr. William Archer braved the Atlantic to make a study of the American stage. He also accepted a commission from the Pall Mall Gazette and Magazine to jot down his impressions of America during an eight weeks' sojourn. The book before us contains those jottings or observations, together with four essays, dealing with American subjects, somewhat weightier in character, to which he has given the title of "Reflections." (Heinemann.)

LE MORTE DARTHUR.

BY SIR THOMAS MALORY.

The two new volumes of Messrs. Macmillan's "Library of English Classics." The page is ample and the type large. Mr. A. W. Pollard's bibliographical note reminds us that Caxton (whose preface is included in this edition) finished printing the first edition on the last day of July, 1485, some fifteen or sixteen years after Malory finished the book. An index has been supplied by Mr. Henry Littlehales. (Macmillan. 2 vols. 7s. net).

JOHN RUSKIN.

BY M. H. SPIELMANN.

Mr. Spielmann's monograph on Mr. Ruskin is ready betimes. Portions of it were written for the Graphic, and one chapter appeared in the Magazine of Art. All has, however, been revised. An article on "The Black Arts," which Mr. Ruskin wrote for the Magazine of Art, is reprinted here, together with some correspondence concerning the article which passed between Mr. Ruskin and the author of this book. (Cassell & Co. 5s.)

HISTORICAL TALES FROM SHAKESPEARE.

BY D. T. QUILLER COUCH.

This is the book which was first announced under the title of Q's Tales from Shakespeare. Therein Mr. Couch supplies certain of the plays omitted by Charles and Mary Lamb. His original idea, he tells us, was to follow their plan of using only Shakespearian words, but in time he gave this up and wrote in his own manner. The plays are "Coriolanus," "Julius Caesar," "King John," the two "Richards," and the three "Henrys." (Arnold. 6s.)

HOW ENGLAND SAVED EUROPE. BY W. H. FITCHETT.

The third volume of Mr. Fitchett's history of the great war. The reader now reaches the war in the Peninsula and the Duke of Wellington—a tract of time covered in Sir Herbert Maxwell's Life. The two books would make an interesting comparison. Maps of battles and portraits of soldiers illustrate the volume. (Smith, Elder & Co. 6s.)

THE ROMANTIC TRIUMPH.

BY T. S. OMOND.

The new volume in Messrs. Blackwoods' "Periods of European Literature" series. The Romantic movement had its impulse in the last century—Rousseau in France, Ossian in Great Britain, Bürger in Germany, were among the leaders. Bürger, of course, influenced Scott, for it was the ballad of "Leonore" which first turned his thoughts towards romance. The movement soon gathered strength, and Mr. Omond traces it all over Europe. (Blackwood. 5s. net.)

* * Owing to pressure upon our space further acknowledgments of New Books are held over till next week.

Special cloth cases for binding the half-yearly volume of the ACADEMY can be supplied for 1s. each. The price of the bound half-yearly volume is 8s. 9d. Communications should be addressed to the Publisher, 43, Chancery-lane.

NEW WORK

BY THE LATE

G. W. STEEVENS,

War Correspondent of the "Daily Mail."

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Messrs. WM. BLACKWOOD & SONS will publish about the end of FEBRUARY "FROM CAPETOWN to LADYSMITH: an Unfinished Record of the South African War," by G. W. STEEVENS, Author of "With Kitchener to Khartum," "In India," &c. In One Volume, crown 8vo. With Maps.

45, George Street, Edinburgh; & 37, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

THE BOOK OF THE HOUR.

THIRD EDITION.

OUR LIVING GENERALS.

By ARTHUR TEMPLE, Author of "The Making of the Empire."

Art vellum, gilt top, price 3s. 6d.

Biographical Sketches with fine Portraits of Twelve Generals, no fewer than ten of whom are now at the front.

"Pleasant and proud reading."—Saturday Review."A capital book, breezily and brightly written."—St. James's Budget.

"The list is well chosen. Men of whom the nation is justly proud."

—Naval and Military Record.

A NOTABLE BOOK OF DAILY READINGS.

Books of Bible Readings are common enough, but only once in many years does one appear which takes a distinctive place, and leaps into a large and permanent popularity. Such a book is "IN THE HOUR OF SILENCE."

IN THE HOUR OF SILENCE.

By ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M.A. Price 5s.

Author of "Torchbearers of the Faith."

"All is original and all of choicest quality.... The thought is never abstruse, but in touch with the simple realities of our spiritual life; yet it is always fresh.... We have not had a book of daily meditation so near to what it ought to be as this, though many have tried to furnish one."—Expository Times.

"There is moral vision in the book and the kind of tenderness which is only born of ripe spiritual conviction."—The Speaker.

CHILD VOICES.

By W. E. CULE. Price 3s. 6d. net.

Profusely Illustrated by Charles Robinson.

"In every way the book is a beautiful one."—Guardian.

FAIRY STORIES FROM THE LITTLE MOUNTAIN.

By JOHN FINNEMORE. Price 2s. 6d.

Charmingly Illustrated by James R. Sinclair.

"The book is a real addition to fairy literature. One of the best books of the kind the year has produced. The illustrations are excellent."—Bookman.

TORCHBEARERS OF THE FAITH.

By ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M.A. Price 3s. 6d.

Author of "In the Hour of Silence," &amp;c.

"What has especially captivated me is 'Torchbearers of the Faith,' which is one of the very best books of the kind I have ever seen.... Whenever I have turned I have been fascinated and charmed. I have already procured several copies and given them away.... I expect it to be a standard volume for this purpose for a long time to come."—The Speaker, J. M. GIBSON, D.D.

ANDREW MELROSE, 16, Pilgrim Street, London E.C.

TO INTENDING SUBSCRIBERS:—*NOTICE MUST NOW BE GIVEN

The Library of Famous Literature

Readers of the preliminary announcements which The Standard made regarding its issue of the new "Library of Famous Literature" will recall the express conditions upon which the present offer was made.

Instead of putting a very high price upon the first edition, with the intention of afterwards reducing this price from time to time, as has been the usual custom with publishers, The Standard announced that it would receive subscriptions in advance of the day of publication at the lowest price possible with the character and cost of the work. The result of this offer was an advance subscription for 3,000 sets before a single set could be delivered. Even after delivery was begun, the hindrances could hardly keep pace with the incoming subscriptions, so that now the orders for nearly 2,000 sets still remain unfilled.

So long as it was possible to make immediate delivery of the books, The Standard has kept its offer open, and under this arrangement 7,000 sets of the Library have been subscribed for up to the present time.

A large force is now at work binding up the last sets of the present edition, so that not only will all present subscribers soon be supplied, but the remaining set of the edition will also be ready for delivery at an early date. It is in view of these circumstances that The Standard now announces that its advance-of-publication offer must be withdrawn. The present arrangement, whereby it is possible to secure the Library at about half the regular price, and the complete work, the entire twenty volumes, is sent to the subscriber all at one time, can remain open but a little while longer.

MUST BE WITHDRAWN.

that "THE STANDARD'S" Remarkable Introductory offer regarding

WHAT OUR SUBSCRIBERS THINK.

Below are printed a few letters from among the hundreds which The Standard has received from early subscribers to the Library, who now have these richly-bound volumes in their homes. Intending Subscribers may read with interest, especially, the letter in small black type. The latter affirms what The Standard has said repeatedly—that it is next to impossible to give, by means of any mere printed description or specimen pages, and specimen illustrations, an adequate idea of the great work which Dr. Garnett and his associates have produced. Only an actual day-by-day use of the Library may reveal its true value, the true wealth of its contents.

"Received with Favour by my Friends."

Therapia, 61, St. Andrew's Road, Southsea.
I was more than surprised on looking through the volumes. Dr. Garnett is, indeed, to be congratulated on the compilation of a work of such exceptional magnitude, which will be indispensable, and of the greatest value to students in every branch of literature.

The beautiful coloured plates and hundreds of well-executed illustrations, the paper, type, and binding make the work most attractive. The publishers are, indeed, to be congratulated for the excellence of their share in its production.

It is a pleasure to record the favour with which this work has been received by all my friends who have had the opportunity of glancing through its pages. They were not long in determining to order copies for themselves before too late.

WILLIAM J. J. SPRY, R.N., F.R.G.S., F.R.Hist.S., &c.

"The Essays are Gems of Literature."

80, Peacock Street, Gravesend.
I waited an opportunity of glancing through the volumes so as to add to the number of expressions of appreciation and delight you already have. I have much pleasure in so doing. They enable one at short notice to find any desired passage, and I have already had occasion to refer to two Roman writers and Russian authors. The essays prefacing the volumes are in themselves gems of literature.

W. HAYDN VAUGHAN DAVIES..

"The Library is a Veritable Treasure-house of Good Things."

Moretonhampstead, Devon.
It may be of some interest to you to know that I, for one, am none the less very glad to have purchased of "The International Library of Famous Literature."

I was greatly attracted by the preliminary advertisement of the "Library," and now that the twenty volumes have reached me and I have had an opportunity of examining some of them, I must say that my expectations have been fully realised.

The "Library" is a veritable treasure-house of good things. No person who owns it need have any more dull hours. One is conscious that time spent in reading these volumes is time well spent, and that what is read is the best of good literature.

I am thoroughly content with my purchase, and look forward with much pleasure to a closer intercourse with my twenty new friends. That they will prove true friends I do not doubt.

S. H. NECK (Solicitor).

"Pleased beyond Measure."

Gayton House, Ashted, Surrey.

Dear Sirs,—Now that I have received my copies of "Famous Literature," I am beyond measure pleased with them.

It seems to me, however, that the public should by some means be better acquainted with the real nature of the publication.

I find that comparatively few people know what a beautiful work it is.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) PAYNE JENNINGS.

"The Work Meets every Reasonable Expectation."

24, Via Gregoriana, Rome, Italy.

The "International Library of Famous Literature" arrived a few days ago. It was well packed, and the books reached me without the slightest damage.

I personally have not had time to look into the volumes, but my wife and daughters are highly pleased with them, and tell me they produce an impression corresponding to that of a saloon where one catches glimpses of old friends, who revive pleasant memories, and gain impressions of some new acquaintance that determine one to seek a fuller and more intimate knowledge of them in their own homes.

The work appears to meet every reasonable expectation formed of it, and it seems to give much pleasure and instruction to everyone who dips into it.

ISAAC HENDERSON.

"A Notable Magazine of Good Things."

Leighton House, Marlow.
I am glad to be able to express my great satisfaction with the "International Library of Famous Literature." The work is, indeed, a notable one, and completely fulfils its purpose as a magazine of good things, indulgence in which cannot fail to improve the literary taste of even casual readers.

G. R. TWEEDIE.

"A Work of the Highest Value."

Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester.
I have received with much pleasure my set of volumes, and am exceedingly glad that I gave you my name as a subscriber.

Some of the lighter pieces introduced, such as "The Spider and the Fly," will no doubt provoke both criticism and admiration; but upon the whole, not to speak of the copies of rare illustrations, or of the excellent type, I regard the work as one of the highest value in bringing together such a vast array of choice pieces of the finest literature of all ages and countries, many of them not easily to be met with, so that it will be an almost indispensable supplement to every important private and public library, as well as of educational interest and value to the higher schools and colleges.

(REV.) JOHN B. MCCLELLAN, M.A.,
Principal of the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester.

"Many Years of Pleasure Perusing the Works."

1, Gresham Buildings, Bastighill St. et, London, E.C.

Although I complained at the length of time you kept me before delivering the volumes of "Famous Literature," I must confess now that I have received them they were well worth waiting for.

I have only cursorily glanced through the books, but I have seen sufficient to make me more than grateful, and I look forward to many years of pleasure in the complete perusal of the works.

EDWARD LEE.

"Cannot Fail to be of Great Value."

3, Wilford Grove, Nottingham.
I am pleased to inform you that the copy of your "International Library" which I have received gives every satisfaction.

In paper, type, binding, and general external appearance it leaves nothing to be desired. A pleasing feature is the varied character of the illustrations, forming interesting adjuncts to the text. The authorship itself is such as was to be expected from its editor, Dr. Garnett. The different periods of literary history are represented in just proportion, and a nice discrimination has been exercised in selection from eminent and representative authors. As a whole, the Library cannot fail to be of great value to those who have had little opportunity for deep or wide reading, but who wish to make an acquaintance with more than the names of the world's best writers.

CYRIL SHELBOURNE, M.A. (Lond.).

WHAT THIS GREAT WORK IS.

It is not easy to put in brief compass a description of a work that is in itself a great library.

The splendid collection which Dr. Garnett has edited has all literature in its field—all races and all times. The Library of Famous Literature presents not merely the best of all the great authors that have ever lived, but likewise a panorama of life and letters from that dim, remote past when books first began to be made, down to our own day.

Here, in succession, is "the glory that was Greece and the grandeur that was Rome." Here are the Middle Ages, lit by the flame of Dante's genius and sweetened by Chaucer's poetic gossip. Here the Renaissance sheds all its consecrating names—Shakespeare, Spenser, Jonson, Sydney, Marlowe, Bacon; while Cervantes bids chivalry adieu, and Montaigne gives laws to the modern gentleman. Here are the dandy essayists, diarists, and satirists of Queen Anne's day; here the Johnsonian thunder, and the early masters of the novel—Fielding, Smollett, Richardson, and Burney.

The nineteenth century is the most richly represented of all periods. Wordsworth's new worship of Nature, Lamb's cosy wit, Shelley's wild melodies, and Byron's "pageant of his bleeding heart" are here. Carlyle, Ruskin, Tennyson, Browning, Clough, Rossetti, Darwin, Spenser, Newman, Ibsen, Tolstoi, Turgenieff, Hugo, and hundreds of writers who have contributed to the present revival of the novel are richly represented in The Library.

Nor is mere wit despised or humour neglected. In The Library every mood finds its response; and in this vast collection the wisdom of Plato and the piety of Pascal are harmonised with the wit of Sheridan and the inn of Mark Twain.

A tasteful and convenient Bookcase will be supplied to Subscribers at a low price.

THE LIBRARY OF FAMOUS LITERATURE.

Showing the Handsome Three-quarter
Levant Morocco
Binding in the Special Bookcase.

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER.

Those who subscribe now, in advance of publication, may obtain the Complete Work, Twenty Volumes, AT A REDUCTION OF FIFTY PER CENT. from the regular price hereafter to prevail. The Library is not sold in parts or by single volumes, but only in complete sets. The entire Twenty Volumes will be sent all at one time upon a preliminary payment of but HALF-A-GUINEA; further payments, after the Twenty Volumes are in your home, to be at the rate of 9, 12, 15, or 21 shillings per month, according to the binding.

A HANDSOMELY ILLUSTRATED
100-PAGE PROSPECTUS SENT FREE UPON APPLICATION.

If you will state that you read this notice in THE ACADEMY, The Standard will send, post paid to any address, a large illustrated Prospectus of the LIBRARY OF FAMOUS LITERATURE, together with specimen pages, pages from the Index, and the like. But those who prefer to tie their subscriptions at once, and thus take advantage of the Special Prices, which are offered in advance of the day of publication, may examine the work, in the different styles of binding, at The Standard Offices, 23, St. Bride Street, near Ludgate Circus; and at the establishment of Messrs. Chapman & Co., Publishers and Manufacturers, 50, New Bond Street, where orders may be booked, both for Cash Payments and on Monthly Installments.

APPLICATION FOR PROSPECTUS.

If you do not wish to cut this slip out carefully state that you saw this notice in THE ACADEMY, otherwise the Prospectus cannot be sent.

W. M. JACKSON,
THE STANDARD,
23, St. Bride St. et,
London, E.C. .... 1900.

Having read in THE ACADEMY your offer regarding the LIBRARY OF FAMOUS LITERATURE, I request that you send me your illustrated Prospectus.

Name .....

Address .....

CURATOR, LIBRARIAN, or SECRETARY—WORK in one such office desired by FELLOW ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY, experienced in Organisation and Routine.—H. W., care of Information Office, Oxford.

WIMBLEDON HIGH SCHOOL.—Mrs. J. T. TRENCH receives GIRLS as BOARDERS at Lydenhurst, Woodside, Wimbledon. Reference permitted to Miss Hastings, Head Mistress, the Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne, Bishop and Mrs. Barry, Col and Mrs. Chenevix Trench and others.

THE PRINCESS HELENA COLLEGE, EALING, W.

Established 1820. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1888. President—H.R.H. the PRINCESS CHRISTIAN. High-class education for the DAUGHTERS of GENTLEMEN, as Resident or Day Pupils. Preparation for University and Art Examinations. Spacious grounds. Supervision in games. Training department for kindergarten students in preparation for Froebel Union Examination for Teachers. There is a Home in connection with the College for K.G. students and for a few children under ten years of age. MARGARET WILLIAMSON, Lady Principal.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, Cooper's Hill, Staines.

The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for Employment in Europe, India and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1900. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition—Twelve Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraph Department. One in the Accountants' Branch P.W.D., and One in the Traffic Department Indian State Railway.—For particulars apply to SECRETARY at College.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

DAVID NUTT,
IMPORTER OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
THEOLOGICAL, CLASSICAL, and EDUCATIONAL
BOOKSELLER and PUBLISHER,
Of 270-271, Strand, will REMOVE on the 15th inst. to
Nos. 57-59, LONG ACRE, W.C.

SOTHERAN'S PRICE CURRENT OF LITERATURE.

MONTHLY LIST OF NEWLY-PURCHASED SECOND-HAND BOOKS.
No. 504, just published for FEBRUARY, includes a special collection of works in Natural History.

Post free from
HENRY SOTHERAN & CO., Booksellers,
140, Strand, W.C.; and 37, Piccadilly, W.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick St.
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.

New fully detailed CATALOGUE sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

W. M. VOYNICH
Has OPENED an OFFICE at
1, SOHO SQUARE, W.,
Where he has on view a COLLECTION of
XV. & XVI. CENTURY BOOKS, EARLY
AMERICANA, &c.

The List of Unknown and Lost Books is in Preparation.
Office Hours, 10-1 and 2-5.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.
—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class
Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet
Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines
for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built
Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page
Journals at one operation.

Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence
New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately
done. 10d. per 1,000 words. Samples and references.
Multi-Copies.—Address, Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

AUTHORS' MS. neatly and accurately
TYPED by young Lady. Good references. 1s. per 1,000 words.—K, 45, Lyndhurst Road, Peckham.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY

(LIMITED).

ENLARGED AND CLASSIFIED CATALOGUE

(Over 600 pages, 8vo, bound in green cloth).

All the Principal Works in Circulation at
the Library

ARRANGED under SUBJECTS.

Forming a Comprehensive Guide to Notable
Publications in most Branches of Literature.

Books of Permanent Interest on POLITICAL and SOCIAL TOPICS, the ARMY, NAVY,
ARTS, SCIENCE, PHILOSOPHY, SPORT,
THEOLOGY, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, and
FICTION.

Price 1s. 6d.

Also a FOREIGN CATALOGUE, containing BOOKS in FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN,
RUSSIAN, and SPANISH.

READY JANUARY, 1900.

Price 1s. 6d.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY,

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET;
241, Brompton Road; and
48, Queen Victoria Street, London.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman,
experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by
letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 151, Strand, London, W.C.

"THE ACADEMY" LITERARY COMPETITIONS.

New Series.—No. 21.

All readers attempting this week's
Competition (described fully on page
129) must cut out this Coupon
and enclose it with their reply.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S LIST.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSTALLS

In cloth gilt, price 6s. each.

MRS. L. T. MEADE'S NEW NOVEL. THE WOOLING OF MONICA.

By the Author of "The Way of a Woman,"
"The Siren," &c., &c.

ADELINE SERGEANT'S NEW NOVEL. A RISE IN THE WORLD.

By the Author of "Blake of Oriel,"
"A Valuable Life," &c., &c.

W. CLARK RUSSELL'S NEW ROMANCE. A VOYAGE AT ANCHOR.

By the Author of "The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor,'"
&c., &c.
"This delightful story is in Mr. W. Clark Russell's happiest style."—Scotsman.
"A new idea which works out very successfully."
World.

FLORENCE WARDEN'S LATEST NOVEL. A LOWLY LOVER.

By the Author of "The House on the Marsh," &c., &c.
"Thoroughly interesting."—Black and White.

NEW NOVEL BY LUCAS CLEEVE (Mrs. Howard Kingscote). WHAT A WOMAN WILL DO.

By the Author of "Lazarus," "The Monks of the Holy Tear," &c., &c.
"Full of smart and bitter writing, readable and amusing in every page."—Academy.
"Rivets the attention, and interests the reader up to the very last page."—Punch.
"A really entertaining book."—Review of the Week.

In cloth gilt, price 3s. 6d.

NEW NOVEL BY PERRINGTON PRIMM. THE GIRL AT RIVERFIELD MANOR.

By the Author of "Belling the Cat," &c.

F. V. WHITE & CO.,
14, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on
DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums
on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S. Maps by BARTHOLOMEW.

Fcap. 8vo. ONE SHILLING EACH. Illustrated.

THE VALE OF LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J. PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING A. W. KINGLAKE, and Sir THEODORE MARTIN K.C.B.

BOURNEMOUTH and NEW FOREST.

THE NORTH WALES COAST.

BRECON and its BEACONS.

ROSS, TINTERN, and CHEPSTOW.

BRISTOL, BATH, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

BRIGHTON, EASTBOURNE, HASTINGS, and ST. LEONARDS.

LLANDUDNO, RHYL, BANGOR, BETTWSYCOED, and SNOWDON.

ABERYSTWYTH, BARMOUTH, MACHYNLLETH, and ABERDOVEY.

BARMOUTH, DOLGELLY, HARLECH, CROCIETH, and PWLLHELI.

MALVERN, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, GLOUCESTER, and CHELTENHAM.

LLANDRINDOD WELLS and the SPAS of MID-WALES.

1s.—THE HOTELS OF THE WORLD. A Handbook to the leading hotels throughout the world.

"What would not the intelligent tourist in Paris or Rome give for such a guide-book as this, which teaches so much that is outside the usual scope of such volumes!"—The Times.

"The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.

SECOND EDITION, ENLARGED, 6s.,—60 Illustrations, 24 Maps and Plans.

LONDON AND ENVIRONS

By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.

With an additional Index of 4,500 References to all Streets and Places of Interest.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & CO.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Ltd., The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers.

SOUTH AFRICA AND THE WAR.—BOOKS TO READ.

FIRST LARGE EDITION NEARLY READY.

In crown 8vo, Cover designed by J. A. SYMINGTON, price 1s.

THE BOER IN PEACE AND WAR.

By ARTHUR M. MANN,

Author of "The Truth from Johannesburg."

WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS OF TRANSVAAL SCENES AND LIFE.

NOTICE.—This book is likely to have an exceptional sale, and orders should be sent in at once as they can only be executed in the order of their receipt.

London: JOHN LONG, 6, Chandos Street, Strand.

THE STANDARD HISTORY OF SOUTH AFRICA.

GEORGE MCCALL THEAL, LL.D.

Formerly Keeper of the Archives of Cape Colony, and at present Colonial Historiographer.

THE HISTORY OF SOUTH AFRICA.

With Coloured and other Maps and Plates.

Vol. I.-II.: History of South Africa under the Dutch East
India Company: 1652-1795. 2 vols., 30s.

Vol. III.: 1795-1834. 15s.

Vol. IV.: 1834-1854. 15s.

Vol. V.: 1854-1872. The Republics and Native Territories.
15s. [Reprinting.]

SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & CO. Limited, London.

THE TRUE HISTORY OF THE WAR.—Part I.

BRING THE

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES

FROM THE

General Commanding-in-Chief

THE FORCES IN

SOUTH AFRICA.

Reprinted from "The London Gazette"

OF JANUARY 28th, 1900, in a convenient form for binding with future issues.

NOW READY.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

HARRISON & SONS, Publishers of The London Gazette,
45, St. Martin's Lane, and all Booksellers

THE PROBLEM OF SOUTH AFRICAN UNITY.

By W. BASIL WORSFOLD, Author of "The Redemption of Egypt," &c.

A lecture delivered at the Imperial Institute in December, 1899, with added notes and table of population.

Fcap. 8vo, 8d. net; cloth, 1s. net.

Review of the Week.—"Supplies all the information required for an intelligent study of the question."

BOERS AND LITTLE ENGLANDERS.

The History of the South African Conventions of 1881 and 1884.

By JOHN PROCTER, Barrister-at-Law.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

London: GEORGE ALLEN, 156, Charing Cross Road.

SECOND IMPRESSION PRINTING.

IN THE LAND OF THE BOERS.

By OLIVER OSBORNE.

Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, special Design on cover, 2s.

Daily Telegraph.—"A book with instruction and amusement in it."

Glasgow Herald.—"Seldom has an unvarnished record formed more pleasant reading than does the account of these adventures"

Western Morning News.—"This is a book of no ordinary literary merit"

R. A. EVERETT & CO., 42, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE.

SOUTH AFRICA. Further Correspondence relating to the Affairs in South Africa down to the 18th January. By post, 2s. 5½d.

SOUTH AFRICA. Correspondence relating to the Defence of Natal. By post, 4d.

LIST OF BLUE BOOKS ON SOUTH AFRICAN AFFAIRS

Dating from the Sand River Convention to the present date, affecting specially the Transvaal, sent on application.

London: East Harding Street, E.C.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

FEBRUARY, 1900.—Price 2s. 8d.—Contains.

THE MILITARY AND STRATEGICAL SITUATION:—

1. FROM A BRITISH STANDPOINT. By Lieut.-General OWEN, R.A.

2. AS SEEN THROUGH GERMAN SPECTACLES. By Capt. FRITZ

HORNIG.

3. AN AMERICAN GENERAL'S VIEW. By Major-General HOWARD.

THE RIVALRY OF RACES IN SOUTH AFRICA:—

1. A JUSTIFICATION OF ENGLAND'S COURSE. By HENRY CUST.

2. WHY THE DUTCH are in the RIGHT. By Dr. J. O. VOIGT.

3. THE BLUNDERS OF THE BRITISH. By MONTAGU WHITE.

GERMAN FEELING TOWARDS ENGLAND AND AMERICA. By Professor

THEODOR MOMMSEN.

SOME NOVELS OF 1899. By W. E. HENLEY.

And other Articles.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

BEST PRINTING ON BEST PAPER.

C.I.V. PORTRAITS

NOW APPEARING IN THE

"TRANSVAAL IN WAR AND PEACE."

EVERY THURSDAY. PRICE 6d.

London: H. VIRTUE & CO., Limited, 26, Ivy Lane.

W. GLAISHER, Discount Bookseller,
265, High Holborn, London.

SPECIAL OFFERS.

	Cash Prices.
	s. d.
Nicholson's (G.) Fifty Years in South Africa. Plates.	1 8
200 pp. Crown 8vo, cloth. (Pub. 64.)
Sir Richard F. Burton's Wanderings in West Africa.	4 6
2 vols. (Pub. 21s.)
Dr. Carl Peters's New Light on Dark Africa. Fully illus-	5 0
trated. Imp. 8vo. (Pub. 16s.)
Stanley's In Darkest Africa. Best Edition. 2 vols. (Pub. 42s.)	12 6
Stanley's The Congo and the Founding of Its Free
State. 2 vols. (Pub. 42s.)	10 0
&c. &c.

Apply for GLAISHER'S Extensive CATALOGUE of Publishers'
Remainders at Reduced Prices.

Third Edition, with a new Prefatory Chapter dealing with the events which have induced the present crisis.

IMPRESSIONS OF SOUTH AFRICA.

By the Right Hon. JAMES BRYCE, M.P.

With 3 Maps, and with the Text of the Transvaal Conventions of 1881 and 1884.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION NOW READY.

SOUTH AFRICA OF TO-DAY.

By Captain FRANCIS YOUNGHUSBAND, C.I.E.,

Indian Staff Corps. Late Special Correspondent of the Times in South Africa.
With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD, London

ALL INTERESTED IN SOUTH AFRICA

SHOULD READ

RHODESIA AND ITS GOVERNMENT.

By H. C. THOMSON,

Author of "The Chitral Campaign" and of "The Outgoing Turk."

With 8 Illustrations and a Map. Large crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

SPECTATOR.—"We do not hesitate to say that, however fully a man may think himself informed on South African affairs, he will do well to study Mr. Thomson's book. Its width of view, its reasonableness, its moderation, and its common-sense give a high claim upon the attention of all those who have to deal with the South African problem."

INVESTORS' REVIEW.—"A work that ought to be read by every intelligent politician in the three Kingdoms who wishes to understand the South African problem in its various, changeless, yet ever-changing phases."

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterlön Place, S.W.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

SOUTH AFRICA. By GEO. MCCALL THEAL, LL.D. 5s.

HOW TO READ WAR NEWS. Hints to Readers of Despatches, &c. 1s.

THE LIVES OF ROBERT AND MARY MOFFAT. By their Son. 6s.

PAUL KRUGER AND HIS TIMES. By F. R. STATHAM. 7s. 6d.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION. By OLIVE SCHREINER. 1s. 6d.

A PRIMER OF SOUTH AFRICAN HISTORY. By GEORGE MCCALL

THEAL, LL.D. 1s. 6d.

MR. MAGNUS: A South African Novel. By F. R. STATHAM. 8s.

TROOPER PETER HALKET OF MASHONALAND. By OLIVE

SCHREINER. 2s. 6d.

THE CAPTAIN OF THE LOCUSTS. By A. WRANKE. 2s.

KAFFIR STORIES. By W. O. SCULLY. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

MR. THOMAS ATKINS. By the Author of "How to be Happy Though Married." 6s.

FIFTY YEARS OF THE HISTORY OF THE REPUBLIC IN

SOUTH AFRICA. By J. C. VOIGT, M.D. 2 vols. 25s. net the set.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

CHATTO &amp; WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS

WALFORD'S COUNTY FAMILIES of the UNITED KINGDOM (1900).

Containing the Descent, Birth, Marriage, Education, &c., of 12,000 Heads of Families, their Heirs, Offices, Addresses, Clubs, &c. Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, 50s.

ROBERT BUCHANAN'S New Novel, ANDROMEDA: an Idyll of the Great River, will be ready on March 1. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

DORA MYRL, the LADY DETECTIVE, by M. McD. BODKIN, Q.C., Author of "Paul Beck," is Now Ready. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

OUR GREATEST LIVING SOLDIERS. By CHARLES LOWE, M.A. With 8 Portraits. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"Lord Wolsey comes first of the eight generals whose biographies are here given. Of the seven that follow, five are in Africa (Sir Redvers Buller, Lord Roberts, Sir G. White, Lord Kitchener, and Sir Hector Macdonald). Then comes an account of 'Two Royal Dukes,' and finally a group of generals, of whom Sir William Butler is the last."—Spectator.

A SECRET of the NORTH SEA. By ALGERNON GISSING. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"A story marked by a strong individuality of style, tone, and treatment... a novel of mark as a study of character and passion."—Scotsman.
"There is pleasure in reading the volume, for its technical composition throughout is excellent, the descriptive passages are at times brilliant, and the dialogue is never wearisome."—Athenaeum.

SOUR GRAPES. By J. F. Cornish. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"Susceptible male readers will have difficulty in deciding whether kiltish Ruby Braboke or true-hearted Barbara Ashleigh is the more winsome."—Scotsman.

IN LONDON'S HEART. By GEORGE R. SIMS, Author of "Rogues and Vagabonds," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"It would be unfair not to notice the real fecundity of the plot... or the evidences of a curious knowledge of London life. ... For ourselves, we confess to having read the book right through, and most of those who take it up will do the same."—Spectator.
"We must admit having found 'In London's Heart' one of the most exciting sensational works we have read since 'The Mystery of a Hansom Cab.'"—Speaker.

A COURT TRAGEDY. By Albert D. VANDAM, Author of "An Englishman in Paris." With 6 Illustrations by J. BARNARD DAVIS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"An interesting, pleasant story."—Weekly Sun.
"The writer has the true dramatic instinct, and a proper appreciation of the elements which go to make a moving tale."—Scotsman.

BRET HARTE'S COLLECTED WORKS.—Vol. X. TALES of TRAIL and TOWN, &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

ABBÉ MOURET'S TRANSGRESSION. By EMILE ZOLA. Edited by ERNEST A. VIZETELLY. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"M. Zola's 'La Faute de l'abbé Mouret,' which Mr. Vizetelly has adequately and discreetly translated, recalls Dore's only great picture, 'The Neophyte'... It is an exquisite idyll... It is difficult to say or to see how the story could be made more pathetic or even more powerful than it is."—Truth.

NEW EDITIONS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

A PROCTOR'S WOOLING. By Alan ST. AUBYN.

THE COST of her PRIDE. By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

THE LADY from NOWHERE. By FERGUS HUME. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"The story is a good example of its kind, and even the most expert reader of such stories will have considerable difficulty in fixing the responsibility for the murder on the right shoulders until the author chooses to reveal it."—Scotsman.

BRAND'S OBSERVATIONS on POPULAR ANTIQUITIES. the Additions of Sir HENRY ELLIS. A NEW EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

AN ENGLISHMAN in PARIS. Notes and Recollections during the Reign of Louis Philippe and the Empire. A NEW EDITION. Crown 8vo, buckram, 3s. 6d.
"Contains perhaps the most valuable and striking collection of genuine revelations yet given us as to the very inmost coteries of French life from the thirties to the eighties—whether political, artistic, royal, literary, imperial, military, musical, or popular. The book palpitates with actuality from beginning to end."—Speaker.

A KIPLING PRIMER. By F. Lawrence KNOWLES. With 2 Portraits. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"A Kipling Primer" includes biographical and critical chapters, an index to Mr. Kipling's principal writings, and bibliographies. Every point in the subject's varied career is touched upon, and as a summary of contemporary opinion on a great writer the book has a value of its own."—Outlook.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

JARROLD &amp; SONS' NEW LIST.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "QUO VADIS." FIRST EDITION OVER SUBSCRIBED, SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

IN THE NEW PROMISED LAND.

By HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ, Author of "Quo Vadis." Translated from the original Polish by Count de SOISSONS. With a new Photogravure Portrait of Henryk Sienkiewicz. 2s. 6d. [Second Edition now ready.]

A vivid example of Henryk Sienkiewicz's talent. The simple history of two Polish peasants is told with keen force and skill, so that their figures are very real, and their patient suffering instinct with pathos and eloquent in the extreme. A powerful narrative."—Daily Telegraph.

MAURUS JÓKAI'S FAMOUS NEW NOVEL.

FOURTH EDITION.

THE POOR PLUTOCRATS.

By MAURUS JÓKAI, Author of "The Green Book," "Black Diamonds," &c. 6s.

"For sheer vigour of dramatised incident and vivid excitement there is not one of Jókai's tales that can beat this. In all the qualities which make Jókai's wild Hungarian genius unique, this weird and lurid story is supreme."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE LIFE-STORY of MOZART.

A SOUL-STIRRING MUSICAL ROMANCE.

THE TONE KING. By Heribert

RAU. Translated by JULIA E. S. RAE. With fine Photogravure after Jager's Portrait of Mozart. 6s.

"He was the wonder of the world, and the narrative of his achievements, deftly built up to completeness by Mr. Rau, is delightful reading throughout."—Daily Telegraph.

CURTIS YORKE'S LATEST POPULAR NOVEL

THIRD EDITION.

JOCELYN ERROLL By Curtis

YORKE. With fine Photogravure of the Author. Author of "That Little Girl," "Once," "Romance of Modern London," &c. 6s.

"Curtis Yorke is an experienced and skilful writer; her stories are well constructed and cleverly developed. Her characters are consistent and real. The story is well told and the interest is well sustained throughout."—Hirmingham Gazette.

MISS E. BOYD BAYLY'S NEW MEMOIR OF

IDA MELLINGER, the Armenian

Missionary. By ELIZABETH BOYD BAYLY, Author of "Jonathan Merle," "Alfreda Holme," &c. Cloth, 2s. 6d.; paper cover, 1s. 6d.

"The record of a singularly attractive and self-sacrificing life very sympathetically written with these vivid and picturesque touches which characterise all Miss Bayly's work."—Dundee Advertiser.

BY THE HON. M. CORDELIA LEIGH.

THE WITNESS of CREATION;

or, Nature Studies from the Book of Job. By the Hon. M. CORDELIA LEIGH, Author of "Simple Lessons from Nature," &c. 2s. 6d.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 & 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.

ELLIOT STOCK'S

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Bound in coarse leather, rough edges, price 5s. net.

CROMWELL'S SOULDIER'S

CATECHISM, COMPOSED for the PARLIAMENTARY ARMY. Being the Companion Volume to the famous "Cromwell's Soldier's Pocket Bible." Hitherto unnoticed by Bibliographers, and now reproduced in facsimile from one of the only two copies at present known to exist. With a short Preface by Rev. WALTER BEGLEY.

NEW NOVELS.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

FATHER FOX: a Story of the Present Day. By DOROTHY MARTIN.

"A well-written volume, which should find favour with Evangelical Protestant readers."—Hampstead Express.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

NARCISSUS; or, an Anglican

Altar Sacrifice. A Novel. By JOHN BEDE.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

THE LADY ISABEL: a Tale of Social Life in the Olden Time. By A. HAMMOND.

"The tale is well constructed and well told, and its pictures of life in feudal times are vivid and realistic."—Scotsman.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

LOAVES and FISHES. By

BESSIE REYNOLDS.

"The story is exceedingly attractive, not only on account of its literary worth and interest, but because of the high-toned Christian atmosphere which pervades the book."—Dundee Advertiser.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row,

London, E.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE

UNIFORM EDITION OF

RUDYARD KIPLING'S
PROSE WORKS.FROM SEA TO SEA,
AND OTHER SKETCHES.

Letters of Travel.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

2 vols., extra crown 8vo, red cloth, gilt tops, 12s. [Ready on Tuesday.]

TENNYSON, RUSKIN, MILL, and other Literary Estimates. By FREDERIC HARRISON. Extra crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

ATHENEUM.—"He has the supreme merit of being interesting. His judgments may, and do, provoke discussion; but they cannot go disregarded.... The width and range of Mr. Harrison's thought and knowledge, the intellectual strength which underlies his work, give his critical deliverances a weight and authority which are none too common among the pundits of modern letters."

NEW AND NOTABLE NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, gilt tops, 6s. each.

62,000 Copies have been sold in England and America.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD.

VIA CRUCIS.

By ROLF BOLDREWOOD.

THE BABES in the BUSH.

[Ready on Tuesday.]

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS.

THE CAMBRIC MASK.

By EGERTON CASTLE.

"YOUNG APRIL."

By F. M. PEARD.

DONNA TERESA.

By FLORENCE MONTGOMERY.

TRANSFORMED; or, Three Weeks

in a Lifetime. Second Edition.

By WINSTON CHURCHILL.

RICHARD CARVEL.

330,000 Copies have been sold in England and America.

Macmillan's Three and Sixpenny Series.

NEW VOLUMES.

LITTLE DORRIT. By Charles

DICKENS. With 40 Illustrations by PHIZ. A Reprint of the First Edition. With an Introduction, Biographical and Bibliographical, by CHARLES DICKENS the younger. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

By EGERTON CASTLE.

CONSEQUENCES: a Novel. By

EGERTON CASTLE, Author of "Pride of Jennico." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

By ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

THE THREE CLERKS: a Novel.

By ANTHONY TROLLOPE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

By W. E. NORRIS.

THIRLBY HALL: a Novel. By

W. E. NORRIS. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

WAGERS of BATTLE, 1854-1899.

Verses by FRANKLIN LUSHINGTON and HENRY LUSHINGTON. Crown 8vo, sewed, 1s. net.

OLD FRIENDS at CAMBRIDGE and

ELSEWHERE. By J. WILLIS CLARK, M.A., Registrar of the University of Cambridge, formerly Fellow of Trinity College. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE PRINCE: a Play. By

ADOLPHUS ALFRED JACK. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1450. Established 1869.

17 February, 1900.

Price Threepence.

[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER will complete his eightieth year in April. A birthday address is being prepared in Australia, which will be signed alike by those who accept Mr. Spencer's philosophy and by those whom it has merely stimulated to opposition.

ON Sunday, February 25, the Stage Society will give a performance of Ibsen's "The League of Youth." There is a play, now in MS., which is well within the Society's scheme—indeed, an ideal candidate for their consideration. We refer to "The Egoist." Adapted and arranged by Mr. Alfred Sutro, it is an open secret that the dialogue, which Mr. Sutro has drawn from the book, has been revised, and sometimes rewritten, by Mr. Meredith. The play is in five acts, and those who were present at a private reading last Monday speak enthusiastically of its dramatic interest and force.

THE death mask of a girl, supposed to have been found drowned in the Seine, which gave Mr. Le Gallienne the idea for The Worshipper of the Image, is a reality. Discovered by a prowler after curiosities some time ago in a shop near Covent Garden, purchased by him, and hung in his rooms, the beauty of the cast sent many to the shop. Verses were written to this pretty, pathetic Unknown; she suggested a subject for one of our "Things Seen"; and now a book has been composed around her.

As our advertisement columns show, the books about South Africa and the War are many and various, including one by Mr. Frank Harris, wherein the late editor of the Saturday Review entangles Dr. Johnson, Carlyle, George Washington, and Lord Randolph Churchill in the discussion. In a few days books descriptive of the actual fighting will be ready. That by Mr. Steevens may well claim to be the most important. Called From Cape Town to Ladysmith: an Unfinished Record of the South African War, it will contain a long, final chapter by Mr. Vernon Blackburn, which will take the form of a record of the public interest and sympathy that Mr. Steevens's untimely death evoked.

MR. BENNETT BURLEIGH, we hear, has also a book nearly finished, and then there is Mr. Winston Spencer Churchill's narrative of his capture and escape from Pretoria. Mr. Alfred Kinnear also announces a volume, which will be called To Modder River with Methuen.

THE war has disturbed ordinary publishing, but Messrs. Methuen have evolved a method of making it help the sale of novels. In the new sixpenny story of their "Novelist" Library, Prisoners of War, by Mr. A. Boyson Weekes, will be found the offer of a prize of £100 to the reader who names the day and the month on which the Peace will be signed. There is the usual Coupon arrangement, and the result will be published in a future volume of the "Novelist" Library.

WHAT with his history of the reconquest of the Soudan, his brilliant work as war correspondent of the Morning Post, his forthcoming War book, and his novel, Savrola, the son of Lord Randolph Churchill is in no danger of being overlooked. The hero of Savrola is a young democrat, popular idol, orator, statesman, and fighter. This is Mr. Churchill's description of Savrola's library:

It was a various library: the philosophy of Schopenhauer divided Kant from Hegel, who jostled the Memoirs of St. Simon and the latest French novel; RASSELAS and LA CURÉE lay side by side; eight substantial volumes of Gibbon's famous History were not perhaps inappropriately prolonged by a fine edition of the DECAMERON; the ORIGIN OF SPECIES rested by the side of a black-letter Bible; THE REPUBLIC maintained an equilibrium with VANITY FAIR and the HISTORY OF EUROPEAN MORALS. A volume of Macaulay's Essays lay on the writing-table itself; it was open, and that sublime passage whereby the genius of one man has immortalised the genius of another was marked in pencil. And history, while for the warning of vehement, high, and daring natures, she notes his many errors, will yet deliberately pronounce that among the eminent men whose bones lie near his, scarcely one has left a more stainless, and none a more splendid name.

A LITERARY curiosity will be found in the Strand Magazine for February. The last of the late Mr. Grant Allen's Hilda Wade episodes was not finished at his death. Dr. Conan Doyle has completed the story upon lines which were laid down by Mr. Grant Allen himself in conversation. The arrangement recalls Mr. Quiller-Couch's more arduous completion of St. Ives.

BETWEEN his sonnet sequence, The Silence of Love (published last year), and his new volume of poems Without and Within (now in the press), Mr. Edmond Holmes has issued an essay of a hundred pages on the question What is Poetry? It is refreshing to find a poet of to-day asking, and trying to answer, a question of such antiquity and breadth. We shall return to Mr. Holmes's little book. Meanwhile, dipping into it, we are glad to find him protesting against a notion which is now common that the diction of poetry requires constant renewal; that golden, for instance, the only English word which really describes sunlight, is worn out and must be replaced by amber, saffron, or yellow—words which convey less and, under a replacement theory, must themselves decay and be ousted. Mr. Holmes also holds that the effort to introduce exact, as distinct from vague, words into poetry is doomed to failure. "Vague words stir emotion; exact terms repress it. . . ."

MR. PUNCH this week makes a moving appeal on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children in Great Ormond-street. This is the oldest and largest children's hospital in London, yet its funds are now so low that unless money is quickly raised its doors will have to be closed. Mr. Punch says he does not quote "Pay, pay, pay," but urges everybody, everywhere, to "Give, give, give." Donations should be sent to Messrs. Bradbury, Agnew & Co., Bouverie-street.

THE war is producing reprints as well as new books. Among the former is a facsimile reproduction of a very curious old pamphlet called The Souldiers Catechisme, printed in 1641. Only two copies of this Catechism are known to exist. The Rev. Walter Begley is the possessor of one, and he is the editor of the reprint now put forth by Mr. Elliot Stock. The author of this curious work is unknown, but his aim is sufficiently clear. The Puritan soldiers of Cromwell were peace-loving men, with a natural and acquired abhorrence of war. These men had to be convinced that it was right for them to fight, and that the sword they were asked to draw was really the sword of the Lord and of Gideon. Mr. Begley thinks that the Catechism was "probably written to order at the suggestion of the chiefs of the Puritan Party. . . . It was evidently meant to be a companion to what is known as Cromwell's Pocket Bible of the year before (1643)."

PRACTICALLY The Souldiers Catechisme has been unknown and unquoted for three hundred years. Its character and aims may be judged by the following questions and answers:

Q. What are the principall things required in a Souldier?

1. That hee bee religious and godly.
2. That he be couragious and valiant.
3. That he be skilfull in the Militarie Profession.

Q. How do you prove that our souldiers should be religious?

- A. 1. By Scripture: Deut. 23.9. Luk. 3.14.
2. Besides, there be many Reasons to confirme it.
1. Because they lie to open to death.
2. They stand in continuall need of Gods affittance.
3. They fight for Religion and Reformation.
4. God hath rais'd them up to execute justice.
5. Men may be as religious in this Profession as in any other.
6. We read of brave souldiers that have been very religious.
7. A well ordered Camp is a Schoole of Vertue, wherein is taught, 1. Preparation to death, 2. Continencie, 3. Vigilancie,
4. Obedience, 5. Hardnesse, 6. Temperance, 7. Humilitie,
8. Devotion, &c.

LAST week we referred to Dr. Furnivall's recently expressed opinion (which has, of course, been shared and uttered by many) that the English language is destined to over-run the civilised world, gradually ousting all others. An unconscious tribute to the reasonableness of this prediction is furnished by an extraordinary scheme, recently put forth by a writer in the Revue des Revues, for vitalising and preserving the French language. This writer (M. Jean Finot) thinks that the only way by which to restore the ascendancy of his native tongue is to make it more than ever the language of literature. In short, he would make the French language a kind of literary asylum or receiving-house to which writers of all nations might commit their thoughts. Recognising that in all countries there are many gifted men who cannot hope to become "articulate," and that there are countries like Russia and Italy where even the greatest writers can command only small notice in their native tongue, M. Finot goes on to ask:

Does not this condition present a grand opportunity to France? Let her accept the noble and generous rôle of introducer of all the talents which are being stifled in the narrow atmosphere of their own country. Let our literature, besides her own virtues and beauties, become the godmother of the literatures and authors of the "Great Unknown," and she will thereby attach to herself and to her own destiny numbers of other tongues and cultivators of letters.

In a word, we dream of making France once more the great reservoir of intellectual humanity, where every production or idea of value, elevation, or originality shall find a country of adoption. In this way Russians, Italians, Poles, Swedes, Danes, Greeks, Finlanders, Roumanians, Servians, Bulgarians, and many other peoples, would, alike from necessity and gratitude, be induced to study French and its literature.

The idea is rather fine, and of late years it has even been, to a small and natural extent, in process of realisation. Yet surely, at bottom, it begs the question. For if the unwritten thoughts of Poles, Roumanians, and the rest, clamour to be read, surely they will flow, of their own volition, into the soundest and most capacious vessel—that is to say, into English.

PARENTS and schoolmasters who are in search of a good selection of poetry for children of, say, thirteen years and upwards will do well to look at The New English Poetry Book (Horace Marshall & Son), which has just been compiled by Mr. E. G. Speight. The pieces chosen are at once satisfying and germinal, and we are glad to see that Mr. Speight considers his work done when he has made the selection. There are no notes, only a short glossary, and we heartily echo Mr. Speight's wish that "the children be allowed to read without fear of the ordeal of examination, that their likes and dislikes be respected, and that ample trust be reposed in their power of assimilation." The book opens with some lyrics of Shakespeare, Herrick, Beaumont and Fletcher, and other Elizabethans. There is a sprinkling of old ballads. What could be better than the ballad of Sir Patrick Spens?

"I saw the new moon, late yestreen,
With the auld moon in her arm;
And if ye gang to sea, master,
I fear we'll come to harm."

Sir Patrick and his merry men all
Were ance mair on the faem;
With five-and-fifty Scots lords' sons
That langed to be at hame.

But they hadna sailed upon the sea
A day but barely three,
When the life grew dark, and the wind blew loud,
And gurly grew the sea.

The poetry of to-day is represented in selections from Mr. Swinburne, Mr. Henley, Mr. Bridges, William Morris, and T. E. Brown. Mr. Henley is presented as a poet of the sea to young Britons:

The full sea rolls and thunders
In glory and in glee;
Oh, bury me not in the senseless earth,
But in the living sea!

Ay, bury me where it surges
A thousand miles from shore,
And in its brotherly unrest
I'll range for evermore.

THE birth-rate of new papers is abnormally high; even doctors are contributing to it. The Physician and Surgeon is a new high-class medical weekly review. Its aim is to treat of all medical events and subjects in a style somewhat more broad and modern than that which is found in medical papers established many years ago. This aim is intelligible, it also spells difficulty; but the first number of the Physician and Surgeon inspires confidence in the methods and ability of its promoters.

AMONG magazines which enjoy less fame than they deserve is the Friends' Quarterly Examiner (West, Newman & Co.), which has just begun its thirty-third year of issue, in a new cover and under new editorship. In the Examiner will be found from time to time articles of real weight and charm, by such writers as Dr. Thomas Hodgkin, Prof. Rendel Harris, Dr. Robert Spence Watson, Mr. Jonathan Hutchinson, and other well-known writers whose connexion with the Society of Friends is perhaps not generally known. The magazine represents all the widened ideals and sympathies of Quakerism; thus, a paper on the "Cultivation of Artistic Taste," which might have astonished the readers of twenty years ago, is now a typical contribution.

We are always ready to find wit in a new undergraduate magazine. But in the Alma Mater, a new Cambridge production, this quality is lacking, and is replaced by no other. Indeed, Alma Mater seems born of the mere itch to write, or, shall we say, the itch to edit. Essays on "The Tyranny of Tipping," "The Delights of Dancing," "Drones," &c., are the fare provided, and they are written in the old, old amateur style, flicked with phrases of the hour. We really wonder how anyone can care to print such remarks as the following:

The contempt of an Autocrat for a humble slave is far surpassed by that pompous air of magnificent disdain shown by a waiter who has been paid sixpence for a sixpenny drink.

Does the last-mentioned individual imagine that some consolation of a pecuniary nature is due to him, owing to his sublime condescension in humbling himself by bringing to us so plebeian a combination as a Scotch-and-Soda?

Woe betide the man who does not tip; he will be lucky if he gets his luncheon lukewarm, or his drink in half-an-hour. The writer was once in a London restaurant, and by some mischance forgot to make the accustomed offering, and he has not yet forgotten the looks of scorn cast at him by the assembled minions.

MESSRS. METHUEN will publish, in a few days, a new edition of A Book of Irish Verse, an anthology of Irish poetry collected by Mr. W. B. Yeats. Mr. Yeats has revised and partly rewritten the introductory account of the Irish poets, and added a preface dealing with the literary movement in Ireland, and with the movement for the preservation of the Irish language. The book also contains some new poems which have appeared since the first edition was issued.

"THE Decorative Art of Sir Edward Burne-Jones, Bart.," will be the subject of this year's Easter Art Annual (the Easter number of the Art Journal). The letterpress will be written by Mr. Aymer Vallance.

A WRITER in the New York Nation explores the field of Hindu proverbial philosophy with interesting results. The similarity of thought between the proverbs of ancient India and those now in use in modern Europe is curious. Thus, no one will need to be reminded of the English counter-parts of the following proverbs, taken from a recent collection of Marathi popular sayings:

If you kill, kill an elephant; if you rob, rob the treasury.

Wake not the sleeping tiger.

Excavate a mountain, and take out a rat.

A gift cow: why has it no teeth?

As the watercourse goes, so the water will run.

A lame cow is prime minister among blind cows.

When among other people, do like them.

Rochefoucauld's bitter saying, that there is something in the misfortunes of our nearest friends not wholly displeasing to us, is bluntly anticipated in the Marathi proverb: "Our goods are destroyed, our friends laugh." The untrustworthiness of averages is embalmed in a saying which has its origin in an old story. A traveller asked a wise man how deep was the river he had to cross. The scholar answered correctly, "The average depth is up to the knee." The traveller began to ford the stream and in its deep middle was drowned, the sage's answer remaining as a proverb on the misleading nature of averages.

MR. FRANCIS EDWARDS, of High-street, Marylebone, has shown enterprise in issuing a special and lengthy catalogue of military books which his shelves contain. Most of the books offered related to the wars of the nineteenth century, and in all about a thousand works are catalogued.

ONE might sit upon the ground and tell sad stories of the deaths of "series"—how some have . . . and some . . . and some . . . But there are series which really go on, and have unity and purpose. Such a one is Messrs. Newnes's "Library of Useful Stories." The number of volumes it contains is approaching thirty, and—let those mock at useful information who will—the set forms a little library of sound and simple knowledge. "The Story of the Stars," "The Story of the Weather," "The Story of British Coinage," "The Story of Ice"—how many are familiar with these stories? We are now offered "The Story of Life's Mechanism," a biological primer embodying and simplifying, within its limits, the latest conclusions of scientists—a most useful addition to a well-conceived series.

MR. R. D. BLACKMORE left instructions in his Will that no biography or memoir of him was to be published.

It is announced that Prof. Knapp's forthcoming edition of George Borrow's Lavengro, to be published by Mr. Murray, will contain passages of the story which Borrow suppressed. These, we understand, will be placed in their proper positions in the text.

THE accidents of the composing-room have produced some strange results ere now; none stranger than the following paragraph in the St. James's Gazette of last Monday:

At about midnight on Thursday the alarm was given at the Boer headquarters that the Ladysmith garrison were trying to force a passage in the Pavia, with drafts; the Malta, with Militia and drafts; the Norseman, with Cavalry; and the Afric, with Imperial Yeomanry.

BRET HARTE's complete works in ten volumes are now issued by Messrs. Chatto & Windus. The last volume is entitled Tales of Trail and Town, and contains sixteen short stories. The set of volumes forms a worthy collection and monument of Bret Harte's writings.

THE following entries appear in the catalogue of a book sale which Messrs. Sotheby will hold at their rooms during five days, beginning on the 26th:

The Property of Mrs. Alice Kipling.

- 1043 KIPLING (RUDYARD) SCHOOLBOY LYRICS, in the original wrapper, which is decorated with two pen and ink drawings of flowers, &c. (printed for private circulation only).

Lahore, printed at the "Civil and Military Gazette" Press, 1881.

* * EXCESSIVELY RARE. Printed when the author was only 16 years of age.

- 1044 KIPLING (RUDYARD) ECHOES, BY TWO WRITERS, in the original wrapper, with the autograph of Alice Kipling (R. Kipling's Mother) ib. (1884)

* * One of the scarcest of Kipling's writings privately printed while he was a young man on the staff of the "Civil and Military Gazette." There are the following inscriptions in pencil at the beginning and end of some of the poems: "J. L. K." "Swinburne, R. K." "Amorphous Modern Poetaster, R. K." "Joaquin Miller's Arizonian, R. K." and "Written at School, R. K."

- 1045 KIPLING (RUDYARD) DEPARTMENTAL DITTIES, and other Verses, the extremely rare FIRST EDITION, printed at the "Civil and Military Gazette" Press, Lahore, fine copy in the original wrapper, with the front flap; on the front of cover is the inscription "Mrs. Kipling." (no. 1 of 1886)

AMONG recent parodies we have enjoyed an imitation of Mr. Kipling by the "Arbiter"—a creation of the fertile H. B. The "Arbiter" is giving his views from week to week in the Speaker.

It is my custom when I deal with the Arbiter to ask set questions as though he were a book and I were a prig. It goes against the grain, but I notice that all the Arbiter's circle do it, especially John Doughty, the man with the wooden head. So I asked the Arbiter very solemnly: "What do you think was the chief mark of the nineteenth century; now past?"

A good thick question in the middle-class manner has the same effect on the Arbiter that a glass of cold water has on a sleeping man. He seemed to change his whole being, and replied in a very constrained fashion, "I should say it was sham. The attempt to seem more learned than you are especially, and hence the allusive style. . . ."

"What's the allusive style?" I asked.

The Arbiter, with the gesture of an overfed lion aroused from deep slumber, uncoiled from his easy chair, and fetched down one of the prose works of the Bard of Empire (if, indeed, such a poet can be said to write prose at all).

"Listen to this," he said.

"The king-bolt flew through the massy grease-choke till the pivot caught the eccentric just under the pin-wheel. McArthur watched with his eyes trundling from his head like Dagawharri berries. "My——" he screamed, "—— . . . . . ? ? ? My —— in —— . It can't hold!" Then the sob of a young teething child escaped him, and I saw the thyroid process coupling on the ganglion in his great throat, and he sobbed gingerly as the Gentle Sarah took it over on the port, and settled to the swing of the water!' That's the allusive style," he said simply.

"Well, I call it very fine," said I. "I'm told that was read to an optician and an analyst, and they both cried, it was so accurate."

"Don't you worry," said the Arbiter, "He got it all out of the Technical Dictionary. Do you suppose he'd know the meaning of any of those words if you woke him up in the middle of the night and taxed him with it? Why he'd cry for mercy!"

Bibliographical.

DR. A. H. JAPP reveals, by advertisement, the fact, that of four books lately published by him three bore on their title-pages a pseudonym—that of "A. N. Mount Rose," or that of "A. F. Scot." It is a little surprising that pseudonyms are not more largely in use, in literary circles, than they are. The working man of letters, to gain a living by book-production, must publish frequently; and if he always puts his name to his publications that name stands a very good chance of becoming, in time, obnoxious both to readers and to reviewers, who are apt to be bored by repetition. The late W. B. Rands had no fewer than three noms-de-guerre—"Matthew Browne," "Henry Holbeach," and "Timon Fieldmouse." We know that the late Mr. Grant Allen had more than one. And very wisely, too—the more especially in those cases where the writer is a specialist in several departments. The world is apt to look askance at versatility, murmuring to itself the old adage about "Jack of all trades and master of none." That, I believe, is one reason why Bulwer Lytton failed to impress his countrymen permanently.

It appears that the little pamphlet-full of verse called Wagers of Battle, by Franklin and Henry Lushington, consists for the most part of a reprint of some lyrics entitled Points of War, published by these authors in the days of the Crimean campaign. Only two of the pieces are new—"Lucknow, A.D. 1857," and "A.D. 1899, Play Out the Game," both from the pen of the surviving brother, Sir Franklin. Somebody with leisure should write an account of English war poetry—I mean, of poetry contemporary with our wars, and immediately suggested by them. This would limit the field, for, of course, a good deal of our martial verse has been retrospective in view and subject. In our own days one remembers such things as Dobell's Sonnets of the War, Gerald Massey's Havelock's March, and so forth, not omitting the war poems of the Miss Louisa Shore of whom I wrote last week.

I gather from the preface to Mr. Pemberton's book on The Kendals that Mrs. Kendal was unwilling that she should be made the subject of biography. This coyness was, I am sure, perfectly sincere. It does not, however, wholly square with the fact that about a decade ago Mrs. Kendal published a little work, practically autobiographical, called Dramatic Opinions, which had previously appeared in Murray's Magazine. It was issued here by Mr. Murray, and in America by Messrs. Little & Brown. To the American edition Mrs. Kendal prefixed a dedication to her daughters Daisy, Ethel and Dorothy, signed "Your devoted mother," and quite of a "personal" nature. Why, indeed, should a leading actress refuse to discourse, or be discoursed about, so long as there is no indiscreet revelations of purely private matters?

Mr. C. D. Trantom, of Liverpool, has been good enough to let me see a copy of the "Calendar of Meredithian Philosophy for 1898" which he compiled and printed "for private circulation only." Each day has its aphorism, or epigram, or quotation of some sort, the selection being made from thirteen of the novels, the "Tale of Chloe" volume, the "Selected Poems," and the "Essay on Comedy." These are all mentioned at the back of the "Calendar," with the names of their publishers. Mr. Trantom could have had, of course, no difficulty in finding material for his purpose; there would be, rather, an embarrassment of riches. The result is eminently interesting and suggestive, and one could wish that some such "Calendar," which need not be confined to any particular year, were within the reach of the general public.

Miss Alma Tadema, who is to have a little play of her own produced in London next week, has already displayed her interest in things dramatic by her translations into English of Maeterlinck's "Pelléas et Mélisande" and "Les Aveugles." These appeared in a volume of the "Scott Library," with a preface exhibiting a keen appreciation of Maeterlinck and his work.

The issue of a treatise on the question, What is Poetry? must needs remind all students of belles-lettres of the delightful variety to be found in the extant pronouncements on that subject. Nearly every literary critic of eminence, from Aristotle to Matthew Arnold, has had his say thereon, and it is hardly too much to assert that no two of them agree upon essentials. It would be a useful thing if someone would bring together the views of the most noted experts, and analyse and compare them. The time is ripe for such a work. Until Mr. Holmes came forward, Mr. Watts-Dunton had seemed to have said the last word upon the topic; but his dissertation, unhappily, is not obtainable in separate and handy form.

When, the other day, I advised theatrical managers to follow the example set by Mr. George Alexander in distributing a "chronicle" of his present playhouse, the St. James's Theatre, I assumed, of course, that the history would in any case be accurately written. In the case of the St. James's the narrative is disfigured by several misprints and at least one misstatement. We have, for instance, "Daluna" for "Duenna," "Vanderhoff" for "Vandenhoff," "Dorincourt" for "Doricourt," and "Angus Reece" for "Angus Reach." The play of "The Dean's Daughter" is described as "adapted from a popular novel by Mr. Sidney Grundy." As a matter of fact, Mr. Grundy and Mr. F. C. Philips joined in adapting a novel by the latter. Altogether, this brochure is disappointing, and I cannot recommend it as a model for imitation.

Reviews.

An Engaging Visionary.

Life and Letters of Ambrose Philipps de Lisle. By Edmund Sheridan Purcell. Edited and Finished by Edwin de Lisle. 2 vols. (Macmillan. 25s. net.)

AMBROSE DE LISLE, born in 1809, was the eldest son of a Leicestershire squire. To a strain of Huguenot blood on his mother's side may perhaps be attributed the note of mysticism which distinguished his temperament. His health did not allow of his entering a public school, and he received his early education at a private academy, where the gentle influence of an émigré priest, M. Giraud, dispelled the prejudice against the Roman Antichrist in which he had been nurtured by an evangelical uncle. The reaction was pushed further by a visit to the cathedral of Paris in 1823; and that same year, when he had reached the serious age of thirteen, true Antichrist was manifested to him during one of his solitary rambles.

"All of a sudden [he declared] I saw a bright light in the heavens, and I heard a voice, which said: 'Mahomet is the Antichrist, for he denieth the Father and the Son.' On my return home in the next holidays I looked for a Koran, and there I found these remarkable words: 'God neither begetteth nor is begotten.'"

This theory he elaborated in later life, and upon it based an argument in favour of Mr. Gladstone's Eastern policy and much violent denunciation of the Ottoman Empire, of which he prophesied that it must come to an end in 1898! It was characteristic of De Lisle that, having been received into the Church, he permitted his life to be shaped largely by the vaticination of a Roman recluse, one Marco Caricchia. For fifteen years this venerable personage had been praying, in terms that witnessed rather to the fervour of his faith than to his progress in humility: "O, my God! give me these two great powers, England and Russia." He assured the young convert that he was the instrument chosen of God for the conversion of England. "And know this for certain," added the holy man, "that you shall not see death till you have seen all England united to the Catholic Faith." The peculiarity of this prophecy is that, falsified in the event, it has nevertheless been put on record.

The prophetaster had spoken of "a great movement of learned men of that kingdom," as the sign that the time was ripe; and the Oxford Movement answered reasonably well to such a description. The Conversion of England had been made the object of special intercession by Gregory XIII.; by St. Philip Neri, the founder of the Oratory; by M. Olier, the founder of St. Sulpice; and, among many other venerable names, by St. Francis of Sales. The Father of the Passionists, too, St. Paul of the Cross, had been a steadfast intercessor, and in Father Ignatius (Spencer), a recent convert and a member of that Order, was found an ardent apostle of the same cause. Europe resounded with prayer for the spiritual welfare of England. The movement at Oxford was the manifest answer, and the enthusiastic gentleman was presently constituted a channel of communication between its leaders and the Roman authorities. In his belief in its possibilities he found himself, of course, in a minority; for the old Catholic families regarded it with distrust and contempt, and their organs in the press loaded it with clumsy ridicule. Among those who, with De Lisle, recognised the earnestness and sincerity of Newman and his disciples was Lord Shrewsbury, to whom in 1841 the sanguine squire wrote:

I have been for some time now engaged in close correspondence with some of the leaders of the Catholic party at Oxford, to which I can only allude in general terms, as it is strictly confidential; . . . but of this you may rest assured, that the reunion of the Churches is certain. Mr.

Newman has received the adhesion of several hundreds of the Clergy: this is publicly known, and therefore I state it.

He believed in the validity of Anglican ordinations, and recounts with confidence how Newman, celebrating at St. Mary's, was permitted "to see our Lord in the Host." The Association for Promoting the Union of Christendom was founded to give effect to the project of Corporate Reunion, and De Lisle was its principal advocate with Cardinal Barnabò. But he had overlooked the fatal flaw in its constitution—the implication, inadmissible from the Roman standpoint, that the Church is divided. The Association was condemned by the Holy Office in 1857.

It was consistent with his general outlook that, against Manning and Ward, he took a liberal line on the question of permitting Catholics to enter the national universities, on the advisability of defining the papal infallibility, and on the question of the temporal power. This last, as a part of his theory of Antichrist, he saw prefigured in the text of the Apocalypse: "And the woman [the Church] fled into the wilderness [entered into the world], where she had a place prepared by God [Rome], that there they should feed her a thousand two hundred and sixty days," which is the time allotted by Daniel to the dominion of the Little Horn—which is Mahomet. The temporal power of the popes, that is to say (prefigured in the phrase, "that they should feed her"), was a providential but temporary breakwater against the rising flood of Islam. And as to the famous Syllabus of Pius IX. he scrupled not to write:

The idea of the modern civilised world accepting it as a rule of conduct, if it ever entered into the narrow and prejudiced conception of some besotted theologian in the obscure corner of a darkened cell, it is too ridiculous to be entertained by any serious thinker who knows what is passing in the outer world.

Newman once proclaimed that while the Anglican appeal was to antiquity, it was rather upon her ubiquity that Rome's claim rested. But De Lisle was one of a group to whom antiquity was all in all. The life at Garendon was toned to mediæval shades, and in consequence of the squire's intercourse with the leaders of the new departure in the Established Church the place was a focus of the Ritualistic movement. "It was what we saw carried out in your beautiful chapel," wrote the Protestant Bishop of Brechin with enthusiasm, "that first inspired most of us to imitate it, so far as in our sad circumstances we were able to do." The offices of the Church were performed with conscientious exactitude, and the strains of figured music never profaned the echoes of the chapel. The plain song was rendered from a Gradual compiled by De Lisle himself for the use of village choirs—who, unfortunately, found it quite unintelligible owing to its being printed in black letter! In De Lisle, when he looked upon the screen and rood, Pugin discerned "a Christian after my own heart"; and into his sympathetic bosom the tumultuous architect poured his confidences, rather after the manner of Boythorn. "Do not deceive yourself, my dear friend," he shouts in one of his epistles, "do not deceive yourself: the Catholics will cut their own throats, the clergy will put down religion." This when Propaganda had condemned vestments of his designing. At first he had hopes of "the Oxford men"; but, to his disgust, with their Protestantism they left behind them, when they entered the Church, their taste for Gothic also. De Lisle was almost as violent as his friend, and at one time Newman must write a serious remonstrance in order to compose differences of opinion between him and Father Faber which had issued in something like a deliberate malediction of the Oratory.

Such occasional extravagancies apart, De Lisle lived a blameless life, directed towards high aims, happy in his marriage, in his numerous offspring, and in his friends—the men most distinguished in their time for earnestness of religious conviction and purpose. The influence of such a man, "visionary" as Cardinal Manning fairly judged him, is a factor of history of which it is right that the world should possess a particular record.

The state of Mr. Purcell's health at the time when he began his task, and the fact that he left it unfinished, are a sufficient excuse for many imperfections. Of Mr. Edwin de Lisle's editorial performance it is characteristic that these two large volumes are issued minus an index.

South Africa and the War.

How to Beat the Boer: a Conversation in Hades. By Frank Harris. (Pearson, Ltd. 6d.)

Natives under the Transvaal Flag. By the Rev. John H. Bovill. (Simpkin, Marshall. 3s. 6d.)

In the Land of the Boers. By Oliver Osborne. (R. A. Everett & Co. 2s.)

The Transvaal Question. Prof. E. Naville. (Blackwood & Sons. 6d.)

Boer War, 1899-1900. By Lieut.-Col. H. M. E. Brunker. (Clowes & Sons. 2s. 6d.)

MR. HARRIS has turned aside from his Shakespearean studies to look into the causes of our failure in South Africa. He puts his observations and conclusions into the form of a conversation between George Washington, Dr. Johnson, Thomas Carlyle, Mr. Parnell, Lord Randolph Churchill, and one Aylward, a Fenian. There seems no particular reason why Mr. Harris should not have introduced Socrates and Lord Byron; but the dramatic form of the pamphlet is not important. The spokesman of Mr. Harris is Aylward, and he certainly talks some sound sense. Briefly, Mr. Harris demands more brains, and five thousand sharpshooters. Says Aylward:

I used to hate England so much I couldn't do her justice; but now . . . I can see her as she is, and whenever I want to understand her I think of a public school boy. The fourth-form boy hates brains, and admires nothing so much as physical strength and brute courage, and that is exactly England's case.

Aylward goes on to show that there have always been two theories of war: the barbaric, which believes in numbers, and the better theory which places quality before quantity. He tries to prove that England won at Crecy and Agincourt by quality, and lost at Lexington and Majuba by trusting to numbers and old-fashioned methods. "I put no faith in numbers. The way to beat the Boer is to send out men who are better fighters than he, better exponents of modern scientific warfare than he is." As we have said, Mr. Harris's practical suggestion is the formation of a corps of five thousand sharpshooters. We leave the reader to inform himself from Mr. Harris's pages how these men should be found, trained, and led. A striking and spirited pamphlet.

We know how the Boers treated the Outlanders. Mr. Bovill's aim is to show how they have treated their inferiors, the native races in the Transvaal. As rector of the cathedral church at Lourenço Marques, and also as British Acting Consul there, Mr. Bovill has had good opportunities of collecting sound information and forming just opinions. His book is a scathing indictment of Boer oppression. The Boer law as to natives is this: "The people shall not permit any equality of coloured persons with white inhabitants, neither in the Church nor in the State." From this principle have sprung three laws—viz., that a native must not own fixed property; that he must not marry by civil or ecclesiastical process; and that he must not be allowed access to civil courts in any action against a white man. These regulations speak for themselves, but Mr. Bovill is at pains to show with what varied banefulness they work in practice. His book is a budget of orderly evidence, and he drives his conclusions home with appropriate force. "What would have become of us in our Indian Empire and our Colonies if we did not maintain the laws relating to property and marriage? . . . 'A few Mauser bullets is the best way of legislating for the natives,' is the usual answer one gets from the Boers when speaking to them on this question." Mr. Bovill's book supplies new proofs of the "inevitability" that has long existed of dire trouble in South Africa. We note that Mr. Bovill is also preparing a book on Delagoa Bay.

Mr. Oliver Osborne belongs to that cheery company to whom hardship is a mere excuse for jocularity, and positive peril seems generally to suggest nothing more terrifying than a pun. Seven years ago he published an account of the knockings about of himself and "the other man" in South Africa, and counsel taken with himself has led him to a revised issue of his record of nearly ten years' wanderings in the land of the Boers. It is an eminently readable record, for Mr. Osborne was in Kruger's country at a very interesting time—the days of Barberton and the De Kaap Mines, the days when the Outlander first began to loom large in the Transvaal. Though he is distinctly a jovial penman, who has not the slightest fear of lapsing into slang, Mr. Osborne can be, and is, serious enough when the mood takes him to mention a serious subject. This is not often, but seeing that his wanderings took him to Natal and Madagascar, Mauritius, Cape Colony, and Bechuanaland, as well as to the land of the Boers, he has occasion now and then to be instructive as well as amusing. The following recipe for learning Zulu from one's "boy" is typical of Mr. Osborne's style:

We adopted a kind of modified kindergarten of my own. For instance, if I told Salt (the Zulu boy) to bring me a spoon, and he brought me a shovel instead (which, ten to one he would), I threw the shovel at him and said "spoon" in my most impressive manner. This (after I had hunted up the article myself) would invariably cause Salt to go to pieces on a smile, and let loose the Zulu equivalent for "spoon." In this way, in a very short time, I acquired a remarkable knowledge of the language, which I propose to give to the world at some future date, in the form of a treatise on "The Zulu Language in its Relation to Sanscrit," by "One Who Knows."

Anyone who wants to fortify his opinion of the rights and wrongs of our war with the Boers can hardly do better than expend sixpence on the purchase of Prof. Naville's pamphlet on the Transvaal Question. It is a small compendium of very valuable and accurate facts, written two weeks before the war was openly declared. Its author is a scientist, and foreseeing the natural bent of the foreign press, he looked into the authorities on the subject as impartially as could be expected. His conclusions are startling in this respect: he finds the Transvaal Government in the wrong in practically every case that they have had to deal in with us since 1852, the year of the Sand River Convention. He is imperially impartial as a Swiss professor, who has given up many years to a study of Egypt, should be; but he properly dissociates the doings of the Boers from the dictations of the Boer Government. Impartial, sensible, well-informed, and readable are our four words of praise for M. Naville's study.

Lieut.-Col. Brunker's booklet of 125 pages, in a red paper cover, is the Whitaker of the war. It gives lists of the officers of all ranks employed in South Africa. The letters k, w, m, and d indicate those who have been killed, wounded, missing, or who have died of wounds. The whole of the British forces are accounted for, and the book makes a very useful companion to the newspaper. It will also be a revelation to most civilians of the complexity of the operations now being carried out between Cape Town and Mafeking, and between Kimberley and Durban. A map, and a chart showing the distribution of the forces, are given, and also a chronology of the war brought up to the 1st of February.

Popular Assyriology.

Babylonians and Assyrians. By the Rev. A. H. Sayce, D.D., &c. (Nimmo.)

THIS is the first to appear, though the sixth in number, of a series of handbooks on Semitic antiquities. In it Prof. Sayce purports to deal, in a popular way, with the life and customs of the two peoples named in the title. Although he gives us no references to authorities—a practice which is, perhaps, excluded by the scheme of the series—he manages to fill some 300 pages very agreeably.

Prof. Sayce's main position seems to be how very closely the life of the Assyrians and Babylonians resembled our own. The likeness may not be mere coincidence, for our own culture comes in direct line from that of the Greeks, who, in their turn, owed it to what they were pleased to call "the Phœnicians," or, in other words, to the inhabitants of Western Asia. But a still more plausible reason for the resemblance may be found in the fact that the Babylonians (and, in a much lower degree, their colonists the Assyrians) were, like ourselves, a nation of shopkeepers. Not only did the rulers of the country indulge in trade—the Belshazzar of Daniel was a trader in wool; and Cambyses, when Crown Prince, lent money on mortgage—but the institution of the limited company flourished exceedingly in Babylon; and her women were allowed to engage in trade, either alone or in partnership with their husbands, a great number of the tablets discovered relating to their transactions. On all these points Prof. Sayce discourses well and clearly; and we can understand from his book how it was that "Babylonish garments" came to be such coveted possessions among ruder nations like the Hebrews, and Babylonian beds of ivory and gold and silver work became objects of export to distant Mycenæ in pre-Homeric times. Add to this that Babylon was the birthplace of architecture, all columns and pilasters being derived, apparently, from the palm-trunks used to prop up its brick houses in a stoneless country; that reading and writing were there the commonest of arts; and that she anticipated the discovery of printing by multiplying her clay books by means of wooden blocks, and we may get a fair insight into the circumstances which led to Babylon being, as she was in classical antiquity, the mart of the ancient world.

The fact that this should have been so may be full of interest for us at the present time. Babylonia was as unpromising a country when first settled as can well be imagined. She was, in fact, little better than a marsh formed by the confluence of the two great rivers the Tigris and the Euphrates, and she had no mineral wealth, unless it were an inexhaustible supply of clay. Yet she had two great advantages. From the earliest times she had an easily obtained supply of food in the shape of wheat, which there grows wild, and dates, on which a number of Asiatic people still live. Thanks to this the Babylonians were able to obtain a great body of cheap labour, the keep of a slave being, as Prof. Sayce tells us, 2½d. a day, and free workmen being quite willing to give their work in return for food and clothing, while it enabled the Babylonians to offer hospitality to immigrants of all nations who were willing to live under their laws, and had anything to buy or sell. Hence, neither war nor pestilence, and it had its fair share of both, could do the state any permanent injury. While Assyria, with far greater natural advantages, devoted herself entirely to foreign conquest, until in one of the periodical fits of exhaustion that it produced she was triumphantly snuffed out amid the jubilant shrieks of her outraged neighbours, Babylonia held so fast the even tenor of her natural way that the Jewish banking firm of Egibi of Babylon was able to hand down its business unimpaired from the time of Sennacherib's predecessor until the Persian dynasty of Darius. Although Alexander, who seems to have been born to make all things new, took £30,000,000 in bullion and specie out of her cities, it was not until the foundation of the Egyptian city which still bears his name diverted the Eastern trade from her that her national prosperity was seriously checked. So strong and enduring a basis does trade lay for national existence. Let us hope that England and America, who resemble Babylonia in many things, may emulate her prosperity and avoid her faults.

Babylonian Religion and Mythology. By L. W. King, M.A. (Kegan Paul. 3s. 6d. net.)

THIS, too, is one of a series of handbooks which this time includes Egypt as well as Chaldea. Mr. King, who is an official of the British Museum, acknowledges his obligation to the larger work of Prof. Jastrow (see ACADEMY of February 18, 1899), but has avoided his predecessor's heretical disbelief in the pre-Semite inhabitants of Babylonia. So far from following Prof. Jastrow in this particular, he, if anything, goes rather too far the other way, and thinks that the political power of the Sumerians did not decline till 2500 B.C. For the rest, he gives a clear and satisfactory outline of the Babylonian religion so far as it is known to us, and probably touches the point with a needle when he suggests that the identification of the different gods with certain cities of the empire indicated the division of the country among so many kinglets before it was united under one head. In his view of the relations between the Babylonian and the Hebrew religions he is well up to date, and points out that the accounts of Creation given in Genesis are plainly derived from different versions of the legend of Tiamat, which he gives in extenso. The time of borrowing he thinks to be that of the conquest of Canaan, though he does not think the Hebrews took over the accounts of the Flood, which he attributes to a like source, until a good deal later. He is not very clear as to the origin of the connexion which the Babylonians attempted to trace between their own deities and the seven planets (including in that phrase the sun and moon), a connexion which has so largely influenced all subsequent beliefs. Granted that the Babylonians thought each "planet" to be directed by one of their chief gods, he does not show on what principle any particular planet was assigned to any particular god. This is a very difficult question, on which Prof. Jensen, on whom he here relies, will hardly help him. The present writer's theory is that the Babylonians, who were great observers of the stars, noticed the wind generally prevalent when each planet was especially brilliant, and so divided the planets among the more and the less benevolent members of their previously-established pantheon. On the whole, however, Mr. King has done his work excellently well, and his books form as good an introduction to the study of Babylonian religion as the general reader can wish for.

Mr. Le Gallienne's Latest.

The Worshipper of The Image. By Richard Le Gallienne. (John Lane. 3s. 6d.)

MR. LE GALLIENNE has a pretty gift for writing, a delicately lawless sensuousness, and an innate delight in sentiment on which time and toil seem to have no effect. The matter of The Worshipper of The Image does not interest us, and its persistent note of sentimentality cloy; but we hasten to acknowledge the freshness of the style, and the easy, the almost too easy, grace with which the book is written. The story, which is exploited by four characters, is best described as an allegory without a moral. Antony, a poet, with "a face shining with sorrow," is married to Beatrice. They live in a valley by a wood, and they have one child, called Wonder. The family is happy as the day is long, till Antony has the misfortune to buy a plaster-cast of a girl's head at a shop near Covent-garden, supposed to have been modelled from a girl who was found drowned in the Seine. Thence all the trouble arises. Antony finds in her his dream of ideal beauty, and we are led to suppose that they hold converse together "at the rising of the moon," and on other occasions. Silencieux—that is the name he gives her—would seem to be an embodiment of the adventurous La Gioconda, as described by Pater.

"Tell me of your English lovers," said Antony on one occasion to Silencieux.

"Best of them I love two: one a laughing giant who loved me three hundred years ago, and the other a little London boy with large eyes of velvet, who mid all the gloom of your great city saw and loved my face as none had seen and loved it since she of Mitylene. I found the giant sitting by a country stream, holding a daffodil in his mighty hands and whistling to the birds. He took and wore me like a flower. I was to him as a nightingale that sang from his sleeve, for he loved so much besides. Yet me he loved best, as those who can read his secret poems understand. But my little London boy loved me only. For him the world held nothing but my face, and it was of his great love for me that he died."

Antony's infatuation for Silencieux grows, and ends in the practical annihilation of his wife, his child, and himself; but Silencieux, as the principle of eternal beauty, lives on to agonise other sons of men.

If there had been more thought, more grip of the subject, and more real feeling at the back of the conception, Mr. Le Gallienne might have produced a remarkable contribution to this form of literature; but that can never be till Mr. Le Gallienne faces (from a literary point of view) realities, and schools himself to avoid writing which is just pretty and little more. The chapter, "A Song of the Little Dead," which follows the death of Wonder, is an example. The unreality, the summer-day sentimentality of it all, are so insistent that the death of the child ceases to have any significance. It is merely a pretty exercise in literary sentiment, and quite untrue to life. Here is a passage:

It is on the little graves that the sun first rises at morn, and it is there at evening that the moon lays softly her first silver flowers. There the wren will sometimes bring her sky-blue eggs for a gift, and the summer wind come sowing seeds of magic to take the fancy of the little one beneath. Sometimes it shakes the hyacinths like a rattle of silver, and spreads the turf above with a litter of coloured toys. Here the butterflies are born with the first warm breath of the spring. . . . There are the honeycombs of friendly bees, and the shelters of many a timid earth-born speck of life no bigger than a dew-drop, mysteriously small. . . . Yes, the emperors and the ants of Nature's vast economy alike love to be kind to the little graves.

Mr. Le Gallienne may possibly take exception to our description of the book as an allegory without a moral. He may mean that in Antony he has presented the tragedy that must follow from the pursuit of ideal beauty on an imaginative, ill-balanced mind. If so, the retribution is indeed quick and sure. For Antony goes mad, Wonder dies, and Beatrice drowns herself. We are left wondering when Mr. Le Gallienne will grow up.

A Good Princess.

A Memoir of Her Royal Highness Princess Mary Adelaide, Duchess of Teck. By C. Kinloch Cooke. 2 vols. (Murray. 32s.)

MR. KINLOCH COOKE has no doubt had a difficult task, but, taking this biography as we find it, we must pronounce it far too long and diffuse. Its 850 pages might have been reduced to three hundred, with advantage not only to literary effect but to the memory of Princess Mary. It is idle to suppose that any great number of people will even attempt to read these volumes through. Their formidable bulk is simply an invitation to skip. Princess Mary's life was well worth writing, for it is the life of a good woman. But why blur the portrait with endless trivial anecdote and voluminous details of drives, visits, and luncheons?

The reader, then, must sub-edit while he reads. If he has the patience to do so, it will be because he has an antecedent knowledge of Princess Mary's kind and energetic character, and her unwearying efforts to do some good in the world. Very probably he can call up the vision of a grey afternoon in a London suburb, when bazaar flags fluttered gaily on their poles, and the street was all eyes and expectation. The event was the coming of Princess Mary from Kew to preside at a local function. She was the ideal princess in such surroundings. She played her part with an unusual freshness. Near enough to the Throne to have all the glamour of royalty, she was far enough from it to be very visibly human. She was the typical philanthropic lady, genuinely charitable and self-denying, yet finding real pleasure in her important work and the little pomps and occasions which marked its successive accomplishments. Moreover, the East End people adored a princess who looked as though she thoroughly enjoyed her rank, her privileges, and her carriage horses; and this sober certainty of royal bliss cheered the weariest wife, and sent a pulse of romance through every steaming collar-shop or laundry. The amenities of such visits are well illustrated by Mr. Cooke in the following anecdotes:

One day Her Royal Highness was driving along a very crowded thoroughfare. The street was narrow, and the windows full of faces. It was Saturday afternoon, and most of the men had returned to their homes early. Looking up, the Princess saw at an open window a man in his shirt-sleeves waving his hand to her. Entering into his enthusiasm, she waved her hand in return, saying, "I can see you; I know you are one of my friends." These words were distinctly heard by those around, and a deafening cheer went up from the densely packed multitude.

Another time Her Royal Highness had been opening the new wing of a hospital, and was driving away from the gates, holding a bouquet of choice flowers presented to her in honour of the occasion. In the crowded street leading from the hospital stood a poor woman with a bunch of rather faded wall-flowers in her hand; as the Princess passed she attempted to throw the flowers into the carriage, but the horses had already got into their stride, and the wall-flowers, falling short, lay on the ground. Princess Mary, however, had seen the action, and, stopping the carriage, bade the footman pick them up and bring them to her; then, laying the bouquet aside, she took the wall-flowers in her hand, and drove on smiling, bowing her thanks to the giver. All hearts were touched by the Princess's kind action, and the people shouted themselves hoarse with delight.

The training of the Princess in all royal accomplishments, her childhood at Kew, her marriage at the church in Kew Green, her stately life at Kensington Palace, her friendship with Lord Beaconsfield, and her constant association with the Queen, are recounted (only too fully) in these volumes. Mr. Cooke has wisely stood aside as much as possible, leaving the story to unfold itself in the diaries of the Princess, who was an observant, thinking woman. We might quote many passages which show her appreciation of good literature and acting. Here is one which illustrates her admiration of Dickens: it is from her diary at Brighton in 1861:

November 8.— . . . We went to the Town Hall at eight o'clock to attend Charles Dickens's reading of Nicholas Nickleby of Dotheboys Hall, and the Trial in Pickwick. He renders rather than reads his subject, and is admirable in his change of voice and manner, especially in the comic parts, which he gives with a great deal of drollery and humour. The first part was deeply interesting—the second intensely amusing.

November 9.— . . . Home by two o'clock to dress and have our luncheon before driving to the Pavilion to hear

Charles Dickens read David Copperfield in six chapters, four containing the pith of the history of Em'ly and Steerforth, Mr. Peggoty and Ham, one devoted to David's bachelor dinner at the Micawbers', and the sixth to his courtship and marriage with Dora. In the two last Dickens's comic drollery was irresistible, whilst his rendering of the pathetic parts was finer and more touching than in Nicholas Nickleby. It was over, I thought, too soon. Lord Robert Clinton was there in his chair, and thoroughly enjoyed it.

Mr. Cooke has discharged a delicate task with tact, though with no literary distinction. There is nothing in these pages which can offend, and all who read them, in whole or part, will admire the bright and busy virtues of Princess Mary Adelaide of Teck.

Sins Against Instinct.

Historical Tales from Shakespeare. By A. T. Quiller-Couch (Arnold. 6s.)

"INSTINCT is a great matter," says Falstaff in this book; and his remark corroborated the thought which was in our mind as we read on and on and thought the while of those other Tales from Shakespeare which it supplements. For what Mr. Quiller-Couch has most notably lacked in the prosecution of his difficult task has been that same instinct which carried Mary and Charles Lamb so successfully through theirs. Instinct told them that the only way was to read Shakespeare through and through, forget him, and then tell the tale afresh; instinct led them (old maid and bachelor as they were) to do nothing unsuitably adult, and certainly to avoid all expletives and oaths; instinct warned them to omit Bottom from the "Midsummer Night's Dream" and Autolycus from "As You Like It"—not that their retention was absolutely destructive to the scheme, but because not all Shakespeare is food for babes, and there are certain things for which it is better to wait. Mr. Quiller-Couch has done differently, and his work is, we think, by so much the poorer. He has not been content to read Shakespeare and forget him; but has performed his task with the plays beside him, thus making his renderings less living tales than stiff and creaking paraphrases. He has thought so little of the safeguarding of the child's mind that we find such sentences as these: "It is damnable work," he admitted indignantly. . . . 'But as the devil would have it,' went on Falstaff, 'three accursed fellows . . . 'By the Lord!' . . . 'By Heaven' . . ." and so forth. The inclusion of Falstaff at all we hold to be a sin against instinct. Falstaff is sacred: we must have him whole or not at all. There is no call to chasten him and tame him for the questionable amusement of children who would infinitely prefer comic figures more after their own heart, and who can well wait for Shakespeare's own treatment of this great and conspicuously adult man. We say questionable amusement, because robbed of their dramatic force and turned into narrative the Falstaff passages have, in Mr. Quiller-Couch's hands, very little flavour and spirit. Most of it will be Greek to the nursery. Instinct would have treated differently Falstaff's soliloquy after the death of Hotspur, when Prince Hal leaves the fat knight for dead too, remarking, "Farewell, old Jack! I could better have spared a better man. Lie there by Percy until I return to see thee duly embowelled and buried." Mr. Quiller-Couch continues: "Falstaff watched him out of sight, and slowly heaved himself on his feet. 'Embowelled! If thou embowel me to-day, I'll give thee leave to powder and eat me, too, to-morrow. Phew! It was time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant Scot had paid me scot and lot too. The better part of valour is discretion, say I!'" Now what have children to do with embowelling?

We do not wish to enforce this point of instinct to the exclusion of any word as to the merits of Mr. Quiller-Couch's work. The historical plays are in the main well paraphrased; they tell the story clearly; but too little has been done to translate Shakespeare into narrative form—the real object of such a book. That is what the Lambs did to perfection.

Sweetness and Light.

Fellow Wayfarers. By Louis Tylor. (Richards. 3s. 6d.)

THE Wayfarers were a little band of serious thinkers, literate or simple, who met together in a West of England seaport town. Their founder was a retired Indian soldier, Colonel Tristram, and the Wayfarers had three ways: meditation in silence, after the manner of the old Quakers; worship of God, whom, however, they refused to define; and the admission of equal rights, both in faith and doubt, to those who differed from them. They met in the little meeting-house which Colonel Tristram built; sat thoughtful for a while, and, after the meeting proper had closed, there was a period for discussion and for the elucidation of problems by the minister. This little book purports to give extracts from the records of these and other discussions, as kept by one of the band. Enough has been said to show that the book is not for everyone; the creed is too pacific, the tolerance too invincible, for such of us as would proselytise almost "to the fire." The "exquisite rancour of theological hatred," as Gibbon calls it, was as far from the Wayfarers as the West from the East. Conduct was their concern, not dogma; and yet dogmatic questions now and then arose, to be considered in a spirit of reasonableness. Here is a brief dialogue between one of the more argumentative of the Wayfarers and their second leader, Prof. Berners:

"Well, the Trinity is far enough beyond my comprehension. Pray tell me what commonplace mystery explains it."

"Look around on this room: it has length, breadth, and height, of which we speak as though they were separate like wood, iron, and stone. Yet if I could turn this room over, and twist it round as I can turn and twist the book which I hold in my hand, you would see that what is now its length might become its breadth, or its height—so, and—so. Thus, in one sense, length, breadth, and height are different; but, in another sense, they are similar; yet we are so used to this seeming contradiction, that we do not think it strange; only, if we are very precise in our language, we call diversities of this sort distinctions instead of differences."

"Now, the greatest of philosophers found just such a seeming contradiction when he considered these good qualities which we call virtues. We give them separate names, and, in one sense, we know them separately. Yet, in another sense, we find it impossible to separate them, for each seems to be the other, and, indeed, Virtue becomes vicious when we pull it to pieces. Try, for instance, to separate Love, Justice, and Wisdom, and what is the result? Justice without Wisdom or Love makes a machine; Love without Justice or Wisdom, a brute; Wisdom without Love or Justice, a devil."

"Thus the every-day puzzle which this room presents when we measure it and try to imagine what it would be under different circumstances, has its counterpart in the world of thought. By learning this nature-lesson we may get some clue to the way in which the most Wise may be also the most Just and the most Merciful, though Justice sometimes seems unwise, Wisdom unmerciful, and Mercy unjust."

A report spread that the Wayfarers were enlarging the meeting-house.

Mr. Tylor, it will be seen, has the clear mind of the teacher. He has wit, too, and an agreeable vein of humour, and we commend his little book to the notice of all right-minded persons who are called upon for popular exposition of moral truths.

Other New Books.

A WHITE WOMAN IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

BY HELEN CADDICK.

Miss Caddick's travels took her from the mouth of the Zambesi to Lake Tanganyika, and this book is the pleasant, gossiping record thereof. We cannot say that it is exactly "written," because the method is that rather of the familiar letter or journal for family perusal than a serious description in which any real effort is made to find the best adjective. But brightness compensates for much, and Miss Caddick is always bright. There are various indications that she is no common specimen of her sex. The fact that she took the journey above is evidence enough. The temper of the following passage is another:

At Kawimbe the rats in the house were terrible at night. They raced about my room and scampered over my bed in a thoroughly happy manner. I could not sleep at first; but at last I got used to them. I dropped off, only to wake up and find a rat with his foot in my ear. One night, at another station, something larger than a rat dropped from the rafters on my bed and awoke me. I lighted the candle, and saw it was a lemur. They are lovely little animals, and are covered with thick fur, like chinchilla, and have beautiful large round eyes. It looked most fascinating; but, not being sure what it would do next, I thought I would try to send it out. I opened the door which led on to the verandah, and proceeded gently to drive it out; but, alas! it objected to going, and sprang straight on to my shoulder, gripping my arm with its sharp little teeth, and refusing to let go till I well pinched its tail. As it turned round to bite my hand I tossed it out on to the verandah and shut the door.

The prospect of waking up and finding a rat's foot in one's ear is enough to deter many a person of average courage from visiting Africa at all. Miss Caddick seems to have enjoyed it. A writer more intent than Miss Caddick on getting the utmost possible out of a record of travel would have made good comic reading of an account of the little native boy who spoke English. Miss Caddick merely says:

His English, which he had chiefly learnt from the Bible, was often extremely amusing and quaint. One morning, soon after we set off, I called him several times without any result; at last I heard a scratching on my tent and a voice: "It is I; behold I am come." At other times he would use the words "verily" and "lo" in a droll way.

This is, altogether, a very agreeable book, if at times it comes perilously nigh a mere chronicle of small beer. There was a day, of course, when Zambesi small beer was a notable brew by the time it reached England. But too many books have spoiled its flavour. (Unwin. 6s.)

VILLAGE LIFE IN CHINA.

BY A. H. SMITH, D.D.

Mr. Smith is an American missionary who has already written an informing work on Chinese Characteristics. He knows the people well and has a mind singularly free from prejudice or bigotry; and as he has a genuine gift of observation and an inquiring mind, his chapters are both valuable and entertaining. Most travellers who write of China confine their attention to the cities, and either ignore the village community or dismiss it with large generalisations. Mr. Smith describes it patiently and with knowledge. We quote a passage touching a village funeral:

It is when the almost interminable feasts are at last over, and the loud cry is raised, "Take up the coffin," that the funeral's climax has arrived. Sixteen bearers, or some multiple of sixteen (the more the better), wrestle with the huge and unwieldy burden of the ponderous coffin and the enormous catafalque supporting it. Only the bearers in the immediate front can see where they are going, so that it is necessary that a funeral director take charge of their motions, which he does by shrill shouts in a falsetto key, ending in a piercing cry by no means unlike the scream of a catamount. To each of his directive yells the whole chorus of bearers responds with shouts resembling those of sailors heaving an anchor. These cries, mingled with the ostentatious wails of the mourners piled into a whole caravan of village farm-carts, combine to produce a total effect as remote from our conception of what a funeral ought to be as can easily be imagined. When, by a slow and toilsome progress, the family graveyard has been reached, the lowering of the coffin into the grave—sometimes a huge circular opening—is the culminating point of the many days of excitement. The cries of the director become shrieks, the responses are tumultuous and discordant, everyone adding his own emendations according to his own point of view, and no one paying any attention to any one else. Thus, amid the explosion of more crackers and bombs, the fiercer wails of the mourners, the shouts of the bearers and the grave-diggers, and the buzz of the curious spectators, the Chinese is at last laid away to his long rest.

The sum of Mr. Smith's inquiry is that there are in China many questions and problems, but only one great one, and that is, How to set Christianity at work upon them and thus solve all? His reasons for believing that Christianity is the panacea are given at some length; but we must confess that the pages preceding have contained so much evidence as to Chinese anti-Christian conservatism that the task laid down for missionaries seems to us one of a magnitude so considerable as to be practically impossible. (Olipphant, Ferrier & Co. 7s. 6d.)

DRAMATIC CRITICISM.

BY J. T. GREIN.

This is not, as the title might suggest, a book on "dramatic criticism"; it is a book made up of criticism which it is customary to describe—inaccurately, of course—as "dramatic." The comment may seem captious; but the ordinary newspaper criticism of men and things theatrical can never, in any sense, be "dramatic" in the proper meaning of the word, and it is a pity that the phrase has become so common as to be accepted. Mr. Grein's criticism is of the theatre, concerning which he is an enthusiast. Herein, as we think, lies the pathos of his situation. A Dutchman, we believe, by race, Mr. Grein came to the front in stage matters, some years ago, in the "dual rôle" of champion of foreign plays in England and pleader for an English school of drama. An alien by birth, Mr. Grein has distinguished himself by being, in regard to our native theatre, more patriotic than the patriots. He did his best to make contemporary English plays known and appreciated on the Continent; and if he supported English representations of plays by Ibsen, Björnson, Sudermann, and others, it was, we have no doubt, because he thought that a study of foreign methods and ideals would benefit both the English playwright and the English playgoer.

Now, after much striving both with pen and with voice, Mr. Grein publishes a book, compounded of his newspaper criticisms in French and English, which opens with a paper on "La Décadence du Théâtre Anglais." "Le théâtre Anglais est en plein déclin, après une renaissance fort courte": so wrote Mr. Grein in La Revue d'Art Dramatique in 1897, and, as he has republished the sentence, that, presumably, is his opinion still. The spectacle is sad. Sadder even is that presented by Mr. Grein in his discourse on "The Grave Responsibilities of Dramatic Criticism." He takes both himself and his craft too seriously. For criticism (in the best sense of the term) the present-day English theatre rarely supplies pabulum. Every now and then there is an interesting Shakespearean revival, occasionally there is an original play above the common. But how often, altogether, do these things happen? How frequently is our drama or our acting worthy of careful and sustained analysis, of thoughtful and judicious praise? No critic of the stage, however able, can hope to live in literature unless he has had for discussion material of permanent interest and value. That material absent, "into the night go one and all"—critic and criticised alike. (John Long.)

POTTERY AND PORCELAIN. BY FREDERICK LITCHFIELD.

This is an expansion of a small handbook upon the same subject which is too well known to collectors to need praise. It is itself an imposing and most convenient volume. A brief sketch of the history of ceramics, of the ancient, mediæval, and renaissance types of pottery, and of the introduction of porcelain into Europe, is followed by some chapters of hints to collectors, a subject on which Mr. Litchfield naturally speaks with knowledge and authority. But the bulk of the book consists of an alphabetical directory of the chief factories, which is liberally illustrated both by facsimiles of "marks" and by excellent photographs of the leading types of ware produced by each. The beginner in this fascinating study could have no more useful book of reference. The only improvement which we could suggest would be a short bibliography of the somewhat extensive literature of the subject. Mr. Litchfield gives incidentally many bibliographical references, but they are dispersed. The value of every book of research or reference is doubled by a proper bibliography. Mr. Litchfield's historical chapters contain entertaining as well as instructive reading. Chinese porcelain reached England early in the sixteenth century. As late as 1588 Lord Burleigh sent Queen Elizabeth "a porringer of white porselyn and a cup of green porselyn" as a valuable New Year's gift. Porcelain takes its name from the Italian porcellana, a shell shaped like a pig's back, and, as the Chinese carefully kept the secret of its composition from European travellers, it was popularly believed to be made of egg-shells and sea-shells pounded small and buried in the earth for a hundred years. Mr. Litchfield quotes—Pope, is it?

True fame, like porcel'ain earth, for years must lay Buried and mixed with elemental clay.

We are prepared to cap him with Donne, who used the same metaphor, a century before, and still more happily. It is in his "Funeral Elegy on the Lady Markham":

As men of China, after an age's stay
Do take up porcelain, where they buried clay:
So at this grave, her timbre—which refines
The diamonds, rubies, sapphires, pearls and mines,
Of which this flesh was—her soul shall inspire
Flesh of such stuff, as God, when His last fire
Annuls this world, to recompense it, shall Make and then name th' elixir of this all.

The belief, in its various forms, is gravely discussed by Sir Thomas Browne in his Pseudodoxia Epidemica. (Truslove, Hanson & Co. 15s. net.)

RIDING, DRIVING, AND KINDRED SPORTS. BY T. F. DALE.

A new series called "The Sports Library" is now being issued under the editorship of Mr. Howard H. Spicer, the first volume of which is on riding, driving, and kindred sports, by T. F. Dale, M.A. No better choice could have been made for the opening volume, as Mr. Dale is a well-known authority on polo, and is also an excellent mentor on the subjects of hunting and racing. In a little over two hundred pages Mr. Dale covers horsemanship, riding to hounds, polo, driving, hog-hunting, jackal-hunting, and racing, and on all of them he has something fresh and instructive to say in a pleasant and straightforward manner. His chapter on tandem driving is very good, and his hints will be found of much use, for it is always necessary and wise to remember that "if your leader will not work and wishes to turn round you cannot really prevent him. Much must be trusted to the honour of a leader." Tact and persuasion are needed, and Mr. Dale's remarks are worthy of all attention. This is a choap and useful little book. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

Fiction.

Parson Kelly. By A. E. W. Mason and Andrew Lang. (Longmans. 6s.)

THIS Jacobite novel is dedicated by the authors to the Baron Tanneguy de Wogan, a descendant of the Chevalier Nicholas de Wogan, upon whose deeds the narrative is "founded." It seems to us that the narrative is too much founded upon the deeds of the said chevalier—that is to say, it is too documentary, too servile in its attitude towards history, and too correct in the exactness of its detail. As a well of information concerning the frustrate "Bloody Popish Plot" with which it so exhaustively deals, it probably could not be bettered; but there are places where the authors appear to have sacrificed legitimate dramatic effect to considerations which should surely be minor in a work of art. We cannot claim to be specialists upon Mr. Lang's own special period; but if we are mistaken in assuming this earnest zeal for historical accuracy on the part of the authors, then so much the worse for the book, which could not claim to be good history when it did not happen to be good fiction.

For the most part, however, Parson Kelly is good fiction of a lightsome kind. It has no passion and little feeling, but it is a diverting picture of manners; and if the heart is continually disappointed in the expectation of moving drama, the fancy is well feasted upon wit and pleasing inventions. The three principal characters are George Kelly, the Chevalier Wogan, and Lady Oxford. Of these the first and last are most effectively realised; Wogan is consistently too old for his age. Lady Oxford, that unconscious jade, is exceedingly well done throughout, and the scenes in which she figures have a liveliness all their own. Her ultimate appearance, aged forty, as a convert to "the people called Methodists," is one of the cleverest things in the book. The long recital, too, of Lady Oxford's somewhat stirring "rout," in which Wogan, Kelly, Lady Mary Wortley Montague, and that Rose Townsley whom Kelly afterwards married, all pit themselves against her, is contrived in Mr. Mason's best sustained manner. We think we can trace Mr. Lang's hand and influence, and we are certain we can trace his erudition, in every chapter. The interview in the carriage between Wogan and "Scrope," where the latter criticises the young man's poem to Lady Oxford, "Strephon to Smilinda running barefoot over the grass in a gale of wind," makes excellent "Lang":

"You seem to me to have missed the opportunity afforded by your gale of wind. A true poet would surely have made great play with the lady's petticoats."

"Smilinda had none," again replied Wogan in triumph, and he emptied his glass.

"No shoes and stockings and no petticoats," said he in a shocked voice. "It is well you wrote a poem about her instead of painting her portrait" . . .

"Don't you comprehend, my friend," exclaimed Wogan, "that Smilinda's a nymph, an ancient Roman nymph?"

"Oh, she's a nymph!"

"Yes, and so wears no clothes but a sort of linsey-wolsey garment kirtled up to her knees."

"Well, let that pass. But here's a line I view with profound discontent. 'The grass will all its prickles hide.' Thistles have prickles, Mr. Wogan, but the grass has blades like you and me; only, unlike you and me, it has no scabbards to sheathe them in."

"Well," said Wogan, "but that's very wittily said."

"Now here's something more. The wind, you observe, makes lutestrings of Smilinda's hair."

"There is little fault to be discovered in that image, I fancy," said Wogan, lifting his glass to his lips with a smile.

"It is a whimsical image," replied Scrope. "It is as much as to call her hair catgut."

There is the matter here for a leading article in the Daily News upon the latest darling of literary five-o'clocks

Further Adventures of Captain Kettle. By Cutcliffe Hyne.
(Pearson Ltd. 6s.)

THIS sequence of stories about the already famous Captain Kettle may be called his Purgatorio, the purgatory being the Congo country and other various remote hinterlands and seaboards of the Dark Continent. Mr. Hyne describes the river Congo with admirable realism in a score of passages; also the native, the Belgian, and the Englishman. And, further, he amplifies the quaintly noble character of Captain Kettle till the man is more lovable, truculent, and miraculous than ever. Much might be urged against the Captain's morals and manners, but nothing against his heart. He is of the race of great little men. We do not know that these "further adventures" are better or worse than the original adventures; but they are very good; they must decidedly count among the best magazine work of the day. Indeed, it is astonishing how Mr. Hyne has continued to be popular without offending a nice literary taste. He writes well; he has imagination (only a strong creative force could have moulded Kettle), and he has a fine broad outlook. Much, of course, he owes to Kipling. We should call him a disciple rather than an imitator of Kipling. Constantly the river scenes remind us of Judson and the Empire, and not greatly to the disadvantage of the disciple. Mr. Hyne's sense of space, his appreciation of a big deed, his feeling for ships, the sea, cleanliness, nationalities, banjos, and flags, his notion of the romance of that modern machinery which knits together the British empire—all these things constitute him of the Kipling school. The last story in the book, the saving of the passengers of the burning emigrant ship Grosser Carl is, perhaps, the best and most characteristic. And might not this passage have been written by the author of Captains Courageous?

But, as it chanced, towards the evening of next day, a hurrying ocean greyhound overtook them in her race from New York towards the East, and the bunting talked out long sentences in the commercial code from the wire span between the Flamingo's masts. Fresh quartettes of flags flicked up on both steamers, were acknowledged, and were replaced by others; and when the liner drew up alongside, and stopped with reversed propellers, she had a loaded boat ready swung out in davits, which dropped in the water the moment she had lost her way. The bunting had told the pith of the tale.

When the two steamers' bridges were level, the liner's captain touched his cap, and a crowd of well-dressed passengers below him listened wonderingly. "Afternoon, Captain. Got 'em all?"

"Afternoon, Captain. Oh, we didn't lose any. But a few drowned their silly selves before we started to shepherd them. . . . Sorry for spoiling your passage."

The liner captain looked at his watch.

"Can't be helped. It's in a good cause, I suppose, though the mischief of it is we were trying to pull down the record by an hour or so. The boat, there! Are you going to be all night with that bit of stuff?"

The cases of food were transhipped with frantic haste, and the boat returned. The greyhound leaped out into her stride again the moment she had hooked on, and shot ahead, dipping a smart blue ensign in salute. The Flamingo dipped a dirty red ensign and followed, and before dark fell, once more had the ocean to herself.

The desired effect is rendered with precision. It is to such work as this that the epithet "graphic" may be properly applied.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the week's Fiction are not necessarily final.
Reviews of a selection will follow.]

THE WATERS OF EDERA.

By OUIDA.

The scene of Ouida's new novel is laid in Italy, where we find a commercial company bent on diverting the course of a river, thus reducing a village to destitution. The principal character is a priest, Don Silvario, and the exploring eye finds passages like this: "As they bound the sheaves, and bore the water-jars and went in groups through the seeding grass to chapel, or fountain, or shrine, they had the free, frank grace of an earlier time; just such as these had carried the votive doves to the altars of Venus, and chaunted by the waters of Edera the worship of Isis and her son." A story of strong passions and purposes. (Methuen. 6s.)

SAVROLA.

By WINSTON SPENCER CHURCHILL.

Mr. Churchill's first novel. It was written in 1897, and is dedicated to the officers of the 4th Hussars. The book is a spirited description of a revolution in the imaginary state of Laurania. Savrola, a young democrat, is the hero, and it is owing to his genius (he is a wonderful orator) that the tyranny of the President is overthrown. The love interest is small, but important, for Savrola meets his affinity in the President's wife. The descriptions of fighting by land and sea are excellent. (Longmans. 6s.)

MIRRY-ANN.

By NORMA LORIMER.

A story of Manx fisher and Methodist life by the author of Josiah's Wife. Miss Lorimer is practically a native of the Isle of Man, and therefore she writes with knowledge. Mirry-Ann—"old Ned Gawne's girl"—is introduced as a preacher. In the opinion of the Squire's sister, "her religion's all humbug. . . . I feel sure she is perfectly well aware how much more striking she looks dressed like a Quaker than decked out in curled crows' feathers and cotton roses, like the other village girls." (Methuen. 6s.)

AN OCTAVE.

By W. E. NORRIS.

Eight short stories by the author of Giles Ingilby. The first tells how Miser Morgan was transformed into a man of generosity, and how his son was thought to be drowned, but was living and well. The tales are slight, but only Mr. Norris could have written them. (Methuen. 6s.)

THE CAMBRIC MASK.

By R. W. CHAMBERS.

AN American story of avarice (and other passions) by an author who is best known for weird and cosmopolitan romances. Some of the most unlovely money-grubbers in fiction are revealed to the reader, notably Joshua Creed. "'Business,' said Creed, trying to smile till it hurt his jaw. 'A word,' he continued playfully, 'which ain't in the bright lexicon of the fair sect'; and he executed a wink with one horny eyelid." (Macmillan. 6s.)

FÉO.

By MAX PEMBERTON.

Féo is an operatic singer beloved of Jerome, a scion of the Royal house of Austria. Austrian diplomatists spirit her away to Paris to keep her from the young prince, and for a while diplomacy wins. But with the assistance of a mighty undergraduate from Cambridge, Jerome conquers in the end. En route is much plotting and counter-plotting. (Hodder & Stoughton. 6s.)

A DAUGHTER OF THE MARIONIS. By E. P. OPPENHEIM.

The Marionis were a Sicilian family, and Margharita was the daughter. Over her Count Leonardo kept guard with the jealousy that only a Sicilian nobleman can muster. Margharita's love for a hated Englishman and Lord St. Maurice's love for Margharita's friend lead to quarrels, intrigue, and the duello. An intense romance. (Ward, Lock. 3s. 6d.)

WILES OF THE WICKED.

By WILLIAM LE QUEUX.

Another sensational story such as only Mr. Le Queux can devise. Its object is to clear the honour of one of the most powerful of the Imperial Houses in Europe. While smoking a cigar in King's-road, Chelsea (after an evening at the Bolton's), the narrator's tongue is pricked by a poisoned needle hidden in the cigar, and he forthwith becomes unconscious for six years. Eventually, however, all is well, and he marries Her Imperial Highness the Archduchess Marie-Elizabeth-Mabel. (White. 6s.)

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates for Yearly Subscriptions ..... 20s. including postage.

American Agents for the ACADEMY: Brentano's, 31, Union-square, New York.

Sidney Lanier.

A FRIEND asked me the other day where a certain quotation in one of my articles came from. This was the quotation:

As the marsh-hen secretly builds on the watery sod,
Behold I will build me a nest on the greatness of God:
I will fly in the greatness of God as the marsh-hen flies
In the freedom that fills all the space 'twixt the marsh and the skies:

By so many roots as the marsh-grass sends in the sod
I will heartily lay me a-hold on the greatness of God:
Oh, like to the greatness of God is the greatness within
The range of the marshes, the liberal marshes of Glynn.

It made me proud and happy thus to have an opportunity of introducing another reader to the poetry of Sidney Lanier. Seven years ago Messrs. Gay & Bird published an edition of his poems in this country, yet he remains virtually unknown—and hundreds of poetry lovers are the poorer for it. I had been fortunate enough to know him two or three years before, through an article by Mr. Stedman in an American magazine. Some of the extracts then made had never forsaken my memory. With the publication of Messrs. Gay & Bird's edition I took the opportunity of knowing the whole poems; and two of my friends, not inglorious as poets themselves, will, I know, recall a night of poetical debauch—I mean a debauch of poetry!—in which I passed on my new-found treasure to them. They thought him no less wonderful than I did; and his strenuous, romantic, pitiful history moved them as it moved me. For Lanier fought a battle with death (technically, consumption) to which Keats's classic consumption was child's play. It is so easy to fight anything, even consumption, if you have nothing else to do; but if you have a home to keep going as well, and only a pen to keep it going with—well, you look upon John Keats as one of the sybarites of immortality. Fortunately, Lanier had a flute too, and thereby hangs much of his history, as well as the explanation of his temperament and gift. Lanier was one of the few poets who have loved music as well as, if not more than, poetry; and the music in him had an interesting ancestry: it came all the way from one Jerome Lanier, a Huguenot refugee, a musical composer, at the court of Queen Elizabeth, and it was successively transmitted by Jerome's son Nicholas, who was "in high favour" as a musician with both James I. and Charles I., and Nicholas's son Nicholas apparently no less favoured by Charles II. "A portrait of the elder Nicholas Lanier, by his friend Van Dyck," I read in Mr. W. Hayes Ward's memorial introduction to Lanier's poems, "was sold, with other pictures belonging to Charles I., after his execution." Thus Lanier's flute originally came from that enchanted period of English music when Campion was making his "Books of Aires." There can be few more romantic instances of the transmission of taste and faculty than this reincarnation of Stuart music in a boy born at Macon, in Georgia, February 3, 1842. As a child he learned to play, "without instruction," on every available instrument—"flute, organ, piano, violin, guitar, and banjo, especially devoting himself to the flute in deference to his father, who feared for him the powerful fascination of the violin." In fact, his relatives generally were more alarmed than happy about his music, as a man's relatives—very naturally—are at the appearance in him of a serious passion for any art. Besides, music used to induce in the young Lanier states of trance ecstasy which left him shaken and exhausted. That ecstasy, so feared by his friends, is, we shall see, the very quality of highest value in his poetry. But that all this artistic sensibility meant no lack of manly fibre the war between North and South was soon to prove. At the age of nineteen he was drafted—not forgetting his flute—into the Second Georgia Battalion of the Confederate Army, and with that army he was to remain, seeing much active service, and no little distinguishing himself, for four years. Among other things he was a blockade-runner. His blockade-running resulted in five months' imprisonment in Point Look-Out, from which he was released in February, 1865, to do a long tramp home to Georgia. It was the strain of this that gave his apparently hereditary consumption its opportunity; and henceforth, till his death at the age of thirty-nine, his life was to be a long fight with death—a fight carried on with a heroism which, in one or two instances, seems almost excessive, and from which it almost seems he might have been spared by friends who helped him now and then so much, that it seems as though they should have helped him more. He gained his livelihood during this time partly by writing and lecturing, and partly by his flute. He was "the first flute" in the Peabody Concerts at Baltimore, and his director has written of him as something like a great performer. Only nine months before his death we read that "when too feeble to raise his food to his mouth, with a fever temperature of 104 degrees," he pencilled his finest poem, called "Sunrise." Such, indeed, is what Mr. William Watson calls "the imperative breath of song."

All this, then, and how much more, lay behind the quotation which took my friend's fancy. That quotation is from an all too curtailed series of "Hymns of the Marshes," which Lanier had intended to make one big ambitious poem. There are four "hymns" in all, but only two are of real importance, namely, "Sunrise" and the "Marshes of Glynn." In fact, had he written all his other poems, and missed writing these (striking, suggestive, and fine-lined as those other poems often are), he could hardly have been said to succeed in his high poetic ambition—as by these two poems I think he must be allowed to succeed. In the other poems you see many of the qualities, perhaps all the qualities, which strike you in the "Hymns"—the impassioned observation of nature, the Donne-like "metaphysical" fancy, the religious and somewhat mystic elevation of feeling expressed often in terms of a deep imaginative understanding of modern scientific conceptions; in fact, you find all save the important quality of that ecstasy which in the "Hymns" fuses all into one splendid flame of adoration upon the altar of the visible universe. The ecstasy of modern man as he stands and beholds the sunrise, or the coming of the stars, or any such superb, elemental glory, has perhaps never been so keenly translated into verse. Those who heard Lanier play remarked upon "the strange violin effects which he conquered from the flute." Is it fanciful to feel that in these long, sweeping, and heart-breakingly sensitive lines, Lanier equally cheated his father, who, we have seen, "feared for him the fascination of the violin"? I shall need a long quotation, and even that may, properly, be inadequate to illustrate what I mean. Lanier is often exquisite and lovingly learned in detail; but his verse is large in movement, and needs room.

The tide's at full: the marsh with flooded streams
Glimmers, a limpid labyrinth of dreams.
Each winding creek in grave entrancement lies
A rhapsody of morning-stars. The skies
Shine scant with one forked galaxy,—
The marsh brags ten: looped on his breast they lie.

Oh, what if a sound should be made !
 Oh, what if a bound should be laid
 To this bow - and - string tension of beauty and silence a-spring,—
 To the bend of beauty the bow, or the hold of silence the string !
 I fear me, I fear me yon dome of diaphonous gleam
 Will break as a bubble o'er-blown in a dream,—
 Yon dome of too-tenuous tissues of space and of night,
 Over-weighted with stars, over-freighted with light,
 Over-sated with beauty and silence, will seem
 But a bubble that broke in a dream,
 If a bound of degree to this grace be laid,
 Or a sound or a motion made.

But no: it is made: list! somewhere,—mystery, where?
 In the leaves? in the air?
 In my heart? is a motion made:
 'Tis a motion of dawn, like a flicker of shade on shade.
 In the leaves 'tis palpable: low multitudinous stirring Upwards through the woods; the little ones, softly con-ferriog,
 Have settled my lord's to be looked for; so; they are still;
 But the air and my heart and the earth are a-thrill,—
 And look where the wild duck sails round the bend of the river,—
 And look where a passionate shiver
 Expectant is bending the blades
 Of the marsh-grass in serial shimmers and shades,—
 And invisible wings, fast fleeting, fast fleeting,
 Are beating
 The dark overhead as my heart beats,—and steady and free
 Is the ebb-tide flowing from marsh to sea—
 (Run home, little streams,
 With your lapfuls of stars and dreams),—
 And a sailor unseen is hoisting a-peak,

For list, down the inshore curve of the creek
 How merrily flutters the sail,—
 And lo! in the East! Will the East unveil?
 The East is unvoiled, the East hath confessed
 A flush: 'tis dead; 'tis alive: 'tis dead, ere the West
 Was aware of it: nay, 'tis abiding, 'tis unwithdrawn:
 Have a care, sweet Heaven! 'Tis Dawn.

I think this bears out what I have said—more than I have said. Anyone who pleases may find little literary faults. Even I could do that. But if only I could praise it as it deserves! Those who should imagine that Lanier wrote in this apparently "loose," Atlantic-roller, metre from metrical ignorance are, of course, very much mistaken. On the contrary, he was a very learned metrist, as those who have grappled with his book on The Science of English Verse will know. In that book the inherited music in him came out once more as theory, his contention being that metrical law must be based on musical law. Personally, I have no opinion on the subject; and, however valuable in its province Lanier's treatise may be, I can only wish he had spent the precious six weeks it took to write it (only six weeks for over 300 closely-reasoned pages—consumption too!) in writing another of his "Hymns of the Marshes."

I wonder whom these learned treatises on metre benefit. Not the poets, I am thinking. I imagine that Mr. Stephen Phillips would have written as good blank-verse though Mr. Robert Bridges's treatise on Miltonic blank-verse had never seen that dim light of publicity vouchsafed to technical masterpieces. It is to be feared that poetry comes by nature—and there is no poetry without a musical ear—and that all the metrical training a poet needs is birched into him at school. Indeed, I think most poets take lessons in metre after they are famous; for fear of awkward questions. The only training in metre a poet needs is the reading of great poets; not anatomically, but just—naturally. The study of metre is the study of skeletons. The study of skeletons never yet helped a man to dance.

R. LE GALLIENNE.

Things Seen.

The King of Beasts.

WHEN the last of the performing dogs had trotted from the stage, a thrill of expectation electrified the vast audience: the supreme moment was at hand. Automatically a cage, twenty feet high, rose from the ground and encircled the arena. Into it slouched a lion—sullen, indifferent. He glanced contemptuously at the thousands who were gathered on the other side of the bars, blinked at the lights, and settled down. One by one his companions followed till the arena was alive with twenty-one "forest-bred lions," tamed, ready to go through their tricks for the amusement of the children of men. Then the tamer entered, the lion-king, tall and straight, clad gaily, and with a perpetual smile on his face. He carried two whips, and when one of the beasts snarled he boxed his ears, or rapped him over the paws. How amusing!
 The twenty-one lions (not a child there but had been taught to call the lion "the king of beasts") played at see-saw with one another, and among them chiding, cajoling, frowning, smiling, moved the tamer. It was a unique entertainment—and yet, somehow, one did not feel unalloyed pleasure in the spectacle of a dandy foreign gentleman rapping twenty-one lions over the knuckles when they misbehaved. Foolish, perhaps, but I could not free my mind from the thought of what the lion stands for in the Imperial history of my native land.
 On the Royal Standard he ramps and roars to every wind that blows. Here with bleared eyes and broken spirit he plays at see-saw in a circus.

Sea Gulls.

"PENNY a bag?" said a boy, thrusting a paperful of sprats towards me. I waved him away: Sprats—and not fresh either—on Blackfriars Bridge—on Sunday afternoon? Absurd. And yet a minute later I was leaning over the parapet in a long row of men, throwing the fish to the sea gulls. The birds were a thousand strong; they obliterated the river; the world seemed full of grey wings and hard, wide, greedy eyes. Backwards and forwards, up and down, they flew and fluttered; their wings beat within a foot of our faces; one's eyes ached with watching them. One could go mad in the midst of fluttering white birds. It was restlessness supreme, but now and then would come a moment of relief, a pause in the tension, when a falling morsel, far below, an inch from the river, was intercepted by a swooping bird sailing masterfully, splendidly out of the darkness of the bridge into the light. The peace, the assurance, the cool refreshment of that majestic curve! It was like a sudden hush in the midst of a terrific discord.

Age.

I VENTURED to ask him yesterday: "Do you remember the building of the present London Bridge?" "Perfectly," he replied. "I was there on the opening day.
 The river was packed with barges, and the barges were packed with people. At first I appeared to have a poor chance of seeing William and Adelaide, but, when they arrived, there was a great surging of the crowd and without any will of my own I was carried to the front and saw everything. Oh, yes, I have crossed the older bridge many a time. The water fell six feet when it passed the arches, and shooting the bridge was a sport and a risk.
 That old bridge crossed the river a little lower down than the new one, so that the Monument stood close to the bridge-end. There was a rumour that it was unsafe, and many a time I went in fear lest it should fall on me.
 The fire glowed; a telephone bell rang in another room.
 I thought that Time has its defeats.

A Fervent Bookman.*

MR. BIRRELL is not a great critic. He is a rollicking, irresponsible, lovable dog of a reader. Hence these important looking volumes do not suit his essays half so well as the old dumpy, wide-margined, green-backed books which started with Obiter Dicta. They are too formal for such very informal talk about books as Mr. Birrell's, and they seem to turn some of the old fun into buffoonery. "Literature is a solace and a charm," says Mr. Birrell, and adds: "I will not stop for a moment in my headlong course to compare it with tobacco." Yet Mr. Birrell is continually stopping in his headlong course to do things as trivial and irrelevant. He has the trick of beginning an essay a hundred miles from its subject; thus, a paper on Sterne opens with a reference to a speech of the late Sir Edward Watkin to a meeting of railway shareholders; and in his essay on Milton Mr. Birrell illustrates the poet's dramatic treatment of God with a twopenny-halfpenny story about "an eminent barrister."

And yet in blabbing about his arm-chair relations with books Mr. Birrell is delightful. His secret is merely this, that he reads his books with zest, and loves to talk about them in the position in which he chooses to think that Milton dictated Paradise Lost—swinging his leg over the arm of his chair. That is an attitude in which it is easy to visualise Mr. Birrell, though as often as not he reminds us of a lecturer who gets off a good point, and then takes a happy drink from the adjacent tumbler. Mr. Birrell gives us preferences, not criticisms. They are often preferences which have good criticism on their side, but his language is not: "This is good," but "I like this; don't you?" He quotes the final lines of Dr. Johnson's "Vanity of Human Wishes," and then (seizing the tumbler) says: "If this is not poetry, may the name perish."

It is these personal, honest verdicts that delight us in Mr. Birrell's pages. His quotations are often most happily inspired, and his playful insight sometimes works wonders in half a page. Take this story of Cowper:

In 1800, the year of Cowper's death, a relative of his, a Dr. Johnson, wrote a letter to John Newton, sending good wishes to the old gentleman and to his niece, Miss Catlett; and added: "Poor dear Mr. Cowper, oh that he were tolerable as he was even in those days when, dining at his house in Buckinghamshire with you and that lady, I could not help smiling to see his pleasant face when he said: 'Miss Catlett, shall I give you a piece of cutlet?'" It was a very small joke indeed, and it is a very humble little quotation, but for me it has long served, in the mind's eye, for a vignette of the poet, doomed yet débonnaire. Romney's picture, with that frightful nightcap and eyes gleaming with madness, is a pestilent thing one would forget if one could. Cowper's pleasant face when he said, "Miss Catlett, shall I give you a piece of cutlet?" is a much more agreeable picture to find a small corner for in one's memory.

That is delightful. All Mr. Birrell's remarks smack of book-in-hand judgments, formed in the glow of the fire-light; and the genial untidy style is appropriate to the bluff, discursive criticism. Here are a few specimens:

She [Hannah More] flounders like a huge conger-eel in an ocean of dingy morality.

Macaulay's position never admitted of doubt. We know what to expect, and we always get it. It is like the old days of W. G. Grace's cricket. We went to see the leviathan slog for six, and we saw it. We expected him to do it, and he did it. So with Macaulay. . . .

Great is De Quincey, but so e'aborate are his movements, so tremendous his literary contortions, that when you have done with him you feel it would be cruelty to keep him stretched upon the rack of his own style for a moment longer.

There are not many better pastimes for a middle-aged man who does not care for first principles or modern novels than to hunt George Dyer up-and-down Charles Lamb.

What silk merchant's apprentice in these hard times, finding a place behind Messrs. Marshall & Snelgrove's counter not jumping with his genius, dare hope by the easy expedient of publishing a pamphlet on "The Present State of Wit" to become domestic steward to a semi-royal Duchess, and the friend of Mr. Lewis Morris and Mr. Lecky, who are, I suppose, our nineteenth-century equivalents for Alexander Pope and Jonathan Swift?

There are any number of such ejaculations in Mr. Birrell's essays. They will pall on some minds. The man who will have his joke is sure to make a great many poor jokes. Mr. Birrell does. But his preaching often amuses when his jokes fail, and the words of Johnson, Burke, Pope, Lamb, and Hazlitt are so mingled with Mr. Birrell's own that we read on and on in easy delight.

Correspondence.

Audi Alteram Partem.

SIR,—Mr. Watson, as a poet, has no sincerer admirer than myself, and I appreciate the ingenuity of his parable; but a concise parable is not always the soundest way of presenting a difficult and very complicated political problem.

I doubt not that many of your readers who share my admiration for Mr. Watson's work will be impressed, and possibly misled, by his brilliant little fallacy; and this must be my apology for venturing upon a counter parable, clumsy enough, but having in it, I trust, the saving element of veracity.

A Poet's Parable.

A certain man, quitting his own house, went to lodge in the house of another, and there demanded to have voice and authority in the ordering of the whole household.

And the other said: "No. You are free to remain or to depart, but this is my house, and I will suffer in it no second master outmastering me."

So the lodger called unto his brave and gallant kinsmen to bludgeon that householder into submission.

A Cosmic Process.

A slave-fancier, feeling injured by the emancipation of his slaves, quitted his own country and took possession of a vast estate claimed by a black man.

Some squatters, with his consent, took to working the mines on a neglected part of the estate.

When the slave-fancier saw that their earnings were large, he forcibly deprived them of part of them.

Whereupon the squatters said: "Give us a share of authority in the ordering of the estate, and we will render thee a share of our earnings."

But the slave-fancier replied: "This is my estate, and I will suffer in it no second masters; and ye speaking a foreign tongue shall train up your offspring in mine."

And before the squatters had time to summon aid, he mustered his braves to bludgeon them on the spot.

—I am, &c.,

FRED. JACKSON.

Haslemere: Feb. 14, 1900.

* Collected Essays. By Augustine Birrell. 2 vols. (Elliot Stock.)

Sir Thomas Urquhart.

SIR,—In your notice of my book, Sir Thomas Urquhart of Cromartie, your critic has inadvertently ascribed to me an error which I did not commit. He quotes the following passage and quite truly describes it as "remarkable": "It is probable that [Urquhart] died much sooner, a victim in all likelihood to fiery restlessness of spirit. This conjecture is, however, improbable." And he adds: "How can a man bring himself to think so loosely?" The first part of the passage is itself a quotation from Sir Theodore Martin. The second is my comment upon it. Sir Theodore Martin thought it probable that Urquhart died several years before the date usually given as that of his death, I think the date usually given is correct. The use of inverted commas in the text of the volume makes my meaning plain, though, as I have said, your critic has inadvertently misread the passage. I quite agree with him in the severe criticism he has passed upon my book, and have no doubt but that the volume contains many more flaws than those which he has pointed out; but I hope that in justice to me you will kindly insert this letter in your next issue.—I am, &c.,

Lerwick, Shetland:

J. WILLCOCK.

Feb. 7, 1900.

New Books Received.

[These notes on some of the New Books of the week are preliminary to Reviews that may follow.]

LAW WITHOUT LAWYERS. BY TWO BARRISTERS-AT-LAW.

Into this volume of more than seven hundred pages has been gathered whatever legal information is most likely to be required by those who consult it. It may be described as a sort of first aid to litigants, and probably not its least service will be to restrain its readers from going to law. Many good citizens hardly come in contact with the law between the cradle and the grave, but even to these this work may be useful as a means of getting light on the conduct of law cases and criminal trials of public interest. To tradesmen, rate-payers, masters and servants, innkeepers, testators, and many other classes and characters, special sections are addressed. (Murray. 6s.)

SONGS OF THE GLENS OF ANTRIM. BY MOIRA O'NEILL.

Miss Moira O'Neill's wistful poems of the love of Ireland have pleased many readers of Blackwood's Magazine and the Spectator. She finds words for the old sigh of the exile, often banished no farther than to England—in hay-harvest.

Ov-r here in England I'm helpin' wi' the hay,
An' I wisht I was in Ireland the livelong day;
Weary on the English hay, an' sorra take the wheat!
Och! Corrymeela an' the blue sky over it.

There's a deep dumb river flowin' by beyont the heavy trees,

This livin' air is moithered wi' the hummin' o' the bees;
I wisht I'd hear the Claddagh burn go runnin' through the heat

Past Corrymeela, wi' the blue sky over it.

There are twenty-five short poems—shamrocks all. (Blackwood. 3s. 6d.)

THE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD. BY HAROLD E. GORST.

This is the new volume in the "Victorian Era" series, which includes biographies, histories, and scientific memoirs. Mr. Gorst says in his Preface:

Since the appearance of the existing biographies of Lord Beaconsfield, fresh light has been thrown upon an incident in his career by the recent publication, amongst the private papers of Sir Robert Peel, of a letter addressed by Disraeli to Peel in 1841. It will be remembered that Disraeli, in 1846, denied having asked Peel for office five years before; and on that account the letter in question has been generally regarded as affording proof of a mean and dishonourable action on his part. I have submitted this letter to a high legal authority, and he at once pointed out to me the fact that Disraeli made no direct application for a post in the government. . . . Both the letter and its explanation find a place in this volume, and no doubt the unprejudiced reader will readily adopt the latter, in preference to tarnishing the otherwise spotless reputation of a statesman to whom the present generation owes a deep debt of gratitude.

(Blackie &amp; Son. 2s. 6d.)

In addition to the foregoing, we have received:

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

De Margerie (A.), "St. Francis of Sales".....	(Duckworth)	3/0
Budde (K.), Religion of Israel to the Exile.....	(Putnam)
Gasquoine (C. P.), Scientific Theology.....	(Watts & Co.)	1/3
Fraser (W. F.), A Cloud of Witnesses: Part I., St. Athanasius.....	(Wells Gardner)	3/8
Ingram (A. F. W.), Reasons for Faith.....	(S.P.C.K.)	0/6
Wynne (G. R.), Conditions of Salvation as Set Forth by our Lord.....	(S.P.C.K.)	0/6

POETRY, CRITICISM, AND BELLES LETTRES.

Hall (P.), A Few Short Poems.....	(Burleigh) net	1/0
Henderson (Rev. Gen.), Lady Navine and Her Songs.....	(Gardner)
Arnold (Sir E.), Golden Pages.....	(Burleigh)	1/0
Jack (Adolphus A.), The Prince: A Play.....	(Macmillan) net	3/6
Smith (W. F.), The First Edition of the Fourth Book of the Heroic Deeds and Sayings of the Noble Pantagruel.....	(Privately Printed)
Furtrum (A. J.), Music of the Waves.....	(Jarrold)
Adams (Arthur H.), Maoriland, and Other Verses.....	(Bulletin Newspaper Co., Ltd., Sydney)

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

Tschudi (C), Napoleon's Mother.....	Swan Sonnenschein	7/6
Renouvier (Ch.), Victor Hugo.....	(A. Colliu et Cie.)
De Albin (F.), Marie Antoinette and the Diamond Necklace.....	(Swan Sonnenschein)	5/0
McNeil Rushforth (G.), Carlo Crivelli.....	(Bell)
Dowson (E.), Memoirs of Cardinal Dubois. 2 vols.....	(Smithers & Co.)
Brown (John), Puritan Preaching in England.....	(Hodder & Stoughton)	6/0
Stokes (G. T.), Some Worthies of the Irish Church.....	(Hodder & Stoughton)	6/0
Bartlet (J. V.), Eras of the Christian Church: The Apostolic Age.....	(T. & T. Clark)	6/0
Williamson (David), The Life Story of D. L. Moody.....	(Sunday School Union)	1/0
Clapham (J. H.), The Causes of the War of 1792.....	(Camb. Univ. Press)	6/0
Rosebery (Right Hon. the Earl of), Oliver Cromwell: a Eulogy and an Appreciation.....	(Melrose) net	0/8
Atkinson (C. T.), Michel de l'Hopital.....	(Longmans) net	4/0

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

Carus (Dr. Paul), Kant and Spencer: A Study of the Fallacies of Agnosticism.....	(Kegan Paul)	1/0
Sirling (James H.), What Is Thought?.....	(T. & T. Clark)	10/6

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

Robinson (C. H.), Nigeria.....	(Marshall)
--------------------------------	------------	--

EDUCATIONAL.

Plaistow (F. G.) and Mills (T. R.), E-chylus: Prometheus Vincit.....	(Clive)	2/6
Speight (E. E.), The New English Poetry Book.....	(H. Marshall) net	1/0
Pearenside (C. S.), The Matriculation History of England.....	(W. B. Clive)
Navin (J. C.), The Odyssey of Homer. Book XI.....	(Camb. Univ. Press)
Tribe (Rev. O. N.), Teachers in Training.....	(S.P.C.K.)	0/6
Woodhouse (W. J.), Isocrates: De Regis.....		2/0
Gudeman (A.), Tacitus: De Vita et Moribus Julii Agricola.....	(Allyn & Bacon)

MISCELLANEOUS.

Clark (I. W.), Old Friends at Cambridge and Elsewhere.....	(Macmillan)	6/0
Bovill (Rev. J. H.), Natives under the Transvaal Flag.....	(Simpkin, Marshall)	3/3
Chapman (R. C.), Legalised Wrong.....	(Revell Co.)
Conn (H. W.), The Story of Life's Mechanism.....	(Newnes)	1/3
Cousins (J. H.), "The Voice of One".....	(Fisher Unwin) net	2/0
Cassanbon (M.), The Wisdom of Marcus Aurelius.....	(Gay & Bird)
Murray (G.), Carlyon Sahib.....	(Heinemann)
Charley (Sir W. T.), "Mending" and "Eoding".....	(Simpkin, Marshall)	2/6
Report of the U.S. Museum under the Direction of the Smithsonian Institution.....
Denmore (Emmet), Consumption and Chronic Diseases.....	(Sonnenschein)	3/0
Bowley (A. L.), Wages in the United Kingdom.....	(Camb. Univ. Press)

NEW EDITIONS.

Teonyson (Lord A.), The Princess, and Other Poems.....	(Dent)	1/6
Defoe (D.), A Journal of the Plague Year.....	(Dent)
Shakespeare (W.), Comedies, Histories, Tragedies, and Poems. Vol. VII. (Newnes)
Beekford (W.), "Vathek".....	(Greening & Co.)	3/6
Dickens (Chas.), Little Dorrit.....	(Macmillan)	3/6
Grey (Henry), The Plots of Some of the Most Famous Old English Plays.....	(Sonnenschein)	2/6
Dickens (Chas.), Christmas Books.....	(Dent) net	1/6

* * * New Novels are acknowledged elsewhere.

Our Weekly Prize Competitions.

Result of No. 21 (New Series).

WE regret to say that this Competition has been disappointing. The conditions were stated in the following terms: "Every family where writing games are popular has some game of home manufacture. We offer a prize of a guinea for the description of the best original writing game—that is to say, of the best game for an evening party in which paper, pencils, and brains are involved. The word original would not exclude a good adaptation of a well-known game; which is the form that home-made games often take." This, we think, makes some originality in the game a necessity; but, with the exception of two or three, all competitors send descriptions of games with which we have been familiar for years. The best answer—an adaptation—is this, from Mr. G. Howe, "Holwood," Grove-park, Lee, S.E.:

Everyone has heard of the "book tea" or "book at-home," but few, perhaps, have thought of adapting it to the form of a writing game. A moment's consideration will show that it can be done in a surprisingly simple manner. Suitable slips of paper having been provided, each player sketches at the top a picture or diagram representing the title of a well-known book. For example, to take a few instances: from my own knowledge, a picture of a policeman in full chase of a runaway pickpocket has been made to represent Kipling's A Fleet in Being ("A Fleeting Being"); the words "Robin Hood and his Merry Men" to represent The Forest Lovers; or portraits of Buller and Roberts to represent The Heroes. Many similar ideas will at once suggest themselves. The slips bearing these sketches are then passed round, each player in turn writing at the bottom of the slip what book he considers the sketch to represent, adding his initials, and then turning up the edge to cover what he has written. When the sketches have returned to their original owners the correct solutions are given by each player in turn, together with the guesses written on the slip, one mark being awarded the owner of every correct solution.

It is as well to limit the time for making the sketches, say, to three or five minutes, any who are not ready in time not competing in that round.

Answers received from: G. H., London; J. C. S., Dulwich; F. E. W., London; E. C. W., Oxford; B. R., London; M. H., Twyford; S., Cambridge; E. R., Coldharbour; J. C., London; A. E. H., York; E. C. M. D., Criditon; M. B. C., Egham; E. H., Didsbury; M. A. W., Watford; L. E., Budleigh Salterton; A. M., London.

Competition No. 22 (New Series).

To the current number of The Artist Mr. Charles Godfrey Leland contributes some mottoes for the fronts of houses. We quote three expressing different thoughts:

Though it a thousand years should stay,
This house at last must pass away.
And ere its shortest life be o'er
We shall have gone long, long before!

This house I've built for me and mine,
May it be of peace a shrine,
And may no enmity or sin,
Ever find its way therein!

If this house be fine or not,
That was ne'er my serious thought,
But it will have gained its ends,
Should I fill it full of friends.

A prize of a guinea is offered for the best four-lined motto suitable to be inscribed on a house. Mr. Leland's quatrains are given merely as examples: there is no need to follow their sentiments if others occur.

RULES.

Answers, addressed "Literary Competition, THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Tuesday, February 20. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found in the first column of p. 152, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. We wish to impress on competitors that the task of examining replies is much facilitated when one side only of the paper is written upon. It is also important that names and addresses should always be given. We cannot consider anonymous answers.

OUR SPECIAL PRIZE COMPETITIONS.

(For particulars see inside page of cover.)

Received during the week: The Outsider, Tetigit, Novice, A Variant, Illusion, Snubbia, "Florence Hope," "Georgiana Alexander," Adam White Queen, Redrae.

GEORGE ALLEN'S LIST.

UNIFORM EDITION of RUSKIN'S WORKS.

GIOTTO and his WORKS in PADUA. A New Small Edition, with Index, and Explanatory Criticisms of the Frescoes depicting the Life of the Holy Family. The Volume, with its 56 Illustrations, forms a Guide to the Arena Chapel. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 7s. 6d. net. [Just out.]

Crown 8vo, Cloth, gilt top, 5s. net per Vol.

PRÆTERITA. Outlines of Scenes and Thoughts per ætæ Worth of Memory in my Past Life.

Volume I.—With Engraving of "My Two Aunts"—1819 to 1839.
Volume II.—With Plates of "Old Dover Packet Jib" and "The Castle of Anney"—1839 to 1849.

Volume III.—Containing Chapters I. to IV., together with Parts I. and II. of DILECTA, and a THIRD hitherto unpublished Part, in addition to a Chronology and Comprehensive Index to the whole work, and a Plate of "The Grand Chartreuse," from a Drawing by Mr. Ruskin—1850 to 1861.

ON the OLD ROAD: a Collection of Miscellaneous Articles and Essays on Literature and Art. In 3 vols. (sold separately).

The subjects dealt with are (inter alia): My First Editor—Lord Lindsay's "Christian Art"—Eastlake's "History of Oil Painting"—Samuel Prout—Sir Joshua and Holbein—Pre-Raphaelitism—Opening of the Crystal Palace—Fiction, Fair and Foul—Fairy Stories—Usury—Home and its Economics.

SESAME and LILIES. With the Three Lectures, "Kings' Treasures," "Queens' Gardens," and "The Mystery of Life." Long Preface and Index. [40th Thousand.]

THE CROWN of WILD OLIVE: Four Essays on Work, Traffic, War, and the Future of England. With Articles on the Economy of the Kings of Prussia, and Index. [31st Thousand.]

THE TWO PATHS: Lectures on Art and its Application to Decoration and Manufacture Delivered 1858-59. With New Preface, added Note, and Index. [14th Thousand.]

A JOY for EVER (and its Price in the Market): The Substance of Two Lectures on the Political Economy of Art. With New Preface, added Articles, and Index. [12th Thousand.]

LECTURES on ART. Delivered at Oxford in 1870. Revised by the Author. With New Preface and Index. [13th Thousand.]

THE ETHICS of the DUST. Ten Lectures to Little Housewives on the Elements of Crystallisation. With Index. [60th Edition.]

MODERN PAINTERS. Complete in 5 vols. and Index. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt tops, £2 2s. net. With the 225 Woodcuts, the 1 Lithograph, and the 89 Full-page Illustrations in Photogravure and Half-Tone.

The Text includes the EPILOGUE written by Mr. RUSKIN in 1888. Vols. I. and II. (not sold separately), 11s. net; Vol. III., 8s. net; Vol. IV., 9s. net; Vol. V., 9s. net; Index, 5s. net.

THE STONES of VENICE. In 3 vols., crown 8vo. With the Full Text and the 119 Woodcuts, the 6 Plates in Colour, the other 47 Full-page Illustrations in Photogravure and Half-Tone. Each Volume sold separately, cloth, gilt top, 10s. each net.

FORS CLAVIGERA: Letters to the Labourers and Workmen of Great Britain. In 4 vols., each with an Index, and all the Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. each net.

UNTO THIS LAST. Four Essays on the First Principles of Political Economy. With Note and Index. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. net. [30th Thousand.]

SELECTIONS from RUSKIN. 2 vols., crown 8vo, each with Index and Portrait (sold separately), cloth, 6s. each net. [Fourth Edition.]

By AUGUSTUS J. C. HARE.

PARIS. An entirely New Edition. Revised and brought up to date, with 50 Illustrations, in 2 vols. (sold separately). Fcap. 8vo, cloth limp, 6s.

THE ## LITERARY YEAR BOOK, 1900.

Edited by HERBERT MORRAH.

AN ENTIRELY NEW COMPILATION.

Considerably Enlarged, with Portrait of Leo Tolstol.

Crown 8vo, 420 pages, Cloth limp, 3s. 6d.

PART I. includes:—The events of the Past Year in the Literary World—A Series of Articles dealing with the Principal Books of the Year by Messrs. ANDREW LANG, W. E. HENLEY, J. J. HES, T. H. WARREN, QUILLER COUCH, G. W. E. RUSSELL, H. WENDHAM, and other Representative Men of Letters.

Special articles on Foreign Books, The Dramatic Year, The Law of Copyright, and Book Sales. Obituary Notices

PART II. contains many new features, including—A Practically Complete list of Authors' addresses, with Titles of Books issued in 1899, and names of their Publishers—Plays produced in 1899—and much other technical information.

London: GEORGE ALLEN, 156, Charing Cross Road.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

DAVID NUTT,

IMPORTER OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
THEOLOGICAL, CLASSICAL, and EDUCATIONAL
BOOKSELLER and PUBLISHER.

Of 270-271, Strand, has REMOVED to

Nos. 57-59, LONG ACRE, W.C.

CATALOGUES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick St.
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

FOREIGN LITERATURE.

ALL interested in FOREIGN LITERATURE should write for the "BOOK CIRCULAR," FEBRUARY Number Now Ready, post free from

WILLIAMS &amp; NORGATE,

14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; 20, South
Frederick Street, Edinburgh; and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

JUST ISSUED.—POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

CATALOGUE OF SECOND-HAND BOOKS
ON ORIENTAL HISTORY, LANGUAGES, LITERATURE, &c.WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh; and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU &amp; CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

CATALOGUE OF CHOICE, USEFUL, and CURIOUS BOOKS, containing Americana—Old English Literature—Early Printing and Black Letter—Fines

Old Morocco, Armorial and Historic Bindings—Rare Tracts—
Old County Maps and Topography—Drama and Stage—Early Woodcuts—Archæology—Folk-Lore—Manuscripts—Jests—
Songs—Early Military Treatises—Medical—Singular Trials—
Scotland—and other Rareties. Post free.A. RUSSELL SMITH, 24, Great Windmill Street, London, W.
(One minute from Piccadilly Circus).

W. M. VOYNICH

Has OPENED an OFFICE at

1, SOHO SQUARE, W.,

Where he has on view a COLLECTION of

XV. & XVI. CENTURY BOOKS, EARLY
AMERICANA, &c.

The List of Unknown and Lost Books is in Preparation.

Office Hours, 10-1 and 2-5.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &amp;c.

—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class
Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet
Street, E.C., have especially built Rotary and other fast Machines
for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially built
Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page
Journals at one operation.Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence
New Journals.Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 68121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately

done. 10d. per 1,000 words. Simple and references.
Multi-Copies.—Address, Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TRAFALGAR LIBRARY and TYPE-

WRITING BUREAU (DE MONET & WALKER),
3, Trafalgar Buildings, Northumberland Avenue, W.C.—
Typing, Duplicating, Shorthand, Reporting, Translations
(all Languages). Literary References. Press Cuttings.

TYPE-WRITER.—AUTHORS' MSS.

COPIED with accuracy and despatch. Carbon Duplicates. Circulars, Examination Papers, &c.—Miss E. TIGAN, 23, Matfield Park Villas, Haverstock Hill, N.W.—Established 1884."THE ACADEMY"
LITERARY COMPETITIONS.

New Series.—No. 22.

*All readers attempting this week's
Competition (described fully on page
151) must cut out this Coupon
and enclose it with their reply.*THE RUSKIN UNION.—MEMBERSHIP FORMS may be had from Mr. MARK H. JUDER, Treasurer, 7, Pall Mall; or Rev. J. B. BOORN, Hon. Sec., 42, The Albany, W.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, CHESHIRE.

An UNSECTARIAN FIRST GRADE PUBLIC SCHOOL.
Fees £100 per annum (Inclusive). Founders' elected at Half Fee.

TO BE OPENED SEPTEMBER, 1900.

Chairman of the Governors - - - R. v. S. A. STEINTHAL.

Headmaster - - - - - GUY LEWIS, M.A.

For Prospectus, Plans, &c., apply to Mr. LEWIS (at New College, Eastbourne), or the Clerk (Mr. E. W. MARSHALL, 38, Barton Arcade, Manchester).THE PRINCESS HELENA COLLEGE.
EALING, W.

Established 1890. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1896.

President—H.R.H. the PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.

High-class education for the DAUGHTERS of GENTLE-
MEN, as Resident or Day Pupils. Preparation for University and Art Examinations. Spacious grounds. Supervision in games.Training department for kindergarten students in preparation for Froebel Union Examination for Teachers.There is a Home in connection with the College for K.G.
Students and for a few children under ten years of age.

MARGARET WILLIAMSON, Lady Principal.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING
COLLEGE, Cooper's Hill, Staines.The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for Employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40
Students will be admitted in September, 1900. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition—Twelve Appointments
as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphs Department, and One in the Accountants' Branch
P.W.D.—For particulars apply to SECRETARY, at College.ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION, 1900.
RECEIVING DAYS.
IMPORTANT NOTICE.WATER-COLOURS, Miniatures, Black and White Drawings, Engravings, Etchings, Architectural Drawings, and all other Works under glass

OIL-PAINTINGS—SATURDAY, MARCH 31st, and Monday.

April 2nd

SCULPTURE—TUESDAY, APRIL 3rd.

Works will only be Received at the Burlington Gardens

Entrance.

Hours for the Reception of Works, 7 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Forms and Labels can be obtained from the Academy during the month of March, on receipt of a stamped and directed envelope.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.

EXAMINERSHIP IN ENGLISH.

The University Court of the University of Glasgow will shortly proceed to appoint an ADDITIONAL EXAMINER in ENGLISH for the Preliminary Examinations.

The appointment will be for a period not exceeding three years as from 1st February last, at an annual salary of £45.

Candidates should lodge twenty copies of their application and testimonials with the undersigned on or before Thursday, 1st March.

ALAN E. CLAPPERTON,

Secretary of the Glasgow University Court.

91, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman,

experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the

British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with

Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations

undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by

letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 151, Strand, London, W.C.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY
(LIMITED).For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BESTENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, SPANISH, and RUSSIAN BOOKS.TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUB-

SCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis
and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in
TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY,
SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SUR-
PLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN,
SPANISH, and RUSSIAN BOOKS.

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; 48, Queen Victoria

Street, E.C., LONDON;

And at Barton Arcade, MANCHESTER.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on

DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums
on deposit and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE CHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free

FRANÇOIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S. Maps by BARTHOLOMEW.

Fcap. 8vo.

ONE SHILLING EACH.

Illustrated.

THE VALE of LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J.
PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING;
A. W. KINGLAKE, and Sir THEODORE MARTIN K.O.B.

BOURNEMOUTH and NEW FOREST.

THE NORTH WALES COAST.

BRECON and its BEACONS.

ROSS, TINTERN, and CHEPSTOW.

BRISTOL, BATH, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

BRIGHTON, EASTBOURNE, HASTINGS, and ST. LEONARDS.

LLANDUDNO, RHYL, BANGOR, BETTWSYCOED, and SNOWDON.

ABERYSTWYTH, BARMOUTH, MACHYNLLETH, and ABERDOVEY.

BARMOUTH, DOLGELLY, HARLECH, GRIECIETH, and PWLLHELL.

MALVERN, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, GLOUCESTER, and CHELTENHAM.

LLANDRINDOD WELLS and the SPAS of MID-WALES.

1s.—THE HOTELS of the WORLD. A Handbook to the leading hotels throughout the world."What would not the intelligent tourist in Paris or Rome give for such a guide-book as this, which teaches so much that is outside the usual scope of such volumes!"—The Times.
"The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.

SECOND EDITION, ENLARGED, 5s.—60 Illustrations, 24 Maps and Plans.

LONDON AND ENVIRONS

By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.

With an additional Index of 4,500 References to all Streets and Places of Interest.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON &amp; CO.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, &amp; Co., Ltd., The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers.

SOUTH AFRICA AND THE WAR.—BOOKS TO READ.

A BOOK ABOUT THE BOER WAR OF 1881.

Cloth, crown 8vo, 2s.

With 8 Illustrations by R. Caton Woodvills, after Sketches by Melton Prior.

MAJUBA:

BRONKERSPRUIT, INGOGO, LANGS NEK, KRUGERSDORP.

By HAMISH HENDRY.

Globe.—"The author has gone to the best, and his narratives have the qualities of conciseness and vividness which he claims for them. They are concentrated, they are picturesque; moreover, they are not without their lessons for the statesmen and soldiers of to-day."

Daily Graphic.—"...brief and brightly written....The description is extremely vivid, and will bring home to the mind of the reader the nature of South African warfare far more clearly than a more elaborate technical work could possibly do."

London: GRANT RICHARDS, 9, Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

NOVELS BY ANNA HOWARTH.

JAN: an Afrikaner. SECOND EDITION. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Illustrated London News.—"The novel has great interest, but quite independently of its stirring story its pictures of South African life are graphic and attractive in the highest degree."

African Review.—"The story is powerfully told, and is well worth the reading."

KATRINA: a Tale of the Karoo. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Scotsman.—"A story which will hold its own with the best African romances."

Daily Telegraph.—"A plain unvarnished tale which we take with cordiality recommend to the attention of the novel-reading public."

SWORD and ASSEGAI. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Speaker.—"A vivid and trustworthy picture of life in Natal in the forties....This pleasant and well-written book is worth a thousand of the usual South African novels."

Manchester Courier.—"The book is written both simply and brightly, and the ever-changing fortunes of the families of Smit and Brownlow form the subject for excellent pictures of British and Boer life."

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

SOUTH AFRICA. By GEO. MCCALL THEAL, LL.D. 5s.

HOW TO READ WAR NEWS. Hints to Readers of Despatches, &c. 1s.

THE LIVES OF ROBERT AND MARY MOFFAT. By their SON. 6s.

PAUL KRUGER AND HIS TIMES. By F. R. STATHAM. 7s. 6d.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION. By OLIVE SCHREINER. 1s. 6d.

A PRIMER OF SOUTH AFRICAN HISTORY. By GEORGE MCCALL THEAL, LL.D. 1s. 6d.

MR. MAGNUS: A South African Novel. By F. R. STATHAM. 6s.

TROOPER PETER HALKET OF MASHONALAND. By OLIVE SCHREINER. 2s. 6d.

THE CAPTAIN OF THE LOCUSTS. By A. WEENER. 2s.

KAFFIR STORIES. By W. C. SCULLY. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

MR. THOMAS ATKINS. By the Author of "How to be Happy Though Married." 6s.

FIFTY YEARS OF THE HISTORY OF THE REPUBLIC IN SOUTH AFRICA. By J. C. VOOR, M.D. 2 vols. 25s. net the set.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE.

SOUTH AFRICA. Further Correspondence relating to the Affairs in South Africa down to the 18th January. By post, 2s. 5d.

SOUTH AFRICA. Correspondence relating to the Defence of Natal. By post, 4d.

BAILEY'S INDEX to "THE TIMES" should be Consulted for all References to Passing Events in the Transvaal.

List of Blue Books on South African Affairs dating from the Sand River Convention to the present date, affecting specially the Transvaal, sent on application.

London: East Harding Street, E.C.

THE PROBLEM OF SOUTH AFRICAN UNITY.

By W. BASIL WORSFOLD, Author of "The Redemption of Egypt," &c.

A lecture delivered at the Imperial Institute in December, 1899, with added notes and table of population.

Fcap. 8vo, 6d. net; cloth, 1s. net.

Review of the Week.—"Supplies all the information required for an intelligent study of the question."

BOERS AND LITTLE ENGLANDERS.

The History of the South African Conventions of 1881 and 1884.

By JOHN PROCTER, Barrister-at-Law.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

London: GEORGE ALLEN, 156, Charing Cross Road.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

THE TRANSVAAL WAR. A Lecture Delivered in the University of Cambridge, Nov. 9, 1899. By J. WESTLAKE, Q.C., LL.D., Whewell Professor of International Law in that University. Demy 8vo, 1s.

THE CAMBRIDGE GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES.

General Editor: F. H. H. GUILLEMARD, M.D., late Lecturer in Geography at the University of Cambridge.

OUTLINES OF MILITARY GEOGRAPHY. By

T. MILLER MACGUIRE, LL.D., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Lieutenant

Colon of Court Rifle Volunteers. Crown 8vo, with 27 Maps and Illustrations, 10s. 6d.

Field Marshal Lord Roberts, V.C., writes: "A most useful and instructive book."

Athenaeum.—"The book is extremely interesting to the general reader."

London: C. J. CLAY & SONS, Cambridge University Press Warehouse, Ave Maria Lane.

THE STANDARD HISTORY OF SOUTH AFRICA.

GEORGE MCCALL THEAL, LL.D.

Formerly Keeper of the Archives of Cape Colony, and at present Colonial Historiographer.

THE HISTORY OF SOUTH AFRICA.

With Coloured and other Maps and Plates.

Vol. I-II: History of South Africa under the Dutch East India Company: 1652-1795. 2 vols., 30s.

Vol. III: 1795-1834. 15s.

Vol. IV: 1834-1854. 15s.

Vol. V: 1854-1872. The Republics and Native Territories. 15s. [Reprinting.]

SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & CO., Limited, London.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

IN THE LAND OF THE BOERS.

By OLIVER OSBORNE.

Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, special Design on cover, 2s.

Daily Telegraph.—"A book with instruction and amusement in it."

Glasgow Herald.—"Seldom has an unvarnished record formed more pleasant reading than does the account of these adventures."

Western Morning News.—"This is a book of no ordinary literary merit."

R. A. EVERETT & CO., 42, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

THE BOOK OF THE HOUR.

THE TRANSVAAL FROM WITHIN.

A Private Record of Public Affairs.

By J. P. FITZPATRICK, Author of "The Outspan."

With Index. 1 vol., 10s. net. Eighth Reprint, completing 30,000 copies.

Mr Chamberlain replying to a Westmorland correspondent, who complained of the want of a printed defence of the Government's policy in the Transvaal: "I refer you to Mr. FitzPatrick's book."

THE MEN OF THE HOUR.

1. F.-M. LORD ROBERTS.

2. LORD KITCHENER OF KHARTUM.

Portraits by WILLIAM NICHOLSON.

Lithographed in colours, mounted on card, 2s. 6d. each; framed, 6s. each.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

FIRST LARGE EDITION NEARLY READY.

In crown 8vo, Cover designed by J. A. SYMINGTON, price 1s.

THE BOER IN PEACE AND WAR.

By ARTHUR M. MANN,

Author of "The Truth from Johannesburg."

WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS OF TRANSVAAL SCENES AND LIFE.

NOTICE.—This book is likely to have an exceptional sale, and orders should be sent in at once as they can only be executed in the order of their receipt.

London: JOHN LONG, 6, Chandos Street, Strand.

Third Edition, with a new Prefatory Chapter dealing with the events which have induced the present crisis.

IMPRESSIONS OF SOUTH AFRICA.

By the Right Hon. JAMES BRYCE, M.P.

With 3 Maps, and with the Text of the Transvaal Conventions of 1881 and 1884. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION NOW READY.

SOUTH AFRICA OF TO-DAY.

By Captain FRANCIS YOUNGHUSBAND, C.I.E.,

Indian Staff Corps. Late Special Correspondent of the Times in South Africa. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD, London

CLARENDON PRESS, OXFORD.

Crown 8vo, Separate Issue, with numerous Maps, 5s.

The History of South Africa to the Jameson Raid.

Being Vol. IV., Part I., of "A Historical Geography of the British Colonies."

By C. P. LUCAS, B.A.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"It is refreshing to come across so sane, scholarly and judicial a little volume. There is more assistance to the proper understanding of South African questions in its 340 well-printed pages than in any work of the same size we know of. Mr. Lucas proves on every page that he is one whose judgments are founded on knowledge, and it would be well if every amateur critic of South Africa were compelled to pass an examination on his book."

Scotsman.—"Mr. Lucas is a trustworthy authority and a vigorous writer; and those who desire to post themselves up in the past relations of Boers, Blacks, and British in South Africa could not go to a better source of information."

London: HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Press Warehouse, Amen Corner, E.C.

"No Cruden's Concordance, nor one of the innumerable acknowledged or unacknowledged abridgements of that great work will in the least degree supply the place of this 'Analytical Concordance'. It is the work of scholars, scholars will appreciate it; and it cannot fail to be of the greatest value to the intelligent general reader."

The Antiquary.

Now ready. The SEVENTH EDITION of

Dr. Robt. Young's "ANALYTICAL" BIBLE . . . CONCORDANCE.

Arranged on an entirely new plan. Containing about 311,000 references, subdivided under the Hebrew and Greek originals, with the literal meaning and pronunciation of each. Designed for the simplest reader of the English Bible. By ROBERT YOUNG, LL.D., Author of "A New Translation of the Bible," and "A New Concordance to the Greek New Testament," &c.

(Revised throughout by WM. B. STEVENSON, B.D. Edin., Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis at Bala College, Examiner in Theology at Edinburgh University.)

SIZE—DEMY QUARTO.

SUBSTANTIALLY BOUND IN CLOTH.

Price 21/- net.

Half-morocco, 25/- net.

A "COMPLETE" BIBLE CONCORDANCE ARRANGED and DESIGNED by Dr. ROBERT YOUNG on a unique plan to suit the requirements of THE ORDINARY ENGLISH READER.

Note.—This work is IN NO SENSE an Edition of CRUDEN or of any similar Work in existence.

RECOMMENDATIONS of this

"ANALYTICAL" BIBLE CONCORDANCE HAVE BEEN GIVEN BY

9 Heads of Colleges in connection with the Churches of England and Ireland, 3 Archbishops, 19 Bishops, 12 Deans, 17 Canons, &c. The Faculties of Divinity in the Universities of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, and St. Andrews. The Faculty of Divinity, Free Church College, Edinburgh. The Faculty of Divinity of the United Presbyterian Hall, Edinburgh. Also commended by over 159 of the leading Literary, Ecclesiastical, and Religious Papers in the United Kingdom, and warmly recommended by a large number of Subscribers to previous Editions.

Sold by THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY, 56, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

** Please write for Prospectus, with Specimen Page.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S LIST.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSTALLS.

In cloth gilt, price 6s. each.

MRS. L. T. MEADE'S NEW NOVEL. THE WOOLING OF MONICA.

By the Author of "The Way of a Woman," "The Siren," &c.
"A great deal of bright and pleasant reading in the book."
Scotsman.

ADELINE SERGEANT'S NEW NOVEL. A RISE IN THE WORLD.

By the Author of "Blake of Oriel," "A Valuable Life," &c., &c.
"Lures the reader on by its facile flow of narrative and alert contrivance of incident."
Spectator.

W. CLARK RUSSELL'S NEW ROMANCE. A VOYAGE AT ANCHOR.

By the Author of "The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor,'" &c., &c.
"This delightful story is in Mr. W. Clark Russell's happiest style."
Scotsman.
"A new idea which works out very successfully."
World.

FLORENCE WARREN'S LATEST NOVEL. A LOWLY LOVER.

By the Author of "The House on the Marsh," &c., &c.
"Thoroughly interesting."
Black and White.

NEW NOVEL BY LUCAS CLEEVE (Mrs. Howard Kingscote). WHAT A WOMAN WILL DO.

By the Author of "Lazarus," "The Monks of the Holy Tear," &c., &c.
"Full of smart and bitter writing, readable and amusing in every page."
Academy.
"Kivets the attention, and interests the reader up to the very last page."
Punch.
"A really entertaining book."
Review of the Week.

In cloth gilt, price 3s. 6d.

NEW NOVEL BY PERRINGTON PRIMM. THE GIRL AT RIVERFIELD MANOR.

By the Author of "Belling the Cat," &c.

F. V. WHITE & CO.,
14, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.

THE CLERGY LIST FOR 1900.

NOW READY.

IMPORTANT IMPROVEMENT.

Instead of merely giving one value for every Benefice, which in many cases led to confusion for various reasons, the book contains

Both the Gross and Net Values.

It also gives a complete Record of Past and Present Appointments, the College, University, and, where necessary, the Private Address of every Clergyman in England, Ireland, and Scotland

In One List.

Under the List of Benefices will be found full information as to

The Value of Every Living, Clergy engaged therein, Patron, Population, nearest Post Town and Railway Station. The book contains upwards of 1,800 pages.

Price 12s. 6d.

KELLY'S DIRECTORIES, LTD., 182-184 High Holborn.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 1013. — MARCH, 1900. — 2s. 6d.

AFTER THE WAR—WHAT THEN?—MR. RUSKIN.
—SUBMARINE CABLES.—THE EVOLUTION OF LITERARY DECENCY. By ANDREW LANG.—THE ROYAL ARMY MEDICAL CORPS.—BUSH-WHACKING: AN EXPEDITION INTO THE BENIGHTED LANDS. By HUGH CLIFFORD.—LORD JIM: A SKETCH. CHAPS. XII, XIII. By JOSEPH CONRAD.—MUSINGS WITHOUT METHOD.—FRANCE'S LOVE OF FALSE NEWS.—HER INJUSTICE TO HERSELF AND TO OTHERS.—THE USELESSNESS OF LIES.—ENGLAND'S DISCOMFORTURE GERMANY'S TRIUMPH.—CAMBRIDGE IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.—THE ART OF AMABLE BIOGRAPHY.—THE UNIVERSITY AS GUNNING KNEW IT.—THE DARK AGES OF SCHOLARSHIP.—THE WAR OPERATIONS IN SOUTH AFRICA.—IV.—THE OPENING OF PARLIAMENT.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED.—In 1 vol., price 4s.

DUBLIN UNIVERSITY CALENDAR FOR 1900.

Also, price 4s.

DUBLIN EXAMINATION PAPERS:

SUPPLEMENT to the UNIVERSITY CALENDAR for 1900.
HOOGEZ, FIGGIS & CO., LTD., Dublin.
LONGMANS & CO., London.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE
UNIFORM EDITION OF

RUDYARD KIPLING'S PROSE WORKS. FROM SEA TO SEA, AND OTHER SKETCHES. Letters of Travel.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

In 2 vols., extra crown 8vo, red cloth, gilt tops, 6s. each.

BY LORD ROBERTS.

BY LORD ROBERTS.

BY LORD ROBERTS.

FORTY-ONE YEARS IN INDIA.

Containing 41 Illustrations and Plans. Library Edition (32nd). In 2 vols. 8vo, 38s. Popular Edition (31st). In 1 vol., extra crown 8vo, 10s. net.

NEW AND NOTABLE NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, gilt tops, 6s. each.

65,000 Copies have been sold in England and America.

VIA CRUCIS. By F. Marion Crawford.

THE BABES in the BUSH. By ROLF BOLDREWOOD.

THE CAMBRIC MASK. By R. W. Chambers
Westminster Gazette.—"Mr. R. W. Chambers is in most respects an admirable writer. He has style and originality, he sees vividly, goes straight to his point, and dispenses with all tedious and irrelevant matter.... A spirited and stirring story."

TRANSFORMED; or, Three Weeks in a Lifetime. Second Edition. By FLORENCE MONTGOMERY.

DONNA TERESA. By F. M. Peard.
Literature.—"Has very decided charm.... Well worth reading for the characters of the two sisters and its admirable pictures of life in Italy."

MRS. HENRY WOOD'S NOVELS.—

The New and Cheaper Editions, each story in 1 vol., crown 8vo, red cloth, price 2s. 6d., or in green cloth, price 2s., may be obtained at all Booksellers, where a complete List of the Thirty-seven Stories may be seen.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

Price 1s.—Contents for MARCH.

1. ANTHONY'S FORTUNE. By ARTHUR BECKFORD. Chapters IX.—XV.
2. THE NAVAL BRIGADE at GRASPAN. By Lieutenant-Colonel WILCOCKHURST VENER.
3. JAMES MARTINEAU.
4. NEW ENGLAND in WAR TIME. By A. G. HYDE.
5. AN ANSWER from the TOWN.
6. ARUN RAJ.
7. THE SANITY of WELLINGTON. By DAVID HANNAY.
8. THE DESTRUCTION of ENGLISH VILLAGES. By ARCHIBALD MARSHALL.
9. A CHILD of HIS AGE.
10. THE CAMPAIGN of DOUAI. By Capt. CAIRNES (Royal Irish Fusiliers). Chapters VII.—IX.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

Price 1s.—Contents for MARCH.

1. THE FLOWER of the FLOCK. By W. E. NORRIS. Chapters IX.—XII.
2. AN AMERICAN SHIRINE.
3. THE HERD-WIDDE-POW.
4. M. ANATOLE FRANCE.
5. A VILLAGE SKETCH.
6. A BALLADE from LAKE LEMAN.
7. EZRA HIGGINS, POET.
8. SHERIDAN'S BROTHER.
9. SKETCHES in NAPLES.
10. HOW the QUEENSLANDER RIDES and SHOOTS.
11. THE BATH COMEDY. By AONES and EDEWORTH CASTLE. (Conclusion.)

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

Illustrated.—Price 1s. 4d.—Annual Subscription, post free, 16s.

The MARCH NUMBER contains—
OLIVER CROMWELL. After Napely.—The King with the Scots.—The King a Prisoner. By the Right Hon. JOHN MORLEY, M.P.
TALKS with NAPOLEON. HIS LIFE and CONVERSATION at ST. HELENA. The Original Record made by Napoleon's Physician. By Dr. BARRY E. O'MEARA.
DR. NORTH and HIS FRIENDS. By S. WEIR MITCHELL.
PARIS of the FAUBOURGS. By RICHARD WHITING.
And numerous other Stories and Articles of General Interest.

ST. NICHOLAS.

Illustrated.—Price 1s.—Annual Subscription, post free, 12s.

The MARCH NUMBER contains—
A FAMOUS SNOW IMAGE. Story of Michelangelo. By JULIA DARROW COWLES.
HOW PEPPER MADE an EMPRESS. By THOMAS JENKS.
STORM BOUND ABOVE the CLOUDS. Story of Adventure. By FREDERICK FENSTON.
JOSEY and the GIFFUNTS. Serial. By SYDNEY REID.
And numerous other Stories for the Young.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1151. Established 1869.

24 February, 1900.

Price Threepence.

[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

THE death of Mr. H. D. Traill last Tuesday was a shock to his friends, and to the public. It was known a few days ago that he was confined to his room with a sprained ankle, but nobody thought that his fruitful life was so soon to be ended. He was conspicuous in many paths of literature and journalism, but it was as a brilliant satirist, humorist, and parodist in verse and prose that he shone. His original work had not been so plentiful during the past few years, owing, no doubt, to the engrossing character of his duties as editor of Literature; but he was able to add four new Dialogues to The New Lucian, a new edition of which was published last week. His prose was marked by a singular indifference to any kind of effect. He was always content to begin quietly; his humour was never forced—it occurred—and although much of his fugitive work was merely “pleasant and persuasive,” it never lacked intention.

LONDON, according to Mr. George Moore, having become “too large, too old, and too wealthy to permit of any new artistic movement,” the Irish Literary Theatre Society have been holding their second meeting during the past week in Dublin. Three plays were produced—“The Last Feast of the Fianna,” a sketch of the heroic age in Ireland, by Miss Alice Milligan; “Maevæ,” by Mr. Edward Martyn; and “The Bending of the Bough,” by Mr. George Moore. The last has just been issued as a book. According to the Dublin Daily Express, the organ of the Irish Literary Movement, and one of the few daily papers in the United Kingdom showing a distinct interest in literature, the performances were entirely successful.

THE Irish Literary Theatre has also an organ of its own—an occasional publication called Beltaine, edited by Mr. W. B. Yeats. In a preface called “Plans and Methods” Mr. Yeats gives some account of the plays which London is too large, too old, and too wealthy to permit. “Our plays,” says Mr. Yeats, “this year have a half deliberate unity,”

Mr. Martyn’s “Maevæ,” which I understand to symbolise Ireland’s choice between English materialism and her own natural idealism, as well as the choice of every individual soul, will be followed, as Greek tragedies were followed by satires and Elizabethan masques by anti-masques, by Mr. George Moore’s “The Bending of the Bough,” which tells of a like choice and of a contrary decision. Mr. Moore’s play, which is, in its external form, the history of two Scottish cities, the one Celtic in the main and the other Saxon in the main, is a microcosm of the last ten years of public life in Ireland. . . . Miss Milligan, not influenced by Mr. Martyn, or by anything but old legends, has the same thought in her “The Last Feast of the Fianna,” which, as I think, would make one remember the mortality and indignity of all that lives. Her bard Usheen goes to faery, and is made immortal like his songs; while the heroes and Grania, the most famous of the beautiful, sink into querulous old age.

The object of the Irish Literary Theatre is to make Dublin a centre of intellectual activity. We wish them every success.

THAT must have been an interesting moment when Mr. Thomas Hardy’s eye fell upon the account of the production of “Tess of the D’Urbervilles,” at the Coronet Theatre. Apropos, he has made the following communication: “As I find I am naturally supposed to have something to do with the production of ‘Tess of the D’Urbervilles’ at the Coronet Theatre, I shall be glad if you will allow me to state that I have not authorised such a dramatisation, and that I am ignorant of the form it has taken, except in so far as I gather from the newspapers.”

TOLSTOY’S new novel, Resurrection, a notice of which, when it began in monthly parts, was printed in our issue of September 9, will be published by the Brotherhood Company early next month. Resurrection, written in the rough by Tolstoy some years ago and founded upon an actual occurrence, has been completely re-written by him during the last year and a half. The proceeds will be devoted to aiding the Doukhobors, the sect who are persecuted in the Caucasus for refusing to learn the art of war. Mrs. Maude will set apart the remuneration she receives for her translation to the same cause. The novel will contain thirty-three illustrations by Pasternak.

WITH an inscription to attest its genuineness Mr. Henley has contributed to the Daily Mail “Absent-Minded Beggar Fund” the inkstand which was used by Stevenson during two years of his wanderings in the Pacific. It passed into Mr. Henley’s hands on Stevenson’s death. So far £15 has been bid for it.

THE organist of Bloemfontein Cathedral asks for literary guidance. His letter, which will be found in our correspondence columns, is somewhat long, but we cannot resist such magnificent detachment. Roberts! The war! The organist of Bloemfontein Cathedral does not even mention them.

MR. H. D. LOWRY, author of Make Believe, is writing another book for children, entitled Blossom’s Word-Book. It consists of a series of tiny essays on the vital meaning of the words most used by children, some of them running to little more than a sentence in length, while others are longer, and include stray verses and miniature fairy tales. The book will be illustrated.

“FIERCE books down Cellar” is the sign hung out by a foreigner in New York. Is it a theological library? In the same city an Italian junk dealer has this sign: “A Lot of Solemn Books Inside.” Is this the humour of which our fathers have told us?

WHEN the present war broke out we ventured to deprecate the idea that book production would be seriously checked. Our hope has not been fulfilled to the letter, but Mr. Joseph Shaylor, an admitted authority, has just stated the actual effects of the war on the book trade, and these do not prove to be very serious. Fierce books down cellar, and solemn books elsewhere, have suffered, but “fiction, juvenile literature, and books which appeal to the multitude have suffered scarcely at all by the war.”

MR. W. E. HENLEY makes several interesting remarks about the reading public, or, rather, publics, in an article on "Some Novels of 1899" in the North American Review. He thinks the public is like a set of Japanese boxes, one inside another, the larger containing the lesser throughout the series. Hence "a good writer and a good novelist is very often felt to some extent a great way outside the limits of the particular public which happens to be his." Mr. Henley adduces Stevenson as an instance of a writer whose appeal to his own first public, though seemingly futile, was felt in faint and widening waves. Thus, the comparative failure which attended the publication of Treasure Island and The Black Arrow in the Young Folks' Paper appears to Mr. Henley in this light:

He was but a succès d'estime; and you would have thought that he had worked in vain. But he had not. The masters who wrought for Young Folks' Paper were (so Stevenson told me) in no wise model citizens; they had their weaknesses, and (on his editor's report) were addicted to the use of strong waters, so that they had to be literally hunted for their copy. But, being writers, they were a level or two above the public for which they wrote. That public had seen little or nothing in Stevenson; they saw a great deal, and in his imitators Stevenson had, I believe, a very considerable success with a circle of readers which began by politely disdaining him. He had paid in gold, and his gold was not recognised as current coin until it was turned into copper. The currency was debased? Of course it was; and if it had not been—here is my point—it would never have passed with that public which Stevenson tried, and failed, to win. And this is the way in which publics are, not made but, effected and influenced by talent. In Stevenson's case, the provocation was unusually direct, the effects were unusually gross. But the same sort of thing has ever been, and is ever being, done all over the novel-reading world: so that many thousands have rejoiced in the gift of Ainsworth and Marryat, of Kipling and Barrie and Scott, who have never so much as heard their names.

In a word literature has solidarity as well as diversity, and a writer's influence is not to be measured by the sales of his book. This is a truism, but it is worth remembering.

Of the Young Folks' Paper itself Mr. Henley says: " 'Twas a capital print of its kind, and its editor and proprietor was a very able and intelligent man. . . . His name was Henderson: a Scotchman and a Radical. I rather think that he is dead; but, dead or alive, he is a person for whom I have a very great respect." Can any reader resolve Mr. Henley's doubts? The editor who accepted Treasure Island is surely entitled to share the triumph and partake the gale.

From a catalogue of autograph letters for sale at Messrs. Sotheby's auction rooms on March 5 we take the following passage. It was written by Browning to Mr. P. R. Jackson:

"I was not aware, nor I suppose can my publisher have been aware, that 'Hervieu Hervé Riel' had appeared in the Royal Reader; such an appearance without my knowledge and consent was a theft, and punishable. I consider the poem rather the publisher's than my property, because he gave me a hundred pounds for it, which I wanted for the starving French, and it was only at his urgent request the other day that I included the thing in a volume, which has just passed through the press, and will be out in a day or two. I could not, therefore, with propriety, allow that transfer to your collection, which the honesty and courtesy of your application would otherwise have induced me to permit."

A MINOR mystery of "Hamlet" seems to be cleared up by a discovery which has just been made at Elsinore, the scene of the play. An old document has been found in the archives of that ancient seaport setting forth the fact that in 1585 a wooden fence, which had been put up in the year 1585 by the Burgomaster, had been destroyed by a company of English actors. The names of these actors are given, and they include some who are known to have belonged to Shakespeare's company. The Frankfurter Zeitung, whence the information comes, points out that Shakespeare "shows a curiously exact knowledge of the local conditions of that little seaport." The Elsinore local colour may not seem very strong to most of us, but only those who are familiar with the town can be good judges either of its quantity or quality. Horatio's words come back:

What if it tempt you toward the flood, my lord,
Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff
That beetles o'er his base into the sea.

So, also, one thinks of the lines:

Save yourself, my lord;
The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'erhears your officers.

It should be noted that Shakespeare's choice of Elsinore is curious. The older play which he worked up into his own, and which followed the legend, placed the drama in Jutland. Shakespeare's arbitrary preference of Elsinore, and his truthful touches about that place, are easily accounted for if we suppose that he consulted some of his fellow-players who were of the party that broke down the Burgomaster's fence. There is good evidence that troupes of English actors did wander Western Europe at the time necessary to establish this interesting theory. In fact, the Earl of Leicester sailed to the Low Countries in 1585, taking his players with him, and four years later Shakespeare, we know, was of that company. Many things remain unexplained, but if the Elsinore document be genuine there is ground for interesting research.

WITH a poet's ingenuity Mr. William Watson endeavours to show that Nature is on the side of the Boers. He states this proposition in two verses which appeared in the Westminster Gazette:

PAST AND PRESENT.

When lofty Spain came towering up the seas
This little stubborn land to daunt and quell,
The winds of heaven were our auxiliaries,
And smote her that she fell.
Ah, not to-day is Nature on our side!
The mountains and the rivers are our foe,
And Nature with the heart of man allied
Is hard to overthrow.

The prosaic fact is that the mountains and the rivers are on the side of those who at a given moment can use them best. A bolder figure than Mr. Watson's tells us that the stars fought against Sisera, but the stars only watched; and the mountains only wait for the victor's tread. But let a poet answer a poet. Sir Edwin Arnold has this gruff "Reply" to Mr. Watson in the Daily Telegraph:

Imputes he mortal passions to the mountains?
And, for a party stroke,
Feigns he that water-ways, and river-fountains
Fight for the Boer's ill yoke?
Enough to answer England's slanderous son,
And brand his calumny,
I bore her files to battle, every one,—
Her Lover—Ocean—I!

LORD ROSEBERY has issued his own text of his recent speech on Cromwell through Messrs. Hatchard's, prefixing to it the brief and pregnant preface:

Published in self defence.

The insertion of this remark has reference, no doubt, to the version of the Cromwell speech already issued by a Scottish firm of publishers, and taken, with acknowledgments, from the Daily News report. A comparison of the two versions leaves us in no particular wonder that Lord Rosebery has taken this course.

THE first number of the Universal Magazine (Horace Marshall & Son) contains a vociferous article by Miss Corelli, entitled "Patriotism—or Self-Advertisement?" We confess to some inability to read this article owing to the portentous length of Miss Corelli's paragraphs, which spread like prairies over the pages, relieved only by a scrub of italics. Miss Corelli is of those who consider that Mr. Kipling ought to have written finer war verses than the "Absent-Minded Beggar."

A real poem pushed vigorously down the public throat would have made the public voice sweeter and stronger. A real poem would not only have built up a Fund, but a Fame. Instead of degrading "Tommy," it might have improved and dignified his whole position. . . . "The Absent-Minded Beggar" stanzas will mark Mr. Kipling's name with a fatal persistency as long as he lives, cropping up with an infinite tedium and an exasperating sameness at every fresh thing he writes; and let him be wise as Solon, classic as Virgil, and strong as Samson, he shall never escape it. Like another sort of "Raven," he shall see it "sitting, never fitting," on every "bust of Pallas," or new work he offers to the public; he shall demand of it, "Take thy beak from out my heart and thy form from off my door!" and its reply shall be the one monotonous devil's croak of "Nevermore!"

MESSRS. SPALDING & HODGE send us "a new and important work in five volumes." They are entitled Extra Light Ant. Wove Quad Crown, and we have lovingly handled them ever since they arrived. Bound strongly in red cloth, stamped with a heraldic device in gold, and gilt topped, these volumes are not marred by any impertinent letterpress. The white vacuity of their 320 pages has refreshed our spirits, and inclined our hearts to the paper trade. Seriously, Messrs. Spalding & Hodge seem to know how to produce the best kind of book paper, a paper firm and light, rough enough to please the hand and eye, yet tractable enough to take photogravures.

SOME of the critics have complained that Mr. Benson, in his scholarly and interesting rendering of the character of Henry V., errs in representing him as a markedly religious character. Mr. H. C. Beeching, in a letter to the Morning Post, shows that Mr. Benson had warrant for his reading. "The key-note of one side of Henry's character," says Mr. Beeching,

"is struck in that speech to Falstaff with which Henry IV. closes: 'I know thee not, old man; fall to thy prayers.' And in the play itself there is a great deal of religious reflection. The 'God of battles' to whom Henry throughout appeals is not the 'Dieu de batailles' by whom the Constable swears. Many of Henry's clergy would have been proud if they had originated the admirable saying:

'There is a soul of goodness in things evil
Would men observingly distil it out.'

But in case your critic should say that the voice here is Shakespeare's and not Henry's, I would refer him to the ordinance after Agincourt reported in Act IV., which reveals the mind of a zealot:

'Be it death proclaimed through our host
To boast of this, or take the praise from God
Which is His only.'

A NEWSPAPER devoted to the interests of Free Churchmen, with especial reference to the work and thought of Congregationalists, is about to be published. The new journal will be issued weekly, price one penny. The Rev. W. B. Selbie, M.A., of Highgate, will direct the theological policy of the paper, and with him will be associated Mr. Andrew Melrose and Mr. David Williamson, the latter as general editor.

THE Trustees of the British Museum continue to issue their series of facsimiles of royal, historical, and literary autographs. Among new reproductions is a fly-leaf in Izaak Walton's prayer-book which contains the epitaph which he wrote for his second wife:

*How lyeth buried somuch as could
Dye of Ann, the wife of Izaak Walton
A woman of remarkable prudence,
of a primitive pietie.
And
How greates and generall knowledgy.
being adorn'd with such trew humillitie,
and blest with soe much Christian meeknes; as made for worthy of a more memorable monument
She dyed
By a godly and pious spirit.
(Alas! Alas! that she is ded)
April .17. 1662.*

The epitaph should be read as follows:

Here lyeth buried soe much as could dye of Ann, the wife of Izaak Walton, who was
A woman of remarkable prudence,
and
of the primitive pietie,
Her greates and generall knowledgy being adorn'd with such trew humillitic,
and blest with soe much Christian meekness, as made her worthy of a more memorable monument.
She dyed
(Alas! Alas! that she is ded)
April 17: 1662.

THOSE counterblasts to "The Man with the Hoe" are now disposed of; the prizes are awarded; and oblivion threatens the incident. It will be remembered that Mr. Edwin Markham's gloomy picture of the toiling agriculturalist in his poem, "The Man with the Hoe," was resented by one American reader, who wished to see agriculturalists extolled and felicitated. He offered three prizes, of 400 dols., 200 dols., and 100 dols., for the three poetic replies to Mr. Markham's poem which should be judged best by a committee of three. The competitive poems were nearly a thousand, of which only a small percentage deserved attention. The awards are as follows:

"The Man with the Hoe (A Reply to Edwin Markham)."
By John Vance Cheney. First prize (400 dols.).

"The Incapable." By Hamilton Schuyler. Second prize (200 dols.).

"A Song (In Answer to 'The Man with the Hoe')." By Kate Masterson. Third prize (100 dols.).

WILL no deft poetic hand give us renderings of the tanka, those charming old songs collected in Japan eight hundred years ago under the title of Hyakum-in-isska? The man who has most right to the honours of the task is, perhaps, Prof. C. MacCauley, who has been lecturing on the subject to the Asiatic Society at Tokyo. The tanka fall into three classes: songs of nature, songs of sentiment, and songs of love. One tanka tells of love perfected, and is rendered thus by the Professor:

From Tsukuba's peak
Falling waters have become Mina's still, full flow.
So, my love has grown to be
Like the river's quiet deeps.

Here is another :

Like the salt sea-weed
Burning in the evening calm,
On Matsuo's shore,
All my being is aglow,
Waiting one who does not come.

THE question whether it is well to issue a masterpiece of fiction with a searching critical introduction has not perhaps ever been debated properly. Obviously both the author's and the reader's interests are affected, and it may be injuriously. Mrs. Humphry Ward seems to be conscious of a certain demur to her introductions to the novels of the Brontës, for in introducing Emily Brontë's novel, Wuthering Heights, which forms part of the fifth volume of the "Haworth" edition, she writes :

When we are under the spell of the Brontë stories we admire and we protest with almost equal warmth ; we lavish upon them the same varieties of feeling as the poet, who brings to his love no cold, monotonous homage, but—"praise, blame, kisses, tears, and smiles." For inevitably the critic's manner catches the freedom of the author's. He will not hesitate dislike ; such a mental attitude cannot maintain itself in the Brontës' neighbourhood. He will strike when he is hurt, and raise the paeans of praise when he is pleased, with the frankness which such combatants deserve. In each of her novels, as it were, Charlotte Brontë touches the shield of the reader ; she does not woo or persuade him ; she attacks him, and, complete as his ultimate surrender may be, he yields fighting. He "will still be talking," and there is no help for it.

And as regards Wuthering Heights, Mrs. Ward thinks that criticism has a real work to do with this strange novel. She quotes Prof. Saintsbury's belief that Emily Brontë's work has been "extravagantly praised," and Mr. Leslie Stephen's opinion that Emily Brontë's "feeble grasp upon external facts makes her book a kind of baseless nightmare, which we read with wonder and with distressing curiosity, but with even more pain than pleasure or profit." Charlotte Brontë herself wrote of her sister's story with a certain caution, as did also Mrs. Gaskell. Mrs. Ward allows much to these and other critics ; but her faith in Wuthering Heights is stronger than theirs. She says : "For the mingling of daring poetry with the easiest and most masterly command of local truth, for sharpness and felicity of phrase, for exuberance of creative force, for invention and freshness of detail, there are few things in English fiction to match it."

Bibliographical.

BECAUSE I happened to say last week that readers and reviewers "are apt to be bored" by the frequent appearance of the same name on the title-pages of books, a correspondent, signing himself "The Lobworm," suggests that I have "let a literary cat out of the bag." Is it possible, he asks with unconcealed irony, that reviewers are influenced by names ? And he goes on to propose a remedy for that evil. "Judges at shows are, or were, supposed to be in ignorance of the contents of the catalogue until the awards were complete. Why not hand over books to reviewers with no clue to author or publisher beyond a sealed envelope, 'not to be opened until the review is written' ?" An ingenious notion ! but one, I fear, which would not commend itself either to authors or to publishers. Authors, I fancy, would rather risk the possible boredom of the reviewers than always come before the world in anonymous fashion.

Talking of publishers, I note that an addition has just been made to the number of publishers who write. Mr. J. M. Dent himself supplies the editorial introduction to the reprint of She Stoops to Conquer which he has just added to his "Temple Classics." Every now and then somebody revives the cry of "Every author his own publisher." How very much more to the purpose would be "Every publisher his own author" ! However, I see in that suggestion a very real danger for the bibliographer. There is quite enough confusion of names as it is. I see, for example, that Mr. Charles Dickens, grandson of the novelist, has been making a speech at a club dinner. Now, this gentleman's father was also a Charles Dickens—"Charles Dickens the Younger," as he subscribed himself. Well, if Charles Dickens the Youngest should write and publish books, the poor bibliographer of the future will have three Charles Dickens's to struggle with—which will be hard upon him.

"Somebody of leisure," I wrote last week, "should write an account of English war poetry" ; and now there comes a "proliminary par" about a collection of war songs which is shortly to be added to the "Canterbury Poets." So far as I know, this will be the first anthology of the kind. We have had collections of patriotic verse in which war poetry has been included, but that should hardly bar the way of the new volume, which will, I hope, fulfil in all strictness the promise of its title.

"S. G.," writing in the Pall Mall Gazette, says there is a piece of information which he desires : "Who wrote 'Broken Vows,' the play which was in rehearsal at Mansfield Park when the august Sir Thomas returned from the West Indies ?" It is to be feared that this question will not be answered until it can be put to Miss Austen herself—not, of course, by "S. G.," if it be true that he has an objection to meeting the lady in Paradise. A play called "Broken Vows" was produced in England about thirty years ago, but that was after Miss Austen's day. It is a little wonderful that there should not have been a dramatic "Broken Vows" before 1871. "The Broken Heart" and "The Broken Gold"—Miss Austen may have heard of the plays so named ; but "Broken Vows" must have been of her own coinage.

Her Title of Honour has proved, up to now, the most lasting of the stories of the late Miss Harriett Parr. A new edition of it appeared so recently as last October. Next to it, apparently, in popularity are the Legends of Fairyland, of which there was a reprint in 1897. One well remembers when this lady's Sylvan Hall's Daughter, Katie Brande, and so forth, were "books of the day." Her book of essays, In the Silver Age, was well worth reading. It was a good thing that she elected to publish as "Holme Lee" ; otherwise there might have been a muddle in the public mind between Miss Harriett Parr and Mrs. Louisa Parr, as there was for a time between Miss M. B. Edwards and Miss A. B. Edwards.

I notice that Mr. Max Pemberton, in his new story called Féo, makes a Frenchwoman say to an English girl : "Ah, men have so much to live for, child. Your poet Shakespeare has said it better than you or I will ever say it. A woman's love is her little kingdom, but the man's world is very wide." Is it possible that Mr. Pemberton is under the impression that the lines—

Man's love is of man's life a thing apart,
'Tis woman's whole existence, were written by the Bard of Avon ? Or is this only his exquisitely subtle way of reflecting upon French ignorance of English literature ?

There have been of late frequent announcements of the fact that Sir Henry Irving's next production at the Lyceum will be a play dealing with the Massacre of St. Bartholomew and having Charles IX. for its chief figure. Nowhere have I seen any reference to the further fact that the subject was treated by Marlowe in a play, "The Massacre at Paris," which, however, has come down to us only in a fragmentary and (as regards the text) corrupt state. Sir Henry's drama, apparently, is to be an adaptation from the French.

THE BOOKWORM.

Reviews.

The Trend of Young Verse.

By Shore and Wood. By W. Cuthbertson. (James Thin.)

Wild Eaten. By George Woodberry. (Macmillan. 5s.)

Without a God. (Kegan Paul.)

Out of the Nest. By Mary McNeil Fenollosa. (Gay & Bird.)

NEVER since the "spacious days of great Elizabeth" has there been such a widespread spirit of song as now, and song which quite frequently attains a level that demands respect. The English language is spread over two hemispheres, and from both this chorus of song arises, thickly as the voices of a wet morning-grove. For America swells the cloud of books of verse which descend on the editorial table. It is easy to sneer at it as "minor poetry," and set it aside with fine Britannic scorn of anything so superfluous as minor poetry—in the disparaging sense to which the word is now generally confined. Minor poetry in this sense it is; that is, work without strong and assured inspiration and marked originality. Yet it has its importance. Without some such state of widespread impulse towards song great poets seldom arise. These countless volumes of verse that annually drift over the land are, if you please, the dead leaves which quicken the soil of the poetic year; and many die that some one or two may grow lusty and thrive. But they do not die fruitlessly, as the Philistine would assert; the poetic soil is the richer for them, the more likely to fertilise great work. Not to say that here and there is work which does not all die, which has its charm for the unhasty reader who takes an interest in the lesser verse as in the lesser flowers. Wild flowers, if you will, not garden flowers; but let us welcome them with the daisies.

It is interesting, therefore, to note what these dragonflies, these many-hued ephemerides of literature, are endeavouring to accomplish; interesting, and perhaps instructive. What common impulse is working in the singer from ultra-modern America, him who rhymes on the garden-seat of a London omnibus, and the novice from the country? At first sight nothing seems so conspicuous in this cloud as its many colours, its extreme diversity. One follows Tennyson, another leans towards Wordsworth, Rossetti, Swinburne, and endless influences are apparent as we turn the pages. Undoubtedly that is the case: there is no school dominant at present, as Tennyson was dominant in the earlier Victorian era, and wide individuality as regards manner and form is a note of this lesser verse. But yet it is not impossible to arrive at certain general characters, to educe a ruling tendency: these very various poets are more alike than they deem. Let us take, as a first example, the work of an American lady with the curious name of Mary McNeil Fenollosa. Two of the very best of these recent volumes, by the way, are American. This lady's poems are notable in two ways. In the first place much of them is remarkably good; in the second place, more than half of them are concerned with Japan. They are the records of an American woman's residence in that delightful country, and gain all the novelty of Japanese scenery, which yet is not too novel—an important consideration as regards the theme of verse. Her work is full of promise, and contains some excellent performance. She has sensitive observation, a gift of really original fancy, and a rich and cultivated diction, more classic than is usual in female poets. These qualities she has applied to the illustration of a country which is ready-made poetry, poetry asking but to be gathered; and the result is full of delicacy and charm.

Here is her vignette of "Midsummer in Tokio":

A copper sky, grey-veiled in heated mist,
Blue roofs, white-ribbed, and clumps of sullen trees
Set close for shade, and dark with purple gloom!
The long straight moats gleam dully, set between Stone-patient walls, whose mossy crests are twined
With forms of crouching dragons, pines that writhe
Red-sealed and rough, with fins of living green.
A crow beats heavily through the diluted air,
Aimless with years, and vaguely bound to tip
The ancient castle-gate, black-peaked and tall,
Lone sentry at the portal of the past.
Silence has slept, but from the infrequent grass
Comes prickling mist of myriad tiny sounds;
For there the cicadae, those little men,
Sit twirling summer through shrill reels of song.
Off in the busy town the streets lie bare;
But under booths of straw old dames sell fruit
And many a cooling drink. There children play
More quiet for the heat, or, drooped like flowers,
Sleep in the doors with little faces flushed.
In long straight rows the nerveless willows stand,
Weeping green rain that never falls to earth;
While, piercing down the vista, comes a sound,
The keen, recurrent, many-fluted cry
Of Anna San, a human cicada.
O'er street, and moat, and granite-castled isle
The dusty glare of muffled light has crept,
And choked the world with languor, till the soul
Stirs panting, like the air's white flames that rise
Made visible with tremor. Then is blown,
Cooling the air with shaded petal-waves,
The great sound-blossom of a temple-bell.

It is in such impressions as this that Miss Fenollosa shows best, for she has no power of passion. You note the choice diction, the happiness of expression culminating in such a line as:

Sit twirling summer through shrill reels of song.

It shows also the writer's weakness: she is not artistic, she is deficient in selection, compression, and sense of form. Such a line as

Under booths of straw old dames sell fruit
And many a cooling drink, is prosaic and were better away; while the whole description is too resolved and categorical in its detail. But despite all defects, it makes you feel and see the sultry Japanese town. Here is a sonnet on "Fujisan from Enoshima":

O thou divine, remote, ineffable!
Thou cone of visions based on level sea,
Thou ache of joy in pale eternity,
Thou gleaming pearl in night's encrusted shell,
Thou frozen ghost, thou crystal citadel,
Heart-hushed I gaze, until there seems to be Nothing in heaven or earth, but thee and me,
I the faint echo, thou the crystal bell!

Time rolls beneath me, as the waves' long foam,
And thoughts, as drifting weeds, float vaguely by,
Leaving my ransomed soul to fill the dome
Which curves, by day, thy cloud-fringed canopy.
Measured by gods, I draw my human height;
Then hide me weeping, I have faced the height!

It is a far enough cry, apparently, from this lady to Mr. W. Cuthbertson, the best pieces in whose By Shore and Wood are ballades, rondeaus, and the like, couched in the lighter vein. Whether angling and golf have yet had their ballade we do not know; but Mr. Cuthbertson, at any rate, gives us both. His "Ballade of an Angler" is pleasantly touched.

When winds are breathing faint perfume,
And crimson tints the eastern skies,
When like a spectre from the tomb
The wan moon slowly fades and dies,

When overhead the skylarks rise,
And love-notes from the willows steal:
This is the melody I prize,
The music of the ringing reel.

When overhead the pine-trees gloom,
Where fitfully the low wind sighs—
The woof that threads the river's loom—
While o'er its face the swallow flies.
I mark the noon's half-sleepy eyes,
The murmuring river's wash I feel,
And hear, while sink the deadly flies,
The music of the ringing reel.

When from afar the bittern's boom
Sweeps weirdly, and the landrail's cries
Come harshly, when the cornflowers bloom,
Like never-ceasing threnodies.
When o'er the darkened river flies
My careful cast; to cheer my zeal
There comes a note of sweet surprise,
The music of the ringing reel.

ENVY.

Prince, how'er grey or bright the skies
At morn or noon or night may steal
Their onward way, I only prize
The music of the ringing reel.

Alien enough these graceful dexterities from the muse of the lady of Japan, you think; particularly when Mr. Cuthbertson sings of tobacco—as he does sing—and his “triolet” we may quote:

There's no tobacco like Perique
Of all that's brought across the ocean;
From Galveston to Chesapeake,
There's no tobacco like Perique.
To praise it you will find a week
A space too short for your devotion.
There's no tobacco like Perique,
Of all that's brought across the ocean.

Yet under the wide difference of form there is a likeness between the two. Both are impressionistic, both are busy with nothing but the effect of nature—or tobacco—upon themselves. The more one examines, the more is this seen to be a common note of all these younger singers. With most the interest is nature, with some it is life; but all present to nature and life a purely passive attitude, they face them sensitively only. Take up Mr. George Woodberry's Wild Eden and you find the same trait. This richly-coloured picture gives us the purely impressionistic note again:

One rich hollyhock warden,
High in the midsummer garden,
Motionless points its blossoming spear
Up to the honey-pale, amber-clear
Dome of the golden atmosphere,
Shut aloft by the foliage-wall
Linden, rock-maple, elms over all,
Embowering, umbrageous, massive, tall,
That make of the garden a little dell,
A place of slumber for blade and bell—
Of sleep and circumambient peace,
From the crimson hollyhock's flowered spire
To the one deep rose-plume drifting fire,
Where, duskily seen as the shades increase,
'Mid molten flakes of breaking fleece,
And trellised with many a fading spark,
Through her summer-lattice peers the dark.

Yes, all these young men and maidens, as with one consent, are making sensitised plates of themselves; observing, feeling, reproducing, and no more. Therewith is another and kindred symptom—the disappearance of the “message.” We note one poet, who publishes anonymously with Messrs. Kegan Paul an appallingly long and most contentedly and conscientiously prosaic poem, Without a God, which is a kind of autobiographic novel in verse, and deals with the development of an individual soul, from the Agnostic standpoint. But the bulk care for none of these things, and have no thought of a teaching function in themselves. The “message” is not in season, that is clear. This universal preoccupation with the merely sensitive side of poetry is not quite a thing for congratulation. It may be pardoned, on the ground that it is the least ambitious way of writing. It is eminently feminine, and, therefore, it is not surprising that women are well to the front among these younger poets. In some of the female writers there is a pathetic and wistful consciousness of limited faculty, which does not go beyond the detailed sense that life is bitter, or life is sweet. One would not have these strain their throats. But in itself the tendency to resolve poetry into a study of sensations is regrettable—a vast abnegation of the greatest potentialities of English song. Thought and intellect disappear; of the Wordsworthian tradition but the husk remains, without the life-giving soul. Yet, consciously or unconsciously, the various flight of “new poets” are all in substance impressionist—though you may search far for the delicate methods of the French school which writes that title on its banners. And a proportion of them, as we have gratefully admitted and recognised, produce work having distinct appeal and quality, though they may have far to go along the difficult way of perfection. On the meanings of life their voice is weak and uncertain, if that trouble them at all: they have gone far from the day of In Memoriam, still further from the day of Browning. And since they are content with

The little life of bank and briar, it is ungrateful to ask them for more than they offer.

The Ox and the Corn.

First Principles in Politics. By William Samuel Lilly.
(John Murray. 14s.)

MR. LILLY opens his treatise with what looks like a paradox. From the general mind of to-day, he tells us, the idea of law is almost unseated. We had supposed—the opinion is in the air—that now at last, for the first time, the popular mind had embraced the conviction that things which happen, probably or improbably, happen in subjection to law. But he makes good his pretension.

It is true, no doubt, that in the realm of physical phenomena we ordinary men do at last understand that the sun is not arbitrarily eclipsed, that the weather is not altogether fortuitous, and that our Sodoms and Gomorrah, when they happen upon cyclones and earthquakes, are not by their sins the immediate cause of those shocking cataclysms. But Mr. Lilly very well points out that, in the ultimate signification, the sequence of cause and effect among physical phenomena does not properly contain that which law connotes: for necessity has no place in pure physics; it is not, for instance, of necessity that material bodies attract each other according to a certain familiar formula. It merely happens. Necessity can be connoted properly only in the region beyond the physical. Law is metaphysical, for law is a function of reason; and it is to the devotion of the world to what is called physical science that the general obscuration of the idea of law sensu stricto may be traced.

Particularly in matters politic is this exemplified. “My dear fellow,” said a contemporary to Mr. Lilly, “. . . there are no first principles in politics, or last principles; there are no principles at all, and no laws giving expression to principles; it is a mere matter of expediency, of utility, of convention, of self-interest.” This was the voice of the Zeitgeist. And over against it he entrenches himself.

“Nothing is that errs from law”—law that, in the order of thought, precedes all its manifestations, the first fact of the universe. Upon that principle—not upon the principle of might, or of utility, or of self-interest—the State is built up, differing thus from the comities of beasts—of wolves, of bees, of ants. For man is rational; therefore is free-willed; and because he is free of will, can do justice or refrain.

Justice recognises the rights of the individual. The individual demands freedom; and, with proper limitations, Justice renders it to him, in four manifestations. He has the right to exist, limited by the duty of labour. He has an indefeasible right to live out his own life, to determine the use of his own faculties, so that they be innocuously energised. He has a right to hold what he gets or acquires, so that he hold it, in some sense, for the benefit of his brethren. Finally, in proportion to his aptitude, he has a right to a share in the legislation and administration of his country.

So far we go whole-heartedly with Mr. Lilly; it is agreeable to find a man who in these days cares to set forth his convictions on a broad à priori basis. The rest of his work is concerned with the application of his principles to the difficult details of our complex social environment; and it does seem, despite our prepossession by his calm and philosophic prolegomena, as though in the questions of Strikes and Rings, of Trade Unions and Lock-outs, he leaves matters very much where he found them.

Thus the old—the antiquated—theories of the school that grew out of the masterpiece of Adam Smith had at least the merit of an unimpeachable logic. Granted the laws of Supply and Demand, of the Higgling of the Market, and the rest, the conclusion that prosperity depended absolutely and solely upon the strife between individuals and the bare survival of the fittest, did inexorably follow. But now, when the Shaftesburys and Ruskins have rendered intolerable to the humane observer the hideous cruelties which, in the name of Political Economy, must necessarily accompany the process of its actualisation, we find ourselves left, in effect—whatever may be our theories—in the dusk of haphazard. What, for instance, could be more futile than Carlyle's "A fair day's wage for a fair day's work is as just a demand as governed men ever made of governing; it is the everlasting right of men"? "Fair"—it begs the whole question. Of course, a fair wage is a just demand: what the new political economy has to settle is precisely what is a fair wage, and upon what principles it must be determined. The gentle Pope's "It is a dictate of nature, more authoritative and more ancient than any contract between man and man, that the remuneration of the labourer must be sufficient to support him in reasonable and frugal comfort" is less vague, and proportionately less certain. For not seldom it happens that labour, eating and drinking as it goes, is found at the last to have produced nothing—or less. Surely, nature's recompense in such case would be famine.

The fact is, that there remains still room for an economy which shall formulate, upon a basis of reason and justice, the proportions according to which the accumulations of thrift, on the one hand, and, on the other, the industry and skill of labour, may rightly divide their increment.

Milton's Quaker Friend.

The History of the Life of Thomas Elwood. New Edition. Edited by C. G. Crump. (Methuen & Co. 6s.)

THOMAS ELWOOD hardly ranks among the fathers of Quakerism. Not his, of course, were the spiritual fountains which welled up in George Fox; a comparison between these men would be absurd. But his name cannot be written alongside the learned Barclay, the sagacious Penn, or the patriarchal Isaac Penington. He was no son of thunder, able to control the London mob, like Edward Burrough; and he left no pages which Charles Lamb could pore over with the rapture he bestowed on those of the mild Dewsbury. Men as little known as Francis Howgill and Richard Hubberthorne were spiritual giants compared with Elwood. The eloquence of these fulfilled over England, and made the Quakers a host of many times ten thousand; they were live coals from the altar. Unlike theirs, Elwood's books have no prophetic fire, no Davidean tears. His journal is an airy book, quaint, vivid, important by chance. This being so, we think that Mr. Crump, to whom we are entirely grateful for a correct text of Elwood's book, might have introduced his hero in a lighter manner. His Introduction is a capital résumé of the history and social conditions of early Quakerism, but it is serious and complete enough to usher in a new edition of George Fox's Journal—a work compared with which Elwood's is froth.

Elwood's conversion to Quakerism was in this wise. His father had stinted his education in favour of an elder brother, and the result was that Thomas lived in genteel idleness at home, attending his father, who was a justice of the peace, to the Petty Sessions, and aimlessly enjoying country life. Meanwhile a friend of the family, Lady Springett, a sprightly widow with a sprightlier daughter—the historic Guli who afterwards became the wife of William Penn—had married Isaac Penington, and was newly settled with her husband and her daughter Guli (Springett) at Chalfont, only fifteen miles from the Elwoods. What was more natural than that Justice Elwood and his son Thomas should saddle their horses, and go cantering into Bucks to visit their friends? It would have been less natural if they had known that the Peningtons had become Quakers, but in blissful ignorance of this they rode up to the door with light words of greeting on their lips. Their disillusionment was sudden and complete. "So great a change from a free debonnaire and courtly sort of behaviour . . . did not a little amuse us, and disappoint our expectation of such a pleasant visit as we used to have."

Young Elwood was fascinated by the Quaker rule, and began to visit the Peningtons on his own account. Lapped in Quaker kindness, and wanting an aim, he became a Quaker. He soon came to London, and was entangled in the nets of persecution which filled Bridewell and Newgate with inoffensive Quakers. Elwood's Newgate scenes are vivid and valuable; but the salt of his journal is in its earlier chapters, in which we see the impact of Quakerism on a family of social position. It is also to be found in the story of Elwood's connexion with John Milton, which he recounts sparingly, and drops as a "digression." It was as a young Quaker anxious to repair the defects in his education that Elwood was introduced to the poet, in London, in the capacity of a reader and pupil.

I . . . took myself a lodging . . . as near to his house (which was then in Jewyn-street) as conveniently as I could, and from thenceforward went every day in the afternoon, except on the first days of the week, and sitting by him in his dining-room read to him in such books in the Latin tongue as he pleased to hear me read. At my first sitting to read to him, observing that I used the English pronunciation, he told me, if I would have the benefit of the Latin tongue, not only to read and understand Latin authors, but to converse with foreigners either abroad or at home, I must learn the foreign pronunciation. To this I consented, he instructing me how to sound the vowels; so different from the common pronunciation used by the English, who speak Anglice their Latin.

Elwood's simplicity, his well-bred, candid address, and his earnestness in religion won upon the poet. The casual relation quickly warmed to friendship, and when Milton wished to leave London during the Plague it was Elwood who took "a pretty box" for him near Chalfont. And here, visiting the poet, Elwood was handed the MS. of Paradise Lost by Milton himself:

He asked me how I liked it and what I thought of it, which I modestly but freely told him, and after some discourse about it, I pleasantly said to him: "Thou hast said much here of 'Paradise Lost,' but what hast thou to say of 'Paradise Found'?" He made me no answer, but sat some time in a muse; then broke off that discourse, and fell upon another subject.

After the sickness was over, and the city well cleansed and become safely habitable again, he returned thither.

And when afterwards I went to wait on him there, which I seldom failed of doing whenever my occasions drew me to London, he showed me his second poem, called "Paradise Regained," and with a pleasant tone said to me: "This is owing to you, for you put it into my head by the question you put to me at Chalfont, which before I had not thought of."

That scene and dialogue are Elwood's patent of immortality. Yet one must allow a closer significance to the forgotten "Testimony of the Monthly Meeting at Hungerhill": "He was a man of very acceptable and agreeable conversation, as well as sober and religious . . . his memorial is sweet to us."

Tabulated Hysterics.

The Psychology of Religion. By E. D. Starbuck. (Walter Scott.)

IN outward aspect this work is commonplace enough; to the ordinary reader it will not make an immediate appeal. But on opening it we found ourselves face to face with a new departure, and in ten minutes had decided that it was one of the most astonishing books of the day. For Dr. Starbuck, wishing to probe the religious experiences of his fellow-creatures, has adopted a method which, though fairly common in America, has not yet taken firm hold on English prejudices. He has "circularised" a large number of people, setting them certain questions to answer as to their age and weight, their mental and physical symptoms before, during, and after conversion; and, curiously enough, he obtained quite a number of answers. "What circumstances and experiences preceded conversion?" asks Dr. Starbuck; "any sense of depression, smothering, fainting, loss of sleep and appetite?" "How did relief come?" he continues. "What were your feelings after the crisis—sense of bodily lightness, weeping, laughing?" And so on up to Question Eleven. Fearing to miss a single pang, Dr. Starbuck adds: "State a few bottom truths embodying your own deepest feelings."

The questions were addressed mostly to Americans, and among the replies were bottom truths from Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Baptists, Negroes, Japanese, and one Hawaiian. Knowing the difficulty of skimming the merest froth of thought, one sympathises with the solitary Hawaiian trying to state a bottom truth about his deepest feelings.

But this represents only the beginning of Dr. Starbuck's labours. Having obtained replies from 120 females and 72 males, he set himself to make deductions from those answers, and having collated the results, the weights, the ages, the sexes, the loss of appetite, the insomnia of the converts, he has set forth a series of tables in which we have as clear a view of the "conversion-curves" as the Meteorological Office gives us of the rise and fall of the barometer. The age curve, for example, shows us conversions starting at seven years, and mounting gradually till it reaches its culminating point at sixteen. But the curve differs in the cases of males and females. "Among the females there are two tidal waves of religious awakening at about 13 and 16, followed by a less significant period at 18; while among the males the great wave is at about 16, preceded by a wavelet at 12, and followed by a surging up at 18 or 19." And the chart gives evidence that if a man is not converted by his twenty-third birthday he runs very small risk of being converted at all. Moreover, the height and weight chart gives practically the same results. For "during the period of most rapidly bodily growth is the time when conversion is most likely to occur." This is only what might have been expected a priori, for the age of puberty is, of course, the period at which the angel stirs the pool of emotion. But it is when he comes to the bottom truths that Dr. Starbuck is most interesting, for the replies he obtained do not by any means err on the side of reticence, and one would have recommended a doctor rather than a camp-meeting revivalist for the treatment of the symptoms described. "Loss of sleep or appetite" is pretty evenly distributed between the sexes, but "weeping" was naturally a predominant feminine symptom. It is not easy to conjecture why the number of males who were afflicted with temporary deafness before conversion should more than double that of the females, though we might hazard a reason to explain the fact that these premonitory symptoms last with a youth nearly three times as long as they last with a girl.

In justice to Dr. Starbuck, we should state that he treats his subject with perfect gravity. But it is rather startling to find the emotional experiences which most people regard as too sacred for open discussion set forth like the rise and fall of market prices. Nor can we admit that he has added anything to our sum of knowledge. We all know that the phenomenon called "conversion" by revivalist preachers is a sort of hysterical outburst which is likely to occur at the moment when the child becomes an adult; nor do we need bottom truths from Hawaii to teach us that.

From Oxford.

Nova Anthologia Oxoniensis. Edited by Robinson Ellis, M.A., and A. D. Godley, M.A. (Clarendon Press.)

THE power to write a neat copy of elegiacs or iambics is no longer regarded as the crown and coping-stone of a liberal education. Doubtless this is as it should be. Philology, archaeology, palaeography, and a dozen other interests have stepped in to fill the vacant place, and it is in every way better that the student should read his Greek and Latin texts largely, with some thought for the ideas which they convey and the modes of life which they mirror, than that he should spend his time in learning to reproduce, however faithfully, the diction and the prosody of a somewhat arbitrarily determined "classical" period. Even style he will probably learn better, so far as it is to be learnt at all, from attempts to express himself in his own tongue than in any other way. Verse composition is an accomplishment, a pretty trick of the finished scholar: it is not an instrument of education. As an accomplishment, however, we hope it may flourish long; and that it still does flourish, at Oxford at least, the elegant little volume before us is sufficient witness. The contributors are some fifty in number, and their University careers must cover among them about as many years. At one end of the series comes the late Master of Balliol, the only one of the company, we fancy, who is not still living; at the other Mr. J. S. Phillimore, the recently appointed and very young Professor of Greek at Glasgow. A few among them have attained to distinction in other than academic fields. Does Sir Alfred Milner, in the heat and dust of South African controversy, recall his "Kubla Khan" in Virgilian hexameters?—

And midst this tumult Kubla heard from far
Ancestral voices prophesying war.

At longe resonare audivit avitas
Æneas voces, certum et prædicere bellum.

The average level of merit seems to us at least up to that of any similar volume of the same kind with which we are acquainted. One or two of the writers deal with their difficulties rather cavalierly. The special point of "left the daisies rosy" is missed when it is turned into "left the lilies red behind her." On the other hand there are some who are remarkably successful not merely in translating the words of their texts, but in preserving much of the atmosphere and poetic quality. In Latin we should single out the President of Magdalen's version of Tennyson's Invitation to the Isle of Wight:

You'll have no scandal while you dine,
But honest talk and wholesome wine,
And only hear the magpie gossip
Garrulous under a roof of pine.

Nil cenam tibi condiet maligni
Sed sal candidior, salubre vinum,
Et solus prope fabulator aves
Pinus culmine tectus increpabit.

Also Prof. Phillimore's really charming bits from "Thyrsis" and "The Scholar Gipsy":

Shepherds had met him on the Hurst in spring:
At some lone alehouse in the Berkshire moors—
Or the warm ingle-bench, the smock-rocked boors
Had found him seated at their entering.
But, mid their drink and clatter he would fly:

Illum vere novo pastores colle vagantem,
Illum cinctutos paterent cum nocte Sabinis
Montibus hospitium, sola invenisse taberna
Agricolae, sella ante Lares Vestamque sedentem:
Mox fugere elapsum turba strepituque bibentum.

Also almost any of Prof. Robinson Ellis's renderings into Latin lyrical metres. Perhaps the happiest is from Ben Jonson:

See, see, her sceptre and her crown
Are all of flame, and from her gown
A train of light comes waving down.

Sceptrum cernitis ut vomat
Ignis flammifero cum diademate?
Ut de veste tremens deae
Decurrat liquidi fascia luminis.

In Greek Prof. Murray's choric ode and his Theocritean hexameters are admirable and ingenious: but best of all we think are Mr. Arthur Sidgwick's true and poignant renderings from Browning. Both "Never any more" and "O lyric love" are as good as they can be. And Browning's very modern subtlety must, so far as difficulty goes, be at quite the opposite pole from, say, "Samson Agonistes" or "Sohrab and Rustum." The absence of any index to the work of the different translators is most irritating.

South Africa and the War: II.

The War in South Africa: its Causes and Effects. By J. A. Hobson. (Nisbet & Co. 7s. 6d. net.)

The Death or Glory Boys. By D. H. Parry. (Cassell & Co.)

To Modder River with Methuen. By Alfred Kinnear. (Arrowsmith. 1s.)

Two Million Civilian Soldiers of the Queen, and How to Raise Them. By Richard Bennett. (Simpkin, Marshall. 6d.)

MR. HOBSON is on the side of the Boers, but he expounds their case so temperately that the most imperialist reader will find his book helpful. Indeed, all through these pages there is a see-saw of statement and admission which produces thought rather than conviction. Mr. Hobson writes with knowledge derived from a visit to South Africa in the summer and autumn of last year. His opportunities for studying the political situation were specially good: he was at Pretoria during the critical negotiations, at Bloemfontein when the Free State resolved to stand by the Transvaal, and at Cape Town when the first shot was fired. He talked with prominent men in the two Republics and in the Colony, and that he made the most of his time is clear; still it is necessary to point out that a knowledge of South African politics acquired in a few months can hardly be profound. Mr. Hobson says many striking things, but he reveals the timidity of an honest learner rather than the assurance of a ripened student. Take Mr. Hobson's character-sketch of Mr. Kruger. On one page we are told that a perfectly sound explanation of his wealth is found in his legitimate land operations. On another we have this cautious passage:

It is idle to shirk the accusations brought against the President; they are not merely the vague whispers of agitators on the Rand. Many Transvaalers not hostile to the general policy of Mr. Kruger are evidently staggered and perplexed by certain aspects of that policy and certain incidents in his career. Enemies boldly cast in his teeth personal corruption, insisting that he has taken large sums of money, not merely for the dynamite, but for other concessions and dealings; that he has allowed some members of his family and a little clique of personal friends to enrich themselves by abuse of official power and by lobbying. Upon this matter I have probed many well-informed persons, and can get no sure conclusion. One thing is certain, that Kruger has not what we should call a "nice sense of honour" in these matters. The case of the Salati Railway is conclusive on this point.

Again in his analysis of the Outlanders' motives we have a double-action sentence like this:

Many of these men, as I shall show, were chiefly prompted by purely selfish motives, which would ultimately lead them to use politics against the common weal; but some were moved by a genuine interest in the cause of good government, quickened by the irritation which a sharp-witted business man feels when he sees incompetent people round him muddling things and wasting the public resources.

And when Mr. Hobson comes to the question of official corruption, he gives facts, puts in demurs, redistributes blame. But the same frank admission comes: "There does exist a corrupt gang at Pretoria." Then as to the aims of the war. Mr. Hobson thinks that in effect "we are fighting in order to place a small international oligarchy of mine-owners and speculators in power at Pretoria." We feel very sure that if such motives prompted the war, quite other motives will be enlisted in settling the country after a costly victory. But even Mr. Hobson admits that this international oligarchy—which we believe to have no future existence—"may be better for the country and for the world than the present or any other rule." Mr. Hobson's honesty may weaken his argument, but it is not wasted. His exposition of the state of affairs in South Africa, as he sees it, should sow valuable and humane ideas in the minds of those who read his book.

A handy addition to regimental histories is that of the 17th Lancers, otherwise the "Death or Glory Boys." The regiment, which is one of the smartest and most famous of the British cavalry, was raised in 1759 by Colonel John Hale, the friend of Wolfe, who took the despatches home after the fall of Quebec, and as a reward for his services was allowed to raise and command a regiment of light horse. Colonel Hale was not long in getting to work, as in 1761 a draft of the regiment was sent to Germany to serve under the celebrated Marquess of Granby and Prince Ferdinand. In 1775 it went to America, where it fought in most of the actions in the American War, returning home in 1787. In 1795-96 it was in the West Indies, in 1806-7 in South America, and from 1810 to 1820 in India. Later on it served through the Crimean War, taking part in the famous charge of the Light Brigade, the Mutiny, and the Zulu and Afghan campaigns. Such a roll of services deserves a vates sacer, and Mr. Parry has accordingly produced a work which will be read with interest even by those who have never had the honour of serving under the skull and crossbones. Of course, Mr. Perry's book is a mere tender to the Hon. J. Fortescue's standard History of the 17th Lancers, published some years ago. But the 17th is a regiment worshipped of the people, and the price of Mr. Fortescue's book soared above the ordinary pocket.

We hope that the desire to be early in the field with war books will not be responsible for much writing so undistinguished as Mr. Kinnear's. The following sentences, with the amazing printer's bungle at the end, are not untypical of this hasty newspaper performance:

The losses amongst the rankers have proved so heavy, however, that I am afraid to think of the track of sorrow that must follow the return of the Brigade to the Metropolis. I draw a decent veil over the sickening anxiety of the girls of the perambulator of the Bird Cage Walk and the Green Park. Many of these young ladies, wheeling their infantile charges in all innocence of the losses they have sustained, will look, and look in vain, for the once familiar faces, as I have said in detail, my friends the Guards held Methuen's right, and assisted in hurling the Boers slowly across the river.

Mr. Kinnear's book has its better and more informing pages, but haste mars it throughout.

Compulsory service in the Volunteer forces, as these are at present constituted, is suggested by Mr. Richard Bennett as the remedy for our unpreparedness for a great war. Every youth of eighteen years would, under Mr. Bennett's scheme, be compelled to join the local equivalent of the present Volunteer corps; and the author calculates that this diluted form of conscription would yield a splendid civilian army of two millions.

Other New Books.

NIGERIA.

BY CANON ROBINSON.

Canon Robinson, who is Canon Missioner of Ripon and Lecturer in Hausa in the University of Cambridge, here gives the results of his recent journeys among the Hausa people in the Western Soudan. His volume, both for its ethnological value and as an entertaining account of some of the myriad inhabitants of our new protectorate, should find many readers. It will perhaps be particularly interesting to those spectators of the Diamond Jubilee procession who were struck by the fine military fitness of the Hausa troops. The Hausas, of course, are not to be classed with savages in the ordinary use of the word: they are Mohammedans for the most part, and do not lack for good sense. Indeed, Canon Robinson, who comes to these people with much sympathy and a singularly broad mind, admits the impasse into which their questions occasionally led him. Once, for example, he was suggesting to a native the undesirability of the Prophet's law permitting four wives to each man. "The argument which he used," says the Canon, "was one to which it seemed impossible to suggest any reply": he held up his hand and drew attention to the fact that God had made it as a pattern of human society—as He had united one thumb to four fingers so He intended one man to be united to four wives. Another native—a boy—after being carefully instructed as to his divine origin, asked if God ("Up-Up") had also made the mosquito ("buz-buz"). The missionary hastened to say that He had. "Then," said the boy, "why does Up-Up let the buz-buz eat me?" There is, of course, a reply to this question, but it seems to be efficacious and satisfying only among more civilised querists. Some of the quotations from Hausa poets which Canon Robinson gives seem to suggest that there is as much moral wisdom among this nation as need be, and example and practice alone are required from us. These are fair specimens of the Hausas' higher sententiousness:

"This life is a sowing-place for the next; all who sow good deeds will behold the great city."

"Whoever chooses this world rejects the choice of the next; he seizes one cowrie, but loses two thousand cowries."

"We have a journey before us which cannot be put aside, whether you are prepared or unprepared, Whether by night or just before the dawn, or in the morning when the sun has risen."

But in certain practical matters the Hausas are less happily inspired. For instance, they will not eat eggs, the reason being that if the egg were left it would become a fowl, and that would make a much better meal. A very agreeable book. (Marshall. 5s. net.)

THE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD.

BY HAROLD E. GORST.

The new volume in the curiously various and comprehensive "Victorian Era" series. If we say of Mr. Gorst's book that it is a useful guide to Disraeli's career, we shall, perhaps, be expressing the case fully enough; for it is much more than a guide to Disraeli himself. To penetrate that impassive Eastern exterior and lay bare the very man requires gifts of a different order from those exhibited in this work. But so far as it goes, the monograph is praiseworthy, although the author's view has not the largeness we should have liked. He is a partisan too steadily. For Mr. Gladstone and all his ways he has profound disdain, and no opportunity is lost of aggrandising Disraeli at the expense of his great opponent. An historian of nicer perception would have known that this is unnecessary: neither man was invariably right or wrong, and Disraeli would lose nothing by an insistence on certain of his faults. From the very first—when he went to the theatre in velvet, carried a tasseled cane, cultivated a bunch of ringlets over his left cheek, and wore his rings outside his gloves—a glamour settled upon Disraeli's personality; but it has changed in character since his death, and no one would be more amused than he to view the reverence, almost as for a saint, in which his name is now held by certain of the young Tory school—an emotion which will only be fostered by Mr. Gorst's book. For good Imperialists to venerate Disraeli's later policy and deeds is only right; but there is no call to drop the voice when they speak of him. He was too humorous, too cynical, too Oriental a man for that. With all his admiration, Mr. Gorst does not, even politically, make so much of his hero as he might. For instance, the very interesting and characteristic story of the acquisition of the Suez Canal shares is not told—a story in which Disraeli plays a brilliant part. On Disraeli's social side the book is weak: considering that his letter to Carlyle (his old enemy), offering him a pension, is described as exquisite in its delicacy, it ought to have been given, if only as an illustration of Disraeli's epistolary tact. And why did not Mr. Gorst find room for that perfect comparison of Gladstone and Disraeli which was produced at Chelsea in one of the old critic's more inspired sardonic moods? It is true that it hits Disraeli rather hard, but Mr. Gorst would have had the satisfaction of knowing that it hit Gladstone harder. (Blackie. 2s. 6d.)

OLD FRIENDS AT CAMBRIDGE.

BY J. WILLIS CLARK.

Mr. Clark tells us that this volume must take the place—at any rate for the present—of that volume of Recollections or Memoirs which frequently he has been urged to write. It is not, we fear, a very good substitute. The recollections of the Registrar of the University of Cambridge—one who has known most of her sons for the past half century, and is himself among the most zealous of them—would certainly be more to the point than a collection of reviews and biographical notices reprinted from the Church Quarterly and the Saturday. The book is interesting, for it deals, among others, with Whewell and Thirlwall, Lord Houghton and Henry Bradshaw, E. H. Palmer and Richard Owen; but it lacks the personal character which we have the right to expect from a work entitled Old Friends at Cambridge. Mr. Clark suppresses himself totally. Instead of the record of his own friendships, the book might be merely the fruit of perusal as critic of the biographies of these men as they have appeared. Bishop Thirlwall, for example, Mr. Clark says he never even saw. More, the articles, with the exception of that on Whewell—the best of them—have been printed almost as they were written, at periods ranging from seventeen to four years ago; which means that much interesting information that has since come to light—and we are always collecting new data about notable men in whom we take an interest—has been disregarded; while in not every case have what Mr. Clark calls the obvious and necessary corrections been made, for the author of the Life of Prof. Palmer is alluded to throughout as Mr. Besant, although he has been a knight since 1895. In short, we cannot help looking upon this book as rather a scamped performance. With the expenditure of more thought it might have been a real biographical treasury—not, perhaps, worthy to stand beside Dean Burgon's Twelve Good Men, for Mr. Clark lacks the required temperament, but worthy of an adjacent place.

We cannot find anything that is very quotable, but the story which Mr. Clark repeats of Whewell's indifference as a tutor may be new to our readers. Whewell took his duties very lightly, and considered the whole thing a bore and an interference; so much so, that it is alleged of him that among a list of pupils which he once gave to his servant to bid to a wine party after Hall was an undergraduate who had been dead some weeks. "Mr. Smith, sir? Why, he died last term, sir," said the man. "You ought to tell me when my pupils die," replied the tutor sternly. (Macmillan. 6s.)

QUEER-SIDE STORIES.

BY JAMES F. SULLIVAN.

MR. SULLIVAN is not only an artist with an appreciation of the queer side of things; as a writer he is possessed of a rather extravagantly boisterous sense of fun; and many of the stories in this volume are undeniably funny. Funny is the precise word, for the reader's response to Mr. Sullivan is rather a guffaw than a chuckle. When he hits upon a good idea, as the idea of the surviving Centaur, or the man afflicted with the malady of foreseeing the future, who can spot the winning number at Monte Carlo, or see the coming misfortunes of his friends, then Mr. Sullivan is really funny: and the good ideas give colour to a considerable proportion of the volume. But when he strikes on a worked-out claim, such as the "Beauty College Co.," it is only natural that the comic element is small; for Mr. Sullivan depends entirely upon incident; and when the incident fails Mr. Sullivan fails. As an instance of his method we may take the story of Moozeby, which in motive has many points of resemblance to Mr. Wells's story of the man who could work miracles. It illustrates admirably the different methods of treating the grotesquely supernatural which the two writers adopt. Mr. Wells interests us in the commonplace clerk who suddenly discovers himself to be possessed of miraculous gifts; indeed, the charm of the story lies in the pathetic inability of the stick-and-a-pipe young man to raise his imagination to the level of his possibilities. That is comedy. Mr. Sullivan's Moozeby is only a puppet in the hands of circumstance, and we are interested only in the absurdity of incident. Which is farce. But if Mr. Sullivan's characters are not characters at all, only marionettes dancing to the jerk of the author's hand, it must be admitted that he jerks shrewdly. (Downey & Co.)

LUCIAN, THE SYRIAN SATIRIST.

BY LIEUT.-COL. HENRY
W. L. HIME.

It is a little difficult to see the object of this volume. Probably Lucian has been a leisure delight and solace to Lieut.-Col. Hime, but that hardly justifies him in writing a monograph. He has got up his subject carefully enough, but he does not dispose of that first-hand learning which marks M. Croiset's Essai sur Lucien, nor has he the critical gift which made the brilliant exposition of the Syrian writer in Mr. Charles Whibley's "Studies in Frankness" so attractive a thing. In fact, Lieut.-Col. Hime shows rather a heavy hand in dealing with the literary felicities and delicate ironies of his chosen author. His solemn indictment of Lucian's morals can only provoke a smile. Lucian has no reverence or humanity. He laughs at Helen among the shades or the Cynic Proteus immolating himself in the flames out of philosophy—and in a dirty shirt. This, says Lieut.-Col. Hime, is "awful mirth." Well, but what does one go to Lucian for if it is not to be entertained by witty inhumanity? He does not claim our tears or our aspirations; and there are Sternes enough for the melting mood. We do not wish to part on terms of ill-will with Lieut.-Col. Hime, for after all it must tend to the emollience of manners that moderns should read the classics, even with imperfect apprehension; and, fortunately, he puts us in a good temper by finishing up with a long extract from the ever delightful Vera Historia. In the company of the Hippogryphians, who dwell in the Moon, and are reigned over by none other than Endymion and the Lactanopters who ride upon fowls with wings of lettuce and wort leaves, and the Caulomycetes who have shields of mushrooms and spears of asparagus stalks, and the Cynobalians who are dog-faced men and beshride winged acorns, and all the rest of the happy Selenian host, we are willing to have done with criticism and end with nothing less than gratitude. (Longmans.)

Fiction.

The Princess Xenia. By H. B. Marriott Watson.
(Harper & Brothers. 6s.)

MR. CHRISTOPHER LAMBERT was idling his youth away in Dreiburg, the capital of an independent but particularly small Teutonic State, when a lawyer from London called upon him with the information that he had inherited four-and-a-half millions of money. Christopher did not rush immediately off to Paris to spend it, nor even to London. Being a young man of fancies, he conceived the idea of becoming Providence to this State and to the two equally small and equally independent States which bounded it on either side. Beginning with an entanglement in a revolutionary society, he gradually insorted himself into the politics of the three States, and took a hand in the great game of playing off Austria against Germany. The bestowal of the Princess Xenia in marriage made a large item in the game. Xenia desired one prince; policy demanded another. Christopher used his millions to please the lady. In the result his meddling brought death and disaster into the lands over which Christopher had constituted himself Providence. A German army corps interfered, and, when confronted with a German army corps, this Providence whose omnipotence extended only to four millions and a half had to confess a miserable failure. Xenia found herself without even a home, and we are led to suppose that she married the ex-Providence, who had still some three millions left.

Such, briefly, is the matter of Mr. Marriott Watson's modern romance. It is a most readable and carefully-wrought book, and though one may commence by being prejudiced by the author's mannerisms and affectations and his lack of resource at critical moments, one finishes by a surrender to the general charm and glitter of the tale.

It is ingenious, subtle, and sometimes brilliant, and some of the characters, notably the quasi-adventuress Katarina, are very well done. The chief fault of it seems to be that Christopher possesses but little talent for intrigue. He has a habit of getting himself into corners, and from these Mr. Marriott Watson extricates him by means that are neither novel nor convincing. His escape from the session of the secret society (end of Chapter II.) is an example of this: "A crash followed, the wall rocked and opened, and his body disappeared beneath the tangled confusion of the curtain." The curtain device is really too old. The author refers to the "magnificent imperturbability" of his hero. We may say that this imperturbability is carried to excess. And further, Christopher uses his millions crudely. He pays them, whereas a genius at the trade would merely have manipulated them:

"I understand that the claim of Germany is for ten million marks. Your Highness, Herr Chancellor, gentlemen of the Council—" He felt swiftly in his pocket, and produced a bundle of documents. "There," he cried, flinging them with theatrical effect upon the table—"there lies this miserable debt! In that packet you will find, Mr. Treasurer, securities for close upon twelve million marks. Your Highness, I think now that Germany can trouble you no further."

Amazement ran round the room like an electric shock, starting the faces of the Councillors; and then a cry broke from the Treasurer, who loved a full purse and had a pedantic pride in his office, and who had seized upon the roll.

"Ach, God! your Highness," he shrieked, "they are English! It is good. English consols, English railways, English corporation bonds—there is no sight so beautiful!" He wiped his spectacles, which had grown moist from his emotion.

"It is an answer to our prayers," murmured the Grand-Duke.

We have referred to Mr. Marriott Watson's mannerisms and affectations. These are mainly literary. We will mention a few instances out of scores. Would a man in the last distress speak to a girl thus: "I have the misfortune to be pursued; my life is at stake. Believe me, I would not disconcert you so much upon a lesser provocation." On page 92, Xenia's eyes are described as "large and equitable." Did they, then, resemble a certain insurance company, or a right of redemption under a mortgage? On page 26 is the phrase: "A sudden thrill plucking at his nerves." A string would vibrate after being plucked, but how can a thrill pluck? Finally, we consider that the following sentence has been tortured out of both elegance and correctness: "The maid took him to the door, and as he passed out, placing his hat in the act on his silvered hair, watched him with rude respect."

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

THEIR SILVER WEDDING JOURNEY. By W. D. HOWELLS.

A pleasant story, full of the Howellian detail, of a tired New York editor and his wife who had met in Europe in their youth, and now, to brace their nerve and escape from American ruts, re-visit Europe. Their time is spent mainly in Germany. There is much pleasant travel gossip, and, indeed, this is strictly a novel of travel, written with the quiet alertness and comparative independence of dialogue which are the author's note: "There were not many young people on board of saloon quality, and these were mostly girls. The young men were mainly of the smoking-room sort; they seldom risked themselves among the steamer chairs. It was gayer in the second cabin, and gayer yet in the steerage, where robust emotions were operated by the accordion." (Harper & Bros. 6s.)

BABES IN THE BUSH.

By ROLF BOLDREWOOD.

To remind the reader that this novel is by the author of Robbery Under Arms and The Squatter's Dream is to indicate its character. Prairie life, sheep-bells, hard riding, shrewd finance, and civilisation in the desert—these, and love, are the ingredients of a virile story. (Macmillan. 6s.)

THE MONEY SENSE.

By JOHN STRANGE WINTER.

A story with an avowed moral. "The story of Angelique is not a far-fetched one; alas! it is not an uncommon one; . . . it is the story . . . of any woman who marries from other than the one motive . . . A comfortable home—what is it? A silken curtain—a flounce of lace—an indigestible dish!" (Grant Richards. 6s.)

CINDER-PATH TALES.

By WILLIAM LINDSEY.

Athletics might well have produced more fictional literature than it has done hitherto. Here we have nine attractive short stories dealing with racing and jumping, &c., &c. A group of workmen who were "putting the shot" in their luncheon hour are well described in "The Hollow Hammer." Here we read: "Among the few remembrances of my books is that dialogue of Plato which describes the sensations of Socrates at first seeing the beautiful youth Charmides. Well (may Socrates forgive me the comparison), I had the same feeling when I first looked at Angus MacLeod on that June day, back in the 'sixties.'" (Grant Richards. 6s.)

UNCLE PETER.

By SEMA JEB.

A work of somewhat tortuous autobiography. The story is not easy to follow, partly by reason of the author's interjections and asides; but at the outset Uncle Peter and he dwelt in unity on the Norway coast. Afterwards come school and university life, sport and love, and in the end Uncle Peter deals in furs and converts the heathen. (Unwin. 6s.)

DORA MYRL.

By M. McD. BODKIN, Q.C.

Mr. Bodkin's first work of fiction was Paul Beck, the Rule of Thumb Detective. Dora Myrl supplies Paul Beck with a companion, for she is a lady detective. This book is a series of twelve episodes, all tending to display Miss Myrl's superlative gifts of deduction and opportunism. We must confess that some of the mysteries which she unravels are fairly obvious. (Chatto & Windus. 3s. 6d.)

CAPTAIN SATAN: THE ADVENTURES OF CYRANO DE BEROERAC.

FROM THE FRENCH.

This is a translation of Louis Gallet's novel founded on the exploits of the seventeenth century "poet, philosopher, swordsman, and hero," who has become one of the most striking figures in modern drama. A portrait of the hero, whose full name was Savinien Hercule de Cyrano Bergerac, is given as frontispiece, and the book has a timely relation to the forthcoming production, by Mr. Wyndham, of an English version of M. Rostand's famous play. (Jarrold. 6s.)

THE PREPARATION OF RYERSON EMBURY.

By ALBERT R. CARMAN.

A novel of industrial life and social purpose laid in the Canadian college town of Ithica. The motto is from the Light of Asia:

. . . But, looking deep, he saw
The thorns which grew upon this rose of life;
How the swart peasant sweated for his wage,
Toiling for leave to live.

(Unwin. 6s.)

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates for Yearly Subscriptions ..... 20s. including postage.

American Agents for the ACADEMY: Brentano's, 31, Union-square, New York.

The Fiction of Popular Magazines.

An Inquiry.

THE large circulations achieved by the three principal sixpenny illustrated magazines are the fruit of the most resolute and business-like attempt ever made to discover and satisfy the popular taste in monthly journalism. The conductors of these periodicals postulated an immense remunerative public which knew only "what it liked," and cared for no other consideration whatever; and then they proceeded to prove its existence. They were so fortunate as to be unhampered with any preconceptions about art and the ethics of art. Training their ears to catch the least vibration of that vox populi which for them was divine, they simply listened and learnt; and they learnt the quicker by sternly ignoring those beautiful and plaintive cries which had misled their predecessors in the same enterprise—the cries of originality, of force, of cleverness, of mere loveliness, of artistic or moral didacticism. In other terms, the great Commercial Idea was at work naked and strenuous in a field where all previous labourers had clothed themselves in the impeding mantle of some genteel unmercantile Aim, divulged or unconfessed. Singleness of purpose, especially when reinforced by capital, is bound to triumph, and it has triumphed in this case. After much research and experiment, the formula for a truly popular magazine has been arrived at; development is accordingly arrested, at any rate, for a time; the sixpenny monthly is stereotyped into a pattern, the chief details of which can be predicted with exactitude from month to month.

Now the fine flower of every magazine is its fiction, predominant among the other "features" in attractiveness, quality, and expense. It is the fiction which first and chiefly engages the editorial care, which has been most the subject of experiment, and which (perhaps for that very reason) is in the result the most strictly prescribed. We shall be justified in believing that the imaginative literature now printed in the popular magazines coincides with the popular taste as precisely as the limitations of human insight and ingenuity will permit. It assumes, of course, varied forms; but we are concerned only with the most characteristic form—that which is to be found equally in each magazine, and which may, therefore, be said to speak the final word of editorial cunning. This form, without doubt, is the connected series of short stories, of five or six thousand words each, in which the same characters, pitted against a succession of criminals or adverse fates, pass again and again through situations thrillingly dangerous, and merge at length into the calm security of ultimate conquest. It may be noted, by the way, that such a form enables the reader to enjoy the linked excitements of a serial tale without binding him to peruse every instalment. Its universal adoption is a striking instance of that obsequious paupering of mental laziness and apathy which marks all the most successful modern journalism. Dr. Conan Doyle invented it, or reinvented it to present uses. The late Grant Allen added to it a scientific subtlety somewhat beyond the appreciation of the sixpenny public. Mr. Rudyard Kipling has not disdained to modify it to his own ends. But the typical and indispensable practiser of it at the moment is Mrs. L. T. Meade. The name of Mrs. Meade, who began by writing books for children, is uttered with a special reverence in those places where they buy and sell fiction. She is ever prominent in the contents bills, if not of one magazine, then of another. She has the gift of fertility; but were she twice as fertile she could not easily meet the demand for her stories. With no genius except a natural instinct for pleasing the mass, she has accepted the form from other hands, and shaped it to such a nicety that editors exclaim on beholding her work, "This is it!" And they gladly pay her six hundred guineas for a series of ten tales.

In a sequence entitled The Brotherhood of the Seven Kings, by Mrs. Meade and Mr. Robert Eustace (it should be stated that Mrs. Meade employs a collaborator who, to use her own words, supplies "all the scientific portion of each story"), the hero is a philosopher and recluse, young, but with a past, and the sinister heroine is a woman of bewitching beauty who controls a secret society. Mrs. Meade has said to an interviewer that her stories "are all crowded with incident, and have enough plot in each to furnish forth a full novel." This is quite true. There is no padding whatever; incident follows incident with the curtness of an official despatch. In every story the recluse and the beauty come to grips, usually through the medium of some third person whom the latter wishes to ruin and the former to save. In nearly every story the main matter is the recital of an attempt by the heroine or her minions to deal out death in a novel and startling manner. Some of these attempts are really ingenious—for example, those by fever germ, tsetse-tsetse fly, focus tube (through the wall of a house), circle and ebbing-tide, explosive thermometer. Others—such as those involving the poison-scented brougham and the frozen grave—seem a little absurd; and the same is to be said of the beauty's suicide in an oxy-hydrogen flame giving a heat of 2,400 degrees Centigrade. Besides all these mortal commotions, the book teems with minor phenomena in which science is put to the service of melodrama. Thus, after the detective had covered the heroine with his revolver, "the next instant, as if wrenched from his grasp by some unseen power, the weapon leapt from Ford's hands, and dashed itself with terrific force against the poles of an enormous electro-magnet beside him . . . Madame must have made the current by pressing a key on the floor with her foot . . . 'It is my turn to dictate terms,' she said, in a steady, even voice." But perhaps the marvels of modern science are best illustrated in this succinct and lucid explanation of the destruction of a priceless vase: "It was not till some hours afterwards that the whole Satanic scheme burst upon me. The catastrophe admitted of but one explanation. The dominant note, repeated in two bars when all the instruments played together in harmony, must have been the note accordant with that of the cup of the goblet, and, by the well-known laws of acoustics, when so played it shattered the goblet."

For the rest, the well-tried machinery of coincidences, overheard conversations, and dropped papers is employed to push the action forward. "It is strange how that woman gets to know all one's friends and acquaintances," says the hero of the heroine. And it is strange. The descriptive passages present no novelties. Of a duke it is said: "He was well dressed, and had the indescribable air of good-breeding which proclaims the gentleman." The symptoms of mental uplifting and extreme agitation are set forth in quite the usual manner: "Two hectic spots burned on his pale cheeks, and the glitter in his eyes showed how keen was the excitement which consumed him." On the rare occasions when the hero allows himself to soliloquise for the reader's benefit, his thought and language are conceived on the simple theatrical lines of an address to a jury: "From henceforth my object would be to expose Mme. Kolusky. By so doing, my own life would be in danger; nevertheless, my firm determination was not to leave a stone unturned to place this woman and her confederates in the felon's dock of an English criminal court." Lastly, it is to be observed and specially remembered that the "love-interest," so often stated to be indispensable to the literature of the British public, amounts to nothing at all in The Brotherhood of the Seven Kings. Certain pretty and amiable girls (Vivien Delacour is one, and Geraldine de Brett is another) cross the stage from time to time, bringing some odour of pure passion; but in the dry light of that science which dominates and pervades every theme, these wistful creatures and their adulations are absolutely negligible.

"Wonderful imagination!" exclaims the reader whom the stories are so cleverly designed to allure, echoing the question of the hero's legal friend, Dufrayer: "Who would believe that we were living in the dreary nineteenth century?" Ask this reader what he wants in fiction, and he will reply that he wants something "to take him out of himself." He thinks that he has found that magical something; but he has not found it, nor does he in truth want it. Nothing in a literary sense annoys him more than to be taken out of himself; he always resents the operation. The success of these most typical stories depends largely on the fact that they essay no such perilous feat. In the whole of The Brotherhood of the Seven Kings I have discovered not a trace of imagination, no attempt to realise a scene, no touch of vehemence nor spark of poetic flame. Nor is there any spirituality or fresh feeling for any sort of beauty. The spirit and the things of the spirit are ignored utterly. That coma of the soul in which nine men out of every ten exist from the cradle to the grave is thus never disturbed as imagination must necessarily disturb it. Imagination arouses imagination, and spurs the most precious of human faculties to an effort corresponding in some degree with the effort of the artist. To enjoy a work of imagination is no pastime, rather a sweet but fatiguing labour. After a play of Shakespeare or a Wagnerian opera, repose is needed. Only a madman like Louis of Bavarin could demand Tristan twice in one night. The principle of this extreme case is the principle of all cases: effort for effort, and the greater the call the greater the response. The listener, the reader, is compelled by a law of nature to do his share. The point about a member of the sixpenny public is that he coldly declines to do his share. He pays his sixpence; the writer is expected to do the rest, and to do it with discretion. There is to be no changing of the aspect; no invitation to the soul, that poor victim of atrophy, to run upstairs for the good of its health. The man has come home to his wife, his slippers, and his cigar, and shall he be asked to go mountaineering?

What, then, is it in these gesta of scoundrels and detectives which suits and soothes him? It is the quality of invention—a quality entirely apart from imagination. To see the facts of life—his facts, the trivial, external, vulgar, unimportant facts—taken and woven into new and surprising patterns: this amuses him, while calling for no exertion. He watches the wonderful process (and, of course, it can be made wonderful) as a child watches its Australian uncle perform miracles of architecture with an old, familiar box of bricks. But he surpasses the child in simplicity, because he fancies the box of bricks has changed into something else. He fancies he is outside the dull nursery of his own existence, and watching brighter scenes; yet the window-bars were never more secure or the air less free. Pathetic and extraordinary self-deception!

E. A. B.

The Amateur Critic.

The Style-Maker's Style.

ALLUSIONS to Mr. Henley's old literary dictatorship, and his brood of young stylists, are so numerous that it amuses me to see how Mr. Henley is now writing with new pyrotechnics of style. In the March Pall Mall Magazine, Mr. Henley takes solemn leave of the year 1899. "The year's end was ever a time for meditation." Ye gods and little fishes! Fancy Mr. Henley allowing one of his old contributors to "meditate" in print at the end of a year. Brixton might meditate, but no Scottish observer. "Mr. Phillips, who is (I insist on it) [when did Mr. Henley insist in the old days?—He merely legislated], has taken up the formula of Lear and Othello and Hamlet, and into this tremendous mould has poured his hectic, earnest, amiable, extremely well-meaning, and at times indubitably elegant self: with the result that everybody must applaud and admire him to a certain point; and that nobody outside the chorus but must urge him to cut Shakespeare and the form which Shakespeare beggared and exhausted, and do (I can't help it: slang is good enough for me in a high-toned case like his) 'a little bit on his own.'" Again, how different! In the next sentence we find Mr. Henley exclaiming: "Keats—dear Keats! You were reared in a sterner school." Henley—dear Henley—so were you. "I can say little of the Stevenson Letters; for the very simple reason that I decline to write, on any terms, about R. L. S. until the final estimate is given to the world." Does Mr. Henley expect to see the final estimate of Stevenson? I hope he will, that so he may live long, or Stevenson be soon "placed." Mr. Colvin's éloge of Stevenson is "a thing chaste yet spirited, academic yet significant, elegant and at the same time touched with vision and emotion." Dear, dear!—in the old days Mr. Henley wrote nouns. To-day his "Ex Libris" is like his own description of A Double Thread: "a fairy absurdity tempered by effects in epigram."

W. S. H.

A King of Men.

I, too, have seen the forest-bred lions in the arena described in your "Things Seen" last week; but in the impression it left upon me they did not figure as bleared-eyed and broken-spirited; nor can I think of their tamer as a perpetually smiling gentleman. What I seemed to be seeing as this wonderful performance went forward was a most interesting pact between man and beast, a mutual compromise, an armed neutrality. In return for hours of indolence and repletion, and not too severe a discipline, the lions consent to a little submissive mountebanking twice a day; but they keep their dignity even on the see-saw, and a thousand signs during their possession of the arena made it clear to me that their independence is still intact, that the instant these terms are broken, the instant that the indolence and the repletion are interfered with or the hand of discipline is too heavy, the understanding will be broken, and the tamer must look to himself. His nerve was superb, his watchfulness unceasing and deadly. The faintest suspicion of mutiny and a dominating glance shot out, the terrorising whip flicked, and all was well. But think of the strain! At first the lions held all my gaze, but after a while it was the tamer and not the tamed that won. There went a man who held his life in his hand; a momentary giddiness, a fall, a second of mistrust in self, and the end would come: so one felt. Sooner or later, it has been written, the lions always conquer, the tamers always perform once too often. Yet here was a man in the midst of a score of them. Surely it is worth while for the king of beasts to be cramped and humiliated a little if a king of men can be thus evolved!

P. B.

A Gap in Literature.

How is it that no one nowadays will be at the pains to describe towns? Is Leicester so like Norwich, is Leeds so like Birmingham, and are all so like London that towns are no longer worth distinguishing and describing? A better field for observation than this does not offer, and yet it lies fallow. Our topographers write fine things about the country; they spin legends and day-dreams round our ruins; and they digress—ah, how they digress!—to London and books. A tall chimney on the horizon is their signal to retreat; and they boast of their ignorance of Sheffield. Even small towns are lightly dismissed. Where shall I find in a recent book four pages of observation and comment on a town the size of Pontefract? I turn to Mr. Arthur H. Norway's Highways and Byways in Yorkshire, a charming book; but what do I find about Pontefract? Mr. Norway stands on the castle hill and gossips and laments in an improved Howitt vein about Richard the Second, and tells a tale of the Cavaliers, and wishes he had space to speak of "half the memories of Pontefract." Page after page passes, and I look in vain for a vignette of Pontefract of to-day. Yet the past should be seen through the present. The castle from which Mr. Norway surveyed history looks down on fields of liquorice. This liquorice is made into the Pontefract Cakes, tiny circular sweetmeats, on every one of which an impression of the castle is stamped; and these cakes are sucked by children all over the North of England. Not a word about this in Mr. Norway's pages. Not a word about the oldest inhabitant's memories. Ten or fifteen years ago a giant lived at Pontefract; was there nothing to say about him? And surely my memory is not at fault in recalling that Pontefract sent a prize-fighter to represent it in Parliament! Why do we miss these local facts and flavours? When he comes to Whitby Mr. Norway writes charmingly about Hilda—who could not?—but he has nothing to say about the Whitby jet, the peculiar wealth of the beach, and a source of profit to local lapidaries. In the same way York suffers by Mr. Norway's close pre-occupation with the antique and the picturesque. He can rhapsodise on St. Mary's Abbey without noticing Etty's grave. We are told nothing about the Ouse, its traffic and its winter floods; nothing about the city's populous railway life, its campus martius at Strensall. We are told how a very ancient mayor of Scarborough was tossed in a blanket, but the present place of Scarborough in the affections of Yorkshire, its spa and harbour life, and its strong Quaker tone, are not touched upon. When he comes to Leeds Mr. Norway sees Kirkstall Abbey—that is all. He says that, with this exception, "I am as ignorant of Leeds as Tristram was of Calais." As to Wakefield he is equally frank: It is "the town which was made illustrious by its association with Pinder who fought with Robin Hood," and Mr. Norway adds in excuse for another dive into legend: "I have neither patience nor leisure to search through the hilly streets for characteristics of the citizens." And yet this is the business of topography. Without such observation towns become mere texts for historical essays and sentimental retrospects. Is English town life of no literary account? I do not love Leeds, but I think I could find something to say about it. Leeds has its own life, and the Leeds man is not as the Manchester man. Is the roughness and jollity of Briggate not worth contrasting with the sober buttoned-up behaviour of the people in Corporation-street, Birmingham? In Mr. Norway's pages I find no attempt to describe Yorkshire towns; Halifax and Bradford and Sheffield are not even indexed. It may be said that this is a book for tourists, but are tourists entirely without curiosity in these matters? In any case, where am I to look for keen, clever characterisations of English towns as they are? Mr. G. W. Stevens's work was indeed unfinished.

W.

Illic Jacet.

Oh hard is the bed they have made him,
And common the blankets and cheap,
But there he will lie as they laid him:
Where else could you trust him to sleep?

To sleep when the bugle is crying
And cravens have heard and are brave,
When mothers and sweethearts are sighing
And lads are in love with the grave.

Oh dark is the bedside and lonely,
And lights and companions depart,
But lief will he lose them and only
Behold the desire of his heart.

Oh thin is the quilt, but it covers
A sleeper content to repose,
And far from his friends and his lovers
He lies with the sweetheart he chose.

A. E. HOUSMAN.

Correspondence.

An Enquiry from South Africa.

SIR,—I have lately been reading Lord Beaconsfield's novels, and write to ask whether you could either supply me with a key to the various characters, or else tell me where I may find one? It would, no doubt, be an easy task for anyone well posted in the political history of the earlier part of this century to identify not only every important character, but also all the important events which figure in these stories; and such a list would add immensely to the interest of ordinary readers like myself, who find themselves ill-supplied in this respect. There might, in the case of Disraeli's novels, be more justification than usual for the "Introductions" so fashionable at the present time.

In this connexion I have been wondering what may be the technical definition of (1) the historical novel proper, and (2) the modern roman à clef, and what the actual line of demarcation between them? In which class are we to place Lord Beaconsfield's brilliant works? The subject has raised some interesting questions in my mind, which I should be glad to see treated at length by a competent hand. For instance, how should we class The School for Saints, by John Oliver Hobbes? I am, unfortunately, no historical student to appreciate fully the accuracy of Mrs. Craigie's sketch of her period; but I should suppose that both The School for Saints and its companion, Robert Grange (which I have not yet seen), will rank, in the next century, as standard historical novels.

Again, am I right in assuming that the true roman à clef must present one or more portraits drawn not merely from "the life," but from the life of some distinguished public character? On this assumption, Mr. W. H. Mallock's piquant New Republic would be a model of the roman à clef, for its characters are all thinly disguised portraits of more or less famous persons. We know that many of the actors in Dickens's and Thackeray's stories are literary reproductions of obscure people, known to and studied by these observant writers—but while they seem to have confined themselves to the delineation of character rather than of actual events in the lives of individuals, other authors, whose names occur to me, have combined both character and incident. The only instances among the classics which I can recall, for the moment, are George Eliot in one of The Scenes from Clerical Life, Charlotte Brontë in The Professor, and George Meredith in Sandra Belloni (?); but among the moderns examples are more numerous. Slalky & Co., by Mr. Kipling; The Green Carnation, Flames, and "The Boudoir Boy" (short story), by Mr. R. S.

Hichens; A Child of the Jago, by Mr. Arthur Morrison; The Journalist, by Mr. C. F. Keary; Dodo, by Mr. E. F. Benson; Aylwin, by Mr. T. Watts-Dunton; The Hypocrite and Miss Malevolent, by Mr. "R. G."; The Colossus, by Mr. Morley Roberts; and The Individualist, by Mr. W. H. Mallock, in which (pace the author) it is difficult not to detect more than one "study from the life." It is comparatively easy for anyone acquainted with "town" and "varsity" life since the early nineties to fit names to a great many of the characters in the above list—but there must be a great many more, either unread or undetected by myself. I can, for example, well believe that several of Miss Violet Hunt's creations have walked or do walk this earth, though I have either not met or not recognised their prototypes in the flesh. I cannot help feeling that a thorough treatment of this subject by a professional student of modern fiction would be of interest to the reading public.—I am, &c., P. V. K.

South Africa: Jan. 29, 1900.

"Her Sky-Blue Eggs."

SIR,—I have read with much interest in my ACADEMY your review of Mr. Le Gallienne's latest work. A gentleman with such a pretty pen for describing nature as Mr. Le Gallienne should know better than accuse a wren of laying a sky-blue egg.—I am, &c.,

THOMAS CALLOWAY.

Freshwater, Isle of Wight: Feb. 19, 1900.

New Books Received.

[These notes on some of the New Books of the week are preliminary to Reviews that may follow.]

FROM SEA TO SEA.

BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

Mr. Kipling has collected the stories, articles, and special correspondence which he contributed to the Civil and Military Gazette and the Pioneer between 1887 and 1889. But he evidently does not wish these volumes to be taken too seriously. He says: "I have been forced to this action by the enterprise of various publishers who, not content with disinterring old newspaper work from the decent seclusion of the office files, have in several instances seen fit to embellish it with additions and interpolations." Yet no student of Mr. Kipling's writings would be without his impressions of the United States, with the rollicking description of San Francisco, and the terribly unpromising picture of Chicago. (Macmillan. 2 vols. 6s. each.)

THE BENDING OF THE BOUGH.

BY GEORGE MOORE.

This is one of the three plays which are being given this week at the Irish Literary Theatre in Dublin. Mr. Moore's play, which has five acts and eighteen characters, deals with municipal life, its ideals and corruptions. We have already quoted a portion of Mr. Moore's introduction, which appeared as an article in the Fortnightly Review. (Unwin.)

THE ENGLISH CATALOGUE OF BOOKS FOR 1899.

Once more this indispensable annual catalogue is issued. All the well-known and well-tried features are retained. (Sampson Low. 6s. net.)

THE LIFE OF JOHN NIXON. BY JAMES EDMUND VINCENT.

We have here a contribution to the literature of self-help. Mr. Nixon, a great South Wales coal-owner, rose from the position of a collier's overman to be a millionaire. His name was not widely known outside

South Wales. Commercial self-interest was the prominent principle of Mr. Nixon's life, and there is no endeavour to place him on a pedestal; but it is claimed by his biographer that he was the soul of honesty and "one of the chief founders and a pioneer among the principal promoters of the prosperity of a great district of the country." (John Murray. 10s. 6d.)

THE COUNTY PALATINE OF DURHAM.

BY GALLARD THOMAS LAPSLEY.

A work like this is sure of its interested readers, few but loyal. The aim of the book is clearly explained by its author. "During the middle ages . . . the county of Durham was withdrawn from the ordinary administration of the kingdom of England and governed by its Bishop . . . But the community of Durham had the same social and economic requirements and dangers as the rest of the kingdom; accordingly there developed in the county a group of institutions reproducing all the essential characteristics of the central government. To exhibit the growth of these institutions . . . is the object of the present study, which thus becomes the constitutional history of an English county." (Longmans. 10s. 6d.)

CYCLOPEDIA OF CLASSIFIED DATES. BY CHARLES E. LITTLE.

This is a big work in every sense. It contains about 95,000 entries of important historical events. There is a threefold classification: first, the classification by countries, or by geographical location; second, the classification by dates; third, the classification according to the nature of the event itself. This classification, it will be noted, answers the questions which one must ask concerning any event: Where? When? What? (Funk & Wagnalls.)

In addition to the foregoing, we have received:

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

Bartlett (J. V.), The Apostolic Age: Its Life, Doctrine, Worship, and Polity ..... (T. & T. Clark)
Brierley (Helen), Morgan Brierley ..... (Rochdale: James Clegg)
Groser (H. G.), Field-Marshal Lord Roberts ..... (Melrose) net 1/0

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

Hiller (H. Croft), Heresies. Vol. II. ..... (Richards) 5/0
Halliburton (W. D.), Handbook of Physiology ..... (Murray) 14/0

POETRY, CRITICISM, AND BELLES LETTRES.

Andrews (John), A Journey Round My Room. From the French of De Maistre ..... (Bryan & Co.) net 2/0

EDUCATIONAL.

Stock (St. George), Logic ..... (Blackwell)
Downie (John), Maccanlay's Essay on Horace Walpole ..... (Blackie) 2/0
Lyde (Lionel W.), A Geography of the British Empire ..... (Black) net 1/0
Lyde (Lionel W.), The Age of Hawke ..... (Black)
Laming (W. Cecil), Livy, Book V ..... (Blackie) 2/3
Harvard Studies in Classical Philology. Vol. X. ..... (Ginn & Co.) net 6/0

MISCELLANEOUS.

Wilson (Dr. Andrew), Brain and Body: The Nervous System in Social Life ..... (Bowden) 1/6
Little (Charles E.), Cyclopædia of Classified Dates ..... (Funk & Wagnalls) 40/0
Hymns of Modern Thought, with Music ..... (Houghton & Co.)

NEW EDITIONS.

Browning (Robert), The Earlier Monologues ..... (Dent) 1/6
Tennyson (Lord), Maud, and Other Poems ..... (Dent) 1/6
Spencer (E.), Cakes and Ale ..... (Richards) 2/0
Boulger (G. S.), Flowers of the Field ..... (S.P.C.K.)
Borrow (George), Lavengro ..... (Gresham Pub. Co.)
Goldsmith (O.), She Stoops to Conquer ..... (Dent) net 1/0
Whyte-Melville (G. J.), The White Rose ..... (Ward, Lock) 3/6
The Works of Shakespeare. (Larger Temple Ed.) Vols. VII. and VIII. ..... (Dent) net 4/8
Milton (John), Poetical Works ..... (Clarendon Press) 7/6
Milton (John), Poetical Works, Oxford Miniature Milton ..... (Frowde) 3/6

** New Novels are acknowledged elsewhere.

Our Weekly Prize Competitions.

Result of No. 22 (New Series).

We asked last week for four-lined mottoes suitable to be inscribed on a house. The response has been very large, and we should like to have room for more of the quatrains than are below given. The most suitable is, we think, this by C. C. Bell, Epworth, Doncaster :

I who designed this House to be
As 'twere the outer Shell of Me,
Would that Myself in It exprest
Might win my Friend to be my Guest.

Here is a selection of the best of the others :

I prithee stay, good friend,
Here is thy journey's end :
A home of joy and peace
Where cares and sorrows cease.
[F. E. A., Manchester.]

Look East for Light,
Look West at Night,
Seek God above,
At home seek Love.
[E. U., London.]

A window on the sunny side.
A little door, too low for pride,
Too strong for want and woe to pass—
Hic habitat felicitas.
[A. R. R., Forest Hill.]

Whenever from my walls my sons depart,
However far they roam,
I still must be a memory in the heart,
For I am Home.
[S. L. O., Cambridge.]

Brick is my body, human is my soul ;
Thus man and mansion make a perfect whole.
Body, long mayst thou unimpaired endure,
And soul, as long be happy and secure !
[E. C. W., Oxford.]

May this, my tent upon the field of life,
Prove a safe refuge from the ill of strife.
Here let me find, how'er my fortunes trip,
Good sense, good humour, and good fellowship.
[F. E. W., London.]

Though built of mortar, brick, and stone,
Hope, fear, love, joy, and grief I've known ;
And wandering hearts where'er they roam,
Still turn to me, for this is Home.
[M. C. B., Ascot.]

Saws, enough to fill a tome,
Speak the joys of "hearth and home"—
Stones supply a hearth, I take it ;
But a home is what you make it !
[L. W., London.]

This house of mine no palace is,
No lordly towers it hath, I wis ;
Yet am I blest—in that its nooks
Contain "old wine, old friends, old books" !
[F. M., London.]

Say not this house was built in vain
If ever in these walls be heard
Just one small faith-reviving word,
Or one small utterance soothing pain.
[E. G. H., Cambridge.]

Replies received also from : T. V. N., South Woodford ; G. E. M., London ; W. T. B., Manchester ; J. D. A., London ; A. H., Witton Park ; W. M., Newport ; W. C. C., London ; R. M., Brighton ; C. S., Brighton ; G. R. G., Shelton ; B., West Bromwich ; M. H., Ascot ; E. H., Didsbury ; H., Brighton ; M. P., Wallingford ; V. D., London ; R. W. M., London ; J. G., Bradford ; L. L., London ; T. B., Artane ; C., Redhill ; E. G. B., London ; T. W. K., Coatham ; M. J., London ; F. G. C., Hull ; J. B. H., Sheffield ; C. S. O., Brighton ; K. G. W., Gerrard's Cross ; R. R. W., Sudbury ; K. E. R., Matlock ; E. S. H., Bradford ; W. M. R., Manchester ; C. H. F., London ; M. H., Twyford ; W. E. T., Caterham Valley ; B. G., Barnsley ; E. B., Liverpool ; C. S., London ; C. M. W., Meltham ; A. G., Gourrock ; G., Reigate ; A. E. H., London ; F. G. G., London ; M. P. F., Birmingham ; E. D., London ; G. N., Clifton ; A. B., Isleworth ; J. R. M., Manchester ; M. A. W., London ; H. P. B., Glasgow ; G. W. S., London ; T. C., Buxted ; P. S. W., Sutton ; T. B., Cheltenham ; T. G. A., London ; S. F. W. S., Kingston-on-Thames ; B. F. M., Whitby ; F. H. B., Sutton ; T. S., Brighton ; B. R., London ; T. H. J., London ; A. P. W., Winchester ; F. M. S., Bristol ; M. C., Braintree ; V. B. M., Cambridge ; C. M. G., Newtown ; E. K. L., Birkenhead ; E. C. M. D., Crediton ; L. L., London ; D. W., Aspley Guise ; S. H., Warwick ; H. S., London ; E. D., London ; W. A. T. F., London.

Competition No. 23 (New Series).

LAST week's competition seemed to find so much favour that we have designed No. 23 on similar lines. We ask again for quatrains, but they are to deal this time rather with birds than with domesticity. We offer a prize of a guinea for the best four-lined poetical inscription suitable to be painted on an aviary.

RULES.

Answers, addressed "Literary Competition, THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Tuesday, February 27. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found in the first column of p. 172, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon ; otherwise the first only will be considered. We wish to impress on competitors that the task of examining replies is much facilitated when one side only of the paper is written upon. It is also important that names and addresses should always be given. We cannot consider anonymous answers.

OUR SPECIAL PRIZE COMPETITIONS.

(For particulars see inside page of cover.)

Received during the week : Gwynedd, Niphates, Valentine, Club, Rinaldo, Daffodil, Pater, Brevier, Shep, Wallis, H. B., Cleada, Vagrant, The Angler, Maryas, Andante, Neva, R. Besir.

NEW WORK by the late G. W. STEEVENS.

READY 27th FEBRUARY.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

FROM CAPETOWN to LADYSMITH.

An Unfinished Record of the South African War.

By G. W. STEEVENS,

Author of "With Kitchener to Khartum," "In India," &c.

With Maps. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Summary of Contents.—First Glimpses of the Struggle—The Army Corps has not left England!—A Pastor's Point of View—Will it be Civil War?—Loyal Aliwal : A Tragi-Comedy—The Battle of Elands-laagte—The Bivouac—The Home-coming from Dundee—The Story of Nicholson's Nek—The Guns at Rietfontein—The Bombardment—The Devil's Tin-Tacks—A Diary of Dulness—Nearing the End—In a Conning-Tower—The Last Chapter. By Vernon Blackburn.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

TWENTY-FIRST EDITION.

WITH KITCHENER to KHARTUM. With 8 Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THIRD EDITION.

IN INDIA. With a Map. Crown 8vo, 6s.

FOURTH EDITION.

THE LAND of the DOLLAR. Crown 8vo, 6s.

CHEAPER EDITION.

WITH the CONQUERING TURK. With 4 Maps. Demy 8vo, 6s.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD.

By HAROLD E. GORST.

Forming the New Volume of the "Victorian Era Series."

London : BLACKIE & SON (LIMITED), Old Bailey.

CATALOGUES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick St.
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

FOREIGN LITERATURE.

ALL interested in FOREIGN LITERATURE should write for the "BOOK CIRCULAR," FEBRUARY Number Now Ready, post free from

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh; and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

JUST ISSUED.—POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

CATALOGUE of SECOND-HAND BOOKS on ORIENTAL HISTORY, LANGUAGES, LITERATURE, &c.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh; and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.

New fully detailed CATALOGUE sent post free on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

W. M. VOYNICH

Has OPENED an OFFICE at

1, SOHO SQUARE, W.,

Where he has on view a COLLECTION of

XV. & XVI. CENTURY BOOKS, EARLY AMERICANA, &c.

The List of Unknown and Lost Books is in Preparation.
Office Hours, 10-1 and 2-5.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.
—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.

Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. 10d. per 1,000 words. Samples and references. Multi-Copies.—Address, Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person, requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 151, Strand, London, W.C.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO

"THE ACADEMY,"

Can still be obtained separately, or the Complete Set for 3s. 6d.

REN JONSON.	JOHN MILTON.
JOHN KEATS.	WILLIAM COWPER.
SIR JOHN SUCKLING.	CHARLES DARWIN.
TOM MOOD.	ALFRED, LORD
THOMAS GRAY.	TENNYSON.
ROBERT L. STEVENSON.	HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.
SIR WALTER SCOTT.	ANDREW MARVELL.
SAMUEL RICHARDSON.	ROBERT BROWNING.
THOMAS DE QUINCEY.	THOMAS CARLYLE.
LEIGH HUNT.	PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.
LORD MACAULAY.	CHARLES DICKENS.
ROBERT SOUTHBY.	JONATHAN SWIFT.
S. T. COLERIDGE.	WM. M. THACKERAY.
CHARLES LAMB.	WILLIAM BLAKE.
MICHAEL DRAYTON.	SIR RICHARD STEELE.
WALTER S. LANDOR.	ALEXANDER POPE.
SAMUEL PEYS.	DOUGLAS JERROLD.
EDMUND WALLER.	FRANCIS BACON.
WIKIE COLLINS.	HENRIK IBSEN.

"THE ACADEMY"

LITERARY COMPETITIONS.

New Series.—No. 23.

All readers attempting this week's Competition (described fully on page 171) must cut out this Coupon and enclose it with their reply.

PUBLISHER wants well-educated YOUNG MAN immediately, with some experience of Book Publishing Business, especially Advertising; knowledge of typewriting and shorthand also desirable.—Apply by letter, giving detail, of experience, &c.—F. S. S., 18, Henrietta Street.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

The READING ROOMS will be CLOSED from THURSDAY, MARCH 1st, to MONDAY, MARCH 5th, inclusive.

E. MAUNDE THOMPSON.

Director and Principal Librarian.

British Museum, 21st February, 1900.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.—FORTHCOMING EXAMINATION.

DRAUGHTSMAN in the Hydrographic Department of the Admiralty (17-23), 13th March.

Expertness in Hydrographical Chart Drawing essential. The date specified is the latest at which applications can be received. They must be made on forms to be obtained, with particulars, from the SECRETARY, Civil Service Commission, London, S.W.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN, Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

THURSDAY NEXT, MARCH 1st, at 3 o'clock, CHARLES WALDSTEIN, Esq., Litt.D., Ph.D., LL.D., Slade Professor of Fine Art in the University of Cambridge, FIRST OF THREE LECTURES on "RECENT EXCAVATIONS at the ARGYRE HERAEUM (in GREECE)." Illustrated by Lantern Slides. Half-a-Guinea the Course.

SATURDAY, MARCH 3rd, at 3 o'clock, the Right Hon. LORD RAYLEIGH, M.A., D.C.L., LL.D., Sc.D., F.R.S., M.R.I., Professor of Natural Philosophy, R.I. FIRST OF SIX LECTURES on "POLARISED LIGHT." One Guinea the Course.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, Cooper's Hill, Staines.

The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for Employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1900. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition—Twelve Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraph Department, and One in the Accountants' Branch P.W.D.—For particulars apply to SECRETARY, at College.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Sonthampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THE PRINCESS HELENA COLLEGE, EALING, W.

Established 1830. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1900.

President—H.R.H. the PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.

High-class education for the DAUGHTERS of GENTLEMEN, as Resident or Day Pupils. Preparation for University and Art Examinations. Spacious grounds. Supervision in games.

Training department for kindergarten students in preparation for Froebel Union Examination for Teachers.

There is a Home in connection with the College for K.E. Students and for a few children under ten years of age.

MARGARET WILLIAMSON, Lady Principal.

WIMBLEDON HIGH SCHOOL.—Mrs.

J. T. TRENCH receives GIRLS as BOARDERS at Lyndenharat, Woodside, Wimbledon. Reference permitted to Miss Hastings, Head Mistress, the Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne, Bishop and Mrs. Barry, Col and Mrs. Chenevix Trench, and others.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY

(LIMITED).

SUBSCRIPTIONS for 3 Months, 6 Months and 12 Months

CAN BE ENTERED AT ANY DATE.

THE BEST and MOST POPULAR BOOKS of the SEASON ARE NOW in CIRCULATION.

Prospectuses of Terms free on application.

BOOK SALE DEPARTMENT.

Many Thousand Surplus Copies of Books always ON SALE (Second Hand). Also a large Selection of

BOOKS IN LEATHER BINDINGS

SUITABLE FOR

BIRTHDAY AND WEDDING PRESENTS.

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; 43, Queen Victoria Street, E.C., LONDON;
And at 10-12, Barton Arcade, MANCHESTER.

A CHARMING GIFT BOOK!

6s., claret roan, gilt, illustrated.

LONDON IN THE TIME OF THE DIAMOND JUBILEE

London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Llangollen: Darlington & Co.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S. Maps by BARTHOLOMEW.

Fcap. 8vo. ONE SHILLING EACH. Illustrated.

THE VALE of LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J. PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING; A. W. KINGLAKE, and Sir THEODORE MARTIN K.O.B.

BOURNEMOUTH and NEW FOREST.

THE NORTH WALES COAST.

BRECON and its BEACONS.

ROSS, TINTERN, and CHEPSTOW.

BRISTOL, BATH, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

LLANDUDNO, RHYL, BANGOR, BETTWSYCOED, and SNOWDON.

ABERYSTWYTH, BARMOUTH, MACHYNLETH, and ABERDOVEY.

BARMOUTH, DOLGELLY, HARLECH, CROCIETH, and PWLLHELL.

MALVERN, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, GLOUCESTER, & CHELTENHAM.

LLANDRINDOD WELLS and the SPAS of MID-WALES.

1s.—THE HOTELS of the WORLD. A Handbook to the leading hotels throughout the world.

"What would not the intelligent tourist in Paris or Rome give for such a guide-book as this, which teaches so much that is outside the usual scope of such volumes!"—The Times.

"The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.

SECOND EDITION, ENLARGED, 5s.—60 Illustrations, 24 Maps and Plans.

LONDON AND ENVIRONS

By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.

With an additional Index of 4,500 References to all Streets and Places of Interest.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & CO.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Ltd., The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers.

SOUTH AFRICA AND THE WAR.—BOOKS TO READ.

ILLUSTRATED AND THOROUGHLY REVISED EDITION,
JESS. By H. Rider Haggard. With 12 Full-
 Page Illustrations by Maurice Greiffenhagen. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"The story is a capital one, and the interest never flags for a moment. The author knows his ground thoroughly, and his vivid descriptions of Transvaal scenery and his clever sketches of the inhabitants are all admirable."

RHODESIA AND ITS GOVERNMENT.

By H. C. THOMSON, Author of "The Chitral Campaign" and of "The Outgoing Turk." With 8 Illustrations and a Map. Large cr. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

INVESTORS' REVIEW.—"A work that ought to be read by every intelligent politician in the three Kingdoms who wishes to understand the South African problem in its various, changeless, yet ever-changing phases."

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

NOW READY EVERYWHERE.

THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA:

Its Causes and Effects.

By J. A. HOBSON.

Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"Precisely the book most needed at the present juncture.....most scrupulously cautious, temperate, and intrinsically valuable."—Echo.

"Let the reader study this book, and then, if he will, return to Mr. Fitzpatrick's 'Transvaal from Within.'"—Westminster Gazette.

J. NISBET & CO., LTD., 21, Berners Street, W.

THE BOOK OF THE HOUR.

THIRD EDITION.

OUR LIVING GENERALS.

By ARTHUR TEMPLE, Author of "The Making of the Empire."

Art vellum, gilt top, price 3s. 6d.

Biographical Sketches with fine Portraits of Twelve Generals, no fewer than ten of whom are now at the front.

"Pleasant and proud reading."—Saturday Review.

"A capital book, breezily and brightly written."—St. James's Budget.

"The list is well chosen. Men of whom the nation is justly proud."—Naval and Military Record.

ANDREW MELROSE, 16, Pilgrim Street, London E.C.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL SERIES.

General Editor: G. W. PROTHERO, Litt. D., Hon. Fellow of King's College, Cambridge.

A HISTORY OF THE COLONIZATION OF AFRICA BY ALIEN RACES. By Sir H. H. JOHNSTON, K.C.B., H.M. Special Commissioner in Uganda, Author of "British Central Africa," &c. With 8 Maps by the Author and J. G. Bartholomew. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"As a text-book of Africa study his book supplies a want which has been generally felt, and should be in proportion warmly welcomed."—Times.

THE CAMBRIDGE GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES.

General Editor: F. H. H. GUILLEMARD, M.D., late Lecturer in Geography at the University of Cambridge.

OUTLINES OF MILITARY GEOGRAPHY. By T. MILLER MAGUIRE, LL.D., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Lieutenant Inn of Court Rifle Volunteers. Crown 8vo, with 27 Maps and Illustrations, 10s. 6d.

Field-Marshal Lord Roberts, V.C., writes: "A most useful and instructive book." London: C. J. CLAY & SONS, Cambridge University Press Warehouse, Ave Maria Lane.

T. NELSON & SONS, Publishers.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE TRANSVAAL WAR ATLAS

Containing 24 Maps, specially prepared from the latest Surveys, also a History of the Boers and Boerland.

Fully Illustrated. Price 1s. net; postage, 2d.

This Atlas will be of advantage not only in following the present war, but in acquiring an intelligent appreciation of the great problems which will await solution in South Africa when the war is over.

"Among the many aids to a proper understanding of the geography of South Africa none is more helpful than a little 'War Atlas' issued by T. Nelson & Sons."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

T. NELSON & SONS, 35 & 36, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.; Parkside, Edinburgh; and New York; and of all Booksellers.

A BOOK ABOUT THE BOER WAR OF 1881.

Cloth, crown 8vo, 2s.

With 8 Illustrations by R. Caton Woodville, after Sketches by Melton Prior.

MAJUBA:

BRONKERSPRUIT, INGOGO, LANGS NEK, KRUGERSDORP.

By HAMISH HENDRY.

Globe.—"The author has gone to the best, and his narratives have the qualities of conciseness and vividness which he claims for them. They are concentrated, they are picturesque; moreover, they are not without their lessons for the statesmen and soldiers of to-day."

Daily Graphic.—"...brief and brightly written... The description is extremely vivid, and will bring home to the mind of the reader the nature of South African warfare far more clearly than a more elaborately technical work could possibly do."

London: GRANT RICHARDS, 9, Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

THE BOOK OF THE HOUR. THE TRANSVAAL FROM WITHIN.

A Private Record of Public Affairs.

By J. P. FITZPATRICK, Author of "The Outspan."

With Index. 1 vol., 10s. net. Eighth Reprint, completing 30,000 copies.

Mr Chamberlain replying to a Westmorland correspondent, who complained of the want of a printed defence of the Government's policy in the Transvaal: "I refer you to Mr. Fitzpatrick's book."

THE MEN OF THE HOUR.

1. F.-M. LORD ROBERTS.
2. LORD KITCHENER OF KHARTUM.

Portraits by WILLIAM NICHOLSON.

Lithographed in colours, mounted on card, 2s. 6d. each; framed, 6s. each.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

10,000 Copies already sold.

SECOND LARGE EDITION READY NEXT WEEK.

In crown 8vo, Cover design, price 1s.

THE BOER IN PEACE AND WAR.

By ARTHUR M. MANN,

Author of "The Truth from Johannesburg."

WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS OF TRANSVAAL SCENES AND LIFE.

London: JOHN LONG, 6 Chandos Street, Strand.

Third Edition, with a new Prefatory Chapter dealing with the events which have induced the present crisis.

IMPRESSIONS OF SOUTH AFRICA.

By the Right Hon. JAMES BRYCE, M.P.

With 3 Maps, and with the Text of the Transvaal Conventions of 1881 and 1884. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION NOW READY.

SOUTH AFRICA OF TO-DAY.

By Captain FRANCIS YOUNGHUSBAND, C.I.E.,

Indian Staff Corps. Late Special Correspondent of the Times in South Africa. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD, London.

CLARENDON PRESS, OXFORD.

Crown 8vo, Separate Issue, with numerous Maps, 5s.

The History of South Africa to the Jameson Raid.

Being Vol. IV., Part I., of "A Historical Geography of the British Colonies."

By C. P. LUCAS, B.A.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"It is refreshing to come across so sane, scholarly and judicious a little volume. There is more assistance to the proper understanding of South African questions in its 340 well-printed pages than in any work of the same size we know of. Mr. Lucas proves on every page that he is one whose judgments are founded on knowledge, and it would be well if every amateur critic of South Africa were compelled to pass an examination on his book."

SCOTSMAN.—"Mr. Lucas is a trustworthy authority and a vigorous writer; and those who desire to post themselves up in the past relations of Boers, Blacks, and British in South Africa could not go to a better source of information."

London: HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Press Warehouse, Amen Corner, E.C.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

SOUTH AFRICA. By GEO. MCCALL THREL, LL.D. 5s.

HOW TO READ WAR NEWS. Hints to Readers of Despatches, &c. 1s.

THE LIVES OF ROBERT AND MARY MOFFAT. By their Son. 6s

PAUL KRUGER AND HIS TIMES. By F. R. STATHAM. 7s. 6d.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION. By OLIVE SCHREINER. 1s. 6d.

A PRIMER OF SOUTH AFRICAN HISTORY. By GEORGE MCCALL THREL, LL.D. 1s. 6d.

MR. MAGNUS: A South African Novel. By F. R. STATHAM. 6s.

TROOPER PETER HALKET OF MASHONALAND. By OLIVE SCHREINER. 2s. 6d.

THE CAPTAIN OF THE LOCUSTS. By A. WESNER. 2s.

KAFFIR STORIES. By W. C. SCULLY. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

MR. THOMAS ATKINS. By the Author of "How to be Happy Though Married." 6s.

FIFTY YEARS OF THE HISTORY OF THE REPUBLIC IN SOUTH AFRICA. By J. C. VOIGT, M.D. 2 vols. 25s. net the set.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

W. GLAISHER, Discount Bookseller,
265, High Holborn, London.

Cash Prices.

	s.	d.
Nicholson's (G.) Fifty Years in South Africa. Plates. 1 6
290 pp. Crown 8vo, cloth. (Pub. 6s.)
Sir Richard F. Burton's Wanderings in West Africa. 4 6
2 vols. (Pub. 21s.)
Dr. Carl Peters's New Light on Dark Africa. Fully Illustrated. Imp. 8vo. (Pub. 10s.) 5 0
Stanley's in Darkest Africa. Best Edition. 2 vols. (Pub. 42s.) 12 6
Stanley's The Congo and the Founding of its Free State. 2 vols. (Pub. 42s.) 10 0
&c. &c. &c.

Apply for GLAISHER'S Extensive CATALOGUE of Publishers' Reminders at Reduced Prices.

Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

GEORGE MOORE'S NEW WORK.

THE BENDING of the BOUGH.
By the Author of "Evelyn Innes." Cloth, 3s. 6d. net. [Just out.]

MR. THOMAS ATKINS: a Study in Red, Blue, and Khaki. By the Rev. E. J. HARDY, M.A., Chaplain to her Majesty's Forces at Dublin, Author of "How to be Happy Though Married," &c. Fully Illustrated. Cloth, 6s.

"THE STORY OF THE NATIONS" SERIES.—
NEW VOLUME.

MODERN ITALY (1748-1898). By PIETRO ORSI, Professor of History in the R. Liceo Foscarini, Venice. With over 40 Illustrations and Maps. Cloth, 5s.

SOUTH AFRICA (Story of the Nations Series). By GEORGE MCCALL THEAL, LL.D. Fifth Edition, completing the Fifteenth Thousand, now ready. Illustrated, and with Map and Index. Cloth, 6s.

THAT REMINDS ME — By Sir EDWARD RUSSELL, Editor of the Liverpool Daily Post. Third Edition just published, with Portrait, cloth, 12s. net.

"All who take it up will find it thoroughly readable from cover to cover."—Westminster Gazette.

A POWERFUL NOVEL BY A NEW WRITER.

The PREPARATION of RYERSON
EMBURY: a Novel of Canadian Life. By A. R. CARMAN. Cloth, 6s.

SOME NEW VOLUMES IN
UNWIN'S GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY.
6s. each.

1. THE WATERS of EDERA. By OUIDA, Author of "Le Selve," "The Silver Christ," &c.

"Many scenes in the book, in the vividness of the impression and the grip with which the writing holds the reader, are fitted to stand by this side of her best work."—Daily Telegraph.

2. THROUGH FIRE to FORTUNE.
By Mrs. ALEXANDER, Author of "Brown, V.C.," "A Winning Hazard," &c. Also in decorated cover.

3. SHAMELESS WAYNE. By HALLWELL SUTCLIFFE, Author of "Ricraft of Withens," "By Moor and Fell," &c.

"A story of thrilling interest; it is most exciting throughout, and the reader who takes it up will not willingly lay it down until he has read it from cover to cover."—Pall Mall Gazette.

4. WAS it RIGHT to FORGIVE?
By AMELIA E. BARR, Author of "Prisoners of Conscience," "I, Thou, and the Other One," &c. [Shortly.]

SAND and CACTUS. Arizona Sketches. By WOLCOTT BEARD. Cloth, 6s.

UNCLE PETER: a Romance of the Nineteenth Century. By SEMA JEB. Cloth, 6s.
"One of those books which sustains its interest to the last page."

THE LIFE and LETTERS of SUSAN B. ANTHONY. By IDA HUSTED HARPER. Fully Illustrated. 2 vols., 32s.
The life story of this well-known reformer is in itself a history of the evolution of woman's status in the nineteenth century.

A FASCINATING BOOK OF AFRICAN TRAVEL.

A WHITE WOMAN in CENTRAL AFRICA. By HELEN CADDICK. With 16 Illustrations. Cloth, 6s.

EXPERIMENTS on ANIMALS.
By STEPHEN PAGET. With an Introduction by Lord LISTER. Illustrated. Cloth, 6s.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN,
11, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"THE GREAT WORK ON SOCIAL ENGLAND."
Times, February 22, 1900.

Vols. I. to III., price 15s. each; Vols. IV. and V., price 17s. each; and Vol. VI., price 18s.

SOCIAL ENGLAND: a Record of the Progress of the People in Religion, Laws, Learning, Arts, Industry, Commerce, Science, Literature, and Manners, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. By VARIOUS WRITERS. Edited by the late H. D. TRAILL, D.C.L.

JUST PUBLISHED, price 5s.

JOHN RUSKIN: a Sketch of his Life, his Work, and his Opinions. With Personal Reminiscences. By M. H. SPIELMANN. Containing numerous Portraits and other Illustrations.

ILLUSTRATED EDITION.

READY SHORTLY, price 6s.

THE GARDEN of SWORDS: a Story of the Siege of Strasburg. By MAX PEMBERTON.

JUST PUBLISHED, price 6s.

"THE DEATH or GLORY BOYS": the Story of the 17th Lancers. By D. H. PARRY. With Frontispiece.

"In every respect the 'Death or Glory Boys' are fortunate in their historian, whose book, which makes so timely an appearance, is one that no English patriot, proud of the unsurpassed valour and devotion of his country's military heroes, can afford to miss."—World.

MEMORIES and STUDIES of WAR and PEACE. By ARCHIBALD FORBES, LL.D. Cheap Edition. 6s.

THE BLACK WATCH. The Record of an Historic Regiment. By ARCHIBALD FORBES, LL.D. 6s.

BRITAIN'S ROLL of GLORY; or, the Victoria Cross, its Heroes, and their Valour. By D. H. PARRY. Illustrated. Cheap Edition. 3s. 6d.

PERIL and PATRIOTISM: True Tales of Heroic Deeds and Startling Adventures. Profusely Illustrated. In 2 vols., 4s each; or 1 vol. 7s. 6d.

THE WARS of the 'NINETIES. A History of the Warfare of the Last Ten Years of the Nineteenth Century. By A. HILLIARD ATTERIDGE. Profusely Illustrated. Complete in 1 vol., 7s. 6d.

SCARLET and BLUE; or, Songs for Soldiers and Sailors. By JOHN FARMER. Cloth, 5s. Words only, paper, 6d.; cloth, 9d.

BRITISH BATTLES on LAND and SEA. By JAMES GRANT. With about 800 Illustrations. Cheap Edition. Complete in 4 vols., 3s. 6d. each.

HISTORY of the FRANCO-GERMAN WAR. CASSELL'S. Containing about 500 Illustrations. Cheap Edition. Complete in 2 vols., 6s. each.

IN a CONNING-TOWER; or, How I took H.M.S. Majestic into Action. By H. O. ARNOLO-FORSTER, M.P. With Original Illustrations by W. H. Overend. 6d.

A GUN-ROOM DITTY BOX. By G. STEWART BOWLES. With a Preface by Rear-Admiral LORD CHARLES BERESFORD, C.B., &c. 2s.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LTD., London, Paris, New York, and Melbourne.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS

ROBERT BUCHANAN'S New Novel, ANDROMEDA: an Idyll of the Great River, is now ready. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

GEORGE R. SIMS'S New Book of Stories, WITHOUT the LIMELIGHT (Theatrical Life as it is), will be ready on March 8th. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

BERTHA THOMAS'S New Novel, THE SON of the HOUSE, will be ready on March 22nd. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

A SECRET of the NORTH SEA.
By ALGERNON GISSING. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.
"It is strong, picturesque, and as passionately one-motived as 'Wuthering Heights.'"
"The story is a good one, sinewy and dramatic, with a first chapter as well contrived to suggest coming mystery and whet the appetite as any we remember; and through it all blow the winds of the Northumbrian coast."—Daily Mail.
"The very winds of the North Sea coast seem to blow over the rival farms of Coldrife and Crakehall in Mr. Gissing's pages."—Literature.

SOUR GRAPES. By J. F. Cornish.

Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.
"We are introduced to some exceedingly attractive Devonshire people, among whom susceptible male readers will have difficulty in deciding whether kitchin Ruby Rubbrooke or true-hearted Barbara Ashleigh is the more winsome."—Scotsman.

A COURT TRAGEDY. By Albert D. VANDAM, Author of "An Englishman in Paris." With 8 Illustrations by J. BARNAUD DAVIS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"If you have read Mr. Vandam's 'Englishman in Paris,' and its piquant chapters of Court scandal, you will know what to expect from any deliberate effort at romance issuing from this smart chronicler's pen. 'A Court Tragedy,' in fact, may be fairly described as an imaginary page writ large of Mr. Vandam's 'Anecdotal Europe.'...Mr. Vandam has certainly a gift of picture-que writing."—Echo.

IN LONDON'S HEART. By

GEORGE R. SIMS, Author of "Rogues and Vagabonds," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"We confess to having read the book right through, and most of those who take it up will do the same."—Spectator.

"Mr. Sims knows the London of to-day, especially on its shady side, as Dickens knew the London of sixty years ago; and he can handle his material—the money-lenders, mufti-dens, detectives, and what not—with eminent skill...The plot is skilfully contrived, and the story is exciting."—Glasgow Herald.
"Merits the description 'a rattling good story,' if every story deserved such a passport to the favour of the jaded novel reader. The best quality of the book is displayed in this vividly written, skilfully-constructed, and graphically-depicted drama....There is at least one character, Captain Halford, who is worthy of Dickens himself."—Sporting Life.

DORA MYRL, the LADY DETECTIVE. By M. McD. BODKIN, Q.C. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Dora Myrl, we have no hesitation in saying it, was one of the most remarkable specimens of new womanhood ever evolved in modern or ancient fiction. At the age of eighteen she was already a Cambridge Wrangler; by twenty she had completed her medical education, given up medical practice, and successively occupied the posts of telegraph girl, telephone girl, and lady journalist. Fortunately for the reading public, she found her true vocation while acting as a companion to a weak-minded matron, who was being blackmailed by an unscrupulous nurse, and thereupon leapt into a large and lucrative practice....Its simplicity and vivacity are irresistible."—Spectator.

THE WEB of FATE. By T. W. SPEIGHT, Author of "The Mysteries of Heron Dyke." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

OUR GREATEST LIVING SOLDIERS. By CHARLES LOWE, M.A. With 8 Portraits.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"Our Greatest Living Soldiers" will be found a most valuable and interesting little book just now by many who desire to know something of our military chiefs. It is written with all the picturesqueness and 'go' that one expects from the author of "Prince Bismarck."...The facts are sound and most attractively combined."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"The most spirited and, for its size, capable book of the kind that has appeared. Mr. Lowe comes to his task armed with knowledge, enthusiasm, and a practised pen, and his vivid little life-sketches are excellent and enthralling reading. There is something epic in the narrative."—Daily Mail.

WALFORD'S COUNTY FAMILIES of the UNITED KINGDOM (1900).

Containing Notices of the Descent, Birth, Marriage, Education, &c., of more than 12,000 distinguished Heads of Families, their Heirs Apparent or Presumptive, the Offices they hold or have held, their Town and Country Addresses, Clubs, &c. Royal 8vo, cloth, 50s.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE

One Shilling Monthly—Contents for MARCH.
Ave, Caesar! by W. B. Wallace.—Points about Speakers, by James Sykes.—The Founder of a Dynasty, by E. Perronet Thompson.—A Black Night, by J. Lawson.—Raskin Hall: the Poor Man's College, by M. Berkeley.—A West Country Potter, by George Sweetman.—The Death in Literature, by C. Traillop.—Gaston de Baussac-Boulbon, by D. Sampson.—New Year's Day 1900, by E. M. Rutherford.—Mr. Lang on our Taste in Literature, by Sylvanus Urban.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1452. Established 1869.

3 March, 1900.

Price Threepence.

[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

THE Society of Authors hope to begin the practical working of their Pension Fund with a grant this year of £50. Mr. Anthony Hope Hawkins announced at the annual meeting that while they did not invite outside financial help, they would not refuse it. At present the capital account is nearly £1,000, and the annual income close upon £100. It has been estimated that an income of £500 or £600 would meet all claims. Mr. Mullett Ellis's resolution, protesting against railway bookstall monopoly, inspired, we imagine, by Messrs. Smith & Son's treatment of his book, was defeated. Mr. Hawkins spoke good sense when he remarked, that it would do the Society no good to issue bruta fulmina of that description without a substantial grievance being first proved.

MR. DALTON, who has assisted Mr. Traill since the foundation of Literature, has been appointed editor of that journal. Another item of interest connected with Printing House-square is that Mr. A. B. Walkley has been made dramatic critic of the Times. It will be curious to see what effect his new environment will have on Mr. Walkley's volatile personality.

WE regret to learn of the death of Mr. Ernest Christopher Dowson, which occurred suddenly, on Friday of last week, from syncope. Ernest Dowson, who was only thirty-two years of age, was educated at Queen's College, Oxford. Shortly after leaving the University for London he became a Catholic. His first work was published in the two books of the Rhymers' Club. This was followed by a volume of short stories with the title of Dilemmas, and by a poetical comedy, "The Pierrot of the Minute." Later his poems were collected into two volumes—one, Verses, published in 1896, the other, Decorations, to appear in a few days, and to contain prose as well as verse. In collaboration with Mr. Arthur Moore he wrote two novels, A Comedy of Masks and Adrian Rome. He published also several translations from the French, among them being his version of Balzac's Fille aux Yeux d'Or.

THE first few years after Ernest Dowson had left college he spent at Bridge Dock, Limehouse, which belonged to his father. Here he laid the principal scene of A Comedy of Masks, and much of the melancholy of the gray stream flowing sadly past the windows of his little library in the dock-house informs his sombre verse. On the death of his father he escaped from his somewhat irksome life at the dock, and went to France, a country which had a charm for him his own never possessed; and there, on the coast of Brittany or in his favourite "Quartier" in Paris, with rare visits to London, he spent the rest of his short life. He was hoping to return to those clearer skies and that freer existence when death came so suddenly. The bulk of his poetry is intensely personal, the expression of a delicate and mournful spirit with a very frail hold on life, almost an aversion from it.

THE pity of it is that it is impossible to help such broken, ineffectual lives, because they will not help themselves. Their sufferings are of their own making, and what that suffering was in Ernest Dowson's case he alone knew. Happily, he was cared for in his last days by the friend in whose house he died. When that friend found him, shortly before his death, he had been a day without food, and was in such an advanced stage of consumption that he could barely stand on his feet. Death, which came to him very quietly, was, indeed, the consoler. It was the easiest thing that had happened to him.

THE first number of the Pilot, Mr. Lathbury's sixpenny "weekly review of ecclesiastical and general politics, literature and learning," will be issued this week. On March 17 the Londoner, under the editorship of Mr. A. Kalisch, will enter the lists. It is described as "a new weekly review," and the price will be twopence. The title seems familiar; but it is, of course, of London that one is thinking—the little journal that flashed through the town in 1877, and disappeared, alas! in 1878. In the preface to Ballades and Rondeaux, published in 1887, the late Mr. Gleeson White wrote: "In a Society paper, the London, a brilliant series of these poems appeared. After a selection was made for this volume, it was discovered that they were all by one author, Mr. W. E. Henley."

IT has been remarked that the title of the new volume of poems, Without and Within, by Mr. Edmond Holmes, was used by Dr. George Macdonald in 1857. Mr. Holmes, however, can rest secure. The title of Dr. Macdonald's volume is Within and Without. The copy that lies before us has the bookplate and signature of Mr. Edmund Yates.

MR. PUNCH's appeal for funds for the Hospital for Sick Children has met with a magnificent response. In two weeks nearly £8,000 has been received.

THE next number of the Anglo-Saxon will contain some unpublished letters of Lord Beaconsfield.

THE formation of a Russian official Academy of Letters is announced. The first Immortals are elected, and one is mystified by unheard-of names. Tolstoy we know, and he is one of the band. The others are Vladimir Solovieff (philosopher and poet); A. M. Zhenichuznikoff (a humorist); A. A. Potyekhin (novelist, dramatist, and portrayer of the moujik); A. F. Koni ("jurist and orator"); Count Golenishtcheff-Kutusoff (lyrical poet); Vladimir Korolenko (writer on social subjects); A. Tchekhoff (psychologist); and the Grand Duke Constantine Constantinovitch (author of a book of verses). We learn from the Anglo-Russian that the Grand Duke has just made a sensation in literary and theatrical circles by his Russian translation of "Hamlet" and by acting the chief part of that play.

AN American Academy of Immortals, unofficial, has been postulated by the readers of the New York Literary Life. The list includes publicists, philanthropists, painters, &c. We give below the names of the literary men elected by the wisdom of our contemporary:

HISTORIANS.
John Fiske.	John B. McMaster.
A. T. Mahan.	Edward Eggleston.
ESSAYISTS.
T. W. Higginson.	John Burroughs.
DRAMATISTS.
Bronson Howard.	David Belasco.
HUMORISTS.
Samuel L. Clemens.	Frank R. Stockton.
NOVELISTS.
Wm. D. Howells.	Bret Harte.
Mary E. Wilkins.	Marion Crawford.
POETS.
E. C. Stedman.	R. H. Stoddard.
Joaquin Miller.	J. W. Riley.
CRITICS.
H. W. Mabie.	M. W. Haseltine.
JOURNALISTS.
Whitelaw Reid.	E. L. Godkin.
Henry Watterson.

Of the four men who obtained the largest number of votes only two are writers. Mr. Edison received the largest number of votes, 285; Mr. Clemens came next with 243 votes; and Mr. Carnegie next with 221 votes. Mr. T. W. Higginson was fourth with 198 votes.

COUNTERBLASTS to the praise of Ruskin were to be expected. The worst of the conscious counterblast is, that it usually has the exaggeration of a reply rather than the calm of a judgment. Its office, indeed, is to state the other side, not to sum up. Remembering this, we give a taste of the article, "Mr. Ruskin," in the March Blackwood. Maga was ever an independent thinker, and scornful of rash enthusiasms. Here are some of its home-thrusts at the seer of Brantwood:

His Disciples:

The moral pathologist of the future will have much to say of the parasites of the nineteenth century. A long chapter will be devoted to that well-known variety, the Gladstonian Toady (assentator locuples); and the cross-references to it in the index will be Place and Peerage. But space will, nevertheless, be found to do justice to the idiosyncrasy of the Toady of Robert Browning, and of the Toady of John Ruskin.

His Learning:

His erudition gets the better of him; much learning hath turned his brain. . . . In the middle of a discussion on some problem of political economy, he interrupts us by a long-winded and wholly fantastical commentary on some plain-sailing passage in Shakespeare. . . . Desirous of knowing the true theory of value, we are whisked off to St. Ursula or some other holy person of Italian nationality. Ambitious of grasping the rationale of genuine patriotism, we are transported to Victor Carpaccio. Eager for information as to the currency, we are fobbed off with an etymological explanation of the Florin. Thirsting for instruction about our cereal supplies, we are referred to the practice of the Otomac Indians.

His Art Criticism:

As regards the criticism of art, Mr. Ruskin's true progenitor was no less a personage than Denis Diderot. . . . Pictures have no charm for him unless they are anecdotal, or unless they give scope for "trimmings" and fine writing. The difference between the two men is the purely superficial one, that Diderot likes one kind of anecdote and "trimmings," and Mr. Ruskin likes another. Diderot writes like a good-natured, easy-going, free-living man, with high animal spirits and a boundless capacity for physical enjoyment. Mr. Ruskin is a sort of Puritan Procrustes. He curtails or extends the corpus vile of painting or sculpture to serve his own turn.

His Style:

His fine passages, if tolerably numerous, are neither long nor consecutive. Saharas of insufferable pedantry lie between them. Yet the oasis is worth taking some trouble to reach. . . . He has enriched English prose with new cadences of extraordinary beauty, and that by a deft manipulation of the notes he has produced the most strange and moving effects can scarcely be denied by the most bigoted devotees of the older—and for common purposes better—school of writing. He is, par excellence, the master of the purple patch.

THE annual exhibition of the Royal Amateur Art Society (President, H.R.H. the Princess of Wales) will be held at 7, Chesterfield-gardens, Mayfair, by kind permission of Mr. and Mrs. Beer, from March 20 to 23 inclusive, in aid of the Marchioness of Lansdowne's Officers' Families' Fund, the Parochial Mission Women Fund, and the East London Nursing Association. The Hon. Mrs. C. Eliot, 8, Onslow-gardens, S.W., is the honorary secretary of the exhibition. The Loan Annexe will comprise, besides an interesting exhibition of photographs by members of the Photographic Salon (Linked Ring), a valuable collection of old miniatures on ivory of all countries, and specimens of pinchbeck. The Dowager Lady Newton will be much obliged if owners of either miniatures or pinchbeck, who are willing to exhibit, will kindly communicate with her at 20, Belgrave-square, as soon as possible.

In the current Alma Mater Mr. Oscar Browning describes the late Mr. G. W. Steevens's editorship of the Cambridge Observer, the paper on which he whetted his journalistic wits ere he came to London:

The Observer was very outspoken, and did not veil its opinions in decorous journalistic language. It was also somewhat abstruse, and its meaning might be mistaken by the casual reader. The consequence was that Cambridge printers, who seemed to be a puritanical class, were shocked at some of the things which they were expected to put into type, and not infrequently struck work. References to the Church Catechism seemed to them profane, and they were not prepared to question the fact that the world was made in six days. So it came about that Steevens not infrequently came to me just before the paper was to appear, "Bother those printers." He did not say "bother," but words to that effect. The article had to be cut short and the gap supplied by bogus advertisements, which were never paid for. I do not know whether he met with similar difficulties in London. Still, the Observer went on, and happy are those who possess a copy of it. When Steevens went into London journalism the perusal of that Term's Observer was sufficient to secure him at once a regular engagement on a first-class London paper, and a good salary.

DEFÖE had no answer to a cruel critic's question as to how Robinson Crusoe could have his pockets stuffed with biscuits while swimming naked from the wreck. He simply corrected the passage. Mr. Lang and Mr. Mason will make a similar correction, no doubt, in future editions of Parson Kelly. Meanwhile Mr. Lang says:

Mr. Mason and I owe our apologies to the readers of this [Longman's] magazine for making Mr. Wogan "rub his hands," while we, and history, had correctly stated that hands he had none to rub, having lost his arm at Fontenoy. Now when Agamemnon, in Homer, carves a lamb, after being wounded in the arm, German critics detect a multiplex authorship. But Agamemnon had been wounded a fairly long way back in the narrative, and I think the poet forgot, or did not care. We have no such excuse, and, as a matter of fact, it was the collaborator, who did not write the chapter, that foisted in Mr. Wogan's two hands, regardless of the statement of the other collaborator, who again overlooked the interpolation.

It is good that a man should be fully persuaded in his own mind. Mr. H. Croft Hiller, whose work entitled Heresies is continued by the issue of its second volume, is in this happy state. He says:

In the two volumes now issued of Heresies I profess to have established, partially or completely as the case may be, the following main points:

That truth is only any sensation of belief.

That right morality is acted belief and nothing else.

That the sole concern of morality is justice.

That our present social system is utterly inconsistent with justice.

That the only rationally tolerable religion is the theism I propound, involving one God and absolute determinism consistent with individual responsibility, but inconsistent with individual faculty-monopoly.

In future volumes Mr. Hiller will advance his views regarding God, creation, soul, and immortality.

What is Right? is the title of a thin penny monthly magazine in a yellow paper cover. The editor is convinced that the Boer War is not right. Apparently, too, the principle of non-resistance to evil is to be applied even to the law courts, for we have injunctions like this lightly sown up and down the pages: "Never attempt to punish anyone who has robbed you or has done anything in any way against you, for God never intended that one man should punish another." We are unable to gather from the first number what things will usually be labelled "right" by our new contemporary; but we are cheered, and a little surprised, to find that though it is not right to commit a pickpocket, it is right for wives to let their husbands smoke in the drawing-room.

THE imminent retirement is announced of Dr. Sewell, the venerable Warden of New College, Oxford. Dr. Sewell is said to be the only man living who has spoken to men who saw Dr. Johnson at work in the Bodleian Library.

The Elf, No. 2, amuses us; it is so clearly the work of happy amateurs. The letterpress appears on one side of the page only, and vast expanses of margin enshrine little flights of song and allegory. "We are the Gentle People," sings Miss Nora Hopper on one page, and without reading further we instantly apply the words to the young promoters of The Elf; here is the title-page of their frail and flaky little magazine. The literary matter of The Elf is one long Æolian murmur of pretty words and fancies. Thus:

No word could I speak in answer, for the eyes of Death were full of tears and his voice was broken with sobbing.

As we drew on, great light began to glow through the dark trees, and the distant voices of a thousand angels burst into song. And, borne upon the faint last breeze of the night, came the sound of the bells of a New Year. And the heart of the city came out and wept under the clear sky, and the gates of the Great Flood were opened, mercy burst over the earth, so that the stars leaned over and smiled each at his own image therein.

The illustrations of The Elf are incidents in a veldt of margin; but, being loose, they soon drop out, and become a sliding, vanishing litter of artistry.

STUDENTS of style should read Mr. David MacRitchie's article, in the March Longman's, on Scott's proof-sheets of Redgauntlet. Ballantyne's inept suggestions—they are mostly inept—and Scott's varying treatment of them, make these proof-sheets highly interesting. A complete survey of the sheets goes to prove that Scott wrote rapidly and revised little. Finish, selection, verbal research were out of his way. In such things, says Mr. MacRitchie, he was the very opposite of Mr. Stevenson, who has told us how, in his youth, he deliberately made himself the "sedulous ape" of earlier writers, jotting down in his pocket note-book every word or phrase of theirs that he thought would aid him in acquiring an effective style. Scott was built on quite another plan from that. He was nobody's "ape"; but a great, original genius—and out of the abundance of his heart his mouth spoke. If, as his hurrying thoughts found utterance, they took shape in a somewhat inchoate form, that was a defect that he endeavoured to remedy afterwards, after a fashion. But of the self-consciousness of the stylist he had little or nothing. . . . What we learn, then, from the Redgauntlet proofs is that Scott's "literary methods and style" hardly gave him a moment's thought.

Mr. MacRitchie's remark about Stevenson's dependence on other writers belongs to a phase of Stevensonian criticism of which we are hearing much just now. In the Pall Mall Magazine Mr. Honley, comparing Stevenson and Bunyan, observes that Bunyan was born a master, while Stevenson was born a student of Bunyan.

THE editor of the Literary Year Book for 1900 has asked a number of critics to select, and discourse upon, the book published last year which particularly appealed to them. Some of the selections were as follows:

- Mr. Andrew Lang: "Some Experiences of an Irish R.M."
- Mr. W. E. Henley: Bunyan's "Life and Death of Mr. Badman."
- Mr. T. Herbert Warren (President of Magdalen): Poetical Works of Robert Bridges, Vol. II.
- Mr. Laurence Binyon: "The Vinedresser, and Other Poems."
- Mr. Quiller-Couch: Stevenson's Letters.
- Mr. George W. E. Russell: Sir Herbert Maxwell's "Life of Wellington."
- Mr. Joseph Jacobs: Spencer and Gillen's "Native Tribes of Central Australia"; Prof. Ward's "Naturalism and Agnosticism."
- Mr. Bernard Capes: Autobiography of Mrs. Oliphant.
- Mr. Horace Wyndham: Lieut.-Gen. Butler's "Life of Sir George Pomeroy-Colley."
- Canon Benham: Edward N. Westcott's "David Harum."

PRODUCERS of short stories will do well to read an article on the subject by Mr. E. Charlton Black in No. 2 of the International Monthly (Macmillan). Mr. Black very truly represents the short story as the tentacle of fiction, or its active search-light—which ever you please, neither of the similes being Mr. Black's. "The short-story writer," says Mr. Black, "is the true explorer and conqueror of the modern world, and the work is only begun." On one point Mr. Black is very sound: he will have no art for art's sake in the short story. He is simply stating the truth when he says:

In all the short stories which have survived the generation that first read them, there is clear recognition of the fact that the light of every soul burns upwards; there are everywhere glimpses of the hidden nobilities that are the heritage of every human being, no matter how narrow and

THE ELF. a little book.

WINTER
1899.

Published at Peartree Cottage, Ingrave, Essex.

sordid the physical environment may be. This is a truth that the elaborators of the later French conte never have been able to grasp; and no amount of "close atmosphere," no delving after freaks and freakish sentiments to be tricked out in freakish phrases, no extraordinary forms of speech or deviations from the honest, which is, after all is said and done, the only artistic way of telling a thing, will make these later contes live. Their literary art is simply one of vulgar, open-mouthed euriosty.

THE story of Sophie Dorothea of Celle, Consort of George I., is the subject of a new work by Mr. W. H. Wilkins, which Messrs. Hutchinson will issue. Much of Mr. Wilkins's matter is new; and many of the love-letters which passed between Sophie Dorothea and Count Königsmarck will be republished from the originals.

IN his Lettres à une Étrangère, just published, Balzac has this advice for women writers: "Write as much as you please, only do as all women should, burn what you have written!"

SPEAKING of short stories, the New York Literary Life asks its readers to name the ten best examples from American authors. Meanwhile it asks: "What about this list: Hale's 'Man Without a Country,' Aldrich's 'Marjorie Daw,' Bret Harte's 'Luck of Roaring Camp,' Stockton's 'The Lady and the Tiger,' O'Brien's 'The Diamond Lens,' Mrs. Spofford's 'The Amber Gods,' Rebecca Harding Davis's 'Life in the Iron Mills,' William D. O'Connor's 'The Carpenter,' Richard Harding Davis's 'Gallagher,' and Perkins's 'The Devil Puzzler.'"

To the Times of Thursday Mr. Swinburne sent his second contribution on the war. It is called "The Turning of the Tide: February 27, 1900," and concludes thus:

The winter day that withered hope and pride
Shines now triumphal on the turning tide
That sets once more our trust in freedom free,
That leaves a ruthless and a truthless foe
And all base hopes that hailed his cause laid low,
And England's name a light on land and sea.

Bibliographical.

DOES "S. G." of the Pall Mall Gazette know Mansfield Park so thoroughly as a critic of Miss Austen should, or, when he wrote, the other day, of "Broken Vows" as the play of which so much is said in the early part of the story, was he guilty merely of a slip of the pen, the result of a momentary lapse of memory? I confess I took him at his word, whereas I ought to have known better, and corrected him. But, alas! it is many years since I read Mansfield Park, and I have never returned to it. Meanwhile the correction comes from Mr. Austin Dobson, who obligingly writes to my Editor as follows: "The play in Mansfield Park is 'Lovers' Vows,' Mrs. Inchbald's adaptation of Kotzebue's 'Das Kind der Liebe'. It was produced at Covent Garden in 1798. John Taylor (Records of My Life) says that he supplied the lines for the 'rhyming butler' mentioned in Chapter XIV. of Mansfield Park; and it was in playing 'Lovers' Vows' that Charles Kean fell in love with his future wife, Miss Ellen Tree."

Genest, by the way, says that it was Thomas Palmer, of Bath, who wrote not only the butler's rhymes but the epilogue to "Lovers' Vows." Mrs. Inchbald (in her preface to the printed text of her piece) says that the lines were composed by the author of the prologue. Was the prologue, then, written by John Taylor? Perhaps Mr. Dobson can tell us. Is it, moreover, an absolute ascertained fact that Charles Kean "fell in love with" Ellen Tree while playing with her in "Lovers' Vows"? All that Kean's biographer tells us is, that it was as actors in "Lovers' Vows" that Kean and Miss Tree "first met" upon the boards. This was in December, 1823. They were not married until January, 1842—a little over thirteen years later. Mr. Dobson may be—probably is—right; but what is his authority?

Under the title of "Barrie's First Book," a writer in the Young Man for March favours his readers with an account and analysis of Better Dead almost as long as the "book" itself. He finds the germ of the jeu d'esprit, as he calls it, in an article by Mr. Barrie which appeared in the St. James's Gazette for April 21st, 1885—the "book" itself not being published till 1887. Of the precious first edition of Better Dead not even our great national library possesses a copy; its copy is one of the second edition, 1888. Thus early has Better Dead become "scarce." I believe Mr. Barrie has not reprinted the "book," and in so doing he has been wise. Some day, I daresay, collectors will be seeking for copies of the libretto of "Jane Annie," the Savoy opera in the production of which Mr. Barrie collaborated with Dr. Conan Doyle. This, probably, was one of the weakest librettos ever written; and the number of weak librettos has been large.

The Rev. W. J. Dawson, greatly daring, proposes to give to the world a poem on Savonarola, defiant (he cannot be ignorant) of the fact that he has been anticipated in this performance by a poet laureate. Really remarkable is the extent to which Savonarola has occupied the minds of English writers, from George Eliot downwards. There are some ten or twelve biographies of him from English pens, beginning with that of J. A. Heraud in 1843. R. R. Madden's came in 1853, A. C. Macleod's in 1882, P. E. Cooke's in 1883, A. J. Hapgood's in 1895, J. O'Neill's in 1898, H. Lucas's in 1899, and so forth. Milman devoted an essay to Savonarola thirty years ago, and Mrs. Oliphant put him more recently into one of her historical portrait galleries. And yet, even now, what does our reading public know about him?

The Rev. Anthony C. Deane appears to resent the harmless appellation of "Chaplain to Punch." Very rightly he takes his clerical calling seriously. Nevertheless, one cannot get away, alas! from the literary sins of our youth. History records that Mr. Deane published in 1892 a volume of Frivolous Verse; that was his own name for it. Two years later came some Holiday Rhymes, and, after another two years, some poetical Leaves in the Wind. There is record, further, of a book of Poems, by Mr. Deane, produced so long ago as 1889. Precisely when Mr. Deane took orders I do not know, but I need not tell him that English literature boasts of a good many clerical humorists—men who found humour and clericalism quite compatible.

One of the books promised to us for the spring is The Queen's Garland, a collection, made by Mr. Fitzroy Carrington, of Elizabethan lyrics. This, of course, will range with The Kings' Lyrics, by the same compiler, issued by Messrs. Duckworth last December. The Kings' Lyrics was "composed" in the States, and Mr. Carrington, we take it, is an American.

It should be remembered concerning the late Mr. Andrew Tuer that, apart from his elaborate monographs on Bartolozzi and the Horn-Book, and his diverting adventures among old books for children, he was the author of an opuscle on copyright in titles, called, if I remember rightly, John Bull's Womankind, and printed in 1884.

In none of the notices of the late Mr. Traill have I observed any reference to what was, in fact, his last (complete) contribution to letters—The New Fiction, and Other Essays on Literary Subjects. This was published in the autumn of 1897, and consisted of articles reprinted (with revision and additions) from reviews and magazines. It included papers on Lucian, Pascal, Richardson, and Matthew Arnold (whom he hardly appreciated), with two or three Dialogues.

Reviews.

Literary Ventriloquism.

The New Lucian. New Edition. By the late H. D. Traill. (Chapman & Hall. 6s.)

THE imaginary-conversation medium is one with which all persons should play who are seriously dissatisfied with history or with common verdicts upon history. Each puppet, after certain rules of the game have been observed, can be made to speak just as their summoner wishes, and he, at any rate, will have the satisfaction of seeing his own view of the case made plausibly vocal. The only vehicle for defence which can surpass the dialogue is the monologue, but that requires a finer artist. Many men can make a show with an imaginary conversation who would be lost if such a task as "Bishop Blougram's Apology" or "Andrea del Sarto" were set before them. We can conceive that a decent quality of invention can carry one fairly well through a dialogue, but for the satisfying monologue imagination is needed.

The first thing that we ask of an author, who, like Lucian and Landor, summons the illustrious dead and sets them conversing or justifying their lives, is that he shall be witty. Without wit no task could be so flat as, to take an instance from this volume, the discussion between Wilkes and Lord Sandwich. With wit all is well—provided, of course, that some attention is paid to the probabilities, and the minds of the shades approximate more than a little to the minds of the men. Mr. Traill is witty: what he chiefly lacks is interest in character. We do not feel in any of these dialogues that the people themselves interest him greatly; their point of attraction is their use in expressing opinions or proving a theory. Landor, we feel, often made conversations for the sheer love of hearing his favourites speak, and because it was for him a sure way of getting into their minds a little and identifying himself with them. We can believe that just as the great Tartarin found that he could think only when he talked, so did Landor find that only when he imagined himself to be using the words of his characters did he really comprehend those characters. Mr. Traill has not this sensuous pleasure in personifying the remarkable dead: the something to be proved, the point to be cleared up, the opinion of his own to be stated with the added force which the authority of the great name of the spokesman will give it—these are the important things. Hence his dialogues are largely polemical where Landor's are poetical.

An interesting example is the criticism—excellent criticism, too—of Matthew Arnold, in the dialogue between Landor and Plato. Landor (in Mr. Traill's book) thus speaks of the poet of "The Strayed Roveller" and "Empedocles on Etna," and we feel that Mr. Traill thinks precisely so too:

LAN. A certain priest of our religion has told us that the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life. It is by informing the ideas, the imagery, the expression of the moderns with the Hellenic spirit; it is by cultivating the Hellenic passion for symmetry and balance, the Hellenic pride in continence and self-restraint, the Hellenic delight in pure beauty of form, and the Hellenic contempt for the glare of colour, that the elevation of our literature is to be compassed; and there was one in pre-eminence by whom this excellent work has been greatly advanced.

LAN. His poetry is instinct with the grace and soothes us with the repose of your most perfect art; and though in form it is chastened to the utmost severity of the statue, there can be few—and I should despise them—who have ever found it cold.

LAN. As a teacher I own he has been less successful. The qualities in which he shone as a poet appeared somewhat to fail him when he descended—or ascended, one would say with more propriety—from practice to precept.

PLA. Wherein, then, does he fail as a teacher?

LAN. I cannot better answer that question than by recalling your admired reply to the censure of Diogenes. Stamping rudely upon the carpet of Eastern fabric with which the floor of your abode was covered, "Thus," cried the Cynic, "do I tread upon your pride, O Plato." "And with greater pride, O Diogenes!" was your just and dignified retort. In pronouncing judgment upon the faults of his countrymen, our apostle of culture has too often merited a like rebuke. In his descriptions of himself as a modest seeker after truth, there is something too much of the pride that apes humility. He praises the noble naïveté of the "grand manner" in language which seems a little too conscious of its own elegance; and he preaches simplicity in a style which is by no means free from affectation. That grace of the nude which distinguishes his imaginative work gives place in his criticism to a picturesque, but too minutely studied, arrangement of drapery; and while his poetry has always affected me with the charm of pure English, I often find it hard to tolerate the Gallicisms of his prose.

We do not seem to be listening to Landor in this passage. Landor the enthusiast, Landor the intolerant, we know. This new Landor is too chastened, too low spoken. Indeed, this dialogue is one of the least successful. Personally we cannot forgive it for the shrinkage which Plato is made to undergo during its progress.

Among the new dialogues is an amusing passage of arms between Coleridge and Dr. Johnson on the matter of romantic poetry and the Lyrical Ballads revolution. Johnson is admirably done; but Coleridge suffers. Coleridge was a humorist and a wit and a Johnsonian; and Mr. Traill has forgotten all three characteristics. But Johnson is so good that the poorness of Coleridge may be forgiven. In order to illustrate the theories of the new school, Coleridge repeats the "Ancient Mariner," to which Johnson listens on the understanding that he may criticise. Johnson's argument is that the supernatural in poetry may be permitted only so long as the same law of causation is observed as that which governs the affairs of men. Coleridge holds that the poet may imagine whatever liberties he please. Here are some Johnsonian criticisms at the close of the recital:

JOHN. Stay, Mr. Coleridge. I promised not to interrupt your recital of the remainder of your poem, and I have not done so; but I am under no pledge to refrain from perstringing some of its more obtrusive absurdities. It seems from Part V. that your Polar Spirit—who, as we know, could raise "a good South wind" by a nod of his spiritual head—must needs slide under the keel "nine fathom deep" in order to propel the ship himself. Is that your notion, sir, of allowing your supernatural being to operate by natural causes? It further appears, too, that he was somewhat precipitate in slaying the whole crew as accessories after the fact to the murder of the albatross, since he has to raise them from the dead in order to navigate the ship; though why the navigation of a ship which is being propelled by a spirit under her keel should require the resurrection of anybody but the steersman, or why the other mariners "'gan work the ropes" of a vessel with no wind to fill her sails, you have not told us. No, sir, nor why the resuscitated dead should again fall lifeless on the deck—still less why "a man all light, a seraph man," should stand like a link-boy on every corpse. Least of all do you condescend to explain the ship's course on her return home. She has been sailing northward through the Pacific, when suddenly the Mariner exclaims:

"Oh! dream of joy! is this indeed
The lighthouse top I see?
Is this the hill? is this the kirk?
Is this mine own countree?"

Never was question more justified by circumstances. For if, as I presume him to be, your mariner was an inhabitant of the Eastern and not of the Western Hemisphere, he could only have reached his "own countree" by way of Bering Strait, and by skirting the continent of North America, through the impenetrable icefields of the Arctic Ocean.

The pity of it is that, as we have said, the Coleridge is not credible. Mr. Traill should have made some lesser shade contend with Johnson and recite Coleridge's poem.

The other new dialogues are Parnell and Butt, Wilkes and Lord Sandwich, Napoleon, Michelet and Renan, and Gladstone and Gordon. Beyond the definition of Gordon's religion the dialogue is not remarkable and might, we think, have been left undone. To our mind neither the true Gladstone nor the true Gordon speaks in it.

Finally, to illustrate Mr. Traill's idea of Tennyson's view of our present state, we may quote the very interesting and sagacious passage which brings the conversation between the two golden-mouthed poets to a close. Tennyson is telling Virgil that Claudian's lines, beginning are much quoted by the Briton of these days for their sentiment. The dialogue continues:

Hæc est in gremium victos quæ sola recepit,

VIR. I applaud the sentiment, though I reprehend the verse. But why should the lords of a greater empire than the Roman take any Roman poet for their spokesman? Have you no poets of your own race to celebrate it?

TEN. None; or none at least in so majestic a strain as yours.

VIR. Yet you yourself, they tell me, were one of the greatest of your country's poets. How came you to leave the glories of its rule unsung?

TEN. I have not so left them, when occasion offered. But my opportunities were few and late. When my powers were in their prime, my countrymen were indifferent to their Empire; and when they awoke to its greatness, I was old.

VIR. And has no poet who has succeeded you been inspired by the theme?

TEN. Yes, many; but only one pre-eminent in power, and to him both grandeur and grace are lacking. His voice is a trumpet-blast and his song a battle-cry, the fitting poetry, doubtless, of a people whose empire, great as it is, is still in the making. Through his strains you hear the fierce delight of strife, and even the high elation of victory; but never, as in yours, the proud consciousness of dominion and the large calm joy of rule.

VIR. But when your work is accomplished, will not that note of sovereignty be heard?

TEN. It may be so; and perhaps I should rejoice that that time is not yet. For—let me not anger you—the history of your own nation instructs us, that when the poet of a people exchanges the Spartan life for the lyre, and the untutored call to arms for the cunningly fashioned hymn of empire, it is a sign that they have scaled their predestined heights of conquest, and that their foot is already on the downward slope.

It is sad to think that the mind which gave us the clean and shrewd and penetrating common sense of this interesting book should now be lost to us for ever. Yet common sense is not the only note of the "New Lucian"; its dedication, at least, affords a deeper revelation of the author. We will end with it:

To E. T.

"LIVE joyfully with the wife whom thou lovest all the days of the life of thy vanity, which He hath given thee under the sun, all the days of thy vanity; for that is thy portion in this life, and in thy labour which thou takest under the sun. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest."—ECCLES. ix. 9-10.

What matter though such things have never been,

Nor shall be? the Ecclesiast hath said.

Though but in mockery the Samosatene

Imagined his confabulating dead?

What matter though nor knowledge nor device,

Nor work nor wisdom in the grave there be?—

Does not the Preacher bid us once and twice

Live out in joy love's life of vanity?

So live we, then! nor heed what whisper tells

That closest union heaviest reckoning pays

In shock of loss and anguish of farewells

At that eternal parting of the ways.

Moral Gower.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF JOHN GOWER. Edited by G. C. Macaulay. Vol. I.: The French Works. (Clarendon Press.)

THIS is the first instalment of one of those monuments of tedious and unremunerative toil which, even in these days of commercialised literature, there are still scholars to put together, and which the Clarendon Press, to its honour, is always ready to publish. The complete work will extend to four volumes, and is uniform in outward seeming with Prof. Skeat's magnificent editions of Chaucer and Langland. Nor, so far as we can judge, is Mr. Macaulay's careful and erudite work in any way unworthy to stand by the side of that of the older scholar. The present volume is in some ways the most interesting of all, for the Mirour de l'Homme, of which it is mainly comprised, has not previously seen print. Until 1895 it was believed to be lost, and the story of its discovery by Mr. Macaulay is one of the minor romances of letters. It is mentioned by Gower himself in the earliest version of his Confessio Amantis under the title of Speculum Hominis. In the later versions it becomes Speculum Meditantis, probably in order to secure a jingle of endings with the Confessio Amantis itself and the Vox Clamantis. Mr. Macaulay mentioned this one day to the Cambridge University librarian, Mr. Jenkinson, and he at once produced the MS. of the Mirour de l'Homme, and upon examining it Mr. Macaulay was able to identify it beyond doubt with the missing poem. Of the history of the MS. little is known. It came from the library of one Edward Hailstone, and about the middle of the eighteenth century it seems to have been lying about the kitchen of a farmhouse. This is inferred from some illiterate jottings upon several of the margins. On one page, for instance, occurs the name "Glosterr" and the statement: "Margat . . . leved at James . . . in the year of our Lord 1745, and was the dayre maid that year . . . and her Swithart name was Joshep Cockhad Joshep Cockhad carpenter." So are the fleeting pastoral loves of Margat . . . bound up for ever with the immortal verses of a dull, dead poet.

Mr. Macaulay tells us plainly enough that he has edited the book more in the interests of the philologist than of the lover of literature. As a storehouse of late Anglo-Norman forms—for, as Gower himself confesses, he very much speaks his French "after the scole of Stratford-atte-Bowe"—it is certainly valuable. Here and there, too, it adds an item to our not very extensive knowledge of Gower's personal history.

This is interesting, not because the poet's work is, at its best, worth much, but because he is a typical figure. With Chaucer, Langland, Wyclif, he stands at a parting of the ways in English history. More than any one of them, perhaps, he gathers up in his work the three distinct elements which were henceforward to be merged in the full stream of our literature. With almost equal facility he writes French in the Speculum Meditantis, Latin in the Vox Clamantis, English in the Confessio Amantis. He would seem to have been a man of good family, owning property in Kent and elsewhere. He was a layman, although he has been identified with the Gower who held the living of Braxted Magna in Essex. Some have tried to make him out a lawyer. Mr. Macaulay, more plausibly, suggests that he was a merchant. He desires, indeed, a special tax upon lawyers; but for the merchants he makes some exceptions to his general condemnation of society, and he evidently shares the antipathy of the "City" to the Lombards. Mr. Macaulay thinks that his special occupation was the wool trade. We know that late in life he married one Agnes Groundolf, but from the Mirour it appears that this was a second marriage. More important is the tale of his relations to Chaucer. It was to "moral Gower" and "philosophical Strode" that Chaucer dedicated his "litel myn tragédie" of "Troilus and Criseyde"; and Gower, in his turn, paid in the first version of the Confessio Amantis a delicate compliment to Chaucer by the mouth of Venus:

And grete wel Chaucer whau ye mete,
As my disciple and my poete.
For in the floure of his youth,
In sundry wise, as he wel couth,
Of ditties and of songes glade,
The which he for my sake made,
The lond fulfilled is over all;
Whereof to him in special
Above all other I am mooste holde.

In the later versions of the Confessio Amantis, however, the reference to Chaucer was suppressed, and similarly Chaucer, in the "Man of Law's Tale," and its Prologue, takes occasion to make an attack upon Gower. The reason of this is not known. The two poets seem to have remained upon the same side in politics—they both courted Richard the Second, and both ratted to Henry the Fourth—and it can only be conjectured that some shadow of personal or professional animosity had arisen between them. Professor Courthope suggests that Gower had piqued Chaucer by forestalling him in his plan of completing a series of stories in English verse linked together by a central design, after the fashion of Boccaccio's Decameron; and as the Confessio Amantis is finished, while the Canterbury Tales are not, this is at least possible. An age which takes delight in the minor personalia of authors will doubtless find these speculations more interesting than Gower's verse at least can claim to be. In his old age Gower retired with his wife to the priory of St. Mary Overies. He was by this time blind, and he ended his days in pious observances. He benefited the priory largely by his will, which is still extant. Besides provision for the keeping of his obit, he left the monks two chasubles, a missal, a chalice, and a martyrology; and begged that he might be buried in the chapel of St. John Baptist. He is still at peace there, with a fine effigy upon his tomb. His chubby-faced head rests upon his three ponderous volumes. A collar of SS is about his neck, and his ample locks are bound with a fillet of roses. As we have hinted, it is difficult to read anything that he wrote, but it is none the less decent that lovers of London and of poetry should now and then do him the grace of a visit to St. Mary Overies.

Music and Melancholy.

Songs of the Glens of Antrim. By Moira O'Neill. (Blackwood. 3s. 6d.)

OVER here in England I'm helpin' wi' the hay,
And I wisht I was in Ireland the livelong day;
Weary on the English hay, and sorra take the wheat!
Och! Corrymeela and the blue sky over it!

There's a deep dumb river flowin' by beyont the heavy trees,
This livin' air is mothered wi' the bummin' o' the bees;
I wisht I'd hear the Claddagh burn go runnin' through the heat
Past Corrymeela, wi' the blue sky over it.

D'ye mind me now, the song at night is mortal hard to raise,
The girls are heavy goin' here, the boys are ill to plase;
When one'st I'm out this workin' hive, 'tis I'll be back again—
Ay, Corrymeela, in the same soft rain.

The puff o' smoke from one ould roof before an English town!
For a shaugh wid Andy Feelan here I'd give a silver crown,
For a curl o' hair like Mollie's ye'll ask the like in vain,
Sweet Corrymeela, an' the same soft rain.

That poem has been singing in the present writer's head ever since he first read this book, a fortnight ago. Sweet Corrymeela, an' the same soft rain, Sweet Corrymeela, an' the same soft rain, day after day. And not only this, but other poems too, for Moira O'Neill is one of those singers whose notes home in the inward ear which is the joy of solitude. They fall as gently and soothingly as Corrymeela's same soft rain.

There is little of criticism to say about this wistful, gentle, melodious book. It contains twenty-five poems, and all are intensely Irish, all are simple and true and very human and very musical. Here is a ballad—"The Grace for Light"—which, whatever one's own childhood was like, or however distant, cannot leave one quite unmoved. The grace for light may be a new phrase to many of our readers: it was new to us; but what a charming rite!

When we were little childer we had a quare wee house,
Away up in the heather by the head o' Brabla' burn;
The hares we'd see them scootin' an' we'd hear the crowin' grouse,
An' when we'd all be in at night ye'd not get room to turn.

The youngest two She'd put to bed, their faces to the wall,
An' the lave of us could sit aroun', just anywhere we might;
Herself 'ud take the rush-dip an' light it for us all,
An' "God be thanked!" she would say—"now we have a light."

Then we be to quet the laughin' an' pushin' on the floor,
An' think on One who called us to come and be forgiven;
Himself 'ud put his pipe down, an' say the good word more,
"May the Lamb o' God lead us all to the Light o' Heaven!"

There's a wheen things that used to be an' now has had their day,
The nine Glens of Antrim can show ye many a sight;
But not the quare wee house where we lived up Brabla' way,
Nor a child in all the nine Glens that knows the grace for light.

Technically this, like all of Moira O'Neill's poems, could hardly be improved. Yet how familiar are all its words, how hackneyed its rhymes, how common its metre! Its secret is, of course, its personality. Just as Mill is said to have felt sad when he thought of the time that was coming when all the combinations of musical notes should be exhausted and new melodies impossible, so may students of poetry have felt that a day was imminent when "forgiven" and "Heaven" linked together could never be plausible again. Yet Moira O'Neill has done it. It is such poetry as hers that may for ever convince these pessimists that the death of poetical melody and freshness is no nearer than it was when poets first lisped. Technically, we have said, Moira O'Neill is almost beyond improvement. But this, we imagine, is the result only of extreme pains. The art has concealed art, for the singer seems to take her verse "as easy as the grass upon the weir," to quote the only poem (Mr. Yeats's "Down in Salley Gardens") of which we are ever reminded by this new singer.

Here is another haunting lyric, "A Broken Song":

Where am I from? From the green hills of Erin.
Have I no song, then? My songs are all sung.
What o' my love? 'Tis alone I am farin'.
Old grows my heart, an' my voice yet is young.
If she was tall! Like a king's own daughter.
If she was fair? Like a mornin' o' May.
When she'd come laughin' 'twas the runnin' wather.
When she'd come blushin' 'twas the break o' day.
Where did she dwell? Where one'st I had my dwellin'.
Who loved her best? There's no one now will know.
Where is she gone? Och, why would I be tellin'!
Where she is gone there I never can go.

Moira O'Neill is that rare blend, a poet who goes direct to the heart and a poet who satisfies the artistic eye.

"Where Forlorn Sunsets Flare."

Innermost Asia. By Ralph P. Cobbold. (Heinemann. 21s.)

A MAN might choose a worse recreation than the armchair study of books about Central Asia. They would admit him to the most secret and awful parts of the earth, perhaps even to the most beautiful. Books dealing with these regions are multiplying fast, inspired mainly by the shadow of that tremendous event, which may never come, the Russian advance on India. This has been the inspiration of books like Lord Dunmore's The Pamirs, Lord Curzon's The Pamirs and the Source of the Oxus, Mr. E. F. Knight's Where Three Empires Meet, Krausse's Russia in Asia, and other works almost as well known. It is significant that Mr. Cobbold's own pages smell of Russia, although in his visit to the Pamirs he proposed only to shoot ibex. Perhaps the most interesting point which he makes about our great Rival is the anomaly which is presented by the unscrupulous cleverness and strength of arm shown by Russia in her dealings with the wild peoples of Central Asia, and the miserable financial outcome of all her operations. Hundreds of millions of roubles are squandered in the maintenance of garrisons and outposts which guard only sandy wastes or black-faced mountains. Mr. Cobbold confesses himself puzzled by a state of things which has now lasted many years, and shows no immediate sign of change. He has these words for our comfort:

It would take a bolder man than I to forecast the outcome of Russia's next departure, nor does it come within my sphere to discount it, but so surely as her onward strides have been aided by the vacillation of British governments, who have been unable to cope with her ability and her lack of scruple, so surely shall we find that Russia will be hoist on her own petard, and after being rent to her foundations will serve in succeeding ages as a lesson to future nations of the futility of ability without scruple, persistence without pity, and dominion without religion.

This is splendid optimism, all the more striking because throughout many pages Mr. Cobbold has been showing us, by instance and anecdote, how secret and vice-like is the Russian grasp both on the peoples and problems of innermost Asia.

It would be a shame if the glories of the Pamirs and of the passes by which these great upland valleys are approached could not be separated from foreign politics. Mr. Cobbold is happily able to detach his travel impressions from his imperial views. He is a traveller at heart, and with him travel is poetry and philosophy; a sojourn in London does but fill him with a new yearning for Himalayan heights and simple peoples. Nor can we wonder that Mr. Cobbold confesses to such feelings; to have seen what he has seen, and to have dwelt where he has dwelt, must mean, to a man of any imagination, a transformation of the mind, a complete change of perspectives and inclinations. How shall a man live in Kensington who has seen Rakapushi? Mr. Cobbold has seen Rakapushi.

Some five miles beyond Chalt we turned a corner, and upon the vision broke such a spectacle as would fill the least impressionable of mortals with wonder and awe. The great mountain Rakapushi; 26,000 feet high, towered above us, 19,000 feet rising before our eyes straight up from the valley. We all got off our ponies and sat down and looked silently. Speech would have been a vulgar intrusion, for it was a vision solemn and beautiful beyond any of this world's sights and shows. Rakapushi is the noblest of mountains, matchless in form and nature. Her sunny lower slopes lay green and smiling, giving place higher up to forests of mountain ash, juniper, and birch, golden and crimson and autumnal hues. Above stretched the dark moraine up to the vast snow-fields and glittering glaciers. Even the great quiet shades in the mountain were radiant with reflected light more brilliant than man could depict; the sunlight moved along, revealing the delicate rippling lines which mark the concealed crevasses and the waves of drifted snow. It sparkled on the edges, it glittered on the icicles, it shone on the heights, it illumined the depths, till all was aglow and the dazzled eye returned for relief to the quiet forests. By sunlight or moonlight Rakapushi's splintered icy crest is the one object which unfailingly attracts the passing traveller; in the imagination it becomes invested with a personality.

We have left ourselves no space to describe Mr. Cobbold's route, or his principal stopping-places, which were Kashgar, Vierny, Balkash, and Charog. In the last place, and near it, he was detained by the Russian authorities, and really we are not so surprised as Mr. Cobbold would have us be at this event. We fancy that the Russian authorities who detained our traveller on honourable terms will curse their own leniency when they read his pages. Mr. Cobbold's photographs, by the way, are a joy.

"The Prince of Gentlemen."

The Book of the Courtier. From the Italian of Count Baldassare Castiglione. Done into English by Sir Thomas Hoby, Anno 1561. With an Introduction by Walter Raleigh. "Tudor Translations." Edited by W. E. Henley. (David Nutt. 18s. net.)

If you are not "too grave or too busy a man," any book on any ideal is worthy of a glance. For, however dull it may be, human nature will "break in," as Mr. Edwards's cheerfulness did upon his philosophy. We have passed a tolerable hour in surveying even The Social Duties and Domestic Habits of the Wives of England, assisted by the discreet Mrs. Ellis. One's pet books of the sort, where the subject and its treatment are alike noble or lovable in themselves, should always be kept within easy reach of one's armchair and the fire. Holy Mr. Herbert, meek Mr. Walton, mellifluous Mr. Taylor should never be out of a temperature of sixty degrees. Neither should The Courtier of Count Baldassare Castiglione. But the warmth of sunshine is emphatically for him. He is bland as a summer morning, magnificent as a summer noon, fragrant as a summer evening. He is the flower of the "Courtly Civilisation."

Alas, how that gorgeous exotic out-flames our home-grown slips of the same stock! Peacham's "Compleat Gentleman," although "fashioned as absolute in the most necessary and commendable qualities" as poor Peacham could compass, is too much of an athletic Master Mumbazon and downright Peveril of the Peak to ride willingly abreast of this suave Signor from Italy. Braithwait's "English gentleman of selecter ranke and qualitie" wears too mortified a band and too steeple-crowned a hat to feel at ease with this Courtier in the "Citty of Urbin," among "silver plate, hanginges of verve riche cloth of golde, auneynt ymages of marble, verve excellent peinctinges and instruments of musycke of all sortes." The sun's radiance in "Urbin" scatters indeed a "liberal largesse": here it gilds clouds and glorifies fogs.

The flushed redundancy of the Renaissance is, of course, patent in the imperial profusion of the character and attainments of this Paragon of Pagan Christianity. He is a "Gentleman borne and of a good house." "Of a good shape, and well proporcioned in his lymmes," showing "strength, lightnes, and quicknesse." "A perfecte horseman for everye saddle." He has the arts of swimming, of leaping, of casting the stone, of wrestling. But he must beware how he practise them with "men of the cuntry," for it is "too ill a sight and too foule a matter and without estimation to see a Gentilman overcome by a Cartar." 'Tis almost surprising that he "may sette a syde tumblyng, clymynge upon a corde, and suche matters." However, they may be waived as "tasting somewhat of jugglers craftes." His voice is "shrill, clere, sweete and wel framed with a prompt pronunciacion." He "much exercises himselfe in poets, and no lesse in Oratours and Historiographers, and also in writinge both rime and prose." He is to have "cunning in drawing, and knowledge in the very arte of peincting," for "Lovers ought to have a sight in it." But it is impossible to schedule further his "chiefe conditions and qualities." Their "breef rehersall," appended to the book, occupies nearly five pages. And already they are sufficient to dazzle the reader. "Nay, more than sufficient," said the Lord Ludovicus Pius, "for I beleve that there is no vessell in the worlde possible to be founde so bigge that shal be able to receive al the thinges that you will have in this Courtyer." Certainly not: but then an ideal is to practise what the perfume of a rose-garden is to each several flower.

And yet we have peeped only at the accomplishments of the Courtier. Some critics, indeed, have not perceived that the book treated of anything else; but Mr. Raleigh has shown himself to be the perfect "whiffler" to the new triumphal progress of this "culled and choice-drawn cavalier" by thinking otherwise. Although his Introduction is distinguished by minute learning, combined with a happy knack of generalisation and a clear sight of the correlation of his author with times past and present, perhaps Mr. Raleigh in no place shows his aptitude for his task more convincingly than where he says: "Castiglione deals less with accomplishments and decorum than with the temper and character which beget decorum." That is perfectly true, and doubtless, though Castiglione in part denied the accusation of his contemporaries that he "identified himself with his model," his book is, in fact, as consciously "a picture of his own disposition" as Walton's, for example, was of his. The Count's temperament was delicately sensitive to every stroke of beauty and of glory, finding in Nature and in Man—above both, in Art—a rich but ordered feast for the senses and the soul. To such an one high birth, fine raiment, kings' houses, valour, honour, love, and courtesy are but the fit environments and proper qualities. We will take our leave of the "Prince of Gentlemen," and of the good knight, his translator, in this strain of music, breathing his more exalted mood of platonic rapture:

Vouchsafe (Lorde) to harken to oure prayers, power thy selfe into oure hartes, and wyth the bryghtnesse of thy most hollye fire lyghten oure darkenesse, and like a trustie guide in thys blynde mase, showe us the right waye: reforme the falsehood of the senses, and after longe wandringe in vanitye gyve us the ryght and sounde joye. Make us to smell those spirituall savoures that relieve the vertues of the understandinge, and to heare the heavenly harmonie so tunable, that no discorde of passion take place anye more in us. Make us dronken with the bottomelesse fountain of contentation that alwaies doeth delite, and never giveth fill, and that giveth a smacke of the right blisse unto who so drinketh of the renning and cleere water thereof. Purge wyth the shyninge beames of thy light our eyes from mysty ignorance, that they maye no more set by mortall beawty, and wel perceive that the thinges which at the first they thought themselves to see, be not in deede, and those that they saw not, to be in effect. Accept oure soules, that be offred unto thee for a sacrifice. Burn them in the livelye flame that wasteth al grosse filthines, that after they be cleane sundred from the body, they may be copled with an everlastinge and most sweet bonde to the heavenly beawty. And we severed from oure selves, may be chaunged like right lovers into the beloved, and after we be drawn from the earth, admitted to the feast of the aungelles, where fed with immortall ambrosia and nectar, in the ende we may dye a most happie and livelye death, as in times past died the fathers of olde time, whose soules with most fervent zeale of beehoulinge thou diddest hale from the bodye and coopeddest them with God.

Other New Books.

THE STORY OF ENGLISH
LITERATURE.

BY EMMA SALISBURY
MELLOWS.

We are sorry for the children who are to be introduced to the enchanted realms of English literature through the medium of this barefaced compilation. A few extracts will best make clear the character of the work. Miss Mellows's conception of the evolution of poetic style is exemplified in these introductory remarks to the chapter on "The Age of Dryden":

Shakespeare, the great artist of the natural in poetry, had, with his wonderful genius, portrayed living men and women, and their lives and passions, in true and magnificent verse; but the later poets of his school indulged in most ridiculous flights of fancy, and sometimes expressed themselves in extravagant and sensational language which was really most unnatural. Thus a bot was spoken of as "the shining leather that encased the limb"; coffee was "the fragrant juice of Mocha's berry brown." These degenerate poets had lost all the youthful fervour of the Elizabethans, and had not learnt that just and beautiful arrangement of nature which we call art.

We should be glad to know to which members of Shakespeare's "school" Miss Mellows ascribes these ingenious eighteenth century paraphrases. Her sense of proportion may be judged from the fact that she devotes a page and a half to Ascham, omits to name Campion, and dismisses the lyric of a quarter of a century as follows:

Robert Herrick wrote in his Hesperides some very delightful verse; and the names of Thomas Carew, Richard Crashaw, George Herbert, Henry Vaughan, Richard Lovelace, Sir John Suckling, William Habington, Edmund Waller, Abraham Cowley, Andrew Marvell, George Wither, and Francis Quarles, are remembered in connexion with many beautiful lyrics.

Finally, her notion of the sort of criticism of a writer which is likely to be useful to a child is here illustrated:

Matthew Arnold, with whom the critical spirit prevailed even in his verse, is author of poems which have been declared to be "as solid and pure as granite and gold."

Dante Gabriel Rossetti wrote ballads and sonnets (including "The Blessed Damozel" and "The King's Tragedy") of great interest on account of their sincerity, novelty, and exquisite melody.

His sister Christina has gained a lasting place in literature by her sonnets, "Monna Innominata," numerous poems for children, and much sacred verse.

William Morris, a teller of old-world stories after the manner of Chaucer; Coventry Patmore, author of The Angel in the House; and Macaulay, whose ballads were at one time very popular, are other names connected with this era.

In the face of these grave defects of method and equipment mere blunders of fact, which are pretty frequent, may go disregarded. (Methuen.)

OLD LONDON TAVERNS.

BY EDWARD CALLOW.

That period which most of us never saw, and which history has hardly begun to record—that magical "sixty years ago" of the poets and sentimentalists—will always furnish material for interesting books. Mr. Callow was dining and wining in London restaurants when Queen Victoria came to the throne. Enough! cries the reader, sure of interesting talk. "Cosy roughness," sociability, good plain food, and zealous waiting, were the characteristics of the chop-houses and coffee-houses of Mr. Callow's recollection. Homeliness had not been ousted by splendour. The well-to-do customers of the Fleece and Sun (long vanished from Finch-lane) selected their chops and steaks at Banister's, the butcher next door, and brought it to the Sun and Fleece to be cooked:

On entering the Fleece, a good-sized room with a sanded floor presented itself to view. On one side, half-way up the room, was a small bar, and opposite to it was the fire and gridiron. Such things as silver grids were unborn at that time. All round the remaining space were the customary cosy little boxes with room for four, and no more, to sit with comfort. Decorations or embellishments there were none; but though the place looked rough it was scrupulously clean.

No customer was very long before being attended to by the waiter, who received his orders for beer or wine. The former, as at other chop-houses, was served in the pewter pot; and the wine, particularly port, was of a quality rarely to be met with nowadays. So soon as the chop or steak was ready, it was produced on a pewter or china plate, as required, and was flanked by another plate filled with floury potatoes, boiled in their "jackets," that would have delighted the soul of an Irishman to behold.

It must not be forgotten that these comforts and these cheery, sensible ways are kept alive in the City. "Joo's" and "Snook's" and "Monger's," and the Cock in Thread-needle-street (where spoons, forks, and even soup-basins were of solid silver) may have gone; but —'s and —'s still remain, supplying the juiciest chops and steaks on the real old willow-pattern plates, and beer in cleanest pewter. Sanded floors and black-handled cutlery complete the charm.

Mr. Callow's strength is in his personal recollections. When he goes farther back, and is dependent on books, he is less companionable, less accurate. We should like to know what grounds he has for the statement that the Cheshire Cheese in Fleet-street was frequented by Dr. Johnson, and that "wit and wisdom flashed and sparkled across the tables when such men as Johnson, Reynolds, Dick Steel, Goldsmith, Chatterton, and Garrick met there." The Cheshire Cheese is not mentioned by Boswell, and was certainly not the scene of such distinguished meetings as the above. That Johnson went there is not improbable, but neither is it established. We believe that Mr. Percy Fitzgerald has stated that in his youth he met old men at the "Cheese" who had seen Dr. Johnson there. But the "Cheese" is more associated with the Johnson Club than with Johnson. (Downey. 6s.)

THE MYSTERIES OF CHRONOLOGY. BY F. F. ARBUTHNOT.

Mr. Arbuthnot is an irritating person. He tells us that to write a good book on chronology a man "must be a scholar with a good knowledge of Greek, Latin, Arabic, and many other languages, besides being well up in archaeology, astronomy, chronology, geography, history, numismatics, and palæography." He also tells us that he possesses none of these qualifications. A very few pages serve to show that this is no mock-modesty on his part, and it becomes obvious that he had better have left the book alone. Chronology at the best is a dull subject, and a treatise which attempts to treat it more or less scientifically and fails is worse than useless. Mr. Arbuthnot does not appear to have so much as heard of the leading authority on his subject, Dr. H. Grotefend, whose Chronology of the Middle Ages and of Modern Times would have cleared up most of his difficulties, and corrected many of his errors for him. He would then have abstained from floundering after that will-o'-the-wisp, Hardouin, and would have done a real service by translating for English readers Grotefend's useful little "Taschenbuch" or "Manual," and appending to it a table of the regnal years of English sovereigns. We suppose that Mr. Arbuthnot intends a mild joke when he proposes "a new English era to be called the Victorian, dating from 1st January, 1837, the year of the accession of our reigning sovereign." But if not, does he expect other nations to adopt this era, or does he propose that a little mathematical calculation should be gone through every time a foreigner has to use an English, or an Englishman a foreign date? (Heinemann.)

A HISTORY OF GOTHIC ART
IN ENGLAND.

BY EDWARD S. PRIOR, M.A.

This handsome volume, liberally illustrated with the most lucid of diagrams and with a number of admirable architectural drawings by Mr. Gerald C. Horsley, is uniform with Mr. Blomfield's well-known History of Renaissance Architecture. That is already a standard authority on its subject: so should this be. Mr. Prior writes of the great ecclesiastical architecture of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries with genuine enthusiasm and ample learning. His differentiation of structures and styles and schools is no merely formal or pedantic one. He strives to correlate these with their underlying causes in the mason-craft of the various groups of English stone-quarries, in the diverse architectural needs of the monastic, the cathedral, the parish systems. You may read his book, if you will, as a complement, or indeed an antidote, to Prof. Moore's Development and Character of Gothic Architecture, a revised and enlarged edition of which we lately noticed in these columns. Prof. Moore found the essence of Gothic in "a system of mechanism maintained by thrust and counterthrust," and, in harmony with this definition, declared that true Gothic must only be looked for in France—perfect true Gothic perhaps only at Amiens itself. Mr. Prior protests. He claims a distinct place and dignity for English Gothic, and in fact rejects the fundamental assumption from which Prof. Moore's theory proceeds. The essential aim of Gothic was not structural perfection, but beauty. Economy of material was only the means by which it arrived at beauty. "The Gothic spirit was that of aspiring growth, the leaping upwards of a flame, the piercing of the air with spire and pinnacle, the uplifting of the ribbed vault." Mr. Prior goes on to point out that structural perfection was reached as a means to the realisation of this ideal. Nor will he admit the dependence, often asserted, but hardly proved, of English Gothic upon French models. He claims for the two styles a common origin and independent developments, the English building remaining to the end "monastic," while the great French cathedrals were the monuments of "lay" or at least "secular" artists, in more or less conscious revolt against monastic domination.

Mr. Prior's treatment is perhaps hardly as wide as his title, for nine-tenths of the book is devoted to architecture. Sculpture, painting, glass-staining, and the like are treated with comparative slightness in so far as they serve the master art; and the minor and domestic arts hardly at all. In conclusion, Mr. Prior has our sympathy in his vigorous onslaughts upon the practice of so-called "restoration." Sir Gilbert Scott, Mr. T. G. Jackson, and other eminent persons, have amongst them destroyed more mediæval buildings than all the Puritans, and five centuries of wind and weather. (Bell. 31s. 6d.)

CHRISTMAS IN FRENCH CANADA. BY LOUIS FRECHETTE.

Few people in England realise how the old French life and character still survive in Canada among a hardy race, transplanted under the old monarchy, and living contentedly under the British flag, secure from the revolutions and civil tumults which have distracted its mother country. To those who know the Frenchman of the Continent it seems little short of incredible that men of the same race should live among the snows of the far north, a race of farmers and trappers and voyageurs, free from the nervousness and excitability which distinguish their cousins left behind in Europe. M. Louis Frechette is a French Canadian who, with the laudable ambition of bringing home the characteristics of his race to the English public, has written in his second language, English, a collection of short stories and sketches dealing with the North-West. He takes us to the settler's isolated cottage, the well-to-do farmer's residence, and the homes of the city, revives the old legends, and brings back to life the picturesque types whose idiom, habits, costumes, and superstitions have disappeared, or are disappearing rapidly. The stories are altogether delightful, and being written in a tongue slightly unfamiliar to the author, have an additional charm. (Toronto: Morang & Co.)

THE XCVTH REGIMENT IN THE CRIMEA.

BY MAJOR H. C.
WYLLY.

This little volume is the first of the "Derbyshire Campaign Series," and will be followed by four other books dealing with the battles of the 95th in India and Egypt. The series makes an admirable start, and, with the exception of Balacava, in which the regiment was not engaged, gives a sketch of the whole Crimean campaign. Being told from the point of view of a regimental unit, the story has more actuality than if it dealt with the whole army. By way of comparison with the present war it will be interesting to note that of the thirty-two officers who embarked in 1854 no fewer than twenty-two were killed or wounded, one receiving more than twenty wounds. Of the sergeants nineteen out of forty-six were killed or wounded within six weeks of landing, while of the rank and file 350 were killed or wounded in the three days' fighting in the autumn of 1854. Major Wyllly has produced a very excellent instalment of regimental history. (Sonnenschein.)

SPORT AND LIFE.

BY BAILLIE-GROHMAN.

Mr. Baillie-Grohman is well known as a climber of mountains and a shooter of big game, and any book by him commands the instant respect of all sportsmen. The handsome volume which he has just issued tells the story of fifteen years, on and off, in the hunting grounds of Western America and British Columbia. For some years Mr. Baillie-Grohman's temporary home was on the Pacific Slope, and he crossed the ocean to and from Europe some thirty times in that period. His earlier chapters deal with shooting big game and the Game Laws of America. Perhaps to the general reader the most interesting chapters will be those which tell how Kootenay emerged from its wild state, with stories of real Wild West experiences. Mrs. Baillie-Grohman contributes an informing chapter on "The Yellow and White Agony," which is, being interpreted, the Servant Question in the West. The book is illustrated with seventy-seven photographs, including pictures of the best trophies of North American big game killed by English and American sportsmen. This is a book for the country house, and for everyone who cares for free out-of-door life and untrammelled sport. (Horace Cox.)

Fiction.

Savrola: a Tale of the Revolution in Laurania. By Winston Spencer Churchill. (Longmans. 6s.)

THE situation of the republic of Laurania is not precisely defined by Mr. Churchill, but it undoubtedly lies somewhere between the Mediterranean and the Baltic, and it might fairly be called, in some respects, a "composite photograph" of sundry European states. Laurania had suffered for five years from a military dictatorship imposing itself by force against the will of the people, and the tale tells how, and with what bloodshed and dishonour, this dictatorship was overthrown. Savrola was the chivalrous leader of the people, and he is a fine character, though rather inclined to emit "views." The Dictator's wife, Lucile, is shamefully permitted by her husband to entangle herself with Savrola for political purposes, but she ends by loving Savrola (this is the "human interest"), and the book concludes with the flight of the lovers from Laurania, the Dictator having met his death.

The various incidents of revolution—the mutiny of the army, the personal collision between Savrola and the Dictator, the street fighting, and the contest between the navy and the land forts—are described with an expert vigour and picturesqueness; but there is nothing in the book so good as Mr. Churchill's recent narrative in the Morning Post of his capture by the Boers. The satire in which the story abounds is rather forcible than keen. Thus, of newspapers, apropos of the shooting down of an unarmed mob by the soldiery:

The Courier, the respectable morning journal of the upper classes, regretted that so unseemly a riot should have taken place at the beginning of the season, and expressed a hope that it would not in any way impair the brilliancy of the State Ball which was to take place on the 7th. It gave an excellent account of the President's first ministerial dinner, with the menu duly appended, and it was concerned to notice that Señor Louvet, Minister of the Interior, had been suffering from an indisposition which prevented his attending the function. The Diurnal Gusher, a paper with an enormous circulation, refrained from actual comments, but published an excellent account of the massacre, to the harrowing details of which it devoted much fruity sentiment and morbid imagination.

Savrola is an agreeable, "rattling" book, and an achievement remarkable enough for an author aged twenty-three. It is very obviously the work of a brilliant and original man, a man of multifarious experiences and aptitudes, a man who could shine in whatever quarter he might choose, and shine so that all must gaze on the effulgence of him. But it is not the novel of a novelist. Its real interest lies more in the personality it discloses than in the strength and beauty of the work itself.

Mirry Ann. By Norma Lorimer.
(Methuen & Co. 6s.)

THE Isle of Man has of late been vulgarised, not only by its tourists, but also by its novelists; the days of its aloofness and simplicity can never come back. On the other hand, many years will pass before, in the remoter parts of it and in the intimacies of its village life, it loses those characteristics which make it so valuable both to the ethnographer and to the student of human nature. Miss Lorimer, to judge by her acquaintance with Manx customs and her realisation of the Manx spirit, is probably a native of the Isle of Man; but whether she is or not she has written a Manx novel which is at once sincere, poetical, and in the best sense true. She knows the hearts of the fisher folk, and she has felt the influences of Manx landscape, so forbidding and yet so full of sentiment. Those who have idled through the fishing villages that lie between Douglas and Port Erin will appreciate her various descriptions of Colby and the perception that has gone to the making of them. Here is a little night piece:

In the little island there are lingering twilights, and the days were now touching their longest. But the villagers did not wait for darkness to close their day, work began too early for that. Before the heavens had deepened for the night, and while wide-winged bats were still floundering in the sky, the house-doors were shut and the white window-blinds drawn closely down. Enough coal and light had to be burned in the winter; and if in late spring-time it was still grey twilight when chapel was over, and the evening meal finished, what need was there of the unnecessary extravagance of burning lamp-oil? Here and there a light could be seen from some low window, where the geraniums and fuchsias, which shut out the bright sunshine in the daytime, were now reflected like skeleton flowers on the white blinds. At regular intervals of time Langness lighthouse from its distant point shot out its bright shaft and turned it on the village as if to show with greater distinctness the still peacefulness of the scene. Even on such an eventful day as this, if their men were at sea, bed-time came soon for the women, and the Colby street was early quiet. A new day would begin betimes, with its gossip and its sadness.

Beyond saying that the heroine is well and strongly drawn, we have no space to deal with the characters or the plot of Mirry-Ann; nor are these so important as the general atmosphere and suggestiveness of the book as a whole. Miss Lorimer has obvious limitations as a prose artist, and the slow march of her events by no means possesses that inevitability which is essential in a great novel. Mirry-Ann, in fact, is not a great novel; scarcely even a fine one; but it is distinguished for all that, and Miss Lorimer has within her the root of the matter.

The White Dove. By William J. Locke.
(Lane. 6s.)

WE would not deny that this is a novel somewhat beyond the average in conception, and much beyond the average in execution, but at the same time we do not think that Mr. Locke is travelling along the true path of development. In fact, this seems to us the least satisfactory of his four novels. It is often mawkish—and that is the whole of our charge against it. The book is a tale of two adulteries; but this accident of theme has nothing to do with the mawkishness, for the story is neither impure nor ignobly suggestive. One of Mr. Locke's characters has a phrase, "the banality of meretricious prettiness." It is of this banality that Mr. Locke is guilty. An extract will illustrate:

"Perhaps after a time, when I am dead and gone—a man must die some day, you know—you'll like to come back to the old house and devote yourself entirely to research and be independent of two-guinea fees and that kind of thing. That would be nice, wouldn't it, Ella?"

The girl's heart throbbed at the share implied, but a tenderer feeling quieted it at once.

"It would be impossible without you, Uncle Matthew," she said.

He rose with a laugh. "None of us are indispensable, not even the most futile. I'm going to dress. You'll dine here, of course, Syl? And Ella, tell them to get up some of the '84' Pommery to drink good luck to Syl."

He walked out of the room with the brisk air of a man thoroughly pleased with life; but outside, in the passage, his face grew sad, and he mounted the stairs to his dressing-room very slowly, holding on to the balusters.

The younger folks remained for a while longer in the library. Sylvester bent forward and broke a great lump of coal with the poker.

"I'm not fit to black his boots, you know."

The sentimentality of the book is too crude. Mr. Locke is a clever man, with a feeling for art, and we cannot avoid the suspicion that in The White Dove he has sought to please others rather than himself. If the book is a full and sincere expression of the artist in him, then it seriously belies the promise of earlier work.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

ANDROMEDA.

By ROBERT BUCHANAN.

Mr. Buchanan has chosen an admirable setting for his new story. It is on Canvey Island, that low, desolate strip of mud and grass opposite Benfleet, between Gravesend and the Nore, that we meet "Annedromedy," as she is called by her foster-parents. "Half mermaid and half able seaman is our gel!" says old Endell, the fisherman. To young Somerset, the artist, she is the Goddess of Canvey Island. A story of love, a birth-mystery, art, water, and moonlight. (Chatto & Windus. 6s.)

THE WORLD'S MERCY.

By MAXWELL GRAY.

Stories by the author of The Silence of Dean Maitland. The first, which gives the book its title, tells how a young doctor drank, and maltreated his wife; and how, in the end, she took to drink, was attended by her husband (now reformed) and died forgiving him. (Heinemann. 6s.)

NEMO.

By THEO. DOUGLAS.

Those who accept occult phenomena, and those who associate them with imposture, will alike be interested in this strong and well-constructed story by the author of Iras: a Mystery. The characters of the unscrupulous old conjurer, "Professor" Bannerman, and his frail and psychologically gifted daughter, Mary, are well drawn. Mystery, excitement, humbug, and detection keep the story thoroughly alive, and the love interest is never dropped. (Smith, Elder. 6s.)

A MAN OF HIS AGE.

By HAMILTON DRUMMOND.

Readers of historical novels may remember an excellent story of Coligny's day entitled For the Religion. The present work is a sequel to that book, containing the further adventures of Blaise de Bernauld. It is equally rich in good intrigue and fighting. (Ward, Lock. 6s.)

THE WEB OF FATE.

By T. W. SPEIGHT.

Another of this practised writer's carefully constructed melodramatic stories. It is perhaps enough to say that the central character plots to kill his old sweetheart and her husband on their wedding day by luring them into a quicksand; and is afterwards captured, hounded, and tied to a mill-wheel, which is then set in motion. The rest must be looked for by the reader. (Chatto & Windus. 6s.)

THE WHITE TERROR.

By FELIX GRAS.

The success enjoyed in this country by Félix Gras' The Reds of the Midi will incline many readers to read this romance of the French Revolution and the years following that cataclysm. The story extends to the battle of Waterloo and is all action. (Heinemann. 6s.)

THE LOYAL HUSSAR.

By ALAN ST. AUBYN.

Fourteen stories by the author of A Fellow of Trinity. The first three are military, and each is prefaced by a quotation from "The Absent-Minded Beggar." In "The Loyal Hussar," a young lover hearing, on the day that his banns have been published for the second time, that there has been another reverse in South Africa, gives himself up as a deserter in order to rejoin his regiment at the front. It is not, we believe, a sure way, but apparently he was successful. Of what happened after that the author is silent. (Digby, Long. 3s. 6d.)

THE ENGRAFTED ROSE.

By EMMA BROOKE.

A new novel by the author of A Superfluous Woman. The title refers to Rosamunda Thoresby, a changeling. For three-quarters of the book the reader knows that she is a changeling, but can only suspect at random whose child she really is. An implacable old Squire, an ill-fated estate, and the two lovers of Rosamunda help to make up a story which would be more attractive were it not so heavily charged with fate and the sense of impending calamity. (Hutchinson. 6s.)

MARVELS AND MYSTERIES.

By RICHARD MARSH.

Oh, the blessedness of Scotland Yard! "Mr. Bidder had a telegram in his hand. Here it is: 'Come up at once. Stone, Scotland Yard.' Mr. Bidder was the senior partner in the firm of Bidder, Tuxwell, and Harris, of Birkenhead." Of course. Such stories are always readable. We advance to yarns about hypnotic suggestion, and metempsychosis—nine entertaining stories in all. (Methuen. 6s.)

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates for Yearly Subscriptions ..... 20s. including postage.

American Agents for the ACADEMY: Brentano's, 31, Union-square, New York.

Unfinished.*

MR. STEEVENS's journalistic method was in danger of tiring by its brilliance. His hail-storms of observation were magnificent, but their very fascination had their own monotony. The fact is, that the new and sensitive journalism which he originated, and which gave him his opportunities, employed only those faculties which were of instant market value. They left in abeyance so much that should have warmed, softened, modified, and given enduring import to his hot impressionism. Acting in strict and dutiful concert with his employers, Mr. Steevens collected raw material with unexampled quickness, and sent it to London, duly made up, with elfish skill and promptitude. But it was made up for to-morrow's use; it was a brilliant contribution to the breakfast-table. Mr. Steevens would have claimed no more. And yet more may be unhesitatingly granted. There is reason to think that the man who, at thirty, had developed certain literary powers so far, would have developed those other powers and qualities which were needed to give his writings the form and significance of literature. Emotion, reflection; revelation of personality, and not merely of personal faculties; spiritual, as distinct from physical, keenness of vision; these, and the ripeness which comes at its own pace, would have touched Mr. Steevens's powers to deeper issues. But it was not to be.

It was not to be; and with gratitude and interest we accept the last expression of Mr. Steevens's genius as a descriptive writer. There is little in the book before us that calls for new remark. Still we notice that it is precisely when things are "humming" that the writing is best. Steevens was a little at loss when dulness reigned. He would not relax his method, look within himself, and indulge other powers than those he was sent out to exercise; duty forbade, the conditions forbade. But when the bugles blared with purpose, what vigour, what efficiency! Mr. Steevens never did anything better than his account of Elandslaagte, unless it was his account of Omdurman. Perhaps Omdurman gave him the finer opportunity, for nothing like that host advancing in white linen and the love of Allah has been seen or heard of by living men. But now take the battle of lead and water—Elandslaagte:

It was about a quarter to five, and it seemed curiously dark for the time of day. No wonder—for as the men moved forward before the enemy the heavens were opened. From the eastern sky swept a sheer sheet of rain. With the first stabbing drops horses turned their heads away, trembling, and no whip or spur could bring them up to it. It drove through mackintoshes as if they were blotting-paper. The air was filled with hissing; underfoot you could see solid earth melting into mud, and mud flowing away in water. It blotted out hill and dale and enemy in one grey curtain of swooping water. You would have said that the heavens had opened to drown the wrath of man. And through it the guns still thundered and the khaki columns pushed doggedly on.

The infantry came among the boulders and began to open out. The supports and reserves followed up. And then, in a twinkling, on the stone-pitted hill-face burst loose that other storm—the storm of lead, of blood, of death. In a twinkling the first line were down behind rocks, firing fast, and the bullets came flicking round them. Men stopped and started, staggered, and dropped limply, as if the string were cut that held them upright. The line pushed on; the supports and reserves followed up. A colonel fell, shot in the arm; the regiment pushed on.

Unwillingly we break the red-hot chain of narrative, and seize a later, the supreme, moment:

Fix bayonets! Staff officers rushed shouting from the rear, imploring, cajoling, cursing, slamming every man who could move into the line. Line—but it was a line no longer. It was a surging wave of men—Devons and Gordons, Manchester and Light Horse all mixed, inextricably; subalterns commanding regiments, soldiers yelling advice, officers firing carbines, stumbling, leaping, killing, falling, all drunk with battle, shoving through hell to the throat of the enemy. And there beneath our feet was the Boer camp and the last Boers galloping out of it. There also—thank Heaven, thank Heaven!—were squadrons of Lancers and Dragoon Guards storming in among them, shouting, spearing, stamping them into the ground. Cease fire!

How sure and vivid, too, is the after-picture of the old wounded Boer on the dark hill-side:

We found Mr. Kok, father of the Boer general and member of the Transvaal Executive, lying high up on the hill—a massive, white-haired patriarch, in a black frock-coat and trousers. With simple dignity, with the right of a dying man to command, he said in his strong voice: "Take me down the hill and lay me in a tent; I am wounded with three bullets."

Few Englishmen read those sentences in the Daily Mail without misgiving, none without pity.

Mr. Steevens's more humorous and dramatic vein is seen in the chapter "In a Conning Tower." They were drinking draught beer when the boom of a gun was heard. The captain picked up his stick and said "Come." They climbed up a ladder of rock and looked abroad.

"That gunner," said the captain, waving his stick at Surprise Hill, "is a German. Nobody but a German atheist would have fired on us at breakfast, lunch, and dinner the same Sunday. It got too hot when he put one ten yards from the cook. Anybody else we could have spared; then we had to go."

We come to what looks like a sandbag redoubt, but in the eyes of heaven is a conning-tower. . . .

"Left-hand Gun Hill fired, sir," said a bluejacket, with his eyes glued to binoculars. "At the balloon"—and presently we heard the weary pinions of the shell, and saw the little puff of white below.

"Ring up Mr. Halsey," said the captain.

Then I was aware of a sort of tarpaulin cupboard under the breastwork, of creeping trails of wire on the ground, and of a couple of sappers.

The corporal turned down his page of Harnsworth's Magazine, laid it on the parapet, and dived under the tarpaulin.

Ting-a-ling-a-ling! buzzed the telephone bell.

The gaunt, up-towering mountains, the long, smooth, deadly guns—and the telephone bell!

If anything could add to the sadness of Mr. Steevens's death it is the sharp-set life that one meets in the best of these pages. Life, quick life, abounds, and vision such as one cannot associate with the darkness of death. There is a grim oddness in his remark, when he caught sight of Table Mountain in this his last journey—"more like a coffin than a table." A thousand regrets linger round this book, and hopes that almost refuse to die with him who inspired them. But the closing memorial chapter, written by Mr. Vernon Blackburn, recalls alike the certainty and the seriousness of our loss.

* From Capetown to Ladysmith: an Unfinished Record of the South African War. By G. W. Steevens. (Blackwood. 3s. 6d.)

Things Seen.

Imperialism.

SUDDENLY through the open window came the joyous sound of fifes, cheers, and the rhythmic tramp of trained feet. Idly I turned to the window, and there were the men in khaki swinging down the street. The sun shone out, the fifes set the blood galloping, the people shouted, and the dark houses were alight with waving handkerchiefs. Overhead—strong, stern, fatherly—loomed St. Paul's, and as the men in khaki came swinging round her walls enthusiasm caught me and lifted me out of myself. I swopt the world and saw everywhere the children of the old home waving their strong arms, shouting, and hurrying forward to the sound of the Imperial clarion. Patriotism, Imperialism—in a flash I saw all they meant! My temperate blood grew hot, my pulse raced, and leaning from the window I shouted, and cheered, and cried with the rest. The fifes died in the distance, the men in khaki swept westward, the crowd scattered, the omnibuses moved on, and I turned back into the room. A book was lying on the table, a little book, a collection of Coleridge's Table Talk. I opened it at random, and my eye fell upon this passage:

The true key to the declension of the Roman empire—which is not to be found in all Gibbon's immense work—may be stated in two words: the imperial character over-laying, and finally destroying, the national character.

Nevertheless, that afternoon I bought a khaki necktie.

The Lighted Window.

It had been a day of bitter weather—snow, sleet, frost, and a cutting wind, and the sight of my fellow creatures had given me sad thoughts. All mankind seemed to be stunted and warped. The men and women who had flitted past me, shoulders rounded, heads bent, proclaimed in every movement: "See to what mankind has come. We are spoiled by the hard life of cities." And as the cab in which I was seated crawled through the dark streets the procession of these figures passed and repassed before my mind's eye, and I thought hungrily of the ample, simple, joyous life that is our birthright, if we but knew how to claim it.

The rumbling of the cab lessened. I jumped out into the dark, unpropitious night—the night of hurrying, degenerate figures. The cabman, very old and grey, jerked his head towards the horse. It stood staggering, and he himself was frozen with the cold. I paid him, but his numbed hand could not hold the money. It dropped and disappeared in the snow. I gave him more money, doubling it within his listless hand. He swung himself off the box without speaking, coaxed the animal to move homewards, and I, turning away, came full face to a lighted shop window. Straightway that bitter day, and the poor travesties of humanity who had hurried through it, were forgotten. The window was full of glass-covered trays, and in the trays gleamed rainbow humming-birds; moths with diaphanous outstretched wings; butterflies of exquisite workmanship; radiant shells; and iridescent beetles gold and green, green and gold, and of perfect form. That shop-window in a dark London street was sheer loveliness. It proclaimed what all created things should be; what those hurrying, bent, undersized figures might be if man could but read the laws of life and follow them with wisdom. I turned away from that lighted window in the dark London street, but the hurrying, undersized figures no longer clouded my vision. I saw through them and beyond. And those brave words of Philaster's drummed through my brain.

Oh that I had been nourished in these woods
With milk of goats and acorns, and not known
The right of crowns nor the dissembling traits
Of women's looks; but digged myself a cave
Where I, my fire, my cattle, and my bed,
Might have been shut together in one shed;
And then had taken me some mountain-girl,
Beaten with winds, chaste as the hardened rocks
Whereon she dwelt, that might have strewed my bed
With leaves and reeds, and with the skins of beasts,
Our neighbours, and have borne at her big breasts
My large coarse issue!

Paris Letter.

(From our French Correspondent.)

M. EDOUARD ROD is always a serious and healthy writer. You must not look for wit or humour in his books, still less for eloquence or charm. A prudent reserve is his great characteristic; sincerity and simplicity are his best qualities. His new book, Au Milieu du Chemin ("In Life's Middle Way"), is another of his sober studies of the consequences of passion. It breathes of troubled conscience, of an implacable rectitude, and an unsleeping preoccupation with truth. The hero is the inevitable man of letters so dear to the heart of a writer essentially a man of letters himself. He takes his profession gravely, as M. Rod does, but without enthusiasm; is like his creator, dull, sober and sincere. In analysing the position modern life and judgment have made for modern writers, he has the wisdom to pronounce it excessive: he qualifies poets and novelists as "the workmen of the illusions of the heart and the senses."

"Not only do our works harm," he meditates, when brought face to face with the distressing fact that a betrayed girl has committed suicide, prompted by a similar dénouement in one of his own novels, which was the last book she read, it is our life, we ourselves, what we are, what the talent we have made of us, or the fashion of the hour that has seized us. For we occupy a place prodigiously disproportionate to the efficacy of our social rôle; we are flattered far beyond our merit, unless we should be abused far beyond reason. In each case there is too much noise made about us. At a time when talent is the portion of the mau in the street the little each one of us has lays claims to the rights of genius; and the imbecility of the public hastens to grant them. And so each of us grows to regard himself as the axle of the world, and gargles his throat every evening with the day's compliments, is occasionally made drunk by his own immortality as a plausible illusion. And both our life and soul suffer from these excesses. We end by disdaining the common law of men, which alone is good. We take pride in not resembling them or, at least, in possessing something which they lack, a gift that lifts us above them. We want to live after our own fashion with the sentiments, the pleasures, the passions that we guard from the control of usual experience, because they are our own. What errors thus do we commit without suspecting the consequences! What deformities art and poetry cause our being to undergo, even in our very acts . . .

M. Rod excels in a delicate and suggestive examination of conscience. Converted to nationalism under the influence of the eminent Brunetière, the discoverer of Bossuet, who has persuaded him that the entire world, to be logical and sincere, must become Roman Catholic, M. Rod jeers at his old religion, Protestantism; but he may thank that abandoned creed for the one quality that lifts him above the crowd of cheap novelists of the hour. It is because of that individualist training, which excites the anger of M. Brunetière, that M. Rod's heroes go wrong and suffer and become strong in their own sincere and conscientious way. Their nobility lies in that personal delicacy of moral nature which forbids them facile errors and vulgar pleasures.

This, to-day, in France, suffices to constitute originality. In the end Clarence, the applauded dramatist, has decided he must regularise his relations with a divorced woman, whose faithful lover he has been for years. His arguments at last convince the lady, who, having suffered through marriage, loathes the institution.

We shall grow old without having anything that gives force to life when maturity comes: home, family, sure friends. We shall grow old separated in the eyes of everybody, while alone malicious voices will pronounce our two different names together. Never shall we be entirely the two beings that make but one, the strong single trunk from whence spread the branches of the future. Each will follow his way. For the moment our ways are mingled. But dare we assert that the chances of the journey will not separate them? So many can rise up at any moment. To-morrow, in an instant, the unexpected may start up between us, and neither our love nor our will suffice to abolish it.

The chain of marriage is such a simple necessity that almost all men accept it without discussion. The book is a moral and sensible one, above all a convincing sermon on the irrefragable necessity for the subservience of the so-called exceptional being to the common laws that have fashioned society, and by which alone society can be maintained.

The Liberal party in France (that is, the old sect of Dreyfusards) gained a triumph last week in the election of M. Paul Hervieu. All the forces of nationalism were brought to bear against him, but in spite of the efforts of that singular pair, MM. Coppée and Lemaitre, Hervieu was elected, to the grief and discomfiture of Nationalists, Catholics, and Royalists. M. Bourget, whose conversion has cast him upon the bosom of Brunetière, forgets his old masters and his old loves, Taine and Zola, and now wars against intellect and individuality, and, of course, voted against M. Hervieu. For the Academy has, alas! become an arena of politics instead of a temple of literature.

M. Auguste Filon's new book, Sous la Tyrannie, is a feeble satire upon Republicanism, and the no less feeble portrayal of life under the Second Empire. Gambetta is naturally a lively and obvious prey of the Imperialist caricaturist. But Gambetta has been turned to such vivid and excellent account by Daudet that we were in no need of M. Filon's insignificant portrait. Had Daudet not written Numa Roumestan M. Filon's false great man might have seemed to us a clever seizure of a type. The story is well written, but not exciting. The sordid-minded poet, histrionic, lying and hypocritical, excellent man of affairs, is doubtless a squalid caricature of Victor Hugo.

II. L.

Correspondence.

Stevenson's Beginnings.

SIR,—The following notes on the original publication of Treasure Island may help to resolve Mr. W. E. Henley's doubts.

The editor and proprietor of Young Folks' Paper, to whom Mr. Henley refers in his article in the North American Review, was Mr. James Henderson. Mr. Henderson is not dead, as Mr. Henley "rather thinks," although Young Folks' Paper is long since defunct. The paper was started some thirty years ago as a juvenile offshoot from the same proprietor's prosperous Weekly Budget, and it bore originally the title Our Young Folks' Weekly Budget. At the time when "Treasure Island" appeared in its columns it had become known as Young Folks. In subsequent stages of its career it passed successively under the names of Young Folks' Paper and Old and Young.

It was Dr. Japp, I believe, who introduced Stevenson to Mr. Henderson. This was early in the year 1881. Mr. Henderson offered to take a story from the young Scotsman, and, as indicating the kind of story he desired for Young Folks, he gave to Stevenson copies of the paper containing a serial by Charles E. Pearce—a treasure-hunting story, entitled "Billy Bo's'n." In his "My First Book" article in the Idler, Stevenson seems to suggest that "Treasure Island" was already formed and planned in his mind prior to the time at which it was thought of as a serial for Young Folks; but there is evidence that in "Billy Bo's'n" he found and adopted many suggestions and incidents for his own narrative.

As a result of his introduction to Mr. Henderson, Stevenson wrote his story of Jim Hawkins and Long John Silver, and sent it in with the title of "The Sea Cook." Mr. Henderson did not like the name "The Sea Cook," and took an editor's privilege of altering it to "Treasure Island." The first instalment was published on October 1, 1881. Stevenson's name was not on it: it was set forth as being by Capt. George North, to convey the idea that it was the work of a mariner. It was not considered of great importance in the paper, for it occupied a second place to a serial called "Don Zalva the Brave," by Mr. Alfred R. Phillips, one of the "masters" whom Mr. Henley refers to as being "in no wise model citizens." Only the first instalment was illustrated—by a rude woodcut representing Billy Bones chasing Black Dog out of the "Admiral Benbow." The subsequent seventeen instalments were foisted into the paper in dribblets of two or three columns of small type.

Mr. Henley is right in his belief that "Treasure Island" was as a serial a comparative failure. It certainly did not raise the circulation of Young Folks by a single copy. Far different, however, was the effect of "The Black Arrow." This story was written designedly, and again at the suggestion of Mr. Henderson, in the style of historical narrative which had proved so popular in the stories of Mr. Alfred Phillips. It appeared in Young Folks from June 30 to October 30, 1883, by "Captain George North" again, and was enormously successful with boy readers, raising the circulation of the paper by many hundreds of copies a week.

I had myself the privilege of being editor of Young Folks' Paper at the time when Stevenson was living in Bournemouth, and I remember writing asking him for a new serial story in 1885. He agreed to write one, but demanded higher terms than those which had satisfied him in the cases of "Treasure Island" and "The Black Arrow." "You must pay me not less than thirty shillings a column," he wrote. The columns, I may say, contained each about 1,200 words. There was no haggling over terms such as these. Mr. Henderson, indeed, at once offered a considerably higher price for the work. The required story was frequently delayed, but at last it appeared as "Kidnapped," and ran serially in Young Folks from May to July, 1886.

In preparing "Treasure Island" for book publication, Stevenson did not alter much. Here and there he struck out a paragraph, here and there he added one. He softened down the boastfulness of Jim Hawkins's personal narrative, and Dr. Livesay, who was originally somewhat frivolous and familiar in his language, he made more staid, as became one of his profession. In only one instance was a chapter heading altered—"At the Sign of the Spy Glass" being substituted for "The Sea Cook."—I am, &c.,

ROBERT LEIGHTON.

40, Abbey-road, N.W.

New Books Received.

[These notes on some of the New Books of the week are preliminary to Reviews that may follow.]

THE BOER STATES: LAND AND PEOPLE.

BY PROF. A. H. KEANE.

With the dignity of a scholar, and an accomplished ethnologist, Prof. Keane says: "This volume is not meant to be a fugitive piece . . . Written in the interests neither of Boer nor Briton, it aims at presenting a permanent record, such as may be consulted with confidence, of the more salient aspects of the Land and People." A work of clear aims and thorough execution. (Methuen. 6s.)

SIR DAVID WILKIE.

BY EDWARD PINNINGTON.

Not every volume of the "Famous Scots" series has appealed to English folk, but this biographical sketch of Sir David Wilkie should find readers everywhere. Still, Mr. Pinnington does right to restore Wilkie to his own country and kindred, and to maintain that the artist who spent most of his life in London was by temperament and constitution a Scot. (Oliphant. 1s. 6d.)

A HISTORY OF MODERN PHILOSOPHY.

BY DR. HARALD
HOFFDING.

We have here a partly contribution to the history of Philosophy, emanating from Copenhagen, where the author occupies a professorial chair. It is a characteristic circumstance, however, that the present translation, by Mr. B. E. Meyer, is from the German edition of the work. (Macmillan. 2 vols. 30s. net.)

A JOURNEY ROUND MY ROOM. TRANS. BY JOHN ANDREWS.

Mr. Andrews has tried his hand at translating Xavier le Maistre's little masterpiece, and has produced a pleasing version. The "Journey" was written by le Maistre when, as a young soldier, he was confined to his quarters for forty-two days in consequence of a duel. The book is too well known to need description, but its humour, suggestive of Sterne, and its whimsical reflections, which are not unlike Elia, will always keep it green. (Bryan & Co.)

HOW WOMEN MAY EARN A LIVING.

BY HELEN CHURCHILL CANDEE.

"To all those women who labour through necessity and not caprice": such is the dedication of this attractive series of papers on "The Ideal Boarding-House," "Foot-lights," "Household Industries," "Architecture and Interiors," "Opportunities in Shops," and many other new-womanly industries. (Macmillan. 4s. 6d.)

In addition to the foregoing, we have received:

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

Benson (Edward White), The Apocalypse: An Introductory Study of the Revelation of St. John the Divine	(Macmillan) net	8/6
Gray (G. B.), The Divine Discipline of Israel	(Black) net	2/6
Biggs (C. R. D.), The Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Philippians	(Methuen) net	1/6
Wright (Rev. A.), The Gospel According to St. Luke in Greek	(Macmillan) net	7/6

POETRY, CRITICISM, AND BELLES LETTRES.

From the Book Beautiful	(Greening)	3/6
Milligan (Alice), The Last Feast of the Fianna	(Nutt) not	/6
Bentley (H. C.), Poems	(Hatchards)

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

Robinson (Wilfrid C.), Bruges: An Historical Sketch	(Do Plancke, Bruges)
Badham (F. P.), Nelson at Naples: Refuting Recent Misstatements of Captain Mahan and Prof. J. K. Langton	(Nutt)	1/0

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

Jevons (Frank B.), Evolution	(Methuen)
Andrews (W.), The Diurnal Theory of the Earth	(Sampson Low)

MISCELLANEOUS.

Reddie (Cecil), Abbotsholme	(Allen) net	10/6
Apollo, Ideal Physical Culture	(Greening)	2/6
Keith (G. S.), Plea for a Simpler Life	(Black)	2/0
Hasluck (Paul N.), Practical Staircase Joinery	(Cassell)	1/0

Our Weekly Prize Competitions.

Result of No. 23 (New Series).

A NUMBER of interesting replies have followed our request for four-lined mottoes suitable for an aviary. Best we like this:

No blast, no snows shall visit here;
No hawk shall swoop to spoil the nest;
Safe will I keep you thro' the year;
Then sing to me at my behest.

The author is L. Longfield, 15, Parliament-hill, Hampstead Heath; but whether Mr., Mrs., or Miss, we have no knowledge, although one clause of the rules, printed each week, specially asks that this information be given.

Among other quatrains are these:

No prisoners we, but, on the wing,
Lightsome and joyous notes we sing;
Nor envy those that cleave the air,
For have we not all love and care?

[C., Redhill.]

"The Bird of Time has but a little way
To flutter—and the Bird is on the Wing."

Yea, Omar, these too have their little day,
And, wisely, fret not at their bars, but sing!

[R. F. McC., Whitby.]

Tho' our flight's not bounded

By the sky above,
Yet our life is rounded
By the hands of Love.

[T. V. N., South Woodford.]

This prison will but safely bring:

Yet should you for the lost scenes long,
Fret not that idle lies the wing,
But seek the skies again in song.

[L. L., London.]

H. G. H., Whitby, one of our most faithful competitors, has misread aviary for aviary, and sends the following:

A great queen rules within this humming cone,
Her court full many a slothful fav'rite sees,
Yet—mark the moral!—at the last each drone
Falleth a prey to the assiduous bees.

Replies received also from W. E. T., Caterham; W. C. T., Liverpool; T. H. S., London; C. S. O., Brighton; T. E. O., Brighton; E. H. H., London; E. K. L., Birkenhead; J. M. L., Stafford; W. T. B., Manchester; E. W. London; R. H. L. S., Edinburgh; A. S., Edinburgh; R. W. M., London; K. E. B., Edgbaston; A. D. B., Liverpool; K. J. W., Gerrards Cross; A. D. H., Hove; J. D. A., London; R. O. B., London; R. M., Brighton; B. R., London; T. J. B., London; L. W., London; N. A., Beckenham.

Competition No. 24 (New Series).

WE have been hearing a great deal of late about the best books for children; but nothing has been said of a branch of children's literature which is of high importance, and in the choice of which many parents are much in need of help. We refer to what are known in the family as Sunday books. We offer a prize of a guinea this week for the best list of ten Sunday books for children.

RULES.

Answers, addressed "Literary Competition, THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Tuesday, March 6. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found in the second column of p. 192, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. We wish to impress on competitors that the task of examining replies is much facilitated when one side only of the paper is written upon. It is also important that names and addresses should always be given. We cannot consider anonymous answers.

OUR SPECIAL PRIZE COMPETITIONS.

(For particulars see inside page of cover.)

Received during the week: Babie, Saltire, Portage, Carl Grimm, Kingston, Bodno, M. Dunois, Larmia, Non Spero, Fern Seed, Psyche, Labia Minor, Charon, Job, The Scarlet Gown, Jack Straw, Puck.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "A BRIDE ELECT."

At all Booksellers' and Libraries. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEMO. By THEO. DOUGLAS,

Author of "A Bride Elect," "Iras: a Mystery," "Carr of Dimseaur," &c.

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

PART I., NOW READY.

THE HISTORY OF THE BOER WAR.

WITH NUMEROUS MAPS, PLANS, PORTRAITS, AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

In Fortnightly Parts of 40 pp. each, crown 4to, 1s. each Part.

MESSRS. METHUEN have much pleasure in announcing that they are about to issue a military history of the present campaign in South Africa which shall supply the public with a connected and impartial account of the stirring events of the Boer War. The text has been based primarily on official despatches, while free use has been made of the copious reports of correspondents and private letters. The best foreign criticisms, especially those of German experts, have been studied.

The work will be published in Fortnightly Parts. Parts I., II., and III. will include an Introduction dealing fully with the Boer forces and armaments and the history of the campaign in Natal down to the investment of Ladysmith. Parts IV. and V. will deal with the mobilisation of the Army Corps, and the operations of Lord Methuen and General Gatacre down to the battles of Stormberg and Magersfontein. The author has endeavoured to write with impartiality and accuracy, and he has very sparingly employed criticism of the tactics of individual generals.

Each Part will consist of 40 pages, crown 4to, and will be printed in large and readable type. Every care has been bestowed on the maps and plans, and it is believed that no military history of recent years has been more generously equipped in this respect. The plans have been drawn from authentic information by one who is not only an admirable draughtsman, but who is intimately acquainted with the regions described. The work contains numerous Portraits—in many cases specially drawn—of the leaders on both sides. The illustrations have been selected with the object rather of illustrating the text and of rendering intelligible the conditions under which our troops are fighting, than of supplying exciting but inaccurate pictures. The Publishers believe that the work when complete will form not only a detailed and highly interesting narrative of one of the most important wars in which England has been engaged, but will also be a weighty contribution to military literature.

Messrs. METHUEN have just published THE BOER STATES, by A. H. KEANE, M.A. With a Map. Crown 8vo, 6s. The book is a complete account, historical and descriptive, of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State.

They have just published MARVELS AND MYSTERIES, by RICHARD MARSH, Author of "The Beetle." Crown 8vo, 6s.

Miss HELEN SHIPTON'S New Novel, THE STRONG GOD CIRCUMSTANCE, is now ready. Crown 8vo, 6s.

They have just published MIRRY ANN, by NORMA LORIMER, Author of "Josiah's Wife." Crown 8vo, 6s.; and Mr. W. E. NORRIS'S New Book, AN OCTAVE. Crown 8vo, price 6s.

They will publish very shortly CEASE FIRE! a Tale of the Transvaal War of '81, by J. MACLAREN COBBAN. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE MATABELE CAMPAIGN, 1896. By Col. R. S. S. BADEN-POWELL. With nearly 100 Illustrations. Cheap Edition. Large crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STORY of the LIFE of THOMAS ELLWOOD. Edited by C. G. CRUMP, M.A. Crown 8vo, 6s.

[METHUEN'S STANDARD LIBRARY.] This Edition is the only one which contains the complete book as originally published. It contains a long introduction and many foot-notes.

THE SCIENTIFIC STUDY of SCENERY. By J. E. MARR, F.R.S., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

An elementary treatise on geomorphology—the study of the earth's outward form. It is for the use of students of physical geography and geology, and will also be highly interesting to the general reader.

THE LETTERS of ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON to his FAMILY and FRIENDS. Selected and Edited, with Notes and Introductions, by SIDNEY COLVIN. Second Edition. Demy 8vo, 2 vols., 25s. net.

"Irresistible in their raciness, their variety, their animation.... of extraordinary fascination. A delightful inheritance, the truest record of a 'richly compounded spirit' that the literature of our time has preserved."—Times. "Unique in modern literature."—Daily Telegraph.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of SIR JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS, President of the Royal Academy. By his Son, J. G. MILLAIS. With 319 Illustrations, of which 9 are in Photogravure. 2 vols., royal 8vo, 32s. net.

"Of such absorbing interest is it, of such completeness in scope and beauty. Special tribute must be paid to the extraordinary completeness of the illustrations."—Graphic.

THE HIGHEST ANDES By E. A. FitzGerald. With 2 Maps, 51 Illustrations, 13 of which are Photogravures, and a Panorama. Royal 8vo, 30s. net.

The narrative of the highest ascent yet recorded. "We have nothing but praise for Mr. FitzGerald's admirable narrative. A book which is not only popular in the best sense of the word, but is a permanent and solid contribution to the literature of mountaineering."—Times.

TENNYSON AS A RELIGIOUS TEACHER. By C. F. G. MASTERMAN. Crown 8vo, 6s.

CHRISTIAN MYSTICISM. The Bampton Lectures for 1899. By W. R. INGE, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Hertford College, Oxford. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

A complete survey of the subject from St. John and St. Paul to modern times, covering the Christian Platonists, Augustine, the Devotional Mystics, the Medieval Mystics, and the Nature Mystics and Symbolists, including Böhm and Wordsworth.

THE CAROLINE ISLANDS. By F. W. Christian. With many Illustrations and Maps. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

This book contains a history and complete description of these islands—physical features, fauna, flora; the habits and the religious beliefs of the inhabitants.

THOUGHTS on HUNTING. By Peter Beckford. Edited by J. OTHO PAGET, and Illustrated by G. H. JALLAND. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

This edition of one of the most famous classics of sport contains an introduction and many footnotes by Mr. Paget, and is thus brought up to the standard of modern knowledge.

EDUCATIONAL REFORM. By Fabian Ware, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

An attempt by an expert to forecast the action and influence of the new Secondary Education Act, with suggestions for useful developments.

A SHORT STORY of ENGLISH LITERATURE. By EMMA S. MELLOWS. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

The history of English literature told in a simple style for young students. It is particularly rich in biographical detail and contains a considerable number of illustrative extracts.

A HANDBOOK of NURSING. By M. N. Oxford, of Guy's Hospital. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

This is a complete guide to the science and art of nursing, containing copious instructions both general and particular.

THE NOVELS OF CHARLES DICKENS. Crown 8vo, each volume, cloth, 3s. net; leather, 4s. net.

With Introductions by GEORGE GISSING. Illustrations by E. H. NEW, and Notes by F. G. KITTON.

THE FIRST VOLUMES ARE—

THE PICKWICK PAPERS. With Illustrations by E. H. NEW. 2 vols.

THE LITTLE LIBRARY.

Pott 3vo, cloth, 1s. 6d. net; leather, 2s. 6d. net.

A NEW SERIES OF CLASSICS,

Carefully Edited with Introductions and Notes and Photogravure Frontispieces.

VANITY FAIR By W. M. Thackeray. With an Introduction by S. GWYNN. 3 vols.

THE PRINCESS. By Alfred, Lord Tennyson. Edited by ELIZABETH WORDSWORTH.

METHUEN & CO., Essex Street, London, W.C.

THE PRINCESS HELENA COLLEGE,

EALING, W.

Established 1829. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1886.

President—H.R.H. the PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.

High-class education for the DAUGHTERS of GENTLEMEN, as Resident or Day Pupils. Preparation for University and Art Examinations. Spacious grounds. Supervision in games.

Training department for kindergarten students in preparation for Froebel Union Examination for Teachers.

There is a Home in connection with the College for K.G. Students and for a few children under ten years of age.

MARGARET WILLIAMSON, Lady Principal.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.—FORTHCOMING EXAMINATION.

DRUGHTSMAN in the Hydrographic Department of the Admiralty (17-231, 10th March).

Experience in Hydrographical Chart Drawing essential. The date specified is the latest at which applications can be received. They must be made on forms to be obtained, with particulars, from the Secretary, Civil Service Commission, London, S.W.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, Cooper's Hill, Staines.

The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for Employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1900. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition—Twelve Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphs Department, and One in the Accountants' Branch P.W.D.—For particulars apply to Secretary, at College.

High-Class Bookbinding.

Valuable Books and MS. Bound and Repaired with great care. Miscellaneous Books bound in any style or pattern.

JOHN FAZAKERLEY,
40, Paradise Street, LIVERPOOL

CATALOGUES.

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS of FREE LIBRARIES.—The MARCH CATALOGUES of Valuable SECOND-HAND WORKS and NEW RE-MANUSCRIPTS, offered at prices greatly reduced, are NOW Ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & SON, Library Department, 185, Strand, London, W.C.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,

14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU &amp; CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

BOOKS, Rare and Out of Print, Supplied.

Please state wants. Catalogues free. Books bought for cash. Wanted, "Lorna Doone," 3 vols., 1869; 25s. offered.—The Holland Co., Book Merchants, Birmingham.

STORIES, ARTICLES, &c., accurately Typed.

Punctuation and revision when desired. Absolute reliability. Highest references from London Editors and Authors.—Write Miss FRIEND, 62, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAYTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gon. h Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built 1 of 4 and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 18, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.

Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done.

done. 10d. per 1,000 words. Samples and references. Multi-Copies.—Address, Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TRAFALGAR LIBRARY and TYPE-WRITING BUREAU OF MUMET & WALKER,

2, Trafalgar Buildings, Northumberland Avenue, W.C.

Typing. Duplicating. Shorthand. Reporting. Translations (all Languages). Literary Researches. Press Cuttings.

TYPE-WRITER.—AUTHORS' MSS.

COPIED with accuracy and despatch. Carbon Duplicates. Circulars. Examination Papers, &c.—Miss E. TIGGS, 23, Maitland Park Villas, Haverstock Hill, N.W.—Established 1884

TYPE-WRITING.—Reliable. All work done by the piece at low fees, for cash.—Miss JESSIE LEES, 16, Cambridge Street, S.W.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 151, Strand, London, W.C.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY

No. 277.—MARCH, 1900.

THE BREAKDOWN of VOLUNTARY ENLISTMENT. By SIDNEY LOW.
THE ACTUAL STRENGTH of OUR FORCES at HOME. By the Right Hon. EARL NORTHBROOK, G.C.S.I.
THE FUTURE of MOUNTED INFANTRY. By the Right Hon. LORD DENMAN, late Royal Scots and Lieutenant Imperial Yeomanry.
THE RELIEF FUND 3. By the Right Hon. EARL NELSON, an original Commissioner Royal Patriotic Fund.
THE CIVIL and MORAL BENEFITS of DRILL. By the Rev. G. SALE REANBY, Vicar of Christ Church, Greenwich.
SENUSSI and his THREATENED HOLY WAR: a Warning. By T. R. THEBECALL.
THE PROBLEM of the MIDDLE EAST. By General Sir THOMAS GORDON, K.C.I.E.
SCRIPTURE and ROMAN CATHOLICISM. By Dr. ST. GEORGE MIVART, F.R.S.
CROMWELL'S CONSTITUTIONAL EXPERIMENTS. By J. P. WALLIS, Editor of the State Trials Reports.
ON SOME DIFFICULTIES INCIDENTAL to MIDDLE AGE. By Mrs. HUGH BELL.
WOMEN WORKERS: How they Live: How they Wish to Live. By Miss EMILY HOBBHOUSE.
IN DEFENCE of SIR DAVID CHALMERS. By LADY CHALMERS.
THE STORY of the BULWER-CLAYTON TREATY. By BENJAMIN TAYLOR.
THE "TEMPERANCE" REPLY to SIR ALGERNON WEST. By THOMAS P. WHITTAKER, M.P.
THE NEWSPAPERS. By Sir WENYSS REID.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LTD.

MONTHLY, PRICE HALF-A-CROWN.

The CONTEMPORARY REVIEW

CONTENTS FOR MARCH.

COLONEL F. N. MAUDE.
MILITARY TRAINING and MODERN WEAPONS
ROBERT DONALD . . . . .HOUSING the POOR
JULIA WEDGWOOD . . . . .JOHN RUSKIN
The Hon. STEPHEN COLERIDGE.
SOME LONDON HOSPITALS and their AUDITED ACCOUNTS.
The DUCHESS of SUTHERLAND. A GARDEN of MERCY
D. S. CAIRNS . . . . .SCIENCE and PROVIDENCE
CHARLES JOHNSTON . . . THE ISHAN'S MARTYRDOM
MICHAEL G. MULHALL.
FORTY YEARS of BRITISH TRADE
LORD HOBBHOUSE. THE BATTLE of the CENTURIES
THOMAS HOLMES.
HOME INDUSTRIES and HOME HEROISM
A. R. ROPES . . . . .MAETERLINCK
E. SAINT-GENIX . . . . .MONASTIC ORDERS UP TO DATE
I. ROMAN CATHOLIC FETTERISM.

London: THE COLONIALS COMPANY (Limited), Columbus House, 43 and 43A, Fetter Lane, E.C.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY

(LIMITED).

ENLARGED AND CLASSIFIED CATALOGUE

(Over 500 pages, 8vo, bound in green cloth).

All the Principal Works in Circulation at the Library

ARRANGED under SUBJECTS.

Forming a Comprehensive Guide to Notable Publications in most Branches of Literature.

Books of Permanent Interest on POLITICAL and SOCIAL TOPICS, the ARMY, NAVY, ARTS, SCIENCE, PHILOSOPHY, SPORT, THEOLOGY, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, and FICTION.

Price 1s. 6d.

Also a FOREIGN CATALOGUE, containing Books in FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, and SPANISH.

READY JANUARY, 1900.

Price 1s. 6d.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY,

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET;

241, Brompton Road; and

48, Queen Victoria Street, London.

"THE ACADEMY"

LITERARY COMPETITIONS.

New Series.—No. 24.

All readers attempting this week's Competition (described fully on page 190) must cut out this Coupon and enclose it with their reply.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

A SOCIAL MAGAZINE.

Edited by Canon HENRY SCOTT HOLLAND, and others.

Monthly, 3d; post free for a year, 4s.

The MARCH NUMBER contains:—

SOME PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS of RUSKIN. By Canon HENRY SCOTT HOLLAND.

SOUTH AFRICA OUTSIDE the WAR.—II.

HOW to TEACH CHILDREN the DUTIES of CITIZENSHIP. By Miss HARRINGTON.

THE PRIMATE and some LABOUR LEADERS.

THE DUTY of the CHURCH in RELATION to GAMBLING.—I. By JOHN HAWES.

CHRISTIANITY the BASIS of SOCIAL UNITY. By Canon BARNETT.

A BOY of BOW. By Miss C. A. FOWLER.

HEALTH VISITORS.

THE MANSIONS of HEAVEN.

THE GIFT. &amp;c., &amp;c.

"I have myself found great stimulus from the little monthly paper, the 'Commonwealth,' and I think that many would find it useful in the same way, however far they may be, like myself, from sharing all the opinions which it expresses."—Page 37 of the Bishop of Rochester's "Primary C-arge" (Macmillan & Co., Ltd.), 1899.

London: WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO., 2, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.; and 44, Victoria Street, S.W.

THE

GEOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL.

Price 2s.—CONTENTS.—MARCH.

A FRAGMENT of the GEOGRAPHY of ENGLAND: South-West Sussex. By HUGH ROBERT MILL, D.Sc., F.R.S.E.

A JOURNEY from FORT JAMESON to OLD CHITAMBO and the TANGANYIKA PLATEAU. By ROBERT CODRINGTON, Deputy Administrator, Northern Rhodesia.

THE "SUDD" of the WHITE NILE.

MILITARY GEOGRAPHY. By Colonel Sir T. H. HODGICH, K.C.I.E., C.B., R.E.

NARRATIVE of a JOURNEY to the LAKES RAKASTAL and MANASAROWAR, in WESTERN TIBET, undertaken in September, 1898. By Lieutenant-General Sir RICHARD STRACHAN, F.R.S., F.R.G.S.

A JOURNEY through ABYSSINIA to the NILE. By HENRY WELD BLACKBURN.

THE DANISH "INOOLE" EXPEDITION.

THE MONTHLY RECORD.

OBITUARY.—The Marquis of Eithian, K.T.—Sir William Wilson Hunter, K.C.S.I., O.I.E.—Sir Henry William Gore-Booth, Bart.—M. Henri Condrean.

CORRESPONDENCE.—The Regions of the Okovango. By FRED. S. AXON.

LAKE RUKWA. By L. A. WALLACE.

MEETINGS of the ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY. SESSION 1899-1900.

GEOGRAPHICAL LITERATURE of the MONTH.

NUMEROUS MAPS and ILLUSTRATIONS.

EDWARD STANFORD, 20-27, Cockspur Street, Charing Cross, S.W.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on

DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCOIS RAVENSBOROUGH, Manager.

SOUTH AFRICA AND THE WAR.—BOOKS TO READ.

NOW READY EVERYWHERE.

THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA:

Its Causes and Effects.

By J. A. HOBSON.

Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"Precisely the book most needed at the present juncture.....most scrupulously cautious, temperate, and intrinsically valuable."—Echo.

"Let the reader study this book, and then, if he will, return to Mr. Fitzpatrick's 'Transvaal from Within.'"—Westminster Gazette.

J. NISBET &amp; CO., LTD., 21, Berners Street, W.

THE TRANSVAAL BOERS:

A HISTORICAL SKETCH.

By AFRICANUS.

Price 1s. net, paper covers; 2s., in cloth. Post free 3d. extra.

THE STORY OF SOUTH AFRICA

By W. BASIL WORSFOLD.

Cloth bound, price 1s. 6d.

London: HORACE MARSHALL &amp; SON.

FROM CAPETOWN TO LADYSMITH.

By G. W. STEEVENS.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The SECOND IMPRESSION of G. W. STEEVENS' book on the TRANSVAAL WAR, entitled "FROM CAPETOWN TO LADYSMITH," is now on Sale at all Booksellers and Bookstalls. With Maps. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS, Edinburgh and London

T. NELSON &amp; SONS, Publishers.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE TRANSVAAL WAR ATLAS

Containing 24 Maps, specially prepared from the latest Surveys, also a History of the Boers and Boerland.

Fully Illustrated. Price 1s. net; postage, 2d.

This Atlas will be of advantage not only in following the present war, but in acquiring an intelligent appreciation of the great problems which will await solution in South Africa when the war is over.

"Among the many aids to a proper understanding of the geography of South Africa none is more helpful than a little 'War Atlas' issued by T. Nelson & Sons."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

T. NELSON & SONS, 35 & 36, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.; Parkside, Edinburgh; and New York; and of all Booksellers.

CLARENDON PRESS, OXFORD.

Crown 8vo, Separate Issue, with numerous Maps, 5s.

The History of South Africa to the Jameson Raid.

Being Vol. IV., Part I, of "A Historical Geography of the British Colonies."

By C. P. LUGAS, B.A.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"It is refreshing to come across so sane, scholarly and judicial a little volume. To read a more assistance to the proper understanding of South African questions in its 300 well-printed pages than in any work of the same size we know of. Mr. Lucas proves on every page that he is one whose judgments are founded on knowledge, and it would be well if every amateur critic of South Africa were compelled to pass an examination on his book."

SCOTSMAN.—"Mr. Lucas is a trustworthy author and a vigorous writer; and those who desire to put themselves up in the past relations of Boers, Blacks, and British in South Africa could not go to a better source of information."

London: HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Press Warehouse, Amen Corner, E.C.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL SERIES.

General Editor: G. W. PROTHIERO, Litt. D., Hon. Fellow of King's College, Cambridge.

A HISTORY OF THE COLONIZATION OF AFRICA BY ALIEN

RACES. By Sir H. H. JOHNSON, K.C.B., H.M. Special Commissioner to Uganda.

Author of "British Central Africa," &amp;c. With 8 Maps by the Author and J. G. Bartholomew. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"As a text-book of African study his book supplies a want which has been generally felt, and should be in proportion warmly welcomed."—Times.

THE CAMBRIDGE GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES.

General Editor: F. H. H. GUILLEMARD, M.D., late Lecturer in Geography at the University of Cambridge.

OUTLINES OF MILITARY GEOGRAPHY. By T. Miller

MAQUIRE, LL.D., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Lieutenant Colonel of Court

Rifle Volunteers. Crown 8vo, with 27 Maps and Illustrations, 10s. 6d.

Field-Marshal Lord Roberts, V.C., writes: "A most useful and instructive book."

London: C. J. CLAY &amp; SONS, Cambridge University Press Warehouse, Ave Maria Lane.

THE BOOK OF THE HOUR.

THIRD EDITION.

OUR LIVING GENERALS.

By ARTHUR TEMPLE, Author of "The Making of the Empire."

Art vellum, gilt top, price 3s. 6d.

Biographical Sketches with fine Portraits of Twelve Generals, no fewer than ten of whom are now at the front.

"Pleasant and proud reading."—Saturday Review.

"A capital book, breezily and brightly written."—St. James's Budget.

"The list is well chosen. Men of whom the nation is justly proud."—Naval and Military Record.

ANDREW MELROSE, 16, Pilgrim Street, London E.C.

PICTURES OF TRAVEL, SPORT, and ADVENTURE

By GEORGE LACY ("The Old Pioneer"), Author of "Liberty and Law," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth, with about 50 illustrations, price 15s.

"It is difficult to put the book down."—Literature. "A most engrossing book."—Aberdeen Free Press. "Permanently valuable as an account of Boer life."—Daily News. "His pictures are positively enchanting....A rich treasure-house of romance and adventure."—South Africa.

For an excellent Sketch of the Life of LORD ROBERTS,

READ VOLUME II. OF

HEROES of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. By

G. BARNETT SMITH.

Vol. I., Wellington, Garibaldi, Gordon, Grant.

Vol. II., Nelson, Roberts, Sir Charles Napier, Livingstone.

Large crown 8vo, 16 illustrations in each volume, cloth gilt, bevelled boards, gilt edges, price 5s. each.

"A gallery of builders of the Empire which appeals strongly to one's patriotism, and is therefore a book to be bought."—Pall Mall Gazette.

C. ARTHUR PEARSON LIMITED, Henrietta Street, London, W.C.

A BOOK ABOUT THE BOER WAR OF 1881.

Cloth, crown 8vo, 2s.

With 8 Illustrations by R. Caton Woodville, after Sketches by Melton Prior.

MAJUBA:

BRONKERSPRUIT, INGOGO, LANGS NEK, KRUGERSDORP.

By HAMISH HENDRY.

Globe.—"The author has gone to the best, and his narratives have the qualities of conciseness and vividness which he claims for them. They are concentrated, they are picturesque; moreover, they are not without their lessons for the statesmen and soldiers of to-day."

Daily Graphic.—"...brief and brightly written....The description is extremely vivid, and will bring home to the mind of the reader the nature of South African warfare far more clearly than a more elaborately technical work could possibly do."

London: GRANT RICHARDS, 9, Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

NEW PAPERS, ISSUES, &c.

NOW READY, the SECOND NUMBER of

THE PILOT

(Originally intended to be called "THE TRIBUNE.")

A Weekly Review of Ecclesiastical and General
Politics, Literature, and Learning

EDITED BY

D. C. LATHBURY

Editorial and Advertising Offices

2, EXETER STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

NEW SERIES.—UNDER NEW EDITORSHIP.

NOW READY, No. 133, price One Shilling and Sixpence.

FRIENDS' QUARTERLY EXAMINER

A Religious, Social, and Miscellaneous Review.

CONTENTS OF JANUARY NUMBER.

IN THE SHADOW OF CONSCRIPTION .. .. W. C. BRAITHWAITE, B.A., LL.B.

HEINRICH SCHLIEMANN .. .. THOMAS HODGKIN, D.C.L.

DANIEL QUARE .. .. ISAAC SHARP, B.A.

ON THE CULTIVATION OF ARTISTIC TASTE .. .. LUCY HARRISON.

FRIENDS' SCHOOLS AND CITIZENSHIP .. .. ROBERT SPENCE WATSON, LL.D.

TO THE DIVINE MEMORY AND THE DIVINE FANCY .. .. ARTHUR ROWNTREE, B.A.

"A SUPPER OF THE LORD" AT CORINTH .. .. JOSEPH EDMONDSON.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON LIQUOR LICENSING LAWS .. .. JOSHUA ROWNTREE.

A PLEA FOR EDUCATIONAL MUSEUMS .. JONATHAN HUTCHINSON, F.R.S., LL.D., &amp;c.

London: WEST, NEWMAN &amp; CO., 54, Hatton Garden.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

TWO NEW VOLUMES JUST READY.

MACMILLAN'S LIBRARY OF ENGLISH CLASSICS.

Edited by A. W. POLLARD.

A Series of Reprints of Standard Works in Library Form. Demy 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d. net per volume.

STERNE'S TRISTRAM SHANDY,
AND A SENTIMENTAL JOURNEY THROUGH FRANCE AND ITALY.
In 2 vols.

NEW VOLUMES of the UNIFORM EDITION of RUDYARD KIPLING'S PROSE WORKS.

FROM SEA TO SEA,
AND OTHER SKETCHES:
LETTERS OF TRAVEL.
By RUDYARD KIPLING.

In 2 vols., extra crown 8vo, red cloth, gilt tops, 6s. each.

Extra crown 8vo, parchment, 8s. 6d. net.
A CONCORDANCE to FITZGERALD'S
TRANSLATION of the RUBAIYAT of OMAR
KHAYYAM. By J. R. TUTIN.

NEW AND ABRIDGED EDITION.
EDWARD THRING, Headmaster of Uppingham School. Life, Diary, and Letters.
By GEORGE R. PARKIN, C.M.G., M.A., Hon.
LL.D. University of New Brunswick. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Crown 8vo, 6s.
THE GOLDEN HORSESHOE.

Extracts from the Letters of Captain H. L. HERNDON, of the 21st U.S. Infantry, on Duty in the Philippine Islands, and Lieutenant LAWRENCE GILL, A.D.C. to the Military Governor of Puerto Rico. Edited by STEPHEN BONSAL.

NEW AND NOTABLE NOVELS.
Crown 8vo, gilt tops, 6s. each.

70,000 COPIES HAVE BEEN SOLD IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

VIA CRUCIS. By F. Marion
CRAWFORD.

BABES in the BUSH. By Rolf BOLDREWOOD.

FIELD.—"The young man who wishes to know how his Australian cousins of to-day live in town and bush need not go further than 'Rolf Boldrewood's' literary mirrors. They are stories in which stirring adventures and exciting episodes are set in perfectly accurate surroundings. 'Babes in the Bush' is the latest of the series, and it is as good as any of its predecessors. By this we mean hearty praise."

THE CAMBRIC MASK. By R. W.
CHAMBERS.

WORD.—"There is strength in every line. The personages of the story are drawn with a vigour which sets each one before the reader glowing with individuality. The plot, even in its byways, is so fresh and original, and moves so briskly.... To the novelist whose methods are so absolutely unacknowledged as are those of Mr. Chambers the novel-reading public owes a debt of gratitude."

DONNA TERESA. By F. M. Peard.
MARY PAGET: a Romance of Old
Bermuda. By MINNA C. SMITH.

NEW AND CHEAPER RE-ISSUES.
By EGERTON CASTLE.

CONSEQUENCES: a Novel. By EGERTON CASTLE, Author of "The Pride of Jennico." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

BY ANTHONY TROLLOPE.
THE THREE CLERKS: a Novel.

By ANTHONY TROLLOPE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
BY W. E. NORRIS.

THIRLBY HALL. By W. E. Norris.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A BACHELOR'S BLUNDER. By
W. E. NORRIS. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

BY HAWLEY SMART.
BREEZIE LANGTON: a Story of

'Fifty-two to 'Fifty-Five. By HAWLEY SMART.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

BY E. WERNER.
FICKLE FORTUNE. By E. Werner.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S PUBLICATIONS.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

1st Large Edition exhausted before
Publication.

2nd Large Edition exhausted before
Publication.

3rd Large Edition in the press.

THE RUSKIN MEMORIAL NUMBER OF THE BOOKMAN.

Price 6d.

Containing an unique collection of over Forty Ruskin Pictures, and a magnificent separate Plate Portrait.

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON,
27, Paternoster Row, E.C.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

FÉO:

A ROMANCE.

By MAX PEMBERTON,
By MAX PEMBERTON,
Author of "Kronstadt," &c.

45,000—16TH EDITION, completing 45,000.

45,000—16TH EDITION, completing 45,000.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

CONCERNING ISABEL CARNABY.

CONCERNING
ISABEL CARNABY.

By ELLEN THORNEYCROFT FOWLER.

"An excellent novel, clever and witty enough to be very amusing, and serious enough to provide much food for thought. 'Isabel Carnaby' is wholly delightful: her very weakness makes her charm, she is so genuine, so capricious, and so noble. Miss Thorneycroft Fowler depicts Methodism and Methodists in a very charming light; she draws a picture of a beautiful faith and beautiful lives lived in that faith; lives full of charity and love and moral strength."—Daily Telegraph.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

OUTSIDE THE RADIUS.
OUTSIDE THE RADIUS.

Stories of a London Suburb.

By W. PETT RIDGE.

"From its first to its last page delightful reading."
Daily Telegraph.

"This clever and entertaining book."—Scotsman.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE SKY PILOT.
THE SKY PILOT.

More Tales of the Selkirk.

By RALPH CONNOR,

Author of "Black Rock."

"An altogether sweet and charming story. It is entirely fresh and wholesome.... There is much genuine humour as well as pathos in the story."—Daily News.

SECOND EDITION.—Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE TRANSGRESSORS.
THE TRANSGRESSORS.

By ROSALINE MASSON.

"A bright and charming book."—Manchester Guardian.
"It has been a real pleasure to read such a well-written novel as this."—Glasgow Herald.

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON,
27, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Great FRENCH TRIBUTE to WELLINGTON and the BRITISH ARMY of TO-DAY.

"THE REVUE DES DEUX MONDES"
(the French Nineteenth Century), in its recent Review of the War in South Africa, says:

"IF WELLINGTON CONQUERED
NAPOLEON it was not because of any intellectual superiority, but by reason of that COOL STUBBORNNESS which his countrymen of to-day have certainly not lost, but which is also possessed in no less degree by their present adversaries in South Africa....."

"Recent events have reminded the English that campaigns begun by them with reverses have often ended in victory for their arms, due more to their stubborn tenacity than to their courage, unsurpassed though that is."

"The battles on the Modder and Tugela remind them of those famous LINES OF TORRES VEDRAS, where Wellington held at bay all the efforts of Napoleon's armies; vainly they dashed themselves against that wall of iron, yet they were composed of heroic soldiers led by generals used to 'la grande guerre.'"

"This little corner of Portugal was the theatre—we may say it although we were the defeated—of ONE OF THE MOST GLORIOUS MILITARY EVENTS IN THE HISTORY OF THE WORLD.
The English were invincible behind those 'Lines,' and when they emerged from them it was to drive Napoleon's armies from the whole Iberian peninsula."

See Sir HERBERT MAX-
WELL'S NEW LIFE OF WELLINGTON (Large Fourth Edition now at press) for an intensely interesting description how Wellington converted the tongue of land on which Lisbon stands into a vast Fortress, covering about FIVE HUNDRED SQUARE MILES OF GROUND.

MAPS of the
TORRES VEDRAS LINES and all
WELLINGTON'S GREAT BATTLES are given in the work.

The PHOTOGRAVURES and OTHER
PORTRAITS are of great interest.

"AN ADMIRABLE BOOK."
—LORD SALISBURY.

ASK FOR IT AT THE LIBRARIES and Booksellers', or if any difficulty is experienced in obtaining it write to the Publishers.

2 vols., royal 8vo, 36s. net.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LTD.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1453. Established 1869.

10 March, 1900.

Price Threepence.

[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

THE Author is in meddlesome travail over the clause of our Special Competitions announcement which says: "The editor reserves the right of printing any of the MSS. sent in." This simple and usual condition was made in order that we might be free to print, for the encouragement of the writers, a few of the unsuccessful attempts. How does the Author interpret our words? Why, thus:

As it stands, which of course cannot be meant, this clause gives the editor all the MSS. sent in: he may do what he pleases with them—i.e., he may, if he pleases, sell them to other papers without giving the authors anything, "Which, of course, cannot be meant." Then why suggest it, and why elaborate this idea—as the Author does at considerable length? We do not believe that our intentions are misunderstood, still less suspected, by a single one of our readers or competitors—the only people concerned. The suggestion that our clause might enable us to set up a MS. shop is surely the wildest ever made by the Author, and that is saying a good deal.

MR. RUDYARD KIPLING has been given a pass by Lord Roberts, enabling him to go wherever he pleases in South Africa. That promises well for the booksellers.

A POSTHUMOUS book by Mr. Traill, not, unfortunately, in his humorous vein, will be published this month. A contribution to Messrs. Sands's "Imperial Interests" series, it will tell the story of Egypt from the date of English intervention.

MISS ELLEN THORNEYCROFT FOWLER, in her new novel The Farringdons, will follow the method, for which there are many precedents, of introducing characters from former novels. Thus Isabel Carnaby will appear, and Lady Silverhampton from The Double Thread. The Farringdons is mainly a story of Methodist life in the Midlands.

We have received the following letter:

SIR,—I see by the ACADEMY that Mr. A. B. Walkley has been made dramatic critic of the Times. Who is he? Evidently I ought to know as his "volatile personality" is recognised by you. I plead ignorance.—I am, &c.,
F. C. BURNAND.

Mr. Burnand is quite right, he ought to know. But perhaps he wrote his letter as a joke for Punch—and rejected it.

A SUPPLEMENTAL volume of Who's Who has been issued dealing with personalities at the war. The biography of Sir Redvers Buller is more accurate, but not so amusing, as the following from Books of To-Day:

Buller, General Rt. Hon. Sir Redvers Henry, G.C.B., K.C.M.G., K.C.B.; b. 1839. General Commanding in Chief of Forces, Natal. Origin of name unknown, but supposed to be the comparative of John Bull. Recreations: Reading (anything but Joubert's Maxims) and crossing rivers. Mottos: "No cross no crown," and "Faint heart never won fair Lady(smith)." Club: White's.

THE present war has created the woman war correspondent. Lady Sarah Wilson is in Mafeking, and Miss Mary H. Kingsley has just left for South Africa to represent the Morning Post.

Who would have thought that a Special Army Order issued in 1900 would destroy the significance of a popular song written in 1798:

O Paddy dear, and did you hear the news that's going round?

The shamrock is forbid by law to grow on Irish ground.

She's the most distressful country that ever yet was seen,

They are hanging men and women for the wearing o'
the green.

Then since the colour we must wear is England's cruel red,
Sure Ireland's sons will ne'er forget the blood that they have shed.

You may take the shamrock from your hat and cast it on the sod,

But 'twill take root and flourish there, though underfoot 'tis trod.—From "The Wearing of the Green," 1798.

GALLANTRY OF IRISH REGI-MENTS IN SOUTH AFRICA
—DISTINCTION TO BE
WORN ON ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

Her Majesty the Queen is pleased to order that in future, upon St. Patrick's Day, all ranks in Her Majesty's Irish regiments shall wear, as a distinction, a sprig of shamrock in their head-dress, to commemorate the gallantry of her Irish soldiers during the recent battles in South Africa.—From a Special Army Order, 1900.

MR. STEPHEN PHILLIPS, who began his career as an actor in Mr. Benson's company, will give a reading of Paolo and Francesca at 20, Dean's-yard, Westminster, on Thursday, March 29th. Canon and Mrs. Wilberforce will be Mr. Phillips's host and hostess. The public, we understand, can purchase tickets.

THE Queen has accepted a copy of Mr. G. W. Steevens's From Capetown to Ladysmith. In acknowledging the volume Sir Arthur Bigge wrote to Messrs. Blackwood & Sons: "I have to express the Queen's sympathy with Mrs. Steevens in the sad loss of her husband, cut off in the midst of his brilliant and useful career."

AGAIN we must testify to the excellence of Messrs. Gay & Bird's series of leather-bound Bibelots. The latest contain the shorter poems of Keats, and it is a perfect pocket volume.

IN the course of the action by Mr. Edward Vizetelly against Mudie's Select Library, Limited, heard this week by Mr. Justice Grantham, one or two interesting statements about this old-established library were made. This was the first libel action that had been brought against it. From five thousand to six thousand books are offered by publishers to Mudie's annually. About four thousand are taken. The library has special "readers" for new French and German books, but not for English books, though some supervision is exercised over these also.

PROF. KNAPP has shown much tact in keeping his editorship of George Borrow's Lavengro, the first volume of the new edition of Borrow's works which he is editing, as inconspicuous as possible. This is all the more praiseworthy because his editorial services have been unusually large and important. The text of the present edition is based on the first issue of 1851, and seven passages of considerable length which Borrow for some reason suppressed in MS. have been restored to their original places in the story. These hitherto unpublished episodes will, of course, awaken the highest interest in all good Borrowians. Not one of them is short enough to quote here, but we are tempted to give a portion of the scene which Prof. Knapp calls

CROMWELL'S STATUE AND THE "DAIRYMAN'S DAUGHTER."

At last I came to a kind of open place from which three large streets branched, and in the middle of the place stood the figure of a man on horseback. It was admirably executed, and I stood still to survey it.

"Is that the statue of Cromwell?" said I to a drayman who was passing by, driving a team of that enormous breed of horses which had struck me on the bridge.

"Who?" said the man in a surly tone, stopping short.

"Cromwell," said I; "did you never hear of Oliver Cromwell?"

"Oh, Oliver," said the drayman, and a fine burst of intelligence lighted up his broad English countenance. "To be sure I have; yes, and read of him too. A fine fellow was Oliver, master, and the poor man's friend. Whether that's his figure, though, I can't say. I hopes it be." Then, touching his hat to me, he followed his gigantic team, turning his head to look at the statue as he walked along.

That man, had he lived in Oliver's time, would have made a capital Ironside, especially if mounted on one of those dray horses of his. I remained looking at the statue some time longer. Turning round, I perceived that I was close by a bookseller's shop, into which, after deliberating a moment, I entered. An elderly, good-tempered looking man was standing behind the counter.

"Have you the Dairyman's Daughter?" I demanded.

"Just one copy, young gentleman," said the bookseller, rubbing his hands; "you are just in time, if you want one; all the rest are sold."

"What kind of character does it bear?"

"Excellent character, young gentleman; great demand for it; held in much esteem, especially by the Evangelical party."

"Who are the Evangelical party?"

"Excellent people, young gentleman, and excellent customers of mine," rubbing his hands; "but setting that aside," he continued gravely, "religious, good men."

"Not a set of canting scoundrels?"

The bookseller had placed a small book upon the counter; but he now suddenly snatched it up and returned it to the shelf; then, looking at me full in the face, he said, quietly: "Young gentleman, I do not wish to be uncivil, but you had better leave the shop."

THERE has been much talk—and, we suspect, little understanding—of the term symbolism as applied to certain modern developments in literature. It was therefore to be desired that an enthusiast should tell English readers what is understood by symbolism by those who profess it, and how and why they came to profess it at all. Accordingly Mr. Arthur Symons has written an account of latter-day literary symbolism in the form of a series of essays on the symbolists themselves—from Gérard de Nerval, who is put forward as its unconscious father, to Maurice Maeterlinck, who "has realised, better than any one else, the significance, in life and art, of mystery."

An interesting feature of the book is Mr. Symons's dedicatory letter to his brother in symbolism, Mr. W. B. Yeats. In the course of this letter, which, in a double sense, is italicised, Mr. Symons says:

I speak often in this book of Mysticism, and that I, of all people, should venture to speak, not quite as an outsider, of such things, will probably be a surprise to many. It will be no surprise to you, for you have seen me gradually finding my way, uncertainly but inevitably, in that direction which has always been to you your natural direction. Still, as I am, so meshed about with the variable and too clinging appearances of things, so weak before the delightfulness of earthly circumstance, I hesitate sometimes in saying what I have in my mind, lest I should seem to be saying more than I have any personal right to say. But what, after all, is one's personal right? How insignificant a matter to anyone but oneself, a matter how deliberately to be disregarded in that surely impersonal utterance which comes to one in one's most intimate thinking about beauty and truth and the deeper issues of things!

THE mind which accepts symbolism with British caution, and finds much that passes for symbolism ridiculous, is reflected in an article on Maeterlinck, which Mr. A. R. Ropes contributes to the Contemporary. Mr. Ropes's contention is that symbolism should be used only when the writer has a meaning which cannot be put into plain words, or cannot be expressed in proper artistic form. "Beyond this symbolism is unnecessary and irritating. A painter may symbolise . . . , but for him wilfully to abstain from rendering what can be rendered truthfully would be coxcomby." Applying such tests to Maeterlinck, Mr. Ropes asks:

Is Maeterlinck's written dialogue such that his silences can be credited with an infinity of meaning? Never, or hardly ever, do his characters utter the inevitably right word of passion or emotion: the one speech that the person would say. It is cruel to contrast the riotous exuberance of Shakespeare's young fancy with the absolute Ollendorf of La Princesse Maleine. Take the famous dialogue of the Cowherd and the Nurse:

COWHERD. "Good evening!"

NURSE. "Good evening!"

COWHERD. "It is a fine evening."

NURSE. "Yes, fine enough."

COWHERD. "Thanks to the moon."

NURSE. "Yes."

COWHERD. "But it has been hot during the day."

NURSE. "Oh! yes, it has been hot during the day."

COWHERD (going down to the water). "I am going to bathe," &c.

This is not simplicity; it is impotence. And it is the same in moments of strong emotion. The characters never speak out their souls like Lear over the dead Cordelia. They simply repeat ejaculations three times. Hjalmar finds his love lying murdered, and this is all he has to say: "Yes! yes! yes! Oh! oh! Come! come! Strangled! strangled! Maleine! Maleine! Maleine! Strangled! strangled! strangled! Oh! oh! oh! Strangled! strangled! strangled!" If this be tragedy, then tragedy can be written with a rubber stamp.

So Mr. Ropes—to whom the essential Maeterlinck has evidently not been revealed.

MR. W. B. YEATS, to whom, as we stated above, Mr. Symons's book on symbolism is dedicated, is himself beckoning us this week into a special path of literature. His collection of modern Irish verse is presented to us with an introduction, in which Mr. Yeats proclaims the existence and the revival of a genuine Irish poetry, native to the soil, and burning only in hearts where Irish ideals are cherished and Irish models loved. Mr. Yeats even believes that the movement for the preservation of Gaelic will result in something far higher. Gaelic is gathering new poets to its service, and Mr. Yeats assures us that some of Dr. Hyde's translations are passed from mouth to mouth, by peasants who can neither read nor write, in Donegal, Connemara, and Galway. Nor does he doubt that Ireland, communing with herself in Gaelic more and more, but speaking to foreign countries in English, will lead many that are sick with theories and with trivial emotion to some sweet well-waters of primeval poetry.

Here, at least, is a vernal voice in a tired, bookish age.

Is the general literary worker going to have seven lean years following seven fat years? The soothsayers say so, only they do not limit the years to seven. A little while ago Mr. Andrew Lang solemnly warned us that the age of superannuation for scribblers is getting dangerously near to thirty-five, and that times unpropitious for the providers of literary luxuries are coming upon us. "Claudius Clear," of the British Weekly, echoes this gloomy vaticination. There is to be a "Return to Grub Street"—not, indeed, for novelists, who will reside more and more in Park-lane, but for the reviewer, the leader-writer, the literary journalist. Writing in one or in all of these characters, "Claudius" says:

Things do not look so well for us. Leaders are gradually disappearing from the daily papers. The change is very slow, but it is sure. I could easily mention one or two great and powerful papers whose middle pages used to be covered with sparkling and erudite productions, in double-ledged type, containing the richest treasures of long accumulations of common-place books. In these papers now you will find two or, at the furthest, three columns of clear, orderly, business-like writing on the latest telegrams. But the Sala, or shall I say the salad, days are over. The halfpenny papers have come in, and they want no three-deckers. Their leaders are like the American, short and more or less pithy. Then what am I to say about the sixpenny weeklies, from which many of us have derived comfortable incomes? Will it ever be possible to establish another in this country again? Mournful is the story of recent attempts made, in some cases by very able men, but all ending in collapse.

"Claudius" has a suggestion to make. It is that Lord Rowton should be invoked to provide a home, say on the sunny side of Gower-street, for authors whose incomes do not exceed £300 a year.

Thus provided, we should hold the fort till a better time comes, till people grew tired of rubbish, till the system of education in this country was changed. We should be prepared to write for next to nothing, and so to help good papers to live through the time of stress, and with the dawn of a better day we shall be recognised as the saviours of English literature.

"Claudius Clear" bases his remarks on the overwhelming flood of non-literary literature—the "scrap" and "tit-bit" evil in its later portentous developments. That there is another and more hopeful way of regarding this "revolution in journalism" is shown in the article by "E. A. B." which we print this week. Our contributor contends that the masses are reading their way to the light, and that the present dissipation is but a symptom of youth, and of maturity to come.

MR. AUGUSTINE BIRRELL has sent to the Cornhill his Edinburgh address of last November, on the riddle: "Is it possible to tell a good book from a bad one?" It is possible to wish to do so, and this wish, deeply felt and constantly used, is all. Certainly Mr. Birrell's expression of this wish was the most eloquent passage in his address:

Speaking for myself, I could wish for nothing better, apart from moral worth, than to be the owner of a taste at once manly, refined, and unaffected, which should enable me to appreciate real excellence in literature and art, and to depreciate bad intentions and feeble execution wherever I saw them. To be for ever alive to merit in poem or in picture, in statue or in bust; to be able to distinguish between the grand, the grandiose, and the merely bumpitious; to perceive the boundary between the simplicity which is divine and that which is ridiculous, between gorgeous rhetoric and vulgar ornamentation, between pure and manly English, meant to be spoken or read, and sugared phrases, which seem intended, like lollipops, for suction; to feel yourself going out in joyful admiration for whatever is noble and permanent, and freezing inwardly against whatever is pretentious, wire drawn, and temporary—this indeed is to taste of the fruit of the tree, once forbidden, of the knowledge of good and evil.

If Mr. Birrell is not so witty as usual, it is probably because he has a depressing conviction that the literary conditions of the day tend to make "No" the true answer to the question, "Is it possible to tell a good book from a bad one?" He happily remarked: "A great crowd of books is as destructive of the literary instinct, which is a highly delicate thing, as is a London evening party of the social instinct." One thing, however, is possible. It is possible to read Shakespeare every day. How many of us do that?

APROPPOS Mr. Birrell's remarks, the effect of excessive book production on literature may be studied best in Germany, where the annual production of books is equal to the combined productions of England, France, and the United States. No wonder that Dr. Hans Fischer can write as follows in a Leipsic paper:

In the year 1898 Germany published 23,739 works, which means about sixty-five for every day of the year. Of these, 3,063 belonged to the department of belles lettres, or an average of eight and one-sixth volumes per day of epic, dramatic, and lyrical productions. It is not to be wondered at that in view of this productiveness books have lost their influence and their dignity. They are becoming as multitudinous as old coats, and booksellers are beginning to dispose of them by the pound as though they were beefsteaks. And of all these books in the department of belles lettres there are exceedingly few that have any worth or value, the majority of them being more than objectionable either from a literary or from a moral point of view.

THE advertisement transparencies which twinkle and change by night in the streets of London are by no means eye-sores, and yet we had not supposed that "Bovril" in letters of fire would inspire poets. A contemporary draws attention to a love-sonnet, by a new singer, which concludes with these lines:

As a tall, gloomy building blazons high
Upon his forehead one bright jewelled name,
Frowning in darkness as the letters die,
Through swift withdrawal of their jetting flame,
To smile again in rows of rosy light
The instant that the sweet name reappears,
So smile I when you cross my inward sight,
Who otherwise am gloomy unto tears.

MESSRS. WARD, LOCK & Co. are about to issue their Standard Dictionary, for a short period, at two-thirds of the ordinary price. Thus, in half-russia this dictionary can be obtained for £2 instead of £3, and in the other styles of issue similar reductions are made. The Standard Dictionary is a fine work with many admirable features of its own. It contains nearly 5,000 illustrations, specially drawn, and a number of pictures in colour showing the natural colours of birds, gems, and flowers, and the correct appearance of national flags, &c.

THE "And other Stories" nuisance is the theme of a letter we have received from a correspondent, who signs himself "Old Bird." He was recently "gulled into purchasing a work the name of which, upon acquaintance, proved altogether inappropriate." For less than a third of the volume truthfully represented the advertised title, the remainder being composed of—other stories. The cover of the book followed the same inglorious lines of deception. "In another flagrant example at my elbow only sixteen out of 173 pages give honest fulfilment of obligations; the rest contains—other stories." Our correspondent's grievance is a genuine one.

THE evolution of literary decency is the subject of a paper by Mr. Andrew Lang in the current Blackwood. Mr. Lang asks how it was that the coarse animal expedients for raising a laugh used by Fielding, Smollett, Sterne, and their contemporaries, were completely abandoned within forty years, never to return. Two causes he finds: the rise of a large and middle-class reading public, and the Wesleyan reformation. As for the "new licence," Mr. Lang thinks its force is expended, but he points out—we are afraid with some justice—that "it is ladies to-day who throw their caps highest over the windmills, both in licentiousness of idea and physical squalor of theme—always, of course, for lofty moral purposes."

Bibliographical.

GOOD Mrs. Inchbald! If she could revisit the glimpses of the moon, she would be inclined, I think, to take pride in the measure of interest in her play called "Lovers' Vows" now being exhibited. 'Twas but a poor play, and lives, one may almost say, only in the pages of Miss Austen. Nevertheless, the "agreeable rattle" who once chattered in the columns of the Star has brought to bear upon it a goodly array of learning (it would seem, recently acquired); and Mr. Austin Dobson has not disdained to address my Editor a second time upon the subject. Mrs. Inchbald says, in the preface to her play, that the lines for the rhyming butler were written by the hand which penned the prologue. Mr. Dobson told us last week that John Taylor wrote the rhymes; he now tells us—on Taylor's own authority—that the prologue was by Taylor also. Genest, therefore, was wrong in ascribing the rhymes (and epilogue) to Thomas Palmer, of Bath. Incidentally, Mr. Dobson, in his new communication, admits that it is not certain that Charles Kean fell in love with Ellen Tree when they figured, in 1828, in "Lovers' Vows." The assumption that they did so was, he says, only "poetical," and "not confirmed" by Mr. Dobson's authority. Mr. Dobson adds: "There is, I may observe, sufficient information as to 'Lovers' Vows' in my introduction to Mansfield Park (Macmillan, 1897). But introductions, I fear, are not much read nowadays!" That depends. Mr. Dobson's introductions, one may fairly take for granted, have multitudinous readers.

I am a little sorry to see that Mr. Lewis Melville, who wrote the Life of Thackeray, proposes to give us by and bye a volume of Thackeray's Stray Papers. I take for granted that this book will consist of work by Thackeray which has not hitherto been reprinted. The question will be, Was it worth reprinting? We have already had—apart from the "authorised" publications by Messrs. Smith & Elder—the essay on George Cruikshank, and the volume entitled Sultan Stork, both issued by Mr. Redway; Loose Sketches, brought out by a publisher named Sabin; and, last year, reprints of King Grampus, of Hitherto Unidentified Contributions to "Punch," and Writings in the "National Standard" and "Constitutional." These seemed to exhaust the Thackeray "finds," and one hoped that the great writer might be left alone for a time. But the passion for grubbing up the hack products of a distinguished author seems unappeasable, and its gratification is one of the penalties which modern genius has to pay for its own existence.

Personally, I revel in Sir M. E. Grant Duff's Notes from a Diary. It is, to my mind, the perfection of a bedside-book—easy to handle, clearly printed, and so scrappy (as well as varied) in contents that it can be put down at any moment without the feeling of breaking an intellectual continuity. I say "it" because I am regarding the work as a whole. As a matter of fact, the new volumes are the seventh and eighth. And how many more are we to have? The more the merrier, say I. Meanwhile, the prospect may appal the less enthusiastic. The first two volumes covered twenty-one years' diary; the third and fourth, seven years; the fifth and sixth, five years; and now the seventh and eighth cover only two years! They close with the close of 1888, and we are told by their author that he hopes to continue his diary to the last day of 1900. Future volumes, therefore, will cover twelve years, and one wonders if there will be as many volumes as years.

How large, in the literary life, is the element of luck! Before she wrote Red Pottage Miss Mary Cholmondeley had written and published The Danvers Jewels (1887), Sir Charles Danvers (1890), Diana Tempest (1893), and A Devotee (1897); it was not, however, till she sent forth Red Pottage that anything like wide popularity came to her. That The Danvers Jewels and Sir Charles Danvers made so little impression may have been owing to the fact that they were published anonymously. This, however, was not the case with Diana Tempest and A Devotee, while The Danvers Jewels was reprinted in 1897 with its author's name. Now Diana Tempest appears in sixpenny, paper-covered form, and, no doubt, will be carried by Red Pottage into hundreds of households into which it had never penetrated before. Diana, it is worth noting, came out originally in the old three-volume shape, going into a single volume in the following year.

I note that the new work on Dr. Robert Wallace is to include his Reminiscences, which, if they cover the ground of his Edinburgh professorship and of his connexion with the Scotsman newspaper, should be piquant enough. The Scotsman was never more readable than when Dr. Wallace wrote its leaders on ecclesiastical questions. We are to have, I see, reminiscences from Mr. Arthur à Beckett also. That gentleman's latest book (London at the End of the Century) was of the nature of "memoirs," and it is not so very long since he gave us his Greenroom Recollections. Journalists are rather apt to use up their "copy" of this sort in pursuance of their daily avocations, and then, when they come to write their formal reminiscences, it too often happens that they have scarcely anything left to tell us.

It is a happy thought which promises us at this particular time a new edition of Sir Arthur Helps's Spanish Conquest in America. The work was issued originally in four volumes between 1855 and 1861, and there has been no reproduction of it during the past twenty years, at any rate. It will now re-appear in four-volume form.

The book on The Egyptian Campaigns which Mr. Charles Royle announces is, I take for granted, a reprint, no doubt revised and with considerable additions, of the work on the same subject and with the same title which he published in 1886. The narrative then extended from 1882 to 1885; and I presume it has now been brought down to date.

The recent feminine denunciation of free libraries, at Torquay, has naturally recalled Mrs. Malaprop's characterisation of circulating libraries as "vile places." It was, however, into Sir Lucius O'Trigger's mouth that Sheridan put the more familiar description of such a library as "an evergreen tree of diabolical knowledge," blossoming through the year. What would poor "Sherry" think of some of our present-day novels?

Reviews.

A Poet on Poetry.

What is Poetry? By Edmond Holmes. (John Lane.)

MR. EDMOND HOLMES has set himself a greatly daring task in this very suggestive little book. From Aristotle downwards men have attempted to answer the question, "What is poetry?" and have met with but indifferent success. We will not say that Mr. Holmes succeeds where they failed; but he does describe the modus operandi of poetry in a novel and stimulant way. At first sight the motto of his book, taken from Carlyle, seems to be in direct conflict with his thesis. "Poetic creation, what is this but seeing the thing sufficiently? The word that will describe the thing follows of itself from such intense clear sight of it." So speaks Carlyle, as quoted by Mr. Holmes. Yet the first postulate laid down by Mr. Holmes is that "Poetry is the expression of strong and deep feeling." The two appear irreconcilable, if either be laid down singly. The truth is, that neither should be laid down singly. The basis of the poetic faculty is neither intuition alone, nor emotion alone. (For, be it observed, Mr. Holmes is really investigating rather the poetic faculty than poetry itself: he is inquiring into the operation of poetry in the mind of the poet.) The basis of the poetic gift is intellectual insight, or intuition, combined with emotional sensibility. The union is so subtle, that the poet may be said in a manner to see through his sensitive nature. "I see it feelingly," he might enounce with Lear. Mr. Holmes had done better to take as his postulate: "Poetry is the expression of truth seen feelingly." For that, indeed, is the foundation, the modus operandi, of the poetic faculty. But, in fact, this is Mr. Holmes's basis, and his failure to enunciate it distinctly exemplifies a lack of precision in thought which somewhat mars a deeply conceived and mainly right essay.

He implicates sight in feeling—the very union which we have ourselves postulated. The more pity that his position is not made water-tight by being logically announced, instead of illogically implied. He arrives at it in this way: the poet's feelings, he truly observes, are not different from those of other men; or else they could awaken no sympathy in others. But what the poet possesses in a highly developed state is latent in other men. Now where there is feeling there is something to be felt. The poet's higher range of feelings, therefore, correspond to a higher range of truth (or realities, as Mr. Holmes prefers to say, curiously discriminating reality from truth—in which we refuse to follow him) latent in others. Through these intense and subtle feelings he is led to discern these higher truths, which in turn beget emotion, and emotion leads on to further truth, in perpetual interaction. It is justly and delicately apprehended. But here we have assumed that union of intuition and feeling, of intuition in feeling, which should explicitly have been postulated.

Explicitly formulated, it is absolute truth, and we can accept with pleasure and a clear conscience Mr. Holmes's further utterances. In his own words: "If the deeper and truer properties of things are to be apprehended at all, they must be apprehended emotionally, for they are so great and real that they must needs kindle emotion in all who are permitted to discern them. In this way insight is ever tending to generate emotion, just as emotion is ever tending to generate insight."

The poet, accordingly, through his emotional insight, discerns the real order of things. In himself, or in nature? asks Mr. Holmes. And he answers, in effect: "In both together." Self and nature are so interfused that they reciprocally illuminate each other. The poet projects himself into nature as much as he absorbs nature into himself. They are, in Mr. Holmes's philosophy, as twin parts of a whole. Accordingly the poet "leaves it to the second-rate novelist to describe scenery, as we call it. It is the spiritual significance of outward things which appeals to him. The intense sympathy which he feels for outward things is thrown back, like reflected light, on the inner life of man; and the all-pervading unity of nature makes the outward order a symbol at every turn of the inward." Nay, Mr. Holmes proceeds, "feelings about outward things are ever transforming themselves into feelings about inward things." All this is admirably said, and quite true in application; though we would rest this unity between self and nature upon a more explicit, a deeper philosophy than that adumbrated by Mr. Holmes.

On the nature of the imagination Mr. Holmes's thought is more confused, though still full of suggestion. "The essence of imagination," he says, "is the perception of hidden truth"—the function which he has already (and truly) assigned to intuition, insight (or, as we should call it, the intellect) acting through the sensitive or emotional nature. In fact, he mixes imagination with intuition, whereas imagination is rather the servant of the faculty which sees into truth, though closely united with it, and indeed indispensable to it. It is the gift which discerns hidden analogy—it might almost be said hidden identity—the correspondences between the various orders of creation. Hence one of its chief manifestations (as the name would suggest) is in the discovery of images (excluding, however, that more superficial order of imagery which belongs to fancy, and has no root in reality). For the same reason it is a combining faculty, as Mr. Holmes realises. "Imagination," he says, "is the power of realising familiar in new combinations, in combinations which go beyond the limits of our actual experience." Which at least describes a mode in which it operates, if too partial for a definition or even a complete description. But he throws out an illuminative remark. "Nature is one with itself from pole to pole of its being; and, therefore, to know any given portion of it is to have a partial or rather potential knowledge of the rest." Just so. One plan runs through all the orders of nature—and man—though the expression varies with the conditions imposed by the medium in each order. To know one part of nature, then, is to know all which corresponds to it in the other orders, provided you have the key to the mode of correspondence. Imagination brings to light this unsuspected mode of correspondence; but to survey nature in its totality of relations, more is needed. Again, Mr. Holmes gives the illuminative word. "We must have a knowledge of it so true and deep as to enable us to penetrate . . . to that centre of things which can be reached from all parts, and is the same for all parts, of the ensphering surface." Deeply true. To understand the ramifications you must survey them from the roots. This, "where one centre reconciles all things" (as Crashaw has it), Plato's repository of ideals is the poet's true goal.

Mr. Holmes has hardly reached the centre which he surmises, or there would be less blemishes of confused thought in his work. But he has written a brilliant essay, full of the insight of which he speaks. It is essentially poet's work, and Mr. Holmes will do yet better when he acquires the thinker's precision of statement. We wish we had space to quote his excellent words on the distinction between creation and imitation, which, he truly says, are one in the poet whose creation does but imitate that hidden order which he finds in nature. The poet, in fact, makes little worlds on the plan of God's great world. His creation is a re-creation. But this, and infinite other suggestive flashes, we must leave unnoticed. Our one quarrel is, that Mr. Holmes's manner of tracing everything to emotion, without explicitly bracketing with it insight, lends misleading countenance to those who would make of poetry an appeal to the emotions, and the emotions only.

Variants of the English Language.

America To-day: Observations and Reflections. By William Archer. (Heinemann.)

IN Mr. Archer's record of a recent sojourn in the United States there is a pleasant chapter on "The American Language." Perhaps it may be considered that he takes the subject too seriously. "Not all the causes of dissension between England and America," says Mr. Archer, "have begotten half the bad blood that has been engendered by trumpery questions of vocabulary, grammar, and pronunciation." We are not at all sure that this is right. Sometimes a company of American actors play in a London theatre, and then the general impression is that the performance is effective by virtue of its singular restraint. French players rant, and English players rant; but American players, never. Even in the most exciting situation the Americans speak in a subdued monotone which is telling. In their theatrical speech the Americans have a repose which marks a caste seemingly a good deal higher than that which is represented by the players in the ordinary English house of melodrama. It is needful to point this out in considering Mr. Archer's generalisation about the variants of the English language. The fact is a broad one of much importance. At the first glance it seems to tell against his theory which we have quoted. The first glance, however, is not the final consideration; and we think that we can interpret Mr. Archer. Although all London admires the performances of American players, it is not at all clear to us that the quality which excites the admiration is either the written locutions or the cadence of our friends from over the sea. Frequently the locutions are beautiful, or neat; but they are never so beautiful or so neat as to be superior to those of any one of many English playwrights. Always the American manner of delivering the words is telling; but it would be hypocrisy to say that the American cadence is as good as that of educated Englishmen. The explanation is simple. That which tells in the American acting is its repose. The Americans, when they give us the pleasure of a visit, are like still strong men in a blatant land. They never raise their voices, and they never swagger. That is to say, what we admire in them is the peculiar virtue with which we Englishmen credit ourselves: reserve and quietude in times of crisis.

Still, in justice to Mr. Archer and his theory, it must be admitted that the ladies and gentlemen of whom we are speaking are persons who are playing parts. They are not quite themselves. They are exemplifying ideals of human character. They do that peculiarly well; but it is play-acting all the time. Now, here we have another problem. It is from America that many of the most humorous works in literature have come. Why do these books impress us so? They impress us, not because the situations are more comical than those which occur or can be invented here, but because they are described in minimising words. The Americans have discovered a secret of effect in humour. When a Frenchman or an Englishman has a funny experience to tell, he tells it pompously, in the biggest words that can be found in Dr. Johnson's Dictionary; and he delivers the yarn, smiling or frowning, as if he were on the stage of the resonant Adelphi. When an American is at the same point of vantage, he adopts another method. He talks as if he were bored, uses the smallest words he can find, expresses extremities of fortune in languorous phrases; and gains a great result. He impresses us by his repose in crisis, which is the most admirable of all manly qualities. Still, he is merely acting. There is absolutely no reason for believing that if an American and an Englishman were together in the forces which are fighting against our enemies in South Africa the casual remarks of the American would be in any respect superior to those of the Briton; but it is equally certain that if both had subsequently to render an account of the warfare, the American would be humorous and dramatic, and the Briton either tediously matter-of-fact or nearly dumb. The American would tour about the country, like Lieut. Hobson, receiving the unanimous kisses of all the women on "both sides"; the Briton would withdraw himself to his club, or to some uninhabited wilderness where grouse were to be shot or trout were on the rise. From this thought it becomes obvious that, despite the reticence of their words and their restraint in cadence, it is the Americans who are the first artists in literature and in drama. Still, we do not blame them. They fight as well as the Britons; and, as they add another grace to life, the grace of literature, theirs be the due. They have a right to our respect, not only on account of their dignified bearing towards life and the drama, but also on account of English scholarship.

Archbishop Trench, one of our best authorities in philology, rebuked the Americans over certain "neologisms" which are not neologisms at all. Of these were the phrases "to belittle" and "to berate." Both of these, as Mr. Archer says, are thoroughly sound. The phrases were taken to America by the Pilgrim Fathers. They survive there, while they have become more or less obsolete in the land of their origin, England. Similarly, Mr. Ruskin, Mr. G. M. Tucker, and others, have condemned all the additions to our common speech which have been made by America. Mr. Ruskin pronounced them "vile"; Mr. Tucker, "absolutely licentious." Both critics wrote with insular and insolent arrogance. There is slang in every language; but he is an ignorant and unimaginative person who takes it for granted that all slang is necessarily in bad style. There are certain slang locutions which are of the highest rank in the art of literature. These are the locutions which, composed from words in common use, transfigure the speech of the commonalty into the speech of genius. Here are a few common words: rogue, a, what, oh, peasant, am, slave, I, and. Each of those words is a word in the vocabularies of all of us; but not all of us have the gift of making good use of them. Look at Shakespeare's arrangement:

Oh, what a rogue and peasant slave am I!

Here are a few other words: Spain, came, seas, when, lofty, the, up, towering. Each of these words is in the possession and at the service of every crossing-sweeper; but listen to the arrangement of them by Mr. William Watson:

When lofty Spain came towering up the seas.

There is a great distinction in that phrase, even as there is a great distinction in the remark of Shakespeare about the rogue and peasant slave. Whence the distinction springs Mr. Archer does not know. He did not have the case before him when he wrote his essay; but he ought to have had it, or some other of equal relevance. Mr. Archer is in sympathy with the art of distinction in language; but, clever and charming as his essay is, it does not indicate a quite perfect analytic perception into the nuance. "Gentlemen," said an American statesman to a deputation of politicians, "you need proceed no further. I am not an entirely dishevelled jackass!" Mr. Archer cites this as an example of the American genius in the literary art. We admit that it is very good, because it is vivid and amusing; but we should have been glad had Mr. Archer, in his travels, found a better example of the American way with words. When Burns spoke of the "wee, modest, crimson-tippit flower," he described the daisy with much greater distinction than the American statesman described himself. Still, we are grateful to Mr. Archer for his having given us the opportunity to show that good style in literary expression comes, not from the use of uncommon words, but from the uncommonly good use of words which are in the vocabulary and at the bidding of us all.

South Africa and the War.—III.

The Boer States, Land, and People. By A. H. Keane. (Methuen. 6s.)

Who's Who at the War. (Black. 6d. net.)

Field-Marshal Lord Roberts: a Biographical Sketch. By Horace G. Groser. (Melrose. 1s. net.)

The History of the Boer War. Part I. Illustrated. (Methuen. 1s.)

PROF. KEANE is an ethnologist of the highest reputation, and this succinct work is likely to be used for many years by those who wish to be parties, in act or spirit, to the solution of the South African problem. The noticeable weakness of nearly all the contributions which have already been made to the subject has been a lack of thorough historical and ethnological knowledge of the Boer race and of the vast inferior races with which the Boers have had dealings. The result has been that the South African question has been accepted in this country as comparatively simple. The large majority of Englishmen see in the Boers a morose and truculent race who are bent on securing huge political advantage for a paltry political return. A minority sees in the Boers a simple pastoral race which is being forced out of its cherished habits of life, and deprived of its sturdy independence, by a horde of gold-seekers and land-grabbers. Both these views are crude; and, as they stand, will prove unserviceable in the coming adjustment. It would be well if a book like this, which makes small appeal to passion, but rather seeks to state the broad truths of history and racial evolution, were to find ten thousand intelligent readers. The refreshing begin-at-the-beginningness of Prof. Keane's method should alone commend his book to every inquiring mind. At the same time his pages are tough reading, and require that the map belonging to them should be ever spread. Only so can the reader hope to follow Prof. Keane's description of the countries and climates of South Africa in their relation to the Boer character and history; only so will the parts played by the Bushmen, the Hottentots, and the great Bantu nations in forming the character of their Boer enemies and oppressors be understood.

At last, but not till his eighth chapter, Prof. Keane allows the reader to put to him the question: Who are the Boers? The ethnological answer is not simple, but technically the Boers are "a new race, the outcome of a blend of divers old elements of Caucasian stock transferred from Europe to South Africa during the second half of the seventeenth century, and these modified under the influences of a changed environment." Prof. Keane expands this definition in many pages, not one of which can be called dull at such a time as this. He enables us to watch the formation of the Boer character, which is in some respects unlike any other national character in the world. The following passage has great weight and interest:

There is in the Boer temperament a strain of subtlety, of what is called "slimness," of which they are themselves fully conscious, and on which they rely in their political and social relations inter se and with the outer world. The quality was acquired in colonial times under an administrative system highly calculated to foster such a mental twist, and it found ample field for its expansion when the Boers trekking from the Colony were able to set up house for themselves on the inland plateaux. In studying their dealings with the lower and higher peoples with whom they have been in continuous contact, this factor, usually overlooked, has to be steadily borne in mind, both as a danger to be guarded against and as a cue in forming a just estimate of their deeds or misdeeds. At times they seem almost like irresponsible beings—like the Negro, non-moral rather than immoral—capable of terrible atrocities in their treatment of the heathen and the "Canaanites"; capable of astounding duplicity in their negotiations with the paramount power. These things are often stigmatised in strong language, being, after all, mainly due to a mental obliquity of vision, which, however, has to be reckoned with.

The notion that there is something cruel and impious in our interference with Boer autonomy and the integrity of the Boer Republic will hardly survive in any man who is acquainted with the Boers' dealings with inferior races. It was mainly in order to keep their slaves, mis-called "apprentices," against the British Abolition Act that the Boers executed their "Great Trek" northward in 1834; and one soon begins to associate their lazy habits in those days with their more recent wish to thrive at the expense of the Uitlanders. A keen observer of Boer temperament has pointed out that habits of indolence which it will take generations to eradicate were acquired by the Boer when he wandered through the boundless wastes of South Africa, carrying with him his Hottentot slaves. "His pipe seldom quitted his mouth, except when he slept, or ate his three daily meals of mutton sodden in fat. The good lady of the house, equally disdainful of toil, remained almost as immovable as her lord. . . . Newspapers never penetrated the vast solitudes of the Karoo. Ignorance, stupidity, and prejudice found here a rich soil in which to thrive, and the fruits of it are to-day manifest in the condition of the northern border of the Transvaal Republic." But the Boers soon found that the world is not constituted for the advantage of a surly and wandering race, hovering between savagery and civilisation, and scorning both. Endless broils with the Kaffir races, wars and slaughters and hiring of mercenaries, brought the Boer community in 1877 to its last shilling of public money, and to its last feeble stand against the formidable Zulu nation. Had wise counsels, and particularly those of Sir Bartle Frere, been followed at that critical time Great Britain's championship of the tottering Boer Republic against savages might have become the basis of a great Federal act. What really happened we all know. What thousands do not seem to know, or to realise, is that the causes which have led to the present disastrous struggle in South Africa are seated very deeply in history, that the great fermenting-vat of South African politics has never ceased to simmer and threaten since the Great Trek, and that we are now witnessing a great racial adjustment which is bitter and bloody mainly because it has been postponed. Prof. Keane's work places the situation in the light of history—the only light in which it should be studied.

In Who's Who at the War we have a war supplement to the regular Who's Who. The matter is printed in the familiar double columns, and is as full as can be desired, except that the "recreations" of officers are stated rather infrequently. Hunting, shooting, polo, fishing, and travelling are the usual entries under this head. Colonel Baden-Powell figures as the most versatile recreator of all the band. He delights in "pig-sticking (winner of Kadir Cup), polo, big game shooting, hunting, yachting, stage managing, acting and singing, painting and etching."

The unassuming little biographical sketch of Field-Marshal Lord Roberts which Mr. Horace G. Groser has written will be useful to those who are not possessed of Lord Roberts's own autobiographical work. Mr. Groser incidentally makes it clear to us that Lord Roberts has always possessed those scouting instincts which have proved so needful in the Boer War. So clear a narrative of so fine a life can be welcomed as something better than a piece of book-making.

The serial history of the Boer War which Messrs. Methuen have begun to issue in fortnightly parts is a business-like and attractive production, and an admirable supplement to the newspaper records. The first part, consisting of forty pages, brings the history up to the Boer advance.

The Critics and 1899.

The Literary Year Book, 1900. Edited by Herbert Morrah. (George Allen. 3s. 6d.)

HITHERTO the editor of The Literary Year Book has been in the habit of summing up the year's achievements himself, in a rapid and more or less exhaustive summary, which was not as satisfactory as it might be. This year a new method has been adopted. The new editor in his introductory article avoids altogether the enumeration by name of 1899's illustrious books, and instead calls upon certain prominent critics to pick out their own fancies from the welter. The result certainly is a gain in piquancy, but we cannot consider the plan a good one for a work at once so impartial and informing as a Literary Year Book ought to be. The good year book's ideal surely should be to record faithfully and abstain from adjectives. However, Mr. Morrah, the editor, has thought otherwise, and since he has collected these appreciations let us examine them.

Mr. Lang begins, and with more than his usual breathlessness—in his best sprinting form—he extols Some Experiences of an Irish R.M., a diverting medley by the authors of The Silver Fox. Then comes Mr. Henley in praise of The Life and Death of Mr. Badman, which is not exactly a book of 1899, but happened to be reprinted then. In Mr. Henley's article we find this interesting passage:

Even in my own time rural England was not exactly a saints' nursery. And in Bunyan's day it may very well have been worse than it was in mine; so that I am by no means disposed to question either Bunyan's accuracy or Bunyan's sincerity. Especially as I find him expressing himself in an English as fresh and clean and wholesome as a morning meadow, as redolent of England as a new-turned clod. Reading this book, indeed, is like coming on the beginnings of Stevenson; and, to me at least, the beginnings are more pleasing and more refreshing than the end. Bunyan was born a master. Stevenson was born—a student of Bunyan. There is the difference.

We observe that Mr. Bullen, who writes about ships and sperm whales, has lately stated that from Bunyan and the Bible he also derives his style. Who would have thought that The Pilgrim's Progress produced The Way We Have in the Navy? The brave old tinker must have as many shoots as has the Bunyan tree.

We come to R. L. S. again in Mr. Quiller-Couch's admirable essay on the Stevenson Letters. It is late to say anything new about those fascinating volumes, but we do not remember to have seen the following point—and it is a good one—made before. Distance, says Mr. Couch, while it makes the letter-writer's task especially irksome, gives him at least one tremendous advantage. It forces him above the level of the humdrum. As Bagehot says somewhere, you cannot sit down and address a friend in New Zealand as though he lived across the street. You say, albeit quite unconsciously, "This letter will travel so many thousand miles," and this gives you a sort of respect for the sheet of paper. It may not tie you down to seriousness, but it may deter from slipshod scribbling. We do not—I appeal to common experience—shout banalities in the ear of a deaf man. And the distance between you makes a deaf man of your correspondent. You insensibly raise the pitch of your voice, and just as insensibly economise your strength. You select, you cast out superfluities, you leave what you can to your friend's intelligence: you do all this merely for the sake of convenience—but you happen to be following the very first rules of good writing.

Hence part at least of the literary merit of Stevenson's Samoan and other foreign correspondence. The deduction is probably a fair one; but it is amusing to compare with Stevenson's heightened impetus Lamb's paralysis of mind when confronted by a distant correspondent.

Two poets come in for some strong "backing"—Mr. Bridges by the President of Magdalen, and Mr. Sturge Moore by Mr. Laurence Binyon. Mr. Bridges has, of course, been "appreciated" often before, and he will find nothing in the article (which seems to us sound and penetrating) to surprise him. But Mr. Sturge Moore, we conceive, is not yet accustomed to this kind of thing, and some of Mr. Binyon's superlatives should warm his poetic heart. This is the conclusion of the matter:

For my part, I cannot but hope that Mr. Moore will purge himself of certain awkwardnesses of manner which seem caught from Browning, such as the too frequently omitted relative; that he will care more for "divine limpidity"; that he will not allow his great pictorial gift to overcharge his verse; and that he will learn sometimes to be content with less expression to the eye, in order to be more expressive to the ear. But his faults are all faults of excess, not of lack; they are as nothing to his excellences; he is equipped for great things; and his present performance suffices to make some of us look forward to his future with the confidence of conviction.

After Mr. G. W. E. Russell, M.P., on the Life of Wellington, and Mr. Joseph Jacobs on an anthropological work, and Prof. Ward's Naturalism and Agnosticism, we come to Mr. Bernard Capes on Mrs. Oliphant's autobiography, and Mr. Cope Cornford on Mr. Arthur Morrison—that is to say, we come to "style." Readers of the ACADEMY know that for literary architectonics Mr. Bernard Capes is the man. He begins this article with a dissertation on autobiography in general, treating it as the author's best vehicle for his rehabilitation—as the best means by which he can reply to his "oblique-eyed critics" and set himself right with the world. Thus:

He has been called, say, superficial, or artificial, or imitative: indeed, if he has any originality he can hardly escape one of these charges. But he knows he is none of these things, and why should he not make a last dying speech and confession—of what he is in fact? Well, supposing he makes it; and on Monday, perhaps, wrings from Posterity an acknowledgment of his innocence? On Tuesday, Posterity will be back again hammer and tongs at the old disproved evidence of platitude; and on Wednesday, Posterity will have forgotten all about him. The truth is, of course, that no author has a message that the public hasn't dictated to him; and if he insists upon it that he has—why, the deuce of an audience is he like to get to listen to him.

This, then, is the moral:

A l'œuvre on connaît l'ouvrier. Think not, then, poor Martinus, to profit thyself with an autobiography. Dost thou want thy quarrelsome critic with thee in Paradise, that thou wouldst urge him to repentance? Consign to Hades, rather—to the mosaic of its pavement—thy last volume of good intentions, that so shall he be for ever condemned, who once rejoiced, to sit upon it!

Among other English works picked out for recommendation are Sir William Butler's Life of Colley and Mr. Maitland's Musician's Pilgrimage. No word of the Browning love letters, of Paolo and Francesca, of Mr. Mackail's Life of Morris, or of Mr. Dooley's David Harum, however, has an appreciation.

On its practical side, The Literary Year Book is better than it has yet been. It is now fairly useful. But we expect, and the literary public will demand, that greater usefulness shall be attained. The obituary is not good. The lists of authors, booksellers, &c., contain inaccuracies; and we are not sure that the list of authors, necessarily incomplete, is a good feature. We should like to see the best novels of the year briefly described, with a statement of their plots, principal characters, &c. Other weighty books, useful for reference, might have their contents and standpoints indicated. When it comes to Year Books we are a very Gradgrind in our hunger for facts.

"The Irish Literary Theatre."

The Bending of the Bough: a Comedy in Five Acts. By George Moore. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

THE fighting Preface to this play makes an unpleasant hors d'œuvre to a repast of some delicacy and distinction. Mr. Moore never does and never did shine in dialectics. He can feel; and that is the end of him. Also it is enough; he should be content to leave the rest to Mr. Bernard Shaw and other Ruperts of the movement. As for this peevish and resentful manifesto, at the best it is superfluous. A work of art ought to be its own manifesto. Ibsen—Mr. Moore's great exemplar—does not trouble himself or the public with manifestoes; nor, so far as we know, did Shakespeare. Mr. Moore's unfortunate preface is full of misstatements, crudities of thought, and hopeless inconsequences. His two complaints seem to be that artists don't make money, and that writers who are not artists ought not to make money. He will have it that masterpieces cannot be produced for money. Yet Mr. Sidney Lee tells us that Shakespeare wrote for money to the tune of something like four thousand a year. But really the whole argument about the remuneration of artists is vieux jeu, and ought to be forbidden by pact, as tiresome and futile.

To come (by this so sinister avenue) to The Bending of the Bough. Briefly, it is a serious and worthy play, well conceived, well imagined, and well written. In the "municipality" of its theme (if we may change the meaning of a word), and in certain details of construction, it at once reminds one of a masterpiece—An Enemy of the People. Mr. Moore finds his material and environment in the purely civic affairs of a borough. The play opens with a meeting of aldermen. Impecunious Northhaven has a quarrel with wealthy Southhaven; and Jasper Dean, of Northhaven, possesses the gift of moving the people. Private interest demands that Northhaven shall not enrage its rich neighbour; public honour demands that a just claim shall be firmly enforced. It lies with Jasper to decide which course Northhaven shall take. But Jasper is betrothed to the niece of Southhaven's mayor. Under the influence of one Ralph Kirwan (the real hero) he starts righteously, but in the end he yields to his Millicent, and accordingly Southhaven triumphs. Mr. Moore would possibly justify Dean's conduct. Says one of the characters: "I do not expect my friends to agree with me; but I hope that in time they will learn what I have learnt—that the State is founded on such happy lives as Jasper's and Miss Fell's will be, that our private interests are the foundation of the State, and that he who does the best for himself does the best for the State in the long run." Even Kirwan peaceably concurs. We have said that Kirwan is the real hero of the piece. He is decidedly the prime mover of the action—an idealist of the strictest austerity, and very Ibsenesque in his moral contours.

DEAN. My name is upon their lips, but it is you they are cheering.

KIRWAN. Very likely. The man who cheers never knows whom he is cheering.

And again:

FERGUSON. And so you spend your time thinking, Alderman Kirwan?

KIRWAN. If I've thought well, I've done everything that is required.

FERGUSON. We want action.

KIRWAN. If I've thought well, someone else will act well.

This is Ibsen, with a touch of W. B. Yeats ("The Song of the Sad Shepherd").

There is more in The Bending of the Bough than may meet the Saxon eye. Jasper Dean says: "We were talking of the spiritual destiny of the Celtic race; because of its spiritual inheritance it is greater than any other race." And, indeed, for the Celt this play may well be a torch flaming in the darkness. It is certainly, inter alia, an allegory of the relations between England and Ireland, and sometimes the realistic envelope which should conceal that allegory runs too thin for artistic decency; as here:

LAURENCE. What do you think, my dear Mayor [of Southhaven], if you were to—well, to buy a house here, and grounds, and to say that you would stay part of the year with them, and spend money in entertaining?

THE MAYOR. I'd willingly do that (looking round), for I like the place; but I don't think they'd accept my company as an equivalent for the supposed debt.

This may raise a facile cheer in the Dublin Theatre, but it detracts from the true merit of the play.

What is the artistic significance of The Bending of the Bough? It is apparently put forth as something new and superior—at any rate in theory. But is it? We think not. Though Mr. Moore would look up to Ibsen (and rightly, for this play is steeped in Ibsen), he would look down on Mr. Pinero. Has he the right to do so? Again we think not. He may argue that he has widened the scope of the drama in England—that is to say, in Ireland. We do not see that he has done anything of the kind. We do not see that the passions of boroughs, and the large ethical questions which underlie them, excel in importance the passions of individuals and the large ethical questions which underlie them. Mr. Moore belongs to a class of artists who think that they have a monopoly of seriousness.

The Manners of the Malay.

Malay Magic. By Walter William Skeat. (Macmillans.)

THERE are at least two ways in which this heavy book might have been made both better and more attractive than it is. The author might, more majorum, have gone into the history of the matter, giving us some slight sketch of the Malay race and its affinities, of the different immigrations of culture into the Peninsula, and of the development in other countries of the superstitions which the Malays appear to have borrowed; and we should have then had a work which would be interesting alike to the scientific and to the desultory student of folk-lore. Or he might, in the manner which Scott and others have endeared to us, have allowed his native authorities to speak and act for themselves, in which case he might have interested the general public, while satisfying the more exacting in notes showing the provenance and relationship of his different patches of local colour. But Mr. Skeat has chosen neither of these lines of attack. Assuming, apparently, that all his readers are alike acquainted with the history of the Malay Peninsula and with the growth of the superstitions that he sweeps together under the head of magic, he sets down in the dry and bald manner current in the Proceedings of learned societies the curious practices that have come under his own notice, while the timber-work of his structure is supplied by copious extracts from the charming little romances on native life of Mr. Hugh Clifford and Sir Frank Swettenham. The effect is as incongruous as would be the appearance of one of his own Malays in the free and graceful costume of his own country supplemented by the formal wig, powder, and patches of an early Georgian beau.

This apart, there is much that is both novel and of interest to be gathered from Mr. Skeat's book. Although the vast majority of the Malays are Mohammedans and the practice of magic is strictly forbidden by Islam, the "Pawang," or medicine-man, is still the all-important figure in native life. Does the Malay want to fell a tree?—the Pawang must burn incense at the outskirts of the forest and repeat a charm before the timber can be touched. Does he go camphor-gathering?—the Pawang not only accompanies him to show where the camphor is to be found, but compels him to speak a language different from that of his everyday life during the whole of the expedition. Does he wish to sow a field with rice?—the Pawang must burn incense in the plot and sprinkle it with rice-flour and water. When the rice is ready for reaping the Pawang must be in attendance to take “the soul of the rice,” which is carefully laid up for future ceremonies. If the Malay goes a fishing, the Pawang offers sacrifice, repeats charms, and enforces the fishing taboo, which includes abstinence from ladies’ society, umbrellas, and boots. When snaring birds, the Pawang must perform elaborate rites with the decoy, or nothing will enter the traps. If you take a tiger in a pitfall, the Pawang has to explain to the quarry that it was not he or you which set the snare, but the prophet Mohammed. And in domestic life the services of the Pawang are quite as much in requisition. He files the teeth of the young men—a ceremony only to be accomplished after many charms, and of course sees to the doctoring of young and old, which last, indeed, is probably his most important office. Even a theatrical company takes a Pawang round with it, who prays the god of theatres not to “afflict with poverty or with punishment any of the actors or actresses, the musicians and bridegrooms, and the buffoons both young and old.” If all tales be true, the same wishes must often be repeated by theatrical companies in England. As for each of these services he receives, after the manner of Pawangs all over the world, a fee, small according to European ideas, but no doubt adequate to a Malay, a Pawangship in a family—the office is generally hereditary—is a very good thing to have.

To many people all this will, of course, seem nothing but charlatanism and imposture; but it does not follow that this is the case. In many, perhaps in most, cases the Pawang really is what he professes to be, the “wise man” of the village community. In his knowledge are stored up the traditional signs of the presence of game, of the weather, of the fittest time for agriculture, and very likely of disease and of the means of its cure. Thus, Mr. Skeat tells us that the Pawang of a mine generally has a wonderful nose for tin, and can generally give a much better guess as to its whereabouts than the Chinese foreman. He is, therefore, often able to guide the simple community to the realisation of its wishes, and, at the very least, does much to continue the observance of customs which have been found to be beneficial to it. And if he finds that his commands are more readily obeyed if he appeals to the superstition of his flock rather than to their self-interest, is he, therefore, to be blamed? According to Prof. Haupt, the sanitary regulations specified in the Pentateuch were only placed under a religious sanction because none other would have caused their observance by a Semitic nation; and the theory has, at the least, been favourably received by distinguished Orientalists. Hence, the Pawang may be of great assistance, or the reverse, to the Englishmen upon whom the government of the Peninsula really rests; and it is of great importance to all concerned in it that the native ideas regarding his functions and office should be properly understood. This, as we read Mr. Blagden’s preface, seems to be his main reason for recommending Mr. Skeat’s book to the public; and we are bound to say that we think he has proved his case.

It is said that, when Henry D. Thoreau lay dying in Concord, his friend Parker Pillsbury sat by his bedside; and he leaned over and took him by the hand, and said: “Henry, you are so near to the border now, can you see anything on the other side?” And Thoreau answered: “One world at a time, Parker.”

From “Life Beyond Death,” by Minot J. Savage.

Other New Books.

MR. THOMAS ATKINS.

BY THE REV. E. J. HARDY.

Mr. Hardy has two qualifications to write an amusing and informing book about soldiers: he has long held the position of H.M. Chaplain to the Forces, and he is the author of How to be Happy though Married. The present work comes at the psychological moment. Mr. Thomas Atkins (Who invented this abominably ugly name, and why do we persevere with it?) is the man of the hour, and, apparently, it is impossible to read too much about him. Mr. Hardy’s book treats him with extraordinary thoroughness in all his capacities, somewhat in the manner of a naturalist’s memoir on a curious animal. Many good stories occur by the way, the best of which is in a footnote to page 79. “I once asked a soldier in hospital what kind of book he would like me to get for him out of the library. He replied: ‘Well, sir, I can read almost anything, if it is not the life of a General.’” There speaks human nature and plenty of it! The hospital chapter has some grim fun. We read that a newcomer when assigned a bed in a ward will be told with glee by the others that “The last bloke what ‘ad that cot pegged out.” In Bermuda, says Mr. Hardy, the bandroom adjoined the hospital, and when it was known that a man would not last long “The Dead March in Saul” used to be practised. “This,” he adds, “naturally depressed the dying man.” Here is a recent anecdote: “The boys of a cavalry regiment who attended at my religious instruction had been reading of their youthful hero [the child who at Elands Laagte shot three Boers]; so the next time in the Catechism I asked one of them what was his duty to his neighbour, adding—‘Suppose he be a Boer?’ The boy replied, solemnly but firmly, ‘To shoot him, sir!’” As these catechised boys of to-day are to be the fighting men of to-morrow the destinies of the Empire may be considered safe. (Unwin. 6s.)

SIR DAVID WILKIE.

BY EDWARD PINNINGTON.

On a popular day at the National Gallery few pictures have more interested spectators than Wilkie’s “Village Festival,” “The Blind Fiddler,” and “John Knox”; and yet there are many English painters of eminence of whom the ordinary person is more eager to know personal facts. Wilkie’s was scarcely the kind of painting that leads to curiosity concerning the painter’s private life; whereas—to take the case of Wilkie’s friend—though Haydon could not manipulate paint with a tithe of Wilkie’s amazing skill and felicity, almost the slightest sketch of him excites the desire to learn something of the man behind it. Which is a roundabout way of saying that the failures are almost always more interesting than the men who notably succeed. Wilkie, once “The Village Politicians” was hung in the Academy, succeeded. Thereafter he was a prosperous painter, rising in time to knighthood and everything that the prosperous painter expects as his due. The whole story is to be read in this little book; but it is not very entertaining. That, however, is less Mr. Pinnington’s fault than Sir David Wilkie’s. (Olipphant, Ferrier & Co. 1s. 6d.)

PURITAN PREACHING IN ENGLAND. BY JOHN BROWN, D.D.

This is an edition of the interesting lectures which Dr. John Brown, the author of the Life of Bunyan, delivered at Yale last year from the Lyman Beecher Chair. Beginning with a study of the preaching of the Friars the lecturer passes in review various great preachers of the past—Colet, Latimer, Henry Smith, Thomas Goodwin, and Baxter—until he comes to our own times, the four examples from which chosen by him are Binney, Spurgeon, R. W. Dale, and Dr. Alexander MacLaren, of Manchester. Dr. Brown prefers always homely eloquence and inner fire to beautiful periods and polished rhetoric. Of one of Latimer's sermons he says: "That was living talk straight from the soul of a living man, and if you could always get these two things together, no one would ever dream of saying that the time will come when the pulpit will be superseded by the press. For the great work of the Church of God in the world a living man must always be more than a printed sheet." We quote two passages cited by Dr. Brown for their beauty. Thus spake Thomas Playfair, Court Preacher to King James the First, in a sermon called "Heart's Delight": "For suppose now, as St. John speaketh, the whole world were full of books, and all the creatures in the world were writers, and all the grass piles upon earth were pens, and all the waters in the sea were ink; yet I assure you faithfully all these books, all these writers, all these pens, and all this ink, would not be sufficient to describe the very least part either of the goodness of the Lord Himself, or of the loving-kindness of the Lord towards thee." And thus spake Thomas Adams, who has been called the Shakespeare of the Puritans: "Oh, how goodly this building of man appears when it is clothed with beauty and honour! A face full of majesty, the throne of comeliness, wherein the whiteness of the lily contends with the sanguine of the rose; an active hand, an erected countenance, an eye sparkling out lustre, a smooth complexion arising from an excellent temperature and composition. Oh, what a Workman was this, that could raise such a fabric out of the earth, and lay such orient colours upon dust!" (Hodder & Stoughton.)

EAGLEHAWK AND CROW. BY JOHN MATHEW, M.A., B.D.

"Eaglehawk" and "Crow" are common clan-names among the tribes of Australia; and Mr. Mathew's book is partly an anthropological study of the Australian aborigines, partly a philological "survey" of the grammar and vocabulary of their languages. Upon the philology we shall offer no remark; the anthropological section is interesting as being the second detailed work on the subject which has appeared in the course of the last twelve months. Unfortunately, Mr. Mathew, though acquainted with some of Messrs. Spencer and Gillen's researches among the Arunta tribe, does not appear to have written with their epoch-making work on Central Australia before him. His own independent account of Australian civilisation is, however, exceedingly valuable and interesting. He is particularly good and full on the ethnological question. The Australians, we gather, are not a pure stock. The fond is a Papuan type, akin to that of the extinct Tasmanians; but there have been invasions at various times, firstly of a Malay element, and, secondly, of a higher Caucasian element akin to the Dravidians of India, both of which have left traces upon the physiology and the culture of the continent. Perhaps it is to one or other of these foreign elements that we should assign those "high gods" Daramulun and Baiame, so imperfectly assimilated with the general trend of Australian thought, and yet clearly not of missionary introduction, which have proved such a serious stumbling-block to Mr. Andrew Lang. This view is supported by the Indian character of the strange cave-paintings of apparently divine personages discovered by Sir George Grey and others.

A curious lacuna in Mr. Mathew's book is the absence of any account of the extent to which, and the circumstances under which, the Australians practised (or should it be practise?) cannibalism. He tells us that "grubs found in green trees were highly esteemed; so were snakes, bandicoots, porcupines, emus, and men." He tells us that the Tasmanians and certain "low" Australian tribes were not cannibals. And that is all, although no subject can be more important than cannibalism in its bearings on the evolution of culture in general, and of religion in particular. (Nutt.)

PLEA FOR A SIMPLER LIFE, AND FADS OF AN OLD PHYSICIAN.

By G. S. KEITH, M.D.

Both the books of which this volume is made up have been published separately. Dr. Keith has now brought them together, and added a new preface, in the hope that their helpfulness may be increased. Certainly it is a very reasonable argument that he advances—although it is hardly to be expected that all medical men will agree. Practically, except as surgeons and as sanitary authorities, Dr. Keith would have doctors superseded altogether, their place being taken by common sense. One of his great rules is rest for the system during an illness. "Keeping up," as the phrase is—that is to say, good feeding and stimulants—he abhors. Hot water is his principal stimulant; and he has always found fewer evils arising from starvation than excess. Men working too hard with their brains, and bent upon finishing a task, should, he holds, eat little or nothing until they have done. We can recommend this book very heartily. Its particular precepts may not suit everyone, but its tone is broad, healthy, and sane. (Black.)

Fiction.

Their Silver Wedding Journey. By W. D. Howells.
(Harper & Brothers. 6s.)

It happens that some time has elapsed since last we read anything of Mr. Howells's, and Their Silver Wedding Journey surprised us at once by its freshness and by its quick renewal of an old charm. In the midst of the towering beanstalk reputations which have sprung up during the last year or two across the Atlantic, the fame and importance of Mr. Howells have, perhaps, been temporarily overshadowed. But it seems to us that he must of necessity emerge again. This book is a most agreeable and delicate diversion, executed with a finished technical neatness quite Gallic in character. It is a trifle, made up of trifles; it may have neither breadth nor depth; but it is pretty almost to the point of beauty, and it is the negation of all crudeness, exaggeration, and stridency. Mr. Howells, on the title-page, is at the pains to call it "a novel." Yet it is scarcely a novel. The best description of it is to be found in a conversation between Mr. and Mrs. March, the staid married couple (their Wedding Journey is not forgotten) whose travels make the story:

"It could be done, if you were a mind to think so. And it would be the greatest inspiration to you. You are always longing for some chance to do original work, to get away from your editing, but you've let the time slip by without really trying to do anything; I don't call those little studies of yours in the magazine anything; and now you won't take the chance that's almost forcing itself upon you. You could write an original book of the nicest kind; mix up travel and fiction; get some love in."

"Oh, that's the stalest kind of thing!"

"Well, but you could see it from a perfectly new point of view. You could look at it as a sort of dispassionate witness, and treat it humorously—of course, it is ridiculous—and do something entirely fresh."

"It wouldn't work. It would be carrying water on both shoulders. The fiction would kill the travel, the travel would kill the fiction; the love and the humour wouldn't mingle any more than oil and vinegar."

"Well, and what is better than a salad!"

As a matter of fact, though the fiction and the travel in the book do not exactly engage in internecine warfare, the travel distinctly gets the better of the encounter. You might call the thing "Mr. Howells's Impressionist Guide to the Cities of Germany." Hamburg, Leipsic, Carlsbad (which has 150 pages to itself), Nuremberg, Ansbach, Wurzburg (which is honoured by an historical retrospect), Weimar, Berlin, Frankfort, Cologne (exhausted in a couple of paragraphs), Düsseldorf—all these honourable and picturesque burghs come in for treatment. The touch throughout is the touch of Howells at his best—quaint, tidy, over so slyly humorous, diverting always. As for the plot, constructed upon flirtations and more serious affairs, it is negligible. We have enjoyed this mild and urbane volume, so much so that we are ready to condone its excessive length—over six hundred pages.

Lao-Ti the Celestial. By M. Bird.
(Hutchinson & Co. 6s.)

THE writer who endeavours to interest us in a story which has China for scene, a Chinaman for hero, and Chinese ideas as motive grapples with a difficult task; and it must be admitted that the creator of Lao-Ti has performed his task passably well. In order to enjoy the story the reader must, morally and intellectually, stand on his head, or he will not appreciate the inverted view of the Chinese. It will be difficult for the average Englishman to sympathise with a celestial who, wildly in love with his brother's widow, persuades her that she must seek her dead husband's soul by way of the "rope necklace"; the average English widow will scarcely enter into the feelings of Sien-sha, who determines dutifully to hang herself before an admiring crowd; nor would a European, lying at the point of death, find much consolation in the knowledge that his coffin was being made, and made with extra care, by an enemy who thought he was making it for himself. But the Chinese are different.

Later on that evening, as quiet fell on the barges, the regular tap-tap-tap of Yen-Chin's hammer came fitfully to their ears. Lao-Ti bent over Li-Chio, to whom consciousness had returned.

"Do you hear that knocking?" he asked.

"What?" queried Li-Chio faintly.

"It is Yen-Chin, who makes a grand coffin; and it is for you," he said.

Li-Chio listened with a keener interest, and smiled contentedly as the rhythmical pat-pat filled the silence.

"How very good you are," he said weakly. "You think of everything." And, still smiling, fell asleep.

The book is well written, though somewhat diffuse, since the plot will hardly carry the pages. One feels the desire to compress rather than the longing to know more; but the atmosphere, whether it be Chinese or not, is precisely the atmosphere we expect in a Chinese novel.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the week's Fiction are not necessarily final.
Reviews of a selection will follow.]

RESURRECTION.

By COUNT TOLSTOY.

This is the complete version of the Russian novelist's new story, which has been appearing serially all over the Continent and in this country. In Russia the censor has interfered considerably with the text; but in the English edition, translated by Louise Maude, it is given in full. Thirty-three realistic and very interesting drawings have been made for the book by Pasternak, a Russian artist. (Henderson. 6s. net.)

LOGAN'S LOYALTY.

By SARAH TYTLER.

This popular novelist has solved the Scottish dialect question in her own way. Thus in this Highland story of the time of Waterloo we read: "Canny, Logan, canny (be quiet), you hurt me most of all when you give him the wyte (blame) of whatever is wrong." And, again: "'You are too good for him, mother,' persists Logan, 'for what is he with all his gifts and graces but a cankered carle?' (crabbed elderly man)." (John Long. 6s.)

AMONG THE MAN EATERS.

By JOHN GAGGIN.

A thrilling story of cannibalism in the New Hebrides and Solomon Islands. "Most of what I have written," says the author, "has come, at one time or other, under my own observation, and it is correct." The volume is added to the excellent "Over-Seas Library." (Unwin. 2s.)

MAITLAND OF CORTEZIA.

By F. L. PUXLEY.

Cortezia is a Spanish republic under British rule; Maitland is the British Administrator; and Mareinar is the chief of the National Party, who demand a wider franchise and judges of their own appointment. Maitland's resistance of their claims is not rendered less obnoxious by the circumstance that he loves Mercedes, who is loved by Mareinar. In the end comes a stirring revolution. A good story. (Richards. 6s.)

SIR WALTER'S WIFE.

By EMILY RICHINGS.

The heroine of this story is Elizabeth Throgmorton, the wife of Sir Walter Raleigh, and the novel reader is assured that the story has been built up from papers in the Record Office, and from the works of half a dozen historians. Indeed, the preface seems to herald a serious history rather than a novel. (Drane. 6s.)

A HOST OF THORNS.

By H. COSTERTON-WILKINSON.

A story of agreeable conventional sentiment written round the "Old Hall." "The Old Hall was hallowed by many a legend. . . 'Thoughts, dearie—thoughts.' . . . Dr. Pierce had pronounced concussion of the brain. . . 'That's my box,' she said to a passing official. . . Mrs. Lee saw the riderless horse galloping up the avenue. . . 'Oh, d—— it all,' exclaimed Rivers, stamping up and down and disappearing through the shrubbery. . . 'Grace, I shall love you for ever.'" (Simpkin Marshall.)

A MARTIAL MAID.

By ANNE ELLIOT.

Claire Bertram is the martial maid, but her fighting is not with lethal weapons. She fights in the interests of Theodore Leyburn, touching whose birth were many odd circumstances. For Theodore's mother was shipwrecked off Cape Town, and lost her memory for a year (in which Theodore was born); and meanwhile Theodore's father, in England, believing himself a widower, had married again. And when her memory returned, and she discovered this marriage, Theodore's mother did not interfere, but died in reality and left Theodore's claims to recognition to the martial maid. (Hurst & Blackett. 6s.)

MARY PAGET.

By MINNA C. SMITH.

A story of old Bermuda, based on historical documents in Lefroy's Memorials of the Bermudas. It purports to be written by Mary Paget herself. Mary was the wife of Collingwood Paget, one of those who sailed in the Sea-Venture with Admiral Summers in 1609, and was wrecked on Smith's Island: an accident which led to the acquisition of England's first colony. A pretty, old-fashioned, simple story. (Macmillan. 6s.)

THE GIRL AT RIVERFIELD MANOR.

By PERRINGTON PRIM.

Riverford Manor is on the banks of the Mersey, but the story opens, where it ends, in Kalara Bungalow, in the Queensland bush. A pleasant love-story with spacious backgrounds. (F. V. White & Co. 6s.)

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates for Yearly Subscriptions ..... 20s. including postage.

American Agents for the ACADEMY: Brentano's, 31, Union-square, New York.

The Revolution in Journalism.

An Enquiry.

It is a common saying of literary reactionaries that this is an era of "bits," "cuts," and "snippets," that the taste of the reading public is fatally impaired, and that the golden ages which began with Chaucer are for ever closed. Our bookstalls (they lament) "groan" with "trash" that can appeal only to the half-instructed, while serious productions of an improving and solid nature ask in vain for attention. Such, stated briefly and stripped of vituperative epithets, is the indictment. The answer to it is, as to part, that it is unsupported by evidence; and, as to the rest, that the present condition of our bookstalls, deplorable though it may seem to the myopic and unimaginative, betokens not decadence, but progress. The praisers of times past, in their narrow survey of an epoch, have overlooked two important phenomena—the Education Act of 1870 and the growth of commercial enterprise. The Education Act created a new reading public, a public not to be confused with that which bought Macaulay—and Martin Tupper. This new public had no tradition of self-culture by means of books. It found itself with the mechanical power to read, but with neither the habit of reading nor the disciplined intellect which are both necessary to render that mechanical power effective. Put it in a library, and it was as helpless as a sparrow tugging at a biscuit. It felt a desire for what its detractors have called "literary pabulum," but it could not define its need further than to assert positively that the stuff offered was unsuitable.

Then, with the hour, came the man. The man happened upon a nice, interesting little paragraph in a newspaper, and, enjoying it, said: "That is a real tit-bit. Why should there not be a paper consisting entirely of such things?" Memorable and momentous words, making a historical occasion which was the inception at once of Sir George Newnes's vast fortune and of a whole publishing movement! Tit-Bits appeared, and was copied and elaborated in numberless forms. The innovation was welcomed not only by the public of the Education Act, but by a large section of the older public which had hitherto sought fruitlessly for what it wanted. The conjunction of these two masses, so different in everything except the lack of artistic and intellectual culture, produced a market gloriously dazzling to the commercial instinct. Lancashire discovering India was not more profoundly stirred than the man of commerce when the success of the Tit-Bits school of journalism indicated to him the existence of this market, which his instinct told him might be indefinitely strengthened and widened by a due application of mercantile methods of nursing. The man of commerce knew well the lesson enforced again and again by a series of checks to British trade in various parts of the world during the last two decades. He knew the reproach against England that the British merchant always seeks to dictate to the buyer what he shall buy; and he could see that this had applied in a peculiar degree to English journalism. At once he effected a revolution, and the attitude of publisher to public was radically changed. The public, which hitherto had accepted meekly what the publisher provided, found itself elevated to a throne, with the publisher obsequiously bowing at the foot thereof. The old autocrats of Maga and Cornhill may be conceived as saying to their readers: "This is good for you; in consideration of a just payment we permit you to read it." And when these august periodicals were issued, the readers approached the perusal of them, certainly with some pleasure, but also with the austere and braced feeling of duty to be performed. The modern editor proceeds upon a different path. He explores the nature of the demand to be met as patiently and thoroughly as a German manufacturer. With a mixture of logic and cynicism he states boldly that what people ought to want is no affair of his, and in ascertaining precisely what they in fact do want, he never loses sight of the great philosophic truth that man is a frail creature. He assiduously ministers to human infirmities. The public would like to read, to instruct itself, educate itself, amuse itself, elevate itself, but—no effort and no sacrifice must be involved in the process. The way must be made straight, every obstacle shifted, every lion killed in advance. Inducements must be offered, and all the yielding must be on one side. Only by such means can a new market, however vast potentially, be set upon a secure and steady basis. The new tactics could not fail to prosper, and they prospered beyond any expectation; their prosperity was so conspicuous that the most stiff-necked and conservative purveyors of literature were fain to adopt them.

If it should be asked what is the immediate, or what will be the ultimate, result of this revolution, now so completely accomplished that the ancient condition of things is already forgotten, the reply would be that the one is not unfavourable and the other will surely be favourable. Let us admit that the new school of journalism, especially in regard to periodicals not newspapers, has in a sense swamped and flowed over the old; that was inevitable, seeing that the output of to-day is probably a hundred times that of twenty years ago. Let us admit that the "tone" (mysterious attribute!) of even the best organs has lost some of its former fine austerity under the contagion of modern methods: that does not prove that the general taste has declined; it proves rather that journalism, as directed by the commercial idea, is a truer mirror of the general taste than once it was. Why, indeed, should the general taste have declined? Why should it not have improved with the improvement of civilisation? Since our poets and novelists spring from the common stock, is not the multitudinousness of these, and the comparatively high level of their technical excellence, some proof that the inclination towards literary art is gaining frequency among us? For poets and novelists must still be born, must still be the result of inherited traits and of environment. Let us admit, lastly, that any representative modern journal is, judged by the absolute standard, compact of offence to nostrils delicate enough to appreciate fully the virtues of comeliness, quietude, and asceticism in art and culture. What then? There are degrees. Most questions are questions of degree. Is it not better that the man in the street, a creature scorned but nevertheless admirably unaffected, should read an English sixpenny magazine than that he should read, say, the Sunday edition of the New York Journal? And is it not better that he should read the Sunday edition of the New York Journal than that he should read nothing? Ignorance and indifference are the worst. A "smattering"—poor, despised achievement—is finer than these. And the crudest excitement of the imaginative faculty is to be preferred to a swinish preoccupation with the gross physical existence. Therefore, when those of us with delicate nostrils happen to pass the bookstalls which "groan" with offence, let us, casting off the mere dandyism of art, remember that these same bookstalls disclose the germ of a tremendous movement, and that everything must have a beginning. E. A. B.

Thomas Hardy: an Enthusiasm.

Two men were discussing Thomas Hardy.

"His influence," said the younger, "is not solely the influence of a master of style. He has perfected the novel: a very lofty genius shall have arisen when Hardy's art as a novelist ceases to be the standard. He ideally completes his work. One may go back and try to discover how the enthralment, the absolute illusion, was wrought; but one must go on first simply believing. Hardy is a great thinker, a great seer, a great humanist—I had almost added a great poet; and, indeed, in the true, if not the conventional, sense he is that also."

"But," said the elder, "isn't he a bit of a pagan?"

"No, no! He has something of the philosophy of Marcus Aurelius. But he is certainly not a pagan according to the paganism so commonly expressed in modern literature—the puling, giggling, sniggling effeminacy that dawdles in utter cowardice and atrophy of soul about the pleasant weak things of sybaritic existence. Hardy is not content with sunning himself in decadent egoism by the shores of old romance. He is a man every inch of him! He has power; and he has the tenderness, passion, and pure emotion without which power in literature is no more admirable or spiritually significant than power in building a stone wall or laying a drain-pipe. But he has more than all this: he has an unerring conception of moral order—so unerring is it that he seems to be incapable of allowing wrongdoers to escape the consequences of their wrongdoing. He will weep over them, shelter them as long as he can under his wonderful sympathy. But he won't—he can't let them off!"

"I confess," said the elder, "that Hardy hasn't struck me in this light. Do you suggest, then, that he has what is called faith?"

"I not only suggest it, I assert it as being the only intelligent criticism of his work. One sees it everywhere—in his all-pervading compassion, in his terrible Hebraic inevitableness, in his power to bring his reader down to the dust in solemn questioning of the mysteries of life and death. He takes us to the doors of tragedy, of terror, and we gaze in and are purified. Reading him I have stopped to cover my eyes with my hand; he has shown me more than I could bear, and my soul has craved to be alone in the silence and stillness of an awful isolation. That, of course, is the ascendancy of genius; all the industrious talent under the sun could not do it. There are people—I have scarce patience to speak of them!—who say that Hardy is at war with heaven. God help that heaven! Hardy's so-called blasphemy is nobler and more instinct with faith than are the loud hosannahs of other men."

"But," said the elder, "what about Tess and Jude?"

The young man sprang to his feet, his eyes aflame. "Those books have a moral earnestness unequalled in English literature! This might be proved out of the mouths of the men who have had the incredible arrogance—or the sheer stupidity—to condemn them on the ground of morality. A bookseller told me that immediately after the review in the Pall Mall Gazette, infamously headed 'Jude the Obscene' (Ah, the shame, the shame, the infamy of it!), he had orders for the book from four men of notoriously loose life; and with one consent they came back and protested that that was not at all the sort of thing they wanted. Hardy has suffered, especially in recent years, from misrepresentation; for every pure and unique thing is liable to vitiation by impure and ignoble minds. And I don't think that even the finest critics yet realise how great a book Jude the Obscure is. They are, perhaps, content to leave it to the judgment of posterity. It sums up all the weariness and unrest, all the vague haunting terrors of this strange generation. It will be the most graphically suggestive of all documents to the religious and ethical historians of our ago. It is a beacon set on a hill, and we are gazing from the valley of our humiliation, and cannot quite comprehend. It is prophetic: one hears in it the cries of men afraid of that which is high and that which is in the way—the breaking of the golden bowl at the mud-poisoned fountain of a materialised civilisation; one sees in it the waning of the stars of hope, the shadows of the long night that is falling upon us. Ah!—think—think—Hardy can't help that! But he loves the truth; he faces it with brave sad eyes that are only dim with pity; and he must proclaim it. Jude the Obscure is a sublimely courageous appeal to the Lord God Omnipotent to have mercy once more upon His wandering children of the bondage. Believe me, so great a mind as Hardy's could not be profane! To think that you must imagine the deity of the littlest of Little Bethels! Surely he is great in the Christ-like way—because he dares to look on sorrow; dares to hold sorrow by the hand and call out for succour in the wilderness of an eclipsed faith almost universal in the world and in the Church. So of old the prophets called, and it was accounted unto them for righteousness. You know how precious exquisite workmanship is to me; and in this Hardy is my master. But literature that is beautiful merely in its technique is, after all, one of the luxuries of the intellectual Scribes and Pharisees. It cannot appease the deep perplexities and longings of the human heart. To do that it must be for all—like the parables of our Lord—not simply for two or three gathered together in the often unholy and more often selfish name of culture. It must touch the soul; and to do that it must possess what is at once the higher and the lowlier distinction of obedience to the moral law. There may be revolt, for man is weak, and foolish in his pride, and genius must express itself even at the footstool of the Eternal. But—as in Thomas Hardy—there will be acquiescence; and that in literature is the power that consoles, and inspires, and lives."

VINCENT BROWN.

The Amateur Critic.

Commendatory Verses.

ONE of the many features of interest in the folio editions of Shakespeare's plays are the verses contributed by the author's friends in commendation of his work. It is there that one finds the two most notable poems that have been written on Shakespeare—namely, Ben Jonson's lines on the Droeshout portrait, and the "Swan of Avon" poem. The custom was a popular one in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, especially in the case of a posthumous publication such as the folio Shakespeare. In modern reprints, however, these first generous tributes of Hugh Holland and L. Digges, with Heminge and Condell's "Dedication," and their address "To the great variety of Readers," are no longer to be found: fashion has eliminated them. The subject is one which would bear writing upon at some length, but my present object is to put in a plea for the revival of commendatory verses. Some years ago Mr. Herne Shepherd printed in front of his edition of Chapman's Homer three such poems, including Keats's sonnet. And Mr. Gollancz, to excellent purpose, has provided each volume of the "Temple Shakespeare" with a commendatory poem. I should like, I say, to see this practice revived; for instance, I would prefix "Adonais" to Keats's poems; in Shelley I would give Browning's "Memorabilia" and Swinburne's "Cor Cordium"; in Chatterton I would have the notable verse from Wordsworth's "Resolution and Independence" and Coleridge's "Monody"; Browning should have Landor's fine sonnet and George Meredith's "To Brown ing Dead in Venice."

OLIVER GREEN.

A Book that Held Me.

I HAD rummaged the little corner of the Edinburgh University Library devoted to fiction for a novel. I was turning away empty-handed when my eye fell upon a thin volume in a corner. It was alone there, very forlorn looking in the gloom. I took it, never even glancing at the name. I read it, read it pantingly—devoured it is the right expression, I believe. I read it yet again, and it held me, and for three nights I tossed and dozed and dreamed. That girl—oh, most alluring and pitiful creature of man's imagination—that snakelike nature with its surging, curbed humanity—the idea of it baffled me. The child-like question buzzed—can't be true? Gradually the insistence of the question subsided, and, though little less moved by the poignant anguish of Elsie Venner, the beauty of the novelist's message appeared. I was an ardent youngster, and the desperate righteousness of the message, conveyed so kindly, so humorously, so whimsically, and I think I may add so passionately, fired my soul. I have since seen the same subject of human responsibility thrashed out by philosophers of dry, shackled minds, but the kindly generous lesson of Oliver Wendell Holmes seems best to hear.

As a story, the book has innumerable faults, but it is good to read; it leaves the mind sweeter and gives one a tenderer thought for faulty humanity. It is hard to read too; but the tears it compels are cleansing.

JOHN MACLEAY.

Dismal Fiction.

THERE is a popular belief that for every one novel reader who delights in having his feelings harrowed there are, perhaps, ten who go to Mudie's for something that is, if not exactly humorous, at least not doleful. But it does not argue that because the few books of a cheerful character published in the course of a year attain great success that public preference is given to them. Perhaps the gift of humour is rare; at any rate, the output of well-written novels with bad endings is far greater than of those that end well. There is little doubt that novels of a sad, if not tragic, cast are read by a large public, which is attracted rather than repelled by their sombre tones. The typical tragic novel is that from which the feeling of impending doom is never entirely absent; it may be relieved by the occasional introduction of some comic element, which does not, however, serve to dispel the gloom, for it is part of its atmosphere. Is it not the same ἀνάγκη that fascinated the old Greek playgoer which now attracts the modern novel reader? It may be the secret of the fascination of the "unhappy ending"; the following of that relentless fate which pursues the characters to the last chapter. During the past forty years the tendency of the great writers of fiction has been travelling in the direction of tragedy—witness the works of Turgenev, of Tolstoi, of Flaubert, of Hugo, of Thomas Hardy. At an earlier date it was otherwise; save for a few notable exceptions, the novels of Fielding, Scott, Miss Austen, Dickens, and Thackeray end well. An editor told me only the other day that among his unsolicited contributions powerful stories on tragic or painful lines so greatly predominate that he has often to decline excellent work for this reason alone, while he is in absolute want of stories in a cheerful vein. The slum novel as it is now known is, comparatively speaking, a new field for tragic writing, and its popularity is doubtless the result as much of mere curiosity as of a morbid love of the dismal; it has presented a new and sensational phase of life to the novel reader who delights in striking contrasts. In the hands of a writer of Mr. Arthur Morrison's power the gloom of the slum novel is much relieved by his native wit and fancy; but from a less capable pen it is a form of fiction that is far from pleasant.

O.

Correspondence.

Stevenson's Beginnings.

SIR,—The account of the origin of Treasure Island given by Mr. Robert Leighton in your last week's issue is at several points so much mistaken that I have asked Dr. A. H. Japp to tell the story in his own words. I herewith append his communication, which I think may interest your readers.—I am, &c.,

SIDNEY COLVIN.

British Museum: March 7, 1900.

"R. L. S. had often heard of me through friends of his in Edinburgh, and when I printed a letter in the Spectator about Thoreau, he wrote to me wishing to know me personally, and asking if I would soon be in Edinburgh, as he was going there to be for some time with his father and mother in Heriot Row. He found the Edinburgh east wind too much for him, and wrote to me, after some weeks, saying that he had to make 'new tracks,' and that he had gone with his parents to somewhere near Pitlochry, not far from his beloved Tummel, the 'wale o' Scotland,' as he called it. Still, my holiday and journey to Scotland were delayed, and again I was informed that the family had made another move, and had gone to the Cottage, Castle-town of Braemar. There, accordingly, I went as invited, and stayed some days—days that are delightful to me to think of. The pastime of the afternoon was the reading of a chapter of a romance of adventure, which had been begun mainly with the idea of interesting Sam [Mr. Lloyd Osbourne], his stepson, as Stevenson himself says, giving him 'something craggy to break his boy-mind on.' Stevenson himself tells that, as this had already gone on for a week or two, the kindly feeling of the family retreated from the idea of inflicting the former mutilated members of 'The Sea-Cook' on me; but I implored them not to deprive me of that pleasure, as I was sure 'my pleasure' would relieve them from any notion of 'infliction'; and in Stevenson's little attic there, where he wrote and worked, I listened to him reading those earlier chapters. And such reading—dramatic, varied skilfully in tone and inflection, as his slim body gently swayed in his characteristic fashion; MS. in hand as he read, and now and then swaying too—as I shall never forget. His father was as keenly interested in the story as Sam Osbourne was; his enjoyment was shown in his expression, and his judgment in occasional suggestions offered after the reading; and sometimes Mrs. Stevenson would put in a sagacious word too. It was a delightful mélange every way. I had thus heard the whole of the story in first pencil draught before I left. One half of the story, which had been revised carefully and recopied, I brought away with me in my portmanteau, with the view of insuring that it should be printed, and not lost to the world as dozens of Mr. Stevenson's former story efforts had been; and, though I had then no connexion whatever with Mr. James Henderson, whom I knew as coming from my own district in Scotland, I took the story to him—very proud, I confess, to be able to tell him that I had brought him 'a work of genius.' He accepted the story, as I had been able to give him an outline of the whole plot, and though he did not give quite so much as I had hoped for my 'work of genius,' yet it was something, and an assurance of perhaps more to come; since R. L. S. kept his copyright. Almost all the copy of the story passed through my hands to Mr. Henderson, who was never introduced to Stevenson by me, in any formal sense; but getting, of course, into correspondence with Mr. H. about proofs, R. L. S. naturally called to see him early in the following summer as he passed through London to Bournemouth; when, on special terms offered by Mr. Henderson, he agreed to write the 'Black Arrow.' This, strangely enough, had much more pull on Young Folks' readers than the more artistic 'Treasure Island' had had.

Mr. Leighton, therefore, is quite wrong in his statement that Mr. Henderson offered to take a story from the young Scotsman, 'and gave him papers indicating the kind of story he wanted.' Treasure Island was written absolutely for the sake of writing it, and in conformity with the ideas suggested by the map which R. L. S. had elaborately drawn and coloured in sympathetic competition with his clever boy step-son, as he himself tells in the Idler article (reprinted in the volume My First Book); so that the statement that he found and adopted many incidents from Billy Bo's'n is thus wholly met and disposed of.

The alterations on the final book form of Treasure Island were really slight.

ALEXANDER H. JAPP."

A Personal Explanation.

SIR,—In reference to a paragraph in your last issue relating to myself, will you permit me to explain that I don't "deserve the harmless appellation of 'chaplain to Punch'" except for the reason that it has given some people a false impression of my connexion with the paper. I am proud to be a frequent contributor to it, but I am not a member of the staff. And when a recent contribution of mine to another journal figured on the title-page as "By the chaplain of Punch," a number of strangers assumed that I make frivolous literature my one occupation. Thereupon they showered reproachful letters on me, suggesting that I am breaking my ordination vows! When one is being driven off their legs by parish work, and preaching five or six times a week, as I am throughout Lent, this seems a rather undeserved reproach to hurl at a humble curate who writes frivolous verse and prose as a recreation, and as a means of supplementing a not munificent stipend.

Nearly all my lighter literary work appears over my signature or initials. I am not in the least ashamed of it. But ashamed I should be, and rightly so, if—as these people have been led to imagine—I made it the main business of my life after taking holy orders.—I am, &c.,

ANTHONY C. DEANE.

March 5, 1900.

"Cog" and "Mich."

SIR,—I write with no eye, either single or double, towards your Prize Competition; but here, if I mistake not, are two good old English and good old Shakespearian words which should not be allowed—in President Grover Cleveland's phrase—to lapse into desuetude.

One of these words is "mich," in the sense of "play truant"; the other is "cog," used of a schoolboy who dishonestly purloins matter from his neighbour's slate. People now say "copy," but "cog" is by all odds the better word.

Both "mich" and "cog" were words very familiar to my youthful ears. But, you see, that was a long time ago.

By the way, in Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night" Maria describes Malvolio as one "that cons state without book." Maria's meaning is anything but clear. Suppose we read "cogs stole wit out of books"—would not the phrase become at once much more intelligible and pertinent?

Passaic, New Jersey:

JOHN BAXTER.

Feb. 18, 1900.

New Books Received.

[These notes on some of the New Books of the week are preliminary to Reviews that may follow.]

LAVENGRO.

BY GEORGE BORROW.

Prof. Knapp's edition of Borrow's works is inaugurated by the appearance of this well-equipped volume. The correct text of 1851 is followed, and certain passages needlessly suppressed by Borrow are restored. Prof. Knapp's notes are rigidly compressed and are dictated by need—not zeal. (John Murray. 6s.)

A BOOK OF IRISH VERSE. SELECTED BY W. B. YEATS.

The Young Ireland movement is exhibited, and will be stimulated, by this collection of verse inspired by Irish ideals, and Irish models, and written by Irish men and women in the last two centuries. We refer elsewhere to the hope with which Mr. Yeats regards the poetical future of Ireland. (Methuen.)

THE SYMBOLIST MOVEMENT IN LITERATURE.

BY ARTHUR SYMONS.

We acknowledge elsewhere the need for a statement of the aims of the modern "symbolists." Mr. Symons attempts to supply the need by critical sketches of such symbolists as Gérard de Nerval, Rimbaud, Verlaine, Larfargue, Mallarmé, Huysmans, and Maeterlinck. "To spiritualise literature, to evade the old bondage of rhetoric, the old bondage of exteriority"—such, Mr. Symons tells us, is the aim of these men. (Heinemann.)

NOTES FROM A DIARY, 1886-1888.

BY THE RT. HON. SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF.

Sir M. E. Grant Duff continues his reminiscences, of which six volumes have already appeared, from the date of his departure from Madras. He hopes to continue his anecdotal diary to the last day of 1900, so that it will cover just half a century. (Murray. 2 vols.)

PASSAGES IN A WANDERING LIFE. BY THOMAS ARNOLD.

This is the autobiography of a younger brother of Matthew Arnold. As the title of his book implies, Mr. Arnold has been a great traveller. After alluding to Dr. Arnold's precept to his children—work, Mr. Arnold remarks half regretfully on his abandonment of Oxford life and his emigration to New Zealand. The frontispiece portrait of Mr. Arnold strikingly recalls his distinguished brother. (Edward Arnold. 12s. 6d.)

THE MORALS OF SUICIDE. BY REV. J. GURNHILL.

Granted that a book against suicide is needed, or that its "morals" can be usefully discussed, this is a learned and thoughtful examination of the subject. The author approaches suicide from the standpoint of a Christian Socialist, and the metaphysical element is banished from his pages. (Longmans. 6s.)

COLLECTED WRITINGS OF SAMUEL LAYCOCK.

Lancashire men and women, and all who are interested in local poetry, will find in this volume a well-edited selection of Laycock's verses. Only verse written for passing occasions, or conspicuously below the author's ordinary level, has been excluded. The volume is therefore a purified, and also an expanded, edition of Laycock's volume, Warblin's fro' an Owd Songster. Why not have retained this old personal title? Laycock sang of all the domestic and industrial life of Lancashire, though he was not above celebrating his own minor troubles in verse; witness the poem, "Oh, this Boil!" The illustrator, Mr. F. W. Jackson, has caught the poet's spirit admirably. (Oldham: Clegg.)

In addition to the foregoing, we have received :

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

Little (W. J. Knox), A Manual of Devotion for Lent .....	(Iabister)	6/0
Adderley (James), The Epistle of St. James. With Notes for General Readers .....	(Wells Gardner)	2/6
Bourdillon (Rev. F.), Handfuls Plucked and Rubbed in Walking through the Field of the Word of God .....	(Wells Gardner)	2/6
Dearmer (Rev. Percy), The Little Lives of the Saints .....	(Wells Gardner)	2/6

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

Dickinson (W. H.), King Arthur in Cornwall .....	(Longmans)	4/6
Adams (Charles F.), American Statesmen: Charles Francis Adams .....	(Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)	5/0
Dimock (Rev. A.), Cathedral Series: St. Paul's .....	(Bell)	1/6
Bonsal (Stephen), The Golden Horseshoe .....	(Macmillan)	6/0

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

Wheeler (Mrs. C. H.), Missions in Eden: Glimpses of Life in the Valley of the Euphrates .....	(Olipphant)	3/6
---	-------------	-----

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

Burnet (John), The Ethics of Aristotle .....	(Methuen)	net 15/0
Charities Register and Digest: 1900 .....	(Longmans)	4/0

EDUCATIONAL.

Higham (J.), Ivanhoe. School Edition .....	(Black)	1/6
--	---------	-----

MISCELLANEOUS.

Muret-Sanders Encyclopædic English-German and German-English Dictionary. Abridged Edition .....	(Grevel & Co.)	2/6
Reid (Herbert), Play the Man: Talks with Boys on the Battle of Life .....	(Olipphant)	2/6
Aikin (W. A.), The Voice: Its Physiology and Cultivation .....	(Macmillan)	3/6
Carpenter (J. E.), Soldier Songs .....	(Warne & Co.)	1/0
Lucas (J. J. S.), Nordrach at Home, or Hygienic Treatment of Consumption .....	(Arrowsmith)	1/0
Gould (F. J.), Will Women Help? .....	(Watts & Co.)	1/0
Smart (W.), Taxation of Land Values and the Single Tax .....	(Maclehose)	1/0
Leland (Charles Godfrey) and Ward (H. Snowden), Useful Arts and Handicrafts .....	(Dawbarn & Ward)	net 7/6

NEW EDITIONS.

Rossetti (D. G.), Poems (Siddal Edition): Containing "Dante at Verona," &c. ....		7/6
Choimondeley (Mary), Diana Tempest .....	(Macmillan)	7/6
Foster (M.) and Rivers (W. H. R.), A Text Book of Physiology .....	(Macmillan)	10/6
Paikin (George R.), Edward Thring: Life, Diary, and Letters .....	(Macmillan)	6/0
Sterne (Laurence), Tristram Shandy and Sentimental Journey, 2 Vols. ....	(Macmillan)	7/0
Stanley (Arthur Peurhyn), Life and Correspondence of Thomas Arnold, D.D. ....	(Ward, Lock)	2/0

* * * New Novels are acknowledged elsewhere.

The Best Sunday Books.

Our Weekly Competition.

Result of No. 24 (New Series).

We asked last week for lists of ten Sunday books for children, that branch of nursery literature having been somewhat disregarded in recent inquiries into children's reading. A large number of answers has resulted, dealing with which it seems best to adopt the method of judgment by general sense. According to this method the following are the best ten Sunday books, against each being placed the number of votes it has received :

Pilgrim's Progress (Bunyan) ... ..	31
Parables from Nature (Mrs. Gatty) ... ..	15
Ministering Children (Mrs. Charlesworth) ... ..	13
Agathos (Wilberforce) ... ..	10
The Story of a Short Life (Mrs. Ewing) ... ..	8
The Book of Golden Deeds (Miss Yonge) ... ..	9
The Child's Book of Saints (Canton) ... ..	7
The Prince of the House of David (Ingraham) ... ..	7
Jessica's First Prayer (Hesba Stretton) ... ..	7
The Child's Bible ... ..	6

The list that comes nearest to this selection is that sent in by Mr. John B. Payne, The College, Winchester, which runs thus :

The Child's Bible.
Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress.
Wilberforce's Agathos.
Life of Our Lord (Mrs. Marshall).
Hebrew Heroes (A. L. O. E.).
Palgrave's Treasury of Sacred Song.
The Wide Wide World.
Prince of the House of David.
Throne of David.
Jessica's First Prayer.

Replies received also from J. R. M., London; P. L. N., York; M. H. C., Cambridge; C. M. W., Meltham; E. M. T., London; M. T., Hull; A. B. S., Epworth; M. F., Bridgworth; G. N., Clifton; A. C., Edinburgh; R. H., Carlisle; M. A. W., London; C. W., London; W. P., London; R. W., Sutton; H. W., London; C. F., Chard; E. M. W. B., Brighton; D. S., London; G. W., London; A. F., Tiverton; M. H. M., London; C. J., London; J. A. C., London; G. S. T., Redhill; A. B., Isleworth; C. F. P., Caterham; M. S., Beckenham; R. W., Over; Z. M., Whitby; E. K., Ambleside; "Ivy Leaves," Liverpool; M. A. C., Cambridge; R. W. M., London; B. R., London; A. S. M., Hollywood.

Competition No. 25 (New Series).

Two weeks ago, as most of our readers must be aware, an elephant broke away from the Crystal Palace and ran for some miles through Kent, pursued by hundreds of people. After many hours he was tracked to a wood near Bromley, captured, and then led back to Sydenham in triumphant procession. We ask our readers to celebrate this unusual event in verse, not exceeding fourteen lines. The poem may take the form of narrative, or an address to the elephant.

RULES.

Answers, addressed "Literary Competition, THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Tuesday, March 13. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found in the first column of p. 212, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. We wish to impress on competitors that the task of examining replies is much facilitated when one side only of the paper is written upon. It is also important that names and addresses should always be given. We cannot consider anonymous answers.

OUR SPECIAL PRIZE COMPETITIONS.

(For particulars see inside page of cover.)

Received during the week: Sappho, Blank, Paul Roman, Vilmar, John Cragdon, Derryillawn, The Chestnut Cat, Chaffinch, Iris, Adam, Columbia, Lyra, Irene, Tabberwock, Norlan C-It, Infelix, "The Boy Guessed Right," Salopean, Sandwich, Tantalus, Felix Stowe, Grange, Francis le Steing, Lois, George, Laurie, Burley, Marabau, Azul.

HARPER & BROTHERS' PUBLICATIONS

NEW FICTION.

JUST OUT.

THEIR SILVER WEDDING JOURNEY.

Cloth, 6s.

"Travel and tale blend happily in this delightful book. The best work Mr. Howells has done."—Speaker

"Admirably realised and maintained throughout."—Spectator.

THIRD EDITION NOW PREPARING.

MR. H. B. MARRIOTT WATSON'S NEW NOVEL.

THE PRINCESS XENIA. Illustrated. Cloth, 6s.

"In plot the story is boldly invented, seethes with intrigue and excitement, and ends happily."—Spectator.

"Distinctly clever and original."—Birmingham Gazette.

"We would place 'The Princess Xenia' in the very forefront of modern romance."—Pall Mall.

THE BARRYS: a Novel. By SHAN F. BULLOCK,

Author of "The Charmer," &c. Cloth, 6s.

"Mr. Bullock's novel is the best we have read this autumn. Every scene, every character, grips the heart."—British Weekly.

"A story that makes a strong appeal to human sympathies, and shows a keen knowledge of human nature."—Bookman.

TALES of SPACE and TIME. By H. G.

WELLS, Author of "When the Sleeper Wakes," "The Time Machine," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"Mr. Wells never for a moment fails to maintain his grip on the reader. That is why his stories are so deservedly popular."—Manchester Guardian.

"The ingenuity with which the abiding principles of romance are adapted to the imaginary conditions of the mechanical millennium is nothing short of masterly."—Spectator.

NINTH THOUSAND.

WHEN the SLEEPER WAKES: a Story

of the Years to Come. By H. G. WELLS. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"A brilliant effort, both of the imagination and of erudition."—Queen.

WITH SWORD and CRUCIFIX. By E. S.

VAN ZILE. Crown 8vo, cloth ornamental, 6s. Illustrated. A Story of De la Salle's last voyage on the Mississippi.

LONDON AND NEW YORK.

THE PRINCESS HELENA COLLEGE

EALING, W.
Established 1820. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1886.
President—H.R.H. the PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.
High-class education for the DAUGHTERS of GENTLEMEN as Resident or Day Pupils. Preparation for University and Art Examinations. Spacious grounds. Supervision in games.
Training department for kindergarten students in preparation for Froebel Union Examination for Teachers.
There is a Home in connection with the College for K.G. Students and for a few children under ten years of age.
MARGARET WILLIAMSON, Lady Principal.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.—

FORTHCOMING EXAMINATION.
DRAUGHTSMAN in the Hydrographic Department of the Admiralty (17-25). 13th March.
Expertise in Hydrographical Chart Drawing essential.
The date specified is the latest at which applications can be received. They must be made on forms to be obtained, with particulars, from the SECRETARY, Civil Service Commission, London, S.W.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING

COLLEGE, Cooper's Hill, Staines.
The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for Employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1900. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition—Twelve Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphs Department, and One in the Accountants' Branch of W.P.D.—For particulars apply to SECRETARY, at College.

WIMBLEDON HIGH SCHOOL.—Mrs. J. T. FRENCH receives GIRLS as BOARDERS at Lydenhurst, Woodside, Wimbledon. Reference permitted to Miss Hastings, Head Mistress, the Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne, Bishop and Mrs. Barry, Col and Mrs. Chevevix Truich, and others.

High-Class Bookbinding.

Valuable Books and MS. Bound and Repaired with great care. Miscellaneous Books bound in any style or pattern.

JOHN FAZAKERLEY,
40, Paradise Street, LIVERPOOL

CATALOGUES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick St. Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S

TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed CATALOGUE sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

STORIES, ARTICLES, &c. accurately Typed.
Punctuation and revision when desired. Absolute reliability. Highest references from London Editors and Authors.—Write Miss FAREND, 62, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.
—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have especially built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 5, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices free. Advertising and Publishing Departments connected.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. 10d. per 1,000 words. Samples and references. Multi-Copies.—Address, Miss E. M., 19, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TYPE-WRITER.—AUTHORS' MSS.
COPIED with accuracy and despatch. Carbon Duplicates. Circulation Papers, &c.—Miss E. TROAS, 23, Maitland Park Villas, Haverstock Hill, N.W.—Established 1884

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in doing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 151, Strand, London, W.C.

"THE ACADEMY"

LITERARY COMPETITIONS.
New Series.—No. 25.
All readers attempting this week's Competition (described fully on page 211) must cut out this Coupon and enclose it with their reply.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO

"THE ACADEMY,"

Can still be obtained separately, or the Complete Set for 3s. 6d.

BEN JONSON.
JOHN KEATS.
SIR JOHN SUCKLING.
TOM HOOD.
THOMAS ORAY.
ROBERT L. STEVENSON.
SIR WALTER SCOTT.
SAMUEL RICHARDSON.
THOMAS DE QUINCEY.
LEIGH HUNT.
LORD MACAULAY.
ROBERT SOUTHEY.
S. T. COLERIDGE.
CHARLES LAMB.
MICHAEL DRAYTON.
WALTER S. LANDOR.
SAMUEL PEPYS.
EDMUND WALLER.
WILKIE COLLINS.

JOHN MILTON.
WILLIAM COWPER.
CHARLES DARWIN.
ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON.
HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.
ANDREW MARVELL.
ROBERT BROWNING.
THOMAS CARLYLE.
PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.
CHARLES DICKENS.
JONATHAN SWIFT.
WM. M. THACKERAY.
WILLIAM BLAKE.
SIR RICHARD STEELE.
ALEXANDER POPE.
DOUGLAS JERROLD.
FRANCIS BACON.
HENRIK IBSEN

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

A CHARMING GIFT BOOK!

6s., claret roan, gilt, illustrated.

LONDON IN THE TIME OF THE DIAMOND JUBILEE

London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Llangollen: Darlington & Co.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S. Maps by BARTHOLOMEW.

Fcap. 8vo. ONE SHILLING EACH. Illustrated.

THE VALE OF LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J. PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING; A. W. KINGLAKE, and Sir THEODORE MARTIN K.C.B.

BOURNEMOUTH and NEW FOREST.

THE NORTH WALES COAST.

BRECON and its BEACONS.

ROSS, TINTERN, and CHEPSTOW.

BRISTOL, BATH, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

BRIGHTON, EASTBOURNE, HASTINGS, and ST. LEONARDS.

LLANDUDNO, RHYL, BANGOR, BETTWSYCOED, and SNOWDON.

ABERYSTWYTH, BARMOUTH, MACHYNLETH, and ABERDOVEY.

BARMOUTH, DOLGELLY, HARLECH, CRICCIETH, and PWLLHELI.

MALVERN, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, GLOUCESTER, & CHELTENHAM.

LLANDRINDOD WELLS and the SPAS of MID-WALES.

1s.—THE HOTELS of the WORLD. A Handbook to the leading hotels throughout the world.

"What would not the intelligent tourist in Paris or Rome give for such a guide-book as this, which teaches so much that is outside the usual scope of such volumes!"—The Times.
"The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.

SECOND EDITION, ENLARGED, 6s.—60 Illustrations, 24 Maps and Plans.

LONDON AND ENVIRONS

By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.

With an additional Index of 4,500 References to all Streets and Places of Interest

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & CO.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Ltd., The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY

(LIMITED).

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIA
SPANISH, and RUSSIAN BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, SPANISH, and RUSSIAN BOOKS.

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; 48, Queen Victoria Street, E.C., LONDON;

And at Barton Arcade, MANCHESTER.

Now Ready, Second Edition, crown 8vo, cloth boards 1s. 6d., post free.

THE CHARTER of the CHURCH. Lectures on the Scriptural Principle of Nonconformity. By F. T. FORSYTH, M.A., D.D.

"Explains the position of religious dissent with great force and eloquence."—Manchester Guardian.
"Nothing could be more timely than these learned and suggestive lectures."—Christian World.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, LIMITED,
21 & 22, Farnival Street, Holborn, London, E.C.

SOUTH AFRICA AND THE WAR.—BOOKS TO READ.

OUR SOUTH AFRICAN EMPIRE, and HOW WE MADE IT.

By ARTHUR GOODRICH. Crown 8vo, pictorial wrapper in Red and Black, price Sixpence net.

This is a popular and comprehensive history of the land that at the present moment is riveting so much attention, and will be found exceedingly useful as a reference book and guide to Cape Colony and the Transvaal.

HOW to BEAT the BOERS: a Conversation in Hades.

A Remarkable Pamphlet by FRANK HARRIS. Price Sixpence.

Dr. CONAN DOYLE says: "An excellent idea."

Sir CHARLES DILKE says: "I have read Mr. Frank Harris's pamphlet with interest, as I do everything which comes from its author's pen."

The St. James's Gazette says: "We have received a brilliant pamphlet embodying a 'Conversation in Hades,' written by Mr. Frank Harris.... We believe they contain the right answer to a question which has hitherto been asked in vein by every Englishman."

London: C. ARTHUR PEARSON, Ltd., Henrietta Street, W.C.

A BOOK ABOUT THE BOER WAR OF 1881.

Cloth, crown 8vo, 2s.

With 8 Illustrations by R. Caton Woodville, after Sketches by Melton Prior

MAJUBA:

BRONKERSPRUIT, INGOGO, LANGS NEK, KRUGERSDORP.

By HAMISH HENDRY.

Globe.—"The author has gone to the best, and his narratives have the qualities of conciseness and vividness which he claims for them. They are concentrated, they are picturesque; moreover, they are not without their lessons for the statesmen and soldiers of to-day."

Daily Graphic.—"...brief and brightly written....The description is extremely vivid, and will bring home to the mind of the reader the nature of South African warfare far more clearly than a more elaborately technical work could possibly do."

London: GRANT RICHARDS, 9, Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

SECOND LARGE EDITION READY.

THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA: Its Causes and Effects.

By J. A. HOBSON.

Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"His arguments are certainly worthy of consideration by those more impartial persons belonging to neither extreme camp who desire help in arriving at complete truth."—Athenaeum.

"It is possible to read with interest and with pleasure far into these pages without ceasing to lose faith in the author's impartiality and ability."—Daily News.

"A sound and careful study."—Speaker.

J. NISBET & CO., LTD., 21, Berners Street, W.

THE TRANSVAAL BOERS:

A HISTORICAL SKETCH.

By AFRICANUS.

Price 1s. net, paper covers; 2s., in cloth. Post free 3d. extra.

THE STORY OF SOUTH AFRICA

By W. BASIL WORSFOLD.

Cloth bound, price 1s. 6d.

London: HORACE MARSHALL & SON.

SECOND IMPRESSION NOW READY.

FROM CAPETOWN TO LADYSMITH.

By G. W. STEEVENS.

With Maps. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"At once graphic, pathetic, humorous, practical, and tells just what everybody wants to know."—Times.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

THE BOOK OF THE HOUR.

THIRD EDITION.

OUR LIVING GENERALS.

By ARTHUR TEMPLE, Author of "The Making of the Empire."

Art vellum, gilt top, price 3s. 6d.

Biographical Sketches with fine Portraits of Twelve Generals, no fewer than ten of whom are now at the front.

"Pleasant and proud reading."—Saturday Review.

"A capital book, breezily and brightly written."—St. James's Budget.

"The list is well chosen. Men of whom the nation is justly proud."—Naval and Military Record.

ANDREW MELROSE, 16, Pilgrim Street, London E.C.

NEW PAPERS, ISSUES, &c.

NEW SERIES.—UNDER NEW EDITORSHIP.

NOW READY, No. 133, price One Shilling and Sixpence.

FRIENDS' QUARTERLY EXAMINER

A Religious, Social, and Miscellaneous Review.

CONTENTS OF JANUARY NUMBER.

IN THE SHADOW OF CONSCRIPTION .. .. W. C. BRAITHWAITE, B.A., LL.B.
HEINRICH SCHLIEHMANN .. .. THOMAS HODGKIN, D.O.L.
DANIEL QUARE .. .. ISAAC SHARR, B.A.
ON THE CULTIVATION OF ARTISTIC TASTE .. .. LUCY HARRISON.
FRIENDS' SCHOOLS AND CITIZENSHIP .. .. ROBERT SPENCE WATSON, LL.D.
TO THE DIVINE MEMORY AND THE DIVINE FANCY .. ARTHUR ROWNTREE, B.A.
"A SUPPER OF THE LORD" AT CORINTH .. .. JOSEPH EDMONDSON.
ROYAL COMMISSION ON LIQUOR LICENSING LAWS .. .. JOSHUA ROWNTREE.
A PLEA FOR EDUCATIONAL MUSEUMS .. JONATHAN HUTCHINSON, F.R.S., LL.D., &c.

London: WEST, NEWMAN & CO., 54, Hatton Garden.

TOLSTOY'S LATEST WORK.

Crown 8vo, pp. xvi.585. Art canvas 6s. net.

RESURRECTION:

A Novel.

With 33 Illustrations by PASTERNAK. Translation by LOUISE MAUDE.

London:

FRANCIS RIDDELL HENDERSON, 26, Paternoster Square.

NOW READY, the THIRD NUMBER of THE PILOT

(Originally intended to be called "THE TRIBUNE.")

A Weekly Review of Ecclesiastical and General
Politics, Literature, and Learning

EDITED BY

D. C. LATHBURY

Editorial and Advertising Offices

2, EXETER STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO

"THE ACADEMY,"

Consisting of Thirty-seven Portraits of Old and New Celebrities in Literature, may still be obtained, singly, or in complete sets for 3s. 6d., on application to the Office, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S

New and Forthcoming Books.

NOTES ON THE WAR TO THE RELIEF OF LADYSMITH.

By the MILITARY EXPERT of the
DAILY NEWS.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Immediately.

Highways and Byways Series.
NEW VOLUME.

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS IN NORMANDY.

By PERCY DEARMER, M.A.
With Illustrations by JOSEPH PENNELL.
Extra crown 8vo, 6s. [Shortly.

NEW VOLUMES of the UNIFORM EDITION of RUDYARD KIPLING'S PROSE WORKS. FROM SEA TO SEA, AND OTHER SKETCHES:

LETTERS OF TRAVEL.
By RUDYARD KIPLING.
In 2 vols., extra crown 8vo, red cloth, gilt tops, 6s. each.

BY LORD ROBERTS. BY LORD ROBERTS. BY LORD ROBERTS. FORTY-ONE YEARS IN INDIA.

Containing 44 Illustrations and Plans.
LIBRARY EDITION. In 2 vols., 8vo, 36s.
POPULAR EDITION. In 1 vol., extra crown 8vo,
16s. net.

A CONCORDANCE to FITZGERALD'S TRANSLATION of the RUBAIYAT of OMAR KHAYYAM. By J. R. TUTIN. Extra crown 8vo, parchment, 8s. 6d. net.

THE GOLDEN HORSESHOE.

Extracts from the Letters of Captain H. L. HERNDON, of the 21st U.S. Infantry, on Duty in the Philippine Islands, and Lieutenant LAWRENCE GILL, A.D.C. to the Military Governor of Puerto Rico. Edited by STEPHEN BONSAI. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW AND ABRIDGED EDITION. EDWARD THRING, Headmaster of Uppingham School. Life, Diary, and Letters. By GEORGE R. PARKIN, C.M.G., M.A., Hon. LL.D., University of New Brunswick. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW AND NOTABLE NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, gilt tops, 6s. each.
70,000 COPIES HAVE BEEN SOLD IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

VIA CRUCIS. By F. Marion CRAWFORD.

BABES in the BUSH. By Rolf BOLDREWOOD.

Field.—"As good as any of its predecessors."
Daily Telegraph.—"Bristles with thrilling incident."
Outlook.—"A lively and picturesque story."

THE CAMBRIC MASK. By R. W. CHAMBERS.

Westminster Gazette.—"A spirited and stirring story."
Literature.—"Holds the reader throughout."

DONNA TERESA. By F. M. Peard.

Spectator.—"A charmingly written story."

MARY PAGET: a Romance of Old Bermuda. By MINNIE CAROLINE SMITH.

Academy.—"A pretty, old-fashioned, simple story."

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN

has pleasure in announcing that he is just publishing in his Green Cloth Library,
"ARDEN MASSITER":
a novel of Italian Political and Social Life, by DR.
WILLIAM BARRY, Author of "The Two Standards," &c.;
and "THE RHYMER":
a Story of Robert Burns and his Loves, by ALAN McAULAY.
To be had at the Libraries and of all Booksellers, 6s.
each.

RHYMES OLD and NEW. By MARGARET E. S. WRIGHT. Cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

This is a thoroughly representative collection of well-known nursery rhymes, and as such should be of interest to all children as well as to those who are no longer young.

THREE CLANRANALDS: High- land Tales of the 16th and 17th Centuries. By MORAR. Cloth gilt, 6s.

The author has depicted some stirring events of the troublous times when the Starns filled the throne, or "claimed their own," and appealed to the loyalty of the Highland clans; an appeal which was answered by none more readily than by the dauntless Clanranalds, descendants of the Lord of the Isles, the princely chief of all the Macdonalds.

"THE STORY OF THE NATIONS" SERIES.— NEW VOLUME just out.

MODERN ITALY (1748-1898). By PIETRO ORSI, Professor of History in the R. Liceo Foscarini, Venice. Fully Illustrated, and with Map and Index. Cloth, 5s.

A BRIEF HISTORY of EASTERN ASIA. By I. C. HANNAH, M.A. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

A concise history of the whole of Asia east of Persia from the earliest times to the present day, the last chapter being devoted to an account of the present position of affairs in the East. The book is written in a popular style, all needless names and dates being omitted, and it is hoped it may prove useful for schools.

NEW NOVEL, by the AUTHOR of "PRISONERS of CONSCIENCE," &c.

WAS it RIGHT to FORGIVE? By AMELIA E. BARR. (Unwin's Green Cloth Library.) 6s.

"It is the work of a practised writer, and it reveals deep insight into human character.....its interest is unflagging."—Scotsman.

A TALE OF THE CANNIBAL ISLANDS OF THE SOUTHERN SEAS.

AMONG the MAN-EATERS. By JOHN GAGGIN. (Overseas Library.) Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

A WHITE WOMAN in CENTRAL AFRICA: a Record of a Journey taken alone by a Lady across Africa. By HELEN CADDICK. 16 Illustrations. Cloth, 6s.

"The author is a traveller by nature.....her book is extremely pleasant to read."—Literature.
"The book makes excellent reading."—World.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN,
Paternoster Square, E.C.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE SON of the HOUSE.

By BERTHA THOMAS, Author of "The Violin-Player." [March 22.

ANDROMEDA: an Idyll of the Great River. By ROBERT BUCHANAN, Author of "The Shadow of the Sword." "The interest of the story never flags." Daily Chronicle.

A SECRET of the NORTH SEA. By ALGERNON GISSING.

"It is strong, picturesque, and as passionately one-motivated as 'Wuthering Heights.'"—World.
"A strong, thoughtful story, written by a capable hand. One almost feels the hurricane and scents the brine through its pages. 'The Kittiwake' is an achievement in characterisation."—Bookman.

SOUR GRAPES: a Romance.

By J. F. CORNISH.

"An absorbing story, the remarkable plot of which is unfolded in a style at once vigorous and polished. The book will be read with interest by all who can appreciate a good story well told."—Studio.

"Susceptible male readers will have difficulty in deciding whether kittenish Ruby Brabrooke or true-hearted Barbara Ashleigh is the more winsome." Scotsman.

THE ORANGE GIRL. By Sir WALTER BESANT, Author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men." With 8 Illustrations. SEVENTH EDITION.

"A delightful heroine.....a most fascinating creature."—Vanity Fair.

TERENCE. By B. M. Croker,

Author of "Diana Barrington." With 6 Illustrations.

"Told with a full measure of Mrs. Croker's vivacity and humour."—Spectator.

STORIES AT THREE-AND-SIXPENCE.

WITHOUT the LIMELIGHT: THEATRICAL LIFE AS IT IS. By GEORGE R. SIMS.

"A very graphic picture.....The fact that the book is here and there autobiographical will add to its attraction for the public."—Globe.

IN LONDON'S HEART. By GEORGE R. SIMS, Author of "Rogues and Vagabonds," &c.

"Mr. Sims knows the London of to-day, especially on its shady side, as Dickens knew the London of sixty years ago; and he can handle his material—his money-lenders, murderers, detectives, and what not—with eminent skill....The plot is skilfully contrived, and the story is exciting."—Glasgow Herald.

DORA MYRL, the LADY DE- TECTIVE. By M. McD. BODKIN, Q.C.

"A Sherlock Holmes in petticoats, pretty, refined, and piquante....Where is this wonder to be found? She is Dora Myrl, the lady detective....When a learned Q.C. beguiles his leisure with detective stories, we naturally expect something very different from the ordinary....result, and we are not disappointed....The adorable Dora is quite a new kind of detective, and a distinct improvement on her predecessors." Morning Leader.

A COURT TRAGEDY. By Albert D. VANDAM, Author of "An Englishman in Paris." With 6 Illustrations.

"Mr. Vandam's excellent story....If only 'A Court Tragedy' represented the average standard of modern fiction, we should begin to believe in the possibility of the millennium." Literary World.

THE WEB of FATE. By T. W. SPEIGHT, Author of "The Mysteries of Heron Dyke." "Arrests attention from the beginning and holds attention to the end."—Glasgow Herald.

OUR GREATEST LIVING SOL- DIERS. By CHARLES LOWE, M.A. With 8 Portraits. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Mr. Lowe comes to his task armed with knowledge, enthusiasm, and a practised pen, and his vivid little life-sketches are excellent and enthralling reading. There is something epic in the narrative."—Daily Mail.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1454. Established 1869.

17 March, 1900.

Price Threepence.

[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

MISS MARTINEAU requests that recipients of letters written by the late Dr. Martineau will be so good as to send them to her at 35, Gordon-square. The letters are for use by his biographers at their discretion, and will, of course, be returned.

NEXT Tuesday is Dr. Ibsen's seventy-second birthday. The day will be signalled in this country by the publication of the English translation of his new play, "When the Dead Awaken."

REVIEWING David Harum in the North American Review, Mrs. Craigie points out that in capturing the hearts of all classes of Americans this novel has done what is hardly possible to an English novel acting on the English public. The best novel that could be written here would leave vast portions of the nation untouched. Mrs. Craigie suggests that Newman's hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light," and David Copperfield "most nearly accomplished a feat which has now become impossible to other English literary powers of the first rank."

MR. KIPLING has nearly completed a long story, the scene of which is laid in India. The opening chapter will be published in McClure's Magazine towards the end of this year.

It is often hinted that Tommy Atkins does not know his Kipling as Mr. Kipling knows Tommy. But a Highlander in Roodebosch Hospital was able to tell Mr. Kipling that he knew by heart several of the Barrack Room Ballads and also several pieces in the Seven Seas. Poet and reader were mightily pleased with each other, and the wounded hero writes thus to his friends:

How often have I read and admired Kipling without ever a thought of seeing him, let alone my having such a long talk with him. I recognised him at once from his photo. He has eyes that make you smile when you look into them. His utterance is very rapid and very distinct, and struck me as being decidedly Scotch. I wish he had stayed longer; I could have talked with him all day. I believe he is gathering material for his book.

We believe so too.

"THE ROMAN," Mr. Hall Caine's new novel, with a new series of "Dolly Dialogues" by Mr. Anthony Hope, will be the features of The New Magazine, an American venture, the first number of which will be issued on June 1st. Mr. R. H. Russell, who is described as "the American Harmsworth," will be the editor and publisher. Mr. W. R. Hearst will be a large shareholder in The New Magazine, and we understand that the resources of the New York Journal will be placed at the disposal of the magazine.

DR. ROBERTSON NICOLL must have been amused to see how seriously his suggestion has been taken that the sunny side of Gower-street should be utilised as a site for a home for decaying authors. One of the commentators has gone so far as to assert that Gower-street has no sunny side. Still, there are many struggling writers to whom a superior kind of Rowton House, in a good neighbourhood, would be a boon.

THE Topeka Capital, the religious paper which Mr. Sheldon is editing for one week "as Jesus would," is a huge success, but clergymen think that the newspaper is irreverent, and rival journalists say it is a ponderous tract.

FROM the Bazaar, Exchange, and Mart:

Wanted, novels, cheap; or exchange new underclothing, dressing jacket.

Fiction's your only wear nowadays.

MR. J. T. BEDFORD, who died the other day at the age of eighty-seven, was our old friend "Robert," the shrewd and witty "waiter" of Punch.

MR. W. T. MAUD, the Special Correspondent of the Graphic, who was with Mr. G. W. Steevens through the two campaigns in the Soudan, and who shared with him a house in Ladysmith, has sent to Mrs. Steevens an account of her husband's last hours, from which we are permitted to make an extract. The letter is dated Ladysmith, January 18th, three days after Mr. Steevens's death. After explaining that they all thought the danger was past, his temperature having again become normal, Mr. Maud says: "On Friday, January 12th, his temperature suddenly rose, and hemorrhage set in." Three days later a consultation was held.

They told me there was no hope, though they did everything that was possible to save him. When they had gone, I returned to the sick-room, sent out the two nurses, and together we passed through the great ordeal. I said: "The Doctors think you are very ill. I will cable home, do you wish to send a message?" "Yes, write it out and read it to me for my approval," he replied. I wrote: "Steevens dangerously ill." "Do you mean that I am dying?" he asked. "They think it very serious," I answered, for I was afraid. Again, "Am I dying?" "Yes!" "Soon?" "Soon!" He was looking straight into my eyes. He never flinched. There was no trace of fear in that brave heart. Death had no terrors for him. He dictated the message which I sent to you. . . . After that he turned towards me, saying: "Well, this is a sideways ending to it all—let us have a drink." "Right, old boy, I will open a fresh bottle of champagne," and I did so. "But you are not drinking," he said. I made some excuse. All the morning we had been giving him teaspoonfuls of it every ten minutes, also brandy and milk. About one o'clock he commenced to rally, and took nourishment so freely that my hopes bounded up again. I left him in the charge of both nurses, and lay down to sleep. They called me an hour later, and I saw at a glance that the end was near. . . . He imagined himself back at Merton Abbey. Dr. Davies was present all the time, but there was nothing more to be done. He was asleep, breathing quite quietly and regularly. At 4.30 in the afternoon he passed away peacefully—so peacefully. There is nothing more to tell—save this, that all through his illness he was so patient, and he fought splendidly against it to the very end.

MR. HERBERT MORRAH, the editor of the Literary Year Book, writes to us:

Your reviewer suggests that the directory of authors should be omitted from the Literary Year Book. I am afraid that this would cause great discontent, and that I am more likely to please people by making it complete. But it is the counter-suggestion which puzzles me. I think it is a good one. Only it involves the old difficulty of criticism. How I am to give the plots of "the best novels" without making invidious distinctions is the question. And why novels more than other books? I hope your reviewer will find time to amplify his suggestions to me.

We do not doubt that the omission of the directory of authors would cause discontent among small literary fry. But Mr. Morrah may as well abandon all other features if he intends to make his list of authors complete, for their names would fill the book. What we wish to see in the Literary Year Book is more really useful information. We see no difficulty in giving the plots and characters of the best novels. Criticism would not come in at all. In these days of all-prevalent fiction it would be very useful to be able to recapture, at a glance, the background, local colour, principal characters, plot, and avowed moral (if any) of a last year's novel. The system might also be applied to the best biographies, histories, essays, &c., of the year—selecting the books likely to be consulted. Done well, this annual précis of the year's best books would be most useful.

MR. EDWARD MARKHAM, author of "The Man with the Hoe," that not very remarkable poem which has achieved in America a popularity second only to David Harum, has composed a new poem, from which we quote some strong lines. Called "Lincoln, the Great Commoner," it was read by the author at the Republican Club dinner in New York:

The colour of the ground was in him, the red Earth,
The tang and odour of the primal things—
The rectitude and patience of the rocks;
The gladness of the wind that shakes the corn;
The courage of the bird that dares the sea;
The justice of the rain that loves all leaves;
The pity of the snow that hides all scars;
The loving kindness of the wayside well;
The tolerance and equity of light
That gives as freely to the shrinking weed
As to the great oak flaring to the wind—
To the grave's low hill as to the Matterhorn
That shoulders out the sky.

ANOTHER light-hearted venture in magazinedom. It is called International Art Notes, and in shape is so long and narrow that we admire the self-control which at last put a limit to its attenuation. Primarily International Art Notes is the organ of a little band of women artists who have received their art education in Paris and have formed themselves into the "Paris Club." The "Paris Club" was opening an exhibition of its works at the Grafton Gallery, when it suddenly occurred to someone: If an exhibition, why not a magazine? So "the type was chosen, the shape of the publication decided upon, and the printers did the rest within ten days. . . . It rests with the Art public to say whether it shall rise or fall." It does—it always does.

THE Memories and Impressions just put forth by the Hon. George Charles Brodric, Warden of Merton College, contrast favourably, by their modesty and seriousness, with the general run of books of reminiscences. Mr. Brodric was for many years a leader-writer for the Times, and his memories of that newspaper, and of Mr. Delane, are decidedly interesting. In all, he contributed about 1,600 leading articles to the Times. He wrote the leader on the Tichborne Case, and this cost him "the greatest effort in concentration" that he ever attempted. Mr. Brodric has some interesting remarks on that power of improvising which every journalist must acquire. The death of Cavour took the Times office by surprise, and Delane urgently begged Mr. Brodric to write an obituary article. This was at about three in the afternoon, and, says Mr. Brodric:

Few writers could have been less qualified to execute such a task, for I was very ill informed about Italian politics, and did not fully share the admiration of Cavour felt by many of my friends. Moreover, of the only two biographical records which I could procure (after considerable delay), one was in Italian, which I did not understand, the other being in French, and both ended before the most remarkable part of his career began. Meanwhile, I was ransacking my own memory and some other scanty materials which I possessed. Everyone has more in his mind on any given subject than he can realise, until he comes to rally it under high pressure. So it proved in this case. About five o'clock I made a start, and though I had to dine out, I escaped speedily from the dining-room, and completed two columns and a half by one or two o'clock in the morning. I have reason to believe that my hasty composition not only passed muster with the general public, but was approved by persons familiar with Italian history, one of whom afterwards assured me that, while he noticed some omissions, he could find no material errors in it. What amuses me now, in reading it over, is the suggestion of reserved knowledge which pervades it, whereas all my goods were really exposed in the shop window.

THE Vale Press artists think that "no edition of Shakespeare's Plays at present exists that is notable as a finely-printed book on paper whose permanence is undoubted." So the Vale Press is going to issue its own Shakespeare, printed in a new "Avon" fount of small pica type, and adorned with borders and half-borders by Mr. Rickett. Each play will be issued in a demy 8vo volume, and separate schemes of internal decoration have been arranged for the Tragedies, Comedies, and Histories. Good! The world will soon have its well-printed, enduring edition of Shakespeare. Scholars, book-lovers, critics—rise, welcome it in your myriads! Stay—what is this? "Only 310 sets of the Vale Shakespeare will be printed, of which 100 sets are for sale in the United States of America and 187 sets in Great Britain. . . . The whole of the English edition of the Vale Shakespeare has been taken up by collectors and the trade." Vale!

UNFORTUNATELY these special editions are always exploited by speculators, and those who have never before made a penny out of books succumb to the temptation. Only last week a gentleman having bought his right to a copy of the edition at 16s. a volume, transferred the right the next day, at a profit of 5s. a volume. The publication of the edition would have begun last year had it not been for the fire at Messrs. Ballantyne's, which destroyed the type and the sheets of the first two volumes.

THE author of "Father O'Flynn" has four spirited verses in the Spectator in the metre of "The Wearin' o' the Green." We quote the last two:

A heart of fire has Lancashire for fightin' inch by inch,
But the Irish, though they started last, were first into the trinch;
They took the front, they bore the brunt, o'er kopje and ravine,
On Pieter's Hill Majuba's ill they righted for their Queen.

And so upon St. Patrick's day the Queen herself has said
Each Irish regiment shall wear the Green above the Red;
And she is comin' o'er to us (who away so long has been).
And dear knows but into Dublin she'll come wearin' of the Green!

It will be interesting to see how the critics deal with "Wynton Eversley's" novel, The Dean of Darrendale. Staring them in the face is the following modest notice:

As the Author's name happens to be that of a novelist of world-wide reputation, he sets aside his conviction that an Author should sign his work with his own name, and adopts the nom de plume of WYNTON EVERSLEY.

Following this, and deepening the awe or the caution of the reader, is the following comprehensive dedication:

To all in perplexity, doubt, or sorrow, especially to the heart of Youth oppressed by the inequalities of life, the strenuous yearning after Truth, the sense, above all, of failure in noble effort, and the anguish of forbidden love; to the student, the wife, the priest, the operative, the social enthusiast, to all human elements in this confused epoch, I dedicate this book; not, indeed, flattering myself that it can solve problems, or by any magic anticipate God's appointed angel Time; but believing it to hold in solution the more necessary qualities of endurance, serenity, and hope.

The growth and slow solidification of tit-bit literature is worth watching. Rusks are succeeding to pap, and year by year the readers who have been educated by the Board schools are being tempted with more solid fare. Mr. Newnes, who founded Tit-Bits, soon saw the possibility of developing the more instructive pages of that journal, and he produced his scientific "story" series. Everywhere the public is now offered compressed and carefully flavoured knowledge. Mr. Dent who has flooded the country with classics which thousands have bought for their dainty exteriors has now turned his attention to science and general knowledge; witness the first two Temple Cyclopædic Primers. Here, in 137 pages, we have an Introduction to Science, and in 160 pages a Roman History. A great many other volumes, as dainty in dress and as informing in substance, are promised.

LITERATURE as she is organised. The American Bookman says:

Since Mr. Richard Harding Davis's recent marriage there have been signs that his attractiveness as a literary idol for the matinee girl is on the wane. His photographs are no longer so eagerly sought and so lovingly cherished, and there is only wanting the right sort of young man who will write the right sort of books with the right sort of insouciant hero and the right sort of stately heroine—and then will come the cry, "Le roi est mort: vive le roi!"

MR. WILLIAM LE QUEUX has an entertaining article in the American Bookman on the mistakes made by English novelists in dealing with foreign life. Mr. Le Queux says he knows of no novel which describes the play at Monte Carlo correctly.

The novelist's rules of roulette—generally miscalled rouge et noir—are hopelessly wrong. The interesting character in fiction who goes to Monte Carlo never fails to play with higher stakes than the Administration permits, and always wins utterly impossible sums. Never once, to my knowledge, has a writer of romance been able to wholly avoid the many pitfalls in describing the easy, yet extremely involved, game of roulette; and as for trente-et-quarante, few novelists have ever been bold enough to refer to it. Monte Carlo sounds reckless, and therefore a scene there always "grips," even if written by one who has never presented his card at the bureau.

Similarly Russia is a sufferer, and Mr. Le Queux suggests a new light in which the obstructive tactics of the Russian censors may be usefully regarded by English authors:

The descriptions of Russian revolutionists and Russian police—always called the Third Section—are invariably ridiculous. Why the police should be called the Third Section is another unsolved mystery. I once lent one of the most popular and thrilling Russian novels—one that had sold in England and America by tens of thousands—to a very prominent Russian writer and critic who had spent fifteen years in Siberia on account of his revolutionary writings. He returned it gravely, saying: "There is not a single sound fact in it from cover to cover! Such a book does the cause of Russian Freedom more harm than good. I don't wonder at the Press Bureau prohibiting such rubbish from entering Russia!" And this was a work at that moment on everyone's tongue in England—a real serious work which made its author's reputation, and brought him instantly to the front, and about which clergymen preached, taking the facts as genuine!

Lastly, Mr. Le Queux declares that of recent years, with the exception, perhaps, of Mr. Marion Crawford and Mr. Max Pemberton—he does not except Ouida—not a single author has written a novel about Italy without going to pieces. The use of "Si" for "Yes" is universal in English writers, instead of "Ja," which is the usual "Yes" of Italians.

IN an article on Mr. Ruskin in the March Studio, Mr. E. T. Cook suggests that Ruskin suffers as an art critic from two causes—forgetfulness and misunderstanding. The forgetfulness of what Mr. Ruskin wrote fifty years ago blinds people, for instance, to the fact that the present admiration of Velasquez is in no way in advance of what Ruskin wrote half a century ago, when he pronounced him "the greatest artist of Spain," and "one of the greatest artists of the world," a master of "consummate ease" who was "never wrong." Again, the emphasis with which Ruskin enforced the claims of artists who were not fully appreciated when he wrote has been attacked when the need for that emphasis has passed away, and has been treated apart from its context. In urging the claims of Turner Ruskin seemed to disparage Claude; but to say that Ruskin was blind to the merits of Claude is wrong. Such, in brief, is Mr. Cook's argument.

THE weakness of most of the war verse which has been poured of late into the newspapers is perhaps due to the fact that our poets have been content to sit at home and be inspired by censored telegrams. Not thus were the great war poems written, as Mr. Austin M. Stevens, who writes on "The Warrior Bard: Ancient and Modern," in the Westminster Review, is careful to show. In ancient Greece poets made their pens mighty by acknowledging their swords mightier and unsheathing the latter. Scott's minstrel boy had the root of the matter in him:

Land of song! cries the warrior-bard,
Though all the world betrays thee,
One sword, at least, thy rights shall guard,
One faithful harp shall praise thee.

The author of "Chevy Chase" fought with those whose deeds he proclaimed, and hence Sir Philip Sidney could say that this ballad, although "sung by some blinde crowder," stirred his heart "more than a trumpet." And in the grand old Border ballad of "Kinnmont Willie" it is no stay-at-home poet who stirs our blood:

Wi' coulters and wi' forehammers
We garred the bars gang merrilie.

Mr. Stevens says: "It is significant that the poet says we, not they; in this simple fact lies all the difference between the old Warrior Bard and the new." The contention is fair at the present moment; but, as a matter of fact, much fine war poetry has been written by poets who never took the sword.

IN the March Fortnightly Review Fiona Macleod begins to write in her own characteristic way of Iona. Dr. Johnson's famous rolling passage about the island is in no way recalled—except in contrast—by Fiona Macleod's more searching and flexible sentences, from which we are tempted to quote.

It is but a small isle, fashioned of a little sand, a few grasses salt with the spray of an ever-restless wave, a few rocks that wade in heather and upon whose brows the seawind weaves the yellow lichen. But since the remotest days sacrosanct men have bowed here in worship. In this little island a lamp was lit whose flame lighted pagan Europe, from the Saxon in his fens to the swarthy folk who came by Greek waters to trade the Orient. Here Learning and Faith had their tranquil home, when the shadow of the sword lay upon all lands, from Syracuse by the Tyrrhene Sea to the rainy isles of Orca. From age to age lowly hearts have never ceased to bring their burthen here. Iona herself has given us for remembrance a Fount of Youth more wonderful than that which lies under her own boulders of Dùn-I. And here Hope waits. To tell the story of Iona is to go back to God, and to end in God.

THE sudden making of the war-expert is one of the many curious literary accompaniments of the Boer War. Mr. Dooley has naturally looked the war expert up and down, and this is his account of that amazing person :

"A war expert," said Mr. Dooley, "is a man ye niver heerd iv before. If ye can think iv anny wan whose face is unfamiliar to ye, an' ye don't raymber his name, an' he's got a job on a pa-aper ye didn't know was published, he's a war expert. 'Tis a har-rd office to fill. Whin a war begins th' timplation is sthrong f'r ivry man to grab hold iv a gun an' go to th' fr-ront. But th' war expert has to subjo his cravin' f'r blood. He says to himsilf, 'Lave others seek th' luxuries iv life in camp,' he says. 'F'r thim th' boat-races acrost th' Tugela, th' romp over th' kopje, an' th' game of laager, laager, who's got th' laager?' he says. 'I will stand by me counthry, he says, 'close,' he says. 'If it falls,' he says, 'it will fall on me,' he says. An' he buys himsilf a map made be a fortune-teller in a dhream, a box iv pencils, an' a field-glass, an' goes an' looks f'r a job as a war expert. Says th' editor iv th' paper: 'I don't know ye. Ye must be a war expert,' he says. 'I am,' says th' la-ad."

Bibliographical.

It is to be hoped that the representations of "Hamlet" in its entirety" which Mr. Benson has been giving at the Lyceum have sent playgoers generally to the actual text of the play as Shakespeare finally left it. It is astonishing how ignorant the ordinary theatre-goer is of the said text. He has never heard it in the playhouse (till now) "in its entirety," and great have been the surprises for him. Mr. Forbes Robertson brought Fortinbras on at the end of his "Hamlet" revival at the Lyceum; but even he shrank, apparently, from conceding to the warrior his earlier place in the play. For the most part, Shakespeare, as English men and women know him, is the Shakespeare of the "boards." All the more reason that the critical press should keep a stern eye upon the Shakespearean revivalist, and insist upon no tricks being played upon the Bard. "Cutting" there must be, in most cases; but the public should always be advised to turn to the play as printed.

The notion of issuing a selection from Archbishop Trench's verse, under the title of In Time of War, is good and timely. That the worthy prelate was genuinely a patriot he showed by many a piece of verse, notably by his sonnet on "Gibraltar." But the example thus to be set might well be followed. Why should not Tennyson's publishers make up a little volume of his patriotic verse, which would include, of course, the "Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington," one of the most stirring of British manifestoes? It was really Tennyson who led the way in the modern patriotic movement among the poets. Now, too, seems to be the time for a reissue of Mr. and Miss Wedmore's collection of Poems of the Love and Pride of England, which might be augmented with advantage. At present it contains nothing of Tennyson's, but why should it not comprise such verse (of the kind wanted) as is now out of copyright?

The best of us will make a slip now and then. Last week, in an illustrated paper of some pretensions to literary standing, there was a short story, at the head of which stood the motto :

God's in His Heaven, and all is well.

Now, if this was intended to represent a well-known couplet by Browning, I need not say how far it was from the fact.

"Captain Arthur Haggard (Arthur Amyand)" is the legend on the title-page of Captain Haggard's latest publication. It was in 1894 that the nom-de-guerre of "Amyand" was first used, in connexion with the book called Only a Drummer Boy; it was used again in the following year on the title-pages of Comrades in Arms and With Rank and File: Sidelights on Soldier Life. One sees that Captain Haggard has utilised the name of "Amyand" only for his volumes dealing with military matters. His first appearance as an author was made in his own name in 1889, when he put forward Dodo and I. His relative, Mr. Rider Haggard, had had five years' start of him as a writer of fiction—Dawn and The Witch's Head being published in 1884. Captain Haggard threatens to become quite a voluminous author, his publications (of all sorts) numbering nine already.

Mrs. Humphry Ward seems to be reserving what she has to say about Anne Brontë for the reprint of The Tenant of Wildfell Hall, which will appear shortly in the Haworth Edition of the Brontë works. It would be interesting to know what measure of popularity that story at present possesses. It is naturally included in all reproductions of the sisters' fictions—as, for instance, in Messrs. Downey's edition of 1898 and Messrs. Dent's of 1893. But is it much read, or even read at all? Since 1889 it has been published in separate form only once—in 1894, by Mr. R. E. King. This would seem to suggest that the demand for it—by itself—is not particularly great.

The announcement of a new volume of verse from the pen of the Warden of Glenalmond, the Rev. J. H. Skrine, reminds me that Mr. Skrine has been tolerably industrious as a poet. In that character he came out originally in 1892 with a drama called Columbo. This was followed in 1895 by the dramatic romance entitled Joan the Maid, and this, again, in 1896, by Songs of the Maid. Last year he issued Thirty Hymns for School Singing, but I have not seen the book. Last year, too, he published a collection of sermons. No wonder Mr. Skrine is a poet: he must find ample inspiration in Glenalmond and its picturesque surroundings.

"Who is Mr. Walkley?" Fancy that—from "The Baron de Book-worms"! I fear that when Mr. Walkley's Frames of Mind came out it was carried off by one of the Baron's assistants, and a similar thing must have happened eight years ago, when Mr. Walkley brought out his Playhouse Impressions. Truly "A. B. W." has not published much in book form, and ignorance of "Spectator" would have been just pardonable and no more. But Mr. Walkley has written largely over his own name in more than one daily paper, and he has been widely advertised by Mr. William Archer.

So Robert Burns is to be the central figure of a work of fiction called (not too complimentarily to the poet) The Rhymers. Burns, if he is permitted to revisit the glimpses of the moon, need not resent being made the hero of a story, for he has already been made the leading personage in a play. It is not so very long ago since a drama, called simply and nakedly "Robert Burns," was enacted on the boards of an Edinburgh theatre, from which, after a week's run, it disappeared into the illimitable inane.

THE BOOKWORM.

Reviews.

Mr. Kipling as Globe-Trotter.

From Sea to Sea. By Rudyard Kipling. 2 vols. (Macmillan. 12s.)

THESE volumes are not uninteresting reading "on their own," as the London idiom has it; and they are valuable as the early fruits of their author's genius. They show Mr. Kipling on those travels without which his later books would have been very different, and they show also rather oddly how very like Mr. Kipling just out of his teens was to many other young men just out of their teens, with a kindred interest in life and letters. "O the little more and how much it is!"—of course; but working back from what Mr. Kipling has since done—from, say, the story of Purun Dass in the second Jungle Book, and "Without Benefit of Clergy," and "The Hunting of Kaa," and the "Recessional," and "The Finest Story in the World," and "The Courting of Dinah Shadd"—one is a little surprised by the ordinariness of these descriptions of travel. Except in one or two rare instances—notably the account of "seeing life" in Hong Kong—the book is only a shade better than many another of its kind. Also it is far younger than we knew that Mr. Kipling had ever been, especially when it is remembered that he had written The Story of the Gadsbys some half-a-dozen years before he left India on this voyage at all. This, of course, may very likely be due to the fact that Mr. Kipling is here, to some extent, off his guard. Also he was writing letters for a paper, and, being a good journalist, he did not unduly strain matters. Also, he was writing about himself, and that is always a betrayal of an author's age; in dramatic essays it can be hidden. And yet—so many years after The Story of the Gadsbys—one is a little amused by the youthful insistence upon jokes in which nakedness is involved, and the record of such scraps of conversation between himself and his fellow-traveller as this:

It rained monsoonishly, and the Professor discovered a castle which he needs must see. "It's Osaha Castle," he said, "and it has been fought over for hundreds of years. Come along."

"I've seen castles in India. Raighur, Jodhpur—all sorts of places. Let's have some more boiled salmon. It's good in this station."

"Pig," said the Professor.

Indeed, there are too many indications that Mr. Kipling, but for the goodness of Providence (of which he is in these pages repeatedly and vocally thankful), was within no great distance of becoming a new humorist.

Perhaps the most interesting thing to do with From Sea to Sea is to search for the seeds which afterwards bore fruit. Take, for instance, Hans Breitmann, the orchid hunter, whom we meet in "Bertram and Bimi" and "Reingelder and the German Flag" (in Life's Handicap). Mr. Kipling met him on the steamer running down to Penang—"a German orchid-hunter fresh from nearly losing his head in the Lushai hills, who has been over most of the world." The orchid-hunter told him the story of the Bad People of Iquique, which Mr. Kipling straightway narrated for the readers of the Pioneer. It is a poor story, not to be compared with "Reingelder" for a moment, and Mr. Kipling proves his instinct for a good telling by serving up the indifferent yarn to his newspaper and saving the others for careful treatment. In the same chapter, which describes a few hours in Burmah—Mr. Kipling's only visit there—we find this passage: "I should better remember what the Pagoda was like had I not fallen deeply and irrevocably in love with a Burmese girl at the foot of the first flight of steps." Surely that moment fathered "Mandalay."

But it is time to look a little at the truer Kipling as he is revealed in these early writings. A glimpse of him may be had in the account, in "Letters of Marque," of a ramble through Jeypore. After a while the traveller (the narrative is rendered almost unreadable by the author's trick of alluding to himself as "The Englishman"—a mistake corrected into the first person singular in From Sea to Sea) strayed into the Maharaja's palace, and while he was idling there a figure in saffron came out of a dark arch into the sunlight, almost falling into the arms of one in pink. "Where have you come from?" "I have been to see —," the name was unintelligible. "That is a lie; you have not!" Then, across the court, someone laughed a low, croaking laugh. The pink and saffron figures separated as though they had been shot, and disappeared into separate bolt-holes. It was a curious little incident, and might have meant a great deal or just nothing at all.

The ordinary young-man traveller would have missed that, or treated it differently.

Here is a grimly humorous illustration of the inveterate artistry of the Japanese, of their overpowering instinct for a picture:

Long ago a great-hearted king came to Nikko River and looked across at the trees, up-stream at the torrent and the hills whence it came, and down-stream at the softer outlines of the crops and spurs of wooded mountains. "It needs only a dash of colour in the foreground to bring this all together," said he, and he put a little child in a blue and white dressing-gown under the awful trees to judge the effect. Emboldened by his tenderness, an aged beggar ventured to ask for alms. Now it was the ancient privilege of the great to try the temper of their blades upon beggars and such cattle. Mechanically the king swept off the old man's head, for he did not wish to be disturbed. The blood spurted across the granite slabs of the river-ford in a sheet of purest vermillion. The king smiled. Chance had solved the problem for him. "Build a bridge here," he said to the court carpenter, "of just such a colour as that stuff on the stones. Build also a bridge of grey stone close by, for I would not forget the wants of my people." So he gave the little child across the stream a thousand pieces of gold and went his way. He had composed a landscape. As for the blood, they wiped it up and said no more about it; and that is the story of Nikko Bridge. You will not find it in the guide-books.

Mr. Kipling for the most part escaped adventures. The world passed before him as a panorama, and he saw it in comfort. But at San Francisco, in a Chinese gambling den, he was for a moment or so in the midst of peril. A Mexican and a Chinese had a difference:

Mark how purely a man is a creature of instinct. Rarely introduced to the pistol, I saw the Mexican half rise in his chair and at the same instant found myself full length on the floor. None had told me that this was the best attitude when bullets are abroad. I was there prone before I had time to think—dropping as the room was filled with an intolerable clamour like the discharge of a cannon. In those close quarters the pistol report had no room to spread any more than the smoke—then acrid in my nostrils. There was no second shot, but a great silence in which I rose slowly to my knees. The Chinaman was gripping the table with both hands, and staring in front of him at an empty chair. The Mexican had gone, and a little whirl of smoke was floating near the roof. Still gripping the table, the Chinaman said: "Ah!" in the tone that a man would use when, looking up from his work suddenly, he sees a well-known friend in the doorway. Then he coughed and fell over to his own right, and I saw that he had been shot in the stomach.

After San Francisco the book loses interest. One feels that Mr. Kipling, at that period of his life at any rate, was wasted on America, nor was he happy there. He was happy in seeing the Bret Harte country:

There were the pines and madrone-clad hills his miners lived and fought among; there was the heated red earth that showed whence the gold had been washed; the dry gulch, the red, dusty road where Hamblin [Hamlin] was used to stop the stage in the intervals of his elegant leisure and superior card-play; there was the timber felled and sweating resin in the sunshine; and, above all, there was the quivering pungent heat that Bret Harte drives into your dull brain with the magic of his pen. When we stopped at a collection of packing-cases dignified by the name of a town, my felicity was complete.

And he was happy in meeting Mark Twain; but between the two, the West and the East, he was wretched and bewildered, particularly so at Chicago.

We ought to point out that From Sea to Sea has been published in self-defence. Pirates are about, and if any edition is to be circulated there may as well be an authoritative one—that is Mr. Kipling's very reasonable argument. We could wish, however, that the proofs had been rather more carefully read.

At the Bar of History.

Exploratio Evangelica. By Percy Gardner, LL.D. (Black.)

THE interposition of qualified laymen has done much of recent years to give a bent to the speculation and research of divines. To name English writers only, Matthew Arnold, the author of Ecce Homo, the author of Supernatural Christianity, each in his turn has assisted to vitalise controversy, and to turn theological studies into something more than a grimoire. Ecclesiastical dovescotes may once more be fluttered, but the impartial observer can only welcome the appearance in the same field of so critical and trained an historical investigator as the Lincoln Professor of Archæology at Oxford. Prof. Gardner's competence has already been proved by more than one admirable volume upon the subjects of his chair. He now approaches a cognate theme, in the handling of which those habits of weighing and considering evidence which he has acquired, so to speak, in corpore vili, must necessarily stand him in good stead.

The title of the book is borrowed from a once famous treatise of Prof. John Grote's. The sub-title—"A Brief Examination of the Basis and Origin of Christian Belief"—expands and explains it, while the general trend of the conclusions arrived at is given by a quotation from Amiel to which the writer more than once returns. "What an age especially needs," said the French thinker, "is a translation of Christianity from the domain of history to the domain of psychology." Side by side with this dictum, Prof. Gardner puts another by Jowett: "Religion is not dependent on historical events, the report of which we cannot altogether trust. Holiness has its sources elsewhere than in history." These two quotations strike the keynote of the whole essay. Obviously, therefore, it is two-sided. Partly it is negative, or, rather, critical, for it discusses with the merciless logic of history the basis of traditions on which, in the mind of the plain man, Christianity rests: partly it is constructive, or, rather, reconstructive, for it attempts to replace that basis, found untrustworthy, by another in the heart and moral ideals of man. Prof. Gardner, in fact, emulates, on a more concrete plane, the feat of Kant: he excludes theological conceptions from the sphere of Reason as Speculative, to re-admit them in the sphere of Reason as Practical.

The critical section is wedged in between two sections of reconstruction in the actual ordering of the book; logically, perhaps it should come first. In a couple of hundred close-packed, but clear, pages Prof. Gardner gives a most luminous survey of most of the vexed questions of New Testament criticism. He deals successively with the character of the documents and the preconceptions and ideals, literary and doctrinal, with which they were written, the narrated events of the life of Christ, the element of the miraculous in these and the recorded teaching of the Master, the intellectual conditions, Jewish and Hellenistic, under which the doctrinal ideas of the first centuries took shape. On all these subjects he gives, from the standpoint of an independent and judicial critic, a thorough-going support to the main contentions of the "advanced" writers of the second generation—such men, for example, as Adolph Harnack and Albert Réville. This testimony is all the more important, firstly, because, as we said, it is that of a trained historian; and, secondly, because it is in no sense that of a foe to Christianity. On the contrary, Prof. Gardner writes, "after many shrinkings and hesitations," from a profound conviction that a creed, to which he is sincerely and, we gather, even devotedly attached, can only gain from an honest and thorough-going study of its own foundations. His own conclusions are soberly but uncompromisingly expressed. He is not afraid to face the complete elimination of the miraculous from the Gospel narrative. Miracles, he insists, were bound to be attributed to the Founder of Christianity. They "have been in all ages of the world's history attributed to those who appeared to have a spiritual mission for mankind." The cause of this is "a confusion between the power of men over the souls and bodies of other men and their power over external things." History must draw a sharp distinction between "miracles proper—that is, complete deviations from the course of nature," and phenomena which, though abnormal, are not unparalleled by human agencies acting under scientific observation. Among the latter are included numerous recorded "miracles" which may be roughly classed as faith-healing, and which are not consequently miracles in the sense of acts of superhuman power testifying to the divinity of the agent. Of miracles which, if they happened, would really be miracles, so far as our present knowledge of the laws of nature can be trusted, Prof. Gardner sets aside (a) those recorded only in the Fourth Gospel, and (b) those recorded in the narratives of the infancy. The author of the Fourth Gospel is "a great constructive thinker," but "he regards reported facts as mere material to be accepted or rejected as may suit the necessities of his doctrinal fabric." Similarly, the miracles recorded in the early chapters of the Third Gospel, though "superior in ethical and literary character" to the childish fancies of the apocryphal gospels, are essentially of the same legendary type as these. Certain other miracles in the First and Third Gospels occur in distinctively Petrine passages, and Prof. Gardner suggests that Peter or the exponents of his tradition had "a readiness to accept the miraculous on easy terms." There remain some three or four "miracles properly so called" which perhaps offer the strongest resistance to dissolvent criticism, because they are found in "incomparably our most sober and trustworthy record" of the life of Jesus, the Second Gospel. These are the stilling of a tempest at sea; the walking on the sea to the boat of the disciples; the feeding of multitudes, twice repeated; and the cursing of the fig tree, with its result.

There are various ways in which the miraculous element may be eliminated from each of these stories without any violence of hypothesis. I do not care to attempt any such explanation, because it seems to me that no particular explanation can reach more than a moderate degree of probability. What is quite certain is, that any one of half-a-dozen explanations is more likely to represent the historic fact than an acceptance of the narrative as it stands in a perfectly literal and unimaginative fashion.

Prof. Gardner deals in a similar way with the question of the, for Christianity, infinitely more important miracles of the Incarnation and Resurrection. The "virgin-birth," he declares, is theology and not history. It is "a somewhat crude attempt to explain the nature of the Founder," and "partakes of the materialism which He seems to have constantly rebuked." It can be paralleled from almost every Gentile religion, and is not even accepted by several Christian Churches. Incidentally, Prof. Gardner combats the renewed attempt of Prof. Ramsay to uphold the historic credibility of the tradition which places the scene of the Nativity at Bethlehem. As for the Resurrection, "the accounts are inconsistent one with another, and intertwined with false scientific views." St. Mary Magdalene was "subject to nervous derangement," and "in a matter of visions her evidence would be of very little value."

This brief analysis of a part of Prof. Gardner's argument is intended to illustrate the extreme nature of the position to which a by no means hostile critic, making use of the ordinary canons of historic evidence, is driven when he once begins seriously to consider the historic basis of Christianity. Naturally these and other of his conclusions will be—have been—impugned, and we trust that he will be led to support his precise and lucid summary of results by an exhaustive statement of the considerations on which they are based. It would be unfair to leave the book without a few words on its constructive chapters, to which we have no doubt that Prof. Gardner attaches even greater importance than to the rest of his book. Only, of course, he is a professed historian, and he is not a professed psychologist, and naturally his views carry most authority when he is on his own ground. Briefly, his position appears to be this: Cut adrift from the tradition, religion finds its basis in the experience of the individual and of the race. The individual is conscious "of sin and its removal, and of the answer to prayer." This leads to the conviction of a "Power within which works for righteousness." History reveals the working of the same Power in the ordering of the world. Myth, legend, prophecy, parable, doctrine, are various ways in which the consciousness tries to represent to itself the activities of this Power. They have no speculative validity, but they have a relative validity, just in so far as they are fitted to survive by their adaptability to the practical needs of man. On this view, our only criticism must be, that it seems to repeat Kant's hard and fast distinction between the speculative and the practical Reason. And in reality Reason is not two, but one. The value of such doctrines as those of the Divinity of Jesus or the Future Life to the Practical Reason itself, depends entirely on their being regarded as speculatively true. Destroy their speculative validity, treat them frankly as dreams, and at once their subjective validity vanishes. Prof. Gardner's psychologic evolution of doctrine was not its historic evolution, in which obviously speculation had a large share; and we do not think he succeeds in showing that the psychology without the history will uphold the superstructure. In any case, he shows no signs of being prepared for the rifle fire of psychologic criticism, which the constructive side of his theory of Christianity will have to face. And we warn him that this will be no less searching than that which he himself has brought to bear upon the historic entrenchments of the past.

After Hamlet.

The Prince. By Adolphus Alfred Jack. (Macmillan. 3s. 6d. net.)

It is a tribute to the vitality of the drama that, even under the most depressing circumstances, good wits will attack it. At the present moment few people will read even an excellent play, and no manager will do more than postpone the production of one. Yet there is rarely an ambitious writer who does not, sooner or later, essay the conquest of the medium in which the literary art becomes most nearly creative. Mr. Jack has written The Prince upon what we may call orthodox lines. He has no affinities to the symbolism of the Continental and the Irish drama. His precursors are Shakespeare and Browning, in both of whom he has obviously soaked himself. The play is in five acts of blank verse, and has an Italian setting. To our mind it shows considerable achievement and greater promise, and deserves the careful attention of all serious students of poetry. The interest is, of course, mainly psychological. It arises out of a problem of conduct, one of those problems the very statement of which is a criticism of the scheme of things.

Men must choose

The best of two bad courses. That's the choice;
There is no other in the world of men.

The "Prince" is Francesco, son of the Marquis of Saluzzo. For him the choice falls between the sacrifice of, not kingdom, but kinhood, and the sacrifice of personal love and loyalty to a woman. He is brother to the heir to the throne, and, as a younger son, makes a secret marriage with the daughter of a merchant. Some days after he learns that his brother died a few hours before the marriage; that he was, therefore, himself heir at the time; and that, consequently, his marriage, by the law of the land, was null and void. He is now called upon to take up the serious responsibilities of heirship, and the claims of humanity and the personal life at once clash. He elects for humanity, weds his brother's intended bride, and sacrifices to his calling himself and his girl wife. Mr. Jack does not put it all as baldly as this. There is action and reaction. Francesco makes the juster and more merciful king for his personal experience of suffering and wrong. But this is the framework of the play, and the final judgment—whether he actually chose the best of two bad courses—is left in the equipoise. The handling of the theme, in its statement and evolution, seems to us somewhat unequal. The first two acts do not quite grip. The issues remain a little obscure, are not quite broadly enough put. But you learn, firstly, that Mr. Jack has a real power over blank verse; and, secondly, that he knows how to keep it in proper subordination to dramatic effect. The chief criticism that we should make on the style is that it is, if anything, too much under the domination of one of Shakespeare's manners—the involved, tortuous manner of parts of "Hamlet." There are phrases which startle one by the completeness with which they have caught the trick of it:

The sleep that's now upon him

Was not as welcome. What a cast was there
'Twixt churchyard food and youth.

Or again:

. . . to remember me

Of these ambitious might-be's I forgo,
The weak thoughts of a mind that slips and swings
And starts at what it would.

The rhythm again, in the distribution of its pauses, the cunning variety of its accents, is curiously Shakespearean. But though it is a real achievement to be able to write like "Hamlet," it is perhaps better still to be able to do so and to refrain. The lesser authentic voice is really more than the inspired echo, and Mr. Jack will, we hope, strike out more freely. But, before we pass on, there are some fine passages in these first two acts—not purple patches, for they only stand out above a continuously high level of diction and phrasing—which we must quote. The first is a fragment of dialogue between the father and mother of Francesco:

MARCHIONESS. . . . There's nothing changed,—

Only, our sanguine garment's faded:

Oh, not more sweetly in the morning sang

The morning birds, when all our world was young,
Than sounds their pipe to-day.

MARQUIS.

We'll seek them, then,

And in the garden where we found our loves

Dream, while we hear that plain song, Time has stood
In one continuing season.

The second is a bit of soliloquy by the blind Messer Gerardo Lanzetti, father of Francesco's love, Aurea:

LANZETTI. . . . I am so blind—
But then my hearing's rare. You cannot know them,
These frail delights that come to men who are old
And blinded. Music pipes all day. The breeze
Makes music, and the small birds with their wings
Beat a rat-tat for me; the air's alive
With voices and innumerable sounds.
The tree-squirrels hurry through the shaken wood,
I hear it, and I hear the breath of men,
And, when the silence and blank darkness comes,
The whistle of Time's passage.

The third is a fine dramatic movement, and makes us desire to see the play on the stage.

With the third act the dramatic situation gets hold of you. The scenes during which Francesco is deciding on his renunciation are admirable. He sends a letter of explanation to the deserted Aurea, and departs for Montferrat, to woo the Princess Domenica in his brother's place, and to assume the responsibilities of sovereignty there. How he understands those responsibilities, and the sincerity of the motives which led him to ruin his life and Aurea's rather than shirk them, are shown by another good scene, in which he does justice, not as the commoner mind conceives justice, upon two criminals. Meanwhile the letter has failed to reach Aurea. In the dress of a lad—Shakespeare again—she sets off in search of her husband, falls among robbers, and is rescued by the Count of Acqui, who, not knowing her story, falls in love with her.

AUR. You are a gentleman.

COUNT. And you the star,
The single planet burning in the west,
Making the other silver fires of heaven
Show faded as the lady moon, and cold
As all my world without you. Would I speak,
Or could I trust my life on few short words,
I'd say—O hear me!—when you came it seemed
As if the fielded grass was springing flowers,
And there was colour everywhere, sound, scent,
Warmth everywhere; and now I think the earth
Always contained but you, was always rich;
I cannot think what fashion had my thoughts
If it is truth I was without you once,
And wondered at the spiritual life of birds
That are a part of air.

Aurea and the Count reach Montferrat, and the Count, who now knows the story all but the deserting husband's name, puts it to Francesco, in Aurea's presence, whether she is not free to marry him.

We are not careful to enumerate all the defects of Mr. Jack's work. They are there. Not enough is made of the interludes with the dancing girls. Aurea's attitude to the Count of Acqui needs a little development; and so forth. But we can honestly say that few recent books of poetry have interested us so much as Mr. Jack's. He has put fundamental brainwork into it, a sense of style, a real feeling for dramatic expression. And all these things are rarer in literature than could be desired.

South Sea Thrills.

Among the Man-Eaters. By John Gaggin. (Unwin. 2s.)

"To be eaten," says Mr. Gaggin, without emphasis, "is mostly the ultimate fate of many of the hardy white adventurers in the western South Seas; such is the final result if the trader remains long enough. It may be postponed for years, or it may happen at once; but the result is generally certain, sooner or later." Mr. Gaggin went to Fiji in the cotton rush of 1871, and in later years he knocked about the Solomons and other fearsome South Sea paradises as a British Government agent. He appears to know every beach, custom, and lingo. He has had cannibal acquaintances who recognised him after years of absence, and who remained true to him when they found he was still lean. Again and again the ovens of Fiji or Malicolo or Engela seem to have been heated for Mr. Gaggin's reception, but a stout heart and a ready revolver always brought him through. The superiority of many of these cannibal over non-cannibal races is very marked. Thus the islanders of Savo, the best canoe builders and sailors in the Solomon group, are compared by Mr. Gaggin to the Vikings. They flash over the seas in canoes sixty feet long and eight or ten feet wide, and the best whale boats cannot overtake them. A superb and pitiful scene is thus described by Mr. Gaggin:

While here at Boli harbour one day, the white missionary being absent, a great Savo war canoe, chanting their weird war song, came sweeping round the point under fifty paddles. All the villagers took to the bush at once, but our boat faced the canoe, and halted her. It appears the head chief of Savo had built a new house, and it had no "mana" yet, so it had been sent to Florida for two boys. One fine lad was tied up, covered with leaves, at the bottom of the canoe. The mute agony and entreaty in the poor lad's eyes were more than I could stand, so I offered seven brand-new Tower muskets, one after the other, for the lad, and was refused. I must say I longed to tackle this man-eating canoe. Yet I dare not. I was a Government agent, an official, I was at a missionary town. Even if the missionary was at home, we could not save the boy except by force. A British man-of-war was cruising around. Had I used force to save the lad I would have been arrested in a week, and tried for my life in a month. I hesitated. I suppose the native chief saw his danger from my face and yelled something. The canoe shot off like a great sea bird, my boat could not overtake her; the moment to act had passed. That poor lad's face haunted me for a week.

One day on a Solomon beach a little girl played Friday to Mr. Gaggin—her Crusoe. She ran to him and, before he was well aware of it, placed his foot on her neck:

One knows what this means well enough. In hot war it means that if a chief allows his foot to rest on the defeated one's neck the man's life is safe, but he is a slave for ever, rescue or no rescue. I was puzzled at the child's action. It was soon explained. Shortly afterwards down came a lot of villagers, and insisted on taking the youngster. I told them what she had done. They said they did not care; her mother was being cooked in the town, and the child should go to the ovens with her.

"Never," I said. "What! we who had eaten betel nut together many times to quarrel for a mere child, to whom I had granted life in their own way." I swore they should kill me first. They replied—

"Oh, that was an easy thing to do."

A bold front was the only thing now. Luckily I had my sixteen-shooter. Springing back, and putting a mark on the sand with my foot, I swore I would shoot the first man who crossed it. I said before, the natives do not care to face an armed white in the open. They knew I could answer for a dozen of them or so, and, although clubs were up and bows bent, they hesitated—as well they might; and I knew I had mastered them. Then one proposed I should buy the child fairly: they cared not to fight a friend. To this I at once agreed, and a miss was thus avoided, and a mission axe—worth tenpence—made me a slave-owner. Tell it not in Gath.

Treachery is the weapon of cannibals, and it is pleasant to have Mr. Gaggin's assurance that "no natives will face an armed and determined white in the open—even one. This is a rule." Certainly they never faced Mr. Gaggin, whose skill and bravery shine between his lines and make his off-hand yarns more enchanting than a golden style. A group of literary men would be silent in Mr. Gaggin's presence; they would give him strong cigars and bid him talk. A man who has rubbed noses by the half-hour with hideous chiefs on Pacific islands, who has held Christmas revel with cannibals in booming ocean caves, who has known how near a good ship in a waveless lagoon may be to bloody massacre, may write as he pleases, if he will only write. This is the age of statement. Even our accomplished writers run to statement; they minister to the passion which men are feeling to know how life is lived in mean streets and Indian cantonments, and in the uttermost parts of the ocean. Mr. Gaggin goes on stating in his cool, horny-handed way, and for the time he is king. He says his stories are correct; you believe him. Indeed his stories do not greatly transcend what has been recently written in more sober terms by Capt. Cayley-Webster.

Mr. Gaggin thinks—with other authorities—that cannibalism began in sheer hunger for flesh food, and that the mitigation of the evil arose when Capt. Cooke brought pigs to the Pacific. It is “a South Sea axiom” that if fifty English people were deprived of all meat or fat for a sufficiently long period they would—but it is only a South Sea axiom. Mr. Gaggin’s book is compact of grim realities—is such a tale as Othello whispered to the blanched cheek of Desdemona. Its general accuracy is above suspicion, and criticism has therefore nothing to say to its bluff and unassuming statements. We should add that the book is included in the “Overseas Library,” a series which has our hearty admiration.

Other New Books.

BY MOOR AND FELL.

BY HALLIWELL SUTCLIFFE.

Here we have a novelist elevating his favourite back-grounds into a separate theme. In Ricraft of Withens Mr. Sutcliffe has shown himself the novelist of the Yorkshire moors, boldly occupying the ground on which the Brontës wreaked their passion and their genius. Passion abides with Mr. Sutcliffe: he really knows, really loves, the forlorn moors and sunny dales of West Yorkshire. His book deserves a finer word than topography, shall we say it is topography of a fine order? We named the Brontës: Mr. Sutcliffe has a chapter on them and on their bleak Haworth. By the same token he is at issue with Charlotte Brontë and with Mrs. Humphry Ward about the sources of Emily Brontë’s inspiration in Wuthering Heights. Mr. Sutcliffe pictures the shy Emily knocking boldly at the doors of moorland farmhouses, and making herself at home in their great kitchens; pictures her talking “like the upland folk who have given her welcome. . . . presently she will go to the far mistal, to have a look at the roan cow . . . she will be insatiably curious as to all farm implements . . . she will get into wordy conflict with the oldest farm hand.” Mr. Sutcliffe says the Joseph of Wuthering Heights may be found in any low-lying farm among the moors. Thus he scouts Charlotte Brontë’s idea, ratified by Mrs. Humphry Ward, that Emily “had scarcely more practical knowledge of the people round her than a nun has of the country folk who sometimes pass her convent gates.” A pretty difference of opinion, involving the question whether we are to regard Wuthering Heights as a patient reproduction of Yorkshire moorland life by a keenly observant, yet imaginative, woman, or as a triumphant evocation of it by a woman of rare poetic and creative genius.

All this leaves unsaid needful words about this book, which no one who has truly loved one scrap of England can read unmoved. For here we have the language not of mere tourist description, but of yearning memory. The very stories which lighten the pages, like that of Jose Wark’s bamboozling of the Army doctor, or the Bingley schoolmaster who saddled a stranger’s mare in mistake for his own horse, are told, not for their effect as stories, nor for any Yankee symmetry or completed humour they possess: they are told for their slow revelation of character bred from the soil. Soil and sun and wind, and the human lives they have done so much to mould—these are

Mr. Sutcliffe’s theme. How vast the starry night above the rocks of Ponden Kirk, how dolorous the rain-winds of November on Haworth Moor, how slowly in the summer heat the folk move about Rylstone village, how remotely under the moonlit fells throbs the dance of Burnstall Fair! Old squirearchical days, old Methodist days, old ghost stories—not yet out of the blood—Mr. Sutcliffe knows them all. In its small world and way, this is a true book. (Unwin.)

SHAKESPEARE’S MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

EDITED BY HORACE HOWARD FURNESS, M.A.

The merits of Mr. Furness’s “New Variorum” Shakespeare do not, at this time of day, need preaching: it is enough to chronicle the welcome issue of yet another volume of the Comedies. Mr. Furness has, naturally enough, no revolutionary theories to propose about “Much Ado”; but his patient and laborious compilation of all the ore and much of the dross in what a hundred commentators have written on the play will save the brains and economise the time of many a student. His own critical divagations, moreover, are always learned, touched with humour, and on the side of sanity. He attempts to discover some traces of a “first state” of the play, and apologises: “This, of course, is pure conjecture—but does it herein differ from the majority of Shakespearean assertions?” He thinks that this “first state” was the “Benedicte and Betteris” played at court, according to Lord Treasurer Stanhope’s accounts, in 1613. It is just possible, but on the whole it seems more likely that “Much Ado,” like others of Shakespeare’s plays, was known by more than one name. One does not see why a “first state” should continue to be played after the revision had taken place. The court of King James did not share the ideals of the Elizabethan Stage Society. In any case Mr. Furness will have nothing of Mr. Brae’s theory that we are to look for a “first state” of “Much Ado” in the lost “Love’s Labour Won” mentioned by Francis Meres. We think he is right. The name would fit any one of half a dozen comedies. The popular fancy is “All’s Well that End’s Well”: the claims of the “Tempest” and the “Taming of the Shrew” have been urged: Mr. Furness thinks, and so do we, that there is something to be said for “As You Like It.” “But it is all guesswork, from which the guessers alone retire with intellectual benefit. However, ‘the fox is worth nothing,’ says Sydney Smith, ‘it is the catching alone that is the sport.’” Mr. Furness tilts at a dictum of Coleridge, that Dogberry and his comrades are dragged into the play, “when any less ingeniously absurd watchmen and night constables would have answered the mere necessities of the action.” On the contrary, Mr. Furness thinks that Shakespeare “was forced, by the necessities of the action, to have stupidity rule supreme at those points where he has given us the immortal Dogberry,” and his analysis of the dramatic value of the watchmen scenes is a pretty enough page of criticism. (J. B. Lippincott Co.)

NOTES FROM A DIARY,
1886-1888.

BY SIR M. E. GRANT-DUFF

Reviewing Sir Mounstuart Grant-Duff has come to resemble the child’s pastime of threading chestnuts on a string; with this difference, that the child deals with chestnuts exclusively, whereas the most engaging of living diarists varies them with other kinds. When he records with appreciation that a poor wicket-keeper has been compared to the Ancient Mariner, in that “he stoppeth one of three,” we have to sigh a little, because this was a joke which we have known for a lifetime; but then will come such a story as the following, to atone for it: “When Lord Amptill was young he kept a collection of much-cherished serpents in a room which opened into his mother’s. ‘But don’t you,’ some one said to Lady William, ‘find that very disagreeable?’ ‘Oh, yes,’ she replied,

'very disagreeable indeed; but I like dear Odo to have home ties.'" We select several others. Thorwaldsen the sculptor said: "The clay is the life of the statue, the plaster is its death, the marble is its resurrection." On mentioning a trick that the Khedive had of saying continually, "Ceci et ça," someone told of an old country gentleman who similarly had a habit of saying, "Little dogs, little dogs," which he repeated incessantly, sometimes insulting those of his hearers who did not know him. Some one, in the time of the Russo-Turkish war, met Ruskin, and told him that Plevna had fallen. "Plevna?" said Ruskin; "I never heard of it. I know of nothing later than the fourteenth century." "Capital speech that of yours," said an M.P. to Lord Charles Beresford; "very good speech indeed; but you don't look like a statesman." "I daresay not; no more do you look like a weathercock." The diarist's discretion prevents us from doing more than guess at the weathercock's name; but everyone will do that. Lamartine was so fond of dust that he preferred always driving in the second carriage in order to enjoy it. An American paper once contained this announcement: "Mr. Browning has declined to furnish us with a poem in exchange for a thousand dollars. We find ourselves more unable than ever to understand Mr. Browning." Old Sir William Erle remarked to some one who offended him: "You don't know the strength of the expression which I am not using." Matthew Arnold wrote in a visitor's book in 1884:

Of little threads our life is spun,
And he spins ill who misses one.

Sir Mountstuart Grant-Duff cannot be said always to have elicited the utmost possible from the eminent persons whom he met. We find this entry in his diary for May 23, 1887: "I asked him [Bret Harte] what was the industry of Crefeld, where he had been consul. 'Silks and velvets,' he replied; 'in the production of these it comes second to Lyons.'" Whereas he might have talked about Yuba Bill, or told of one of the other occasions on which Mr. Brown's sarcasms had half cleared out the town! But these are very attractive volumes none the less. (Murray.)

Fiction.

Resurrection. By Leo Tolstoy.
(Henderson. 6s. net.)

In the summer of last year we dealt fully with Count Tolstoy's new novel as far as it had then gone in its serial publication. And now that the complete book has been published, and we have read it to the end, we realise that in choosing that time for our article we acted upon what was nothing short of an inspiration. For the melancholy truth has to be confessed that this novel, which began so finely and of which so much was expected, declines into something very little better than a tedious tract. At a certain stage the publication was interrupted while the author made up his mind how to go on—or, at least, that was the report. With the book before us, there is, alas! only too much reason to believe it; for though the story is now brought to at least one of its possible conclusions, it is without life, tenseness, enthusiasm, and, worse than all, it is diffuse and wayward.

Prince Nekhludoff, it will be remembered, years ago seduced his aunt's servant. He forgets the whole affair until, serving on a jury, he recognises the girl in the prostitute charged with poisoning a merchant. She is convicted and condemned to Siberia, and Nekhludoff first throws himself into the attempt to procure her acquittal, and afterwards determines to go to Siberia with her and marry her in order that her lot may be the lighter. To do this he gives up his old friends, his social ties, his property. That is the story of Resurrection, culminating in Nekhludoff's discovery that perfect peace of mind is his.

The trial, the seduction, the dealings with lawyers and officials, and the Prince's relations and friends are, as we said last summer, done wonderfully. The whole thing lives. But with the departure to Siberia the story flags, and apparently the author's power weakens. Life stories of other convicts are drawn across the trail, and the end, in which Maslova, the prostitute, declines to permit Nekhludoff to carry out his part of the expiation, is inconclusive. In fact, what began as a convincing and realistic drama of awakened conscience and convict life constructed by a great artist, terminates as if it were part of the heavy octavo of a zealous prison reformer. It is sincere and moving in a way; but, oh, the novel that is lost!

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the week's Fiction are not necessarily final.
Reviews of a selection will follow.]

THE KISS OF ISIS. BY CAPTAIN ARTHUR HAGGARD.

Captain Haggard, who is a brother of Mr. Rider Haggard, tells how a British officer came under the power of the Spirit of Evil (who had a face like a leper), and remained in bondage until he could be released by the kiss of Isis. He at last wins to the goddess, and behold! she is Ena Feilden, an heiress and his love. (Hurst & Blackett. 3s. 6d.)

THE STRONG GOD CIRCUMSTANCE. BY HELEN SHIPTON.

A serious novel. The hero, a clergyman, is unjustly suspected of fraud in coaching his pupils for examinations. He makes a good fight, and is loved by two women, one of whom sacrifices herself that he may be happy with the other. A novel above the ordinary level. (Methuen. 6s.)

A MAKER OF NATIONS. BY GUY BOOTHBY.

The maker of nations is Mr. Joseph Spielman, who pulls wires to perfection. But it is Dick Durrington, soldier of fortune, who is the central figure of this story. When we say that it opens in a gambling saloon in Cairo, and passes to a South American Republic in a state of war, students of Mr. Boothby will know enough. (Ward, Lock & Co. 5s.)

THE HARVESTERS. BY J. S. FLETCHER.

This story is "truly rural," but it does not exclude tragedy. Love and poaching supply the chief interests. "Black Archer," the poacher, is not provided with the right vocabulary: a poacher would not speak of birds "outlined against the sky"; he would not speak of his "designs" when planning a night's sport; nor would he say to his son, "I have determined to shoot you if you persist in your stupid conduct." (John Long. 6s.)

WITHOUT THE LIMELIGHT. BY GEORGE R. SIMS.

In his own way Mr. Sims is always effective. Here he shows us what theatrical life is behind the scenes: how, for instance, the fairy queen of a pantomime had to turn out of her sordid lodgings on Christmas night and sleep in a mourning coach, and breakfast in the midst of an undertaker's stock. The little good-hearted servant-maid, who asks everyone to excuse her vulgarity, is an amusing figure. There are twelve stories. (Chatto & Windus.)

MARCELLE OF THE LATIN QUARTER. BY CHAS. HOLLAND.

In this story, Mr. Holland tries to do for the Latin Quarter of to-day what Henri Murger did for it fifty years ago. We are among artists and models, we sip absinthe on the Boule Miche. There is much café and studio talk like this: "If old Tissot illustrates the Apocrypha I should advise him to buy 'Le Bain de Suzanne' for a frontispiece." (Pearson. 6s.)

The Academy, March 17, 1900.

Spring Supplement.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

INNERMOST ASIA:

TRAVEL AND SPORT IN THE PAMIRS.

By RALPH P. COBBOLD, late 60th Rifles.

With Maps and numerous Illustrations from Photographs. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 21s.

The Morning Post—"To the lover of sport and travel Mr. Cobbold's book will be welcome. To the student of political developments in the East it will possess value for such light as it throws on the way in which Russian doings in a remote corner of Asia strike an observer on the spot."

PINK AND SCARLET;

OR, HUNTING AS A SCHOOL FOR SOLDIERING.

By Lieut.-Colonel E. A. H. ALDERSON.

Profusely Illustrated. 1 vol., 7s. 6d. net.

Blackwood's Magazine—"A sportsman everywhere makes a good soldier. A man with an eye for ground will, in war, be a genius, for the ground is always with a soldier. Hunting men make good soldiers; they learn the value of the ground they gallop over."

LORD ROBERTS AND LORD KITCHENER AT THE FRONT.

Portraits by WILLIAM NICHOLSON.

1. LORD KITCHENER OF KHARTUM.

2. FIELD-MARSHAL LORD ROBERTS.

Mounted on card, 2s. 6d. each; or framed, 6s. each.

DR. IBSEN'S NEW PLAY.

WHEN WE DEAD AWAKEN.

A Play in Three Acts by HENRIK IBSEN.

Translated by WILLIAM ARCHER.

Cloth, 3s. net.

[Next week.

ROSTAND'S GREAT PLAY.

CYRANO DE BERGERAC.

Translated by GLADYS THOMAS and MARY GUILLEMARD.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.; paper, 1s. 6d.

N.B.—This is the only published Translation of Rostand's Play, in which Mr. Charles Wyndham will appear shortly in London.

HAUPTMANN'S NEW PLAY.

THE SUNKEN BELL: a Fairy Play.

By GERHART HAUPTMANN.

Cloth, 4s. net.

TWO PLAYS BY PROFESSOR GILBERT MURRAY.

CARLYON SAHIB. | ANDROMACHE.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.; paper, 1s. 6d. each.

MR. ARTHUR SYMONS'S NEW WORK.

THE SYMBOLIST MOVEMENT IN LITERATURE.

By ARTHUR SYMONS.

1 vol., 6s.

A NEW VOLUME OF "LITERATURES OF THE WORLD."

A HISTORY of RUSSIAN LITERATURE.

By K. WALISZEWSKI.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

AMERICA TO-DAY:

OBSERVATIONS AND REFLECTIONS.

By WILLIAM ARCHER.

1 vol., 6s.

W. D. HOWELLS in Literature—"Full of suggestion for the reflective American as well as comfort for the sensitive American. Rarely has this Republic been treated by so kindly, so conscientious, and so competent a hand."

A NEW AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

MY FATHER AND I.

By Countess DE PULIGA.

With Portraits. 1 vol., 6s.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE REBEL. By H. B. Marriott Watson.

HEARTS IMPORTUNATE. By Evelyn Dickinson.

THE WHITE TERROR. By Felix Gras, Author of "The Reds of the Midi."

THE WORLD'S MERCY, and other Stories. By MAXWELL CRAY.

FOLLY CORNER. By Mrs. Henry Dudeney, Author of "The Maternity of Harriott Wicken." [Second Impression.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW AND FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

A FOURTH EDITION IS READY OF

SIR HERBERT MAXWELL'S NEW LIFE OF WELLINGTON.

2 vols., 36s. net.

"AN ADMIRABLE BOOK."—LORD SALISBURY.

"Excellent."—Times.

"Masterly."—Pall Mall Gazette.

A THIRD EDITION IS IN PREPARATION OF

SIDE LIGHTS on SOUTH AFRICA. By

ROY DEVEREUX. With Map. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"Does not contain a single dull page."—Pall Mall Gazette.

BURMA. By Max and Bertha Ferrars.

300 pp. Text, and 450 Illustrations from Photographs. 1 vol., demy 4to, cloth extra, 30s. net.

[Ready shortly.]

Illustrated Prospectus post free on application.

Demy 8vo. New and Cheaper Edition. Illustrated.

RUINED CITIES of CEYLON: being a Description of Anuradhapura and Polonnaruwa. By HENRY W. CAVE, M.A.

[In preparation.]

Demy 8vo, with 32 Full-page Illustrations and Maps. 14s. net.

THE REMARKABLE HISTORY of the

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY, including that of the French Traders of North-Western Canada, and of the North-West, XY, and Astor Fur Companies. By GEORGE BRYCE, M.A., LL.D., Professor in Manitoba College, Winnipeg; Délégué Régional de l'Alliance Scientifique de Paris; Member of General Committee of British Association; Fellow of American Association for Advancement of Science; Author of "Manitoba" (1882); "Short History of Canadian People" (1887); "Canada" in Winsor's Nar. and Crit. Hist. of America, &c.

[Ready shortly.]

Illustrated Prospectus post free on application.

Fully Illustrated. Royal 8vo, 14s. net.

EXPERTS on GUNS and SHOOTING. By

G. T. TEASDALE BUCKELL.

[Ready.]

Fourteen years' experience as Editor of Land and Water has brought the Author into contact with all the new Gunnerly Inventions as well as with the Inventors themselves. The views of the latter the Author records, each upon his strongest point in Gunnery, when, and only when, he can endorse them from his own long experience of sport.

IMPORTANT WORK FOR ELECTRICAL ENGINEERS AND OTHERS.

Crown 8vo, with Numerous Illustrations. 12s. 6d. net

STANDARD POLYPHASE APPARATUS

and SYSTEMS. By MAURICE A. AUDIN, M.S., Mem. Am. Ins. E.E.

"The book is well supplied with illustrations and diagrams, which help out the already lucid demonstrations and descriptions of the text. It should be the more welcome because its subject is relatively novel in practice and hitherto little dealt with, if at all, in technical literature of so general an address as this."—Scotsman.

THE DIUTURNAL THEORY of the EARTH; or, Nature's System of Constructing a Stratified Physical World. By WILLIAM ANDREWS. With Portrait of Author and 2 Maps. 8vo, pp. 575, 16s. net.

[Ready.]

Tenth Edition, Revised and greatly Enlarged. Cloth, 6s.

INSTRUCTIONS in PHOTOGRAPHY. By

Captain W. DE W. ABNEY, C.B., R.E., D.C.L., F.R.S.

The Standard Manual of the Photographic Practitioner. [Nearly ready.]

THE FLORAL ART of JAPAN. Being

a Second and Revised Edition of "THE FLOWERS of JAPAN AND THE ART of FLORAL ARRANGEMENT." By JOSIAH CONDER, F.R.I.B.A. With 14 Full-Page Coloured Plates, 55 Full-Page Outline Plates, and 39 Smaller Illustrations in the Text, all by Japanese Artists. Super-royal 4to, cloth gilt, 45s. net.

[Ready.]

INVALUABLE TO ALL INTERESTED IN BOOKS.

THE ENGLISH CATALOGUE of BOOKS

for the YEAR 1899. Royal 8vo, cloth limp, 6s. net; or half-roan, limp, 7s. 6d. net.

[Ready.]

It contains, as usual, the full Titles of all the Books of the Year 1899, under Author and Subject in one Continuous Alphabet, as well as a Classification under leading subjects; and a List of London Publishers and their full Addresses.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & COMPANY, LTD.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SMITH, ELDER, &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW VOLUME BY CONAN DOYLE.

To be Published on March 27th. With a Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE GREEN FLAG,
And other Tales of War and Sport.

By CONAN DOYLE,

Author of "The White Company," "Rodney Stone," &amp;c.

COMPLETION OF DR. W. H. FITCHETT'S NEW PATRIOTIC WORK,

HOW ENGLAND SAVED EUROPE:

The Story of the Great War (1793-1815).

By W. H. FITCHETT, B.A., LL.D.,

Author of "Deeds that Won the Empire," "Fights for the Flag," &amp;c.

On April 1th. With 16 Portraits and 10 Plans. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Vol. IV.—WATERLOO AND ST. HELENA.

CONTENTS OF THE PREVIOUS VOLUMES:—

Vol. I.—FROM THE LOW COUNTRIES TO EGYPT. With 16 Portraits and 8 Plans.

Vol. II.—THE STRUGGLE FOR THE SEA. With 16 Portraits and 6 Plans.

Vol. III.—THE WAR IN THE PENINSULA. With 16 Portraits and 15 Plans.

Spectator.—"Exactly the sort of history desired by the million.....The work is worthy of the author of 'Deeds that Won the Empire' and 'Fights for the Flag.'"Literature.—"A glowing piece of work. We should take pleasure in knowing that thousands of British boys had obtained this volume."Sketch.—"Such books as Mr. Fitchett's are the makers of Englishmen in the highest sense of the term....Those who are acquainted with his earlier work will find in this example of his genius the same vivid word-picturing capacity, the same vivid descriptive ability, and the same vivid character-drawing."

NEW VOLUME OF

THE "HAWORTH" EDITION of the
LIFE AND WORKS OF THE SISTERS BRONTË.

To be completed in 7 vols., large crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 6s. each.

On MARCH 26th. With a Portrait of Anna Brontë, a Facsimile of the Title-page of the First Edition, and 6 Full-page Illustrations.

Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

Vol. VI.—THE TENANT OF WILDFELL HALL. By ANNE BRONTË. With a Preface by Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD.

Guardian.—"Mrs. Humphry Ward is a critic of the first order. Never before have the Brontë sisters been so accurately placed, so delicately differentiated alike from one another, and from others of their craft."

* Vol. VII.—THE LIFE OF CHARLOTTE BRONTË. By Mrs. GASKELL. With an Introduction and Notes by CLEMENT K. SHORTER, completing the edition, will be published on April 26th. Prospectus of the edition on application.

THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY.

The Last Volume but One.

On March 26th. Royal 8vo, 15s. net in cloth; or in half-morocco, marbled edges, 20s. net.

VOL. LXII. (WILLIAMSON—WORDE) OF THE

Dictionary of National Biography.

Edited by SIDNEY LEE.

NOTE.—A Full Prospectus of "The Dictionary of National Biography," with Specimen Pages, may be had upon application.

* Vol. I. was published on January 1st, 1885, and a Volume has been issued every three months since that date. Volume LXIII., completing the work, will be published on July 1st, 1900.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "A BRIDE ELECT."

Just Published. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEMO.

By THEO. DOUGLAS,

Author of "A Bride Elect," "Ira: a Mystery," "Carr of Dimecar," &amp;c.

NEMO.

By THEO. DOUGLAS.

Spectator.—"Mr. Douglas shows a distinct gift for the handling of the uncanny. If the reader embarks on 'Nemo' under proper conditions, it should certainly 'gar him grue.'"Academy.—"A strong and well-constructed story.....Mystery, excitement, humbug, and detection keep the story thoroughly alive, and the love interest is never dropped."Pall Mall Gazette.—"Altogether a story that makes one hasten back to it as soon as possible, if it has, by chance, to be temporarily put down, and that one is sorry to have finished."

London: SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO., 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

A. &amp; C. BLACK'S LIST.

NOW READY.—Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d. net.

THE DIVINE DISCIPLINE OF ISRAEL.

An Address and Three Lectures on the Growth of Ideas in the Old Testament.

By G. BUCHANAN GRAY, M.A.,

Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis in Mansfield College, Oxford, Author of "Hebrew Proper Names."

"Thoughtful, scholarly, and reasonable."—Outlook.

"We recognise to the full the value of such teaching as Mr. Gray's."

Spectator.

NOW READY.—Femy 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d. net.

THE GRAMMAR OF SCIENCE.

By KARL PEARSON, M.A., F.R.S.,

Professor of Applied Mathematics and Mechanics in University College, London.

Second Edition, thoroughly Revised and much Enlarged.

Contains Two entirely New Chapters on Natural Selection and Heredity, embracing a Popular Account of Prof. Pearson's own more recent work in this direction.

Containing 33 Illustrations in the Text.

"It is still a grammar in that it deals with the foundations of science; but a far more ambitious title might have been given to so comprehensive a work."

The Bookman."This powerful book.....We recommend all readers, and especially scientists, metaphysicians, theologians, and last, but not least, the writers of scientific text-books to read and digest this well-written, clearly reasoned description of what science and scientific method is."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NOW READY, SECOND AND ENLARGED EDITION.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

A HISTORY OF SOCIALISM.

By THOMAS KIRKUP.

"Mr. Kirkup's book was recognised at its first appearance as the standard history of Socialism, and careful study has only revealed new excellences, and confirmed our judgment."—The Bookman."Mr. Kirkup has done more than any other writer to expound the history and philosophy of the Socialistic movement; to present it without the exaggeration of the enthusiast, or the contemptuous and meticulous criticism of extreme individualists.....On all historical and philosophical points connected with his subject the book is notably learned and interesting."—Saturday Review.

NOW READY.—1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

A PLEA FOR A SIMPLER LIFE, AND
FADS OF AN OLD PHYSICIAN.

By GEORGE S. KEITH, M.D.

With Portrait of the Author and a New Preface.

"We can recommend this book very heartily. Its particular precepts may not suit everyone, but its tone is broad, healthy, and sane."—The Academy.

NOW READY, SECOND EDITION.

2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, price 24s.

SOCIAL LIFE OF SCOTLAND IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

By HENRY GREY GRAHAM.

Crowned by THE ACADEMY, January, 1900.

"He shows us a Scotland in which the gentry were just beginning to drink tea, adorn their rooms with wall-paper, and wear linen next their skin. He sketches the rise of the theatre, art, and a new literature in Edinburgh. The dress, the sports, the eating habits, and the social amenities of the age take life again in Mr. Graham's pages, in which literary style is the efficient, not obtrusive, handmaid of what may be called tessellated history."—Academy.

NOW READY, price 6d. net.

WHO'S WHO AT THE WAR.

Containing the Biographies of Distinguished Persons in South Africa. Taken from the well-known biographical annual, "Who's Who."

With Additional Names, List of Regiments, Lists of Officers Killed and Wounded, Vocabulary and Bibliography.

"A handy and timely selection from 'Who's Who.'—Literature."This is a useful little book which supplies information that is often asked for about the careers of the principal officers now leading in South Africa..... It is arranged on the now familiar plan of the annual, 'Who's Who,' and is therefore as convenient as possible for ready reference."—The Times.

A. &amp; C. BLACK, Soho Square, London.

Spring Announcements Supplement.

SATURDAY: MARCH 17, 1900.

The Spring Publishing Season.

New Books and Announcements.

PERHAPS only an eye accustomed to the publishing arena would see in the following lists the restraining influence of the war on book production. That influence is really very marked, yet among the surviving announcements are many of great interest. Mr. Basil Champneys' Life and Correspondence of Coventry Patmore is a book to which many look forward. Mr. Lang's History of Scotland from the Roman Occupation and Mr. Leslie Stephens's The English Utilitarians will be welcomed by serious students. Science will be the richer for what it finds in Dr. Nansen's memoirs of his Norwegian North Polar Expedition. Prof. Knapp's edition of the works of George Borrow, begun by the issue of Lavengro, will be continued. Mr. W. H. Mallock will give us both prose and poetry. Mrs. Meynell's study of John Ruskin, and Mr. Richard Le Gallienne's critique of Mr. Kipling, are sure to excite discussion. These are but chance drops in the plentiful shower. On the whole, the Spring publishing season of 1900, though attenuated, is distinctly "in being."

Mr. George Allen.

Morrah (Herbert), The Literary Year Book, 1900 .....	3/6
Reddie (Cecil), Abbotsholme (1889-1899): Ten Years' Work in an Educational Laboratory .....	10/6
Ruskin (John), Giotto and His Works in Padua . A new small edition of the work formerly in the possession of the Arundel Society, with index and explanatory criticisms of the Frescoes depicting the Life of the Holy Family .....	7/6
Ruskin (John), Præterita . New Edition. Now complete in three volumes .....	5/0
Hare (Augustus J. C.), Paris . New Edition. 2 vols. ....	6/0
Blake (J. M.), In the Wind of the Day .....	3/0

Messrs. Bell &amp; Sons.

Champneys (Basil), Coventry Patmore: His Family and Correspondence .....	31/6
Prior (E. S.), A History of Gothic Art in England .....	31/6
Gatty (Mrs. Alfred), The Book of Sun-Dials . Revised and greatly enlarged by H. K. F. Eden and Eleanor Lloyd. With a chapter on Portable Dials, by Lewis Evans, F.S.A. New edition (the fourth) .....	31/6
Mowat (William), A Treatise on Stairbuilding and Hand-railing, including a Section on Stone Stairs . Intended for the use of House and Ship-Joiners, Builders, Architects, and Students .....	28/0
Crane (Walter), Line and Form .....	12/6
Long (George), Marcus Aurelius Antoninus . The twelve books. New edition, printed in large type at the Chiswick Press .....	12/6
Hamilton (Mrs.), Gregorovius' History of the City of Rome in the Middle Ages . Vol. VII. The Fifteenth Century. In two Parts .....	4/6
Gwatkin (H. M.), Studies in Arianism: the Character of the Reaction following the Council of Nicaea .....	3/6
Wood (General Sir Evelyn), Achievements of Cavalry . With a chapter on Mounted Infantry. Cheaper Re-issue .....	5/0
Bodley (G. F.), Poems .....	3/6
Welles (Charles Stuart), The Lute and the Lays: a Book of Poems .....	2/0
Brown (Edith), Readings on the Life of Our Lord .....	2/6
Douglas (Helen), The Silver Cross: a Selection of Poems for the Sick and Suffering .....	3/6
Trine (Ralph Waldo), In Tune With the Infinite; or, Fullness of Peace, Power, and Plenty .....	1/0
Needham (Lieut.-Col. the Hon. Henry C.), Croquet. "All England" series .....

Secombe (Thomas), The Age of Johnson (1748-1798) .....	3/6
The Chiswick Shakespeare (with Introductions and Glossaries by John Dennis, Illustrations by Byam Shaw): Hamlet, The Merchant of Venice, Othello, Romeo and Juliet, King John, As You Like It, Macbeth, The Tempest, The Winter's Tale, King Lear, A Midsummer Night's Dream. Shortly: Twelfth Night, Richard II. ....	1/6
Handbooks of the Great Masters : Russhforth (G. McNeil), Carlo Crivelli.—Brinton (Selwyn), Correggio.—Rea (Hope), Donatello.—Williamson (G. C.), Perugino .....	5/0

Messrs. A. &amp; C. Black.

Mallock (W. H.), Lucretius on Life and Death .....	10/0
Mallock (W. H.), Doctrine and Doctrinal Disruption .....	7/6
Crockett (W. S.), The Scott Country .....	3/6
Cheyne (Rev. T. K.), Encyclopædia Biblica: a Dictionary of the Bible . Vol. II. E to J .....	20/0
Gray (G. Buchanan), The Divine Discipline of Israel .....	2/6
Pfeiderer (Otto), Evolution and Theology .....	6/0
Hayman (Rev. H.), The Epistles of the New Testament , net .....	3/6
Duff (Archibald), Old Testament Theology; or, the History of Hebrew Religion . Vol. II. The Deuteronomic Reformation in Century VII. B.C. ....	15/0
Tuker and Malleon (Misses), Handbook to Christian and Ecclesiastical Rome . Parts III. and IV. in 1 vol. ...	7/6
Kirkup (Thomas), A History of Socialism .....	7/6
Keith (George S.), A Plea for a Simpler Life, and Fads of an Old Physician . 1 vol. ....	3/6
Smith (W. Anderson), Temperate Chile .....	10/6
Forbes (James D.), Travels through the Alps . New Edition .....	20/0
Montagu (Rear-Admiral the Hon. Victor A.), A Middy's Recollections (1853 to 1860) . Second Edition .....	3/6
Scott (D. H.), Studies in Fossil Botany .....	7/6
Creighton (G.), Microscopic Researches in Glycogen . Part II. ....	net
Lankester (Prof. Ray), A Treatise on Zoology . Part III. The Echinodermata .....	15/0
Ingram (J. K.), Outlines of the History of Religion .....	3/6
Mitton (G. E.), The Gifts of Enemies .....	6/0
"Who's Who at the War" .....	7/6

Messrs. Blackwood &amp; Sons.

Memorial Edition of G. W. Stevens's Works. Vol. I. Miscellaneous Writings. With a Memoir by W. E. Henley, and a Photogravure Portrait .....	3/6
Boyd (Mary Stuart), Our Stolen Summer: The Record of a Roundabout Tour .....	12/6
Stevens (G. W.), From Capetown to Ladysmith .....	15/0
Kennedy (Vice-Admiral Sir William), Hurrah for the Life of a Sailor! Fifty Years in the Royal Navy .....	6/0
Lang (Andrew), A History of Scotland from the Roman Occupation .....	2/6
Fayrer (Surgeon-General Sir Joseph), Recollections of My Life .....	6/0
Hensman (Howard), A History of Rhodesia .....	2/6
Meynell (Mrs.), John Ruskin: With the Biographical Chronology compiled by Sydney C. Cockerell .....	6/0
Mitchell (Alexander F.), The Scottish Reformation: Its Epochs, Episodes, Leaders, and Distinctive Characteristics . Being the Baird Lecture for 1899 .....	3/6
O'Neill (Moir), Songs of the Glens of Antrim .....	3/6
Pullin (A. W.), Talks with Old English Cricketers .....	7/6
James (Capt. Walter H.), Modern Strategy .....
Hueffer (F. Madox), The Cinque Ports: An Historical and Descriptive Record .....
Fulton (T. Wemyss), The Sovereignty of the Sea: An Historical Account of the Claims to the Exclusive Dominion of the British Seas and of the Evolution of the Territorial Waters, with Special Reference to the Rights of Fishing .....
Watt (William), Aberdeen and Banff .....
Periods of European Literature : Osmond (T. S.), The Romantic Triumph .....	5/0
Smith (G. Gregory), The Transition Period .....
Hamley (Gen. Sir E. B.), Operations of War Explained and Illustrated .....

Munro (Robert), Rambles and Studies in Bosnia-Herzegovina and Dalmatia .....	12/6
Conder (Lieut.-Col. C. R.), The Hebrew Tragedy .....	3/0
Haliburton (Hugh), Horace in Homespun. New Edition .....
Naville (Edouard), The Transvaal Question from a Foreign Point of View .....	/6

FICTION.

Capes (Bernard), From Door to Door .....	6/0
Conrad (Joseph), Three Tales of Land and Sea .....	6/0
Grier (Sydney C.), The Kings of the East: a Romance of the Near Future .....	6/0
The Prison House: a Romance .....	6/0
Gerard (Dorothea), One Year .....	6/0
"Zack," On Trial. Second Edition .....	6/0
Clouston (J. Storer), The Lunatic at Large .....	6/0
Collins (W. E. W.), The Don and the Undergraduate: a Tale of St. Hilary's College, Oxford .....	6/0

Messrs. Cassell &amp; Co.

Edwards (H. Sutherland), A Volume of Reminiscences ...	7/6
MacWhirter (J.), Landscape Painting in Water Colours ...	5/0
Hillier (M. D. A.), New work on Tuberculosis .....	7/6
Luff (Dr. A. P.) and Page (F. J. M.), A Manual of Chemistry. Illustrated .....	7/6
Selfe (Rose E.), With Dante in Paradise: Readings from the Paradiso .....	2/0
Forster (H. O. Arnold), Our Great City .....	1/9
Cassell's Illustrated Guide to Paris, containing a plan and guide to the Great Exhibition .....	/6
Cassell's Pictorial Guide to the Clyde. With 12 coloured plates .....	/6
Spielmann (M. H.), John Ruskin: a Sketch of His Life, His Work, and His Opinions, with Personal Reminiscences .....	5/0
Cassell's Illustrated History of the Boer War in weekly numbers .....	/1
Royal Academy Pictures. In five Parts, 1/- each; or one volume .....	7/6
"Work," half-yearly volume .....	4/6
Cassell's Gazetteer of Great Britain and Ireland. Vol. II. Cheap Edition .....
Britain's Sea-Kings and Sea-Fights, a new monthly. With descriptions written by leading writers, including B. Fletcher Robinson, Commander Claud Harding, Major G. Le M. Gretton, Tighe Hopkins, Major Arthur Griffiths, A. Hilliard Atteridge, Herbert Compton, and F. Norreys Connell. The Illustrations will consist of reproductions of Original Drawings by the following, amongst other leading artists:—F. H. Townsend, Charles W. Wyllie, H. R. Millar, Gordon Browne, H. C. Seppings Wright, and of Famous Paintings, as well as of curious and interesting Old Prints, Maps, Plans, and Portraits .....	/7

Messrs. Chatto &amp; Windus.

Kuowles (F. L.), A Kipling Primer .....	3/6
Hollingshead (John), According to My Lights .....	6/0
Osborn (E. B.), Greater Canada .....	3/6
McCarthy (Justin), A History of the Four Georges. Vols. III. and IV. .....	12/0

FICTION.

Gissing (Algernon), A Secret of the North Sea .....	6/0
Cornish (J. F.), Sour Grapes: a Romance .....	6/0
Croker (B. M.), Terence .....	6/0
St. Aubyn (Alan), Mrs. Dunbar's Secret .....	6/0
Hall (Owen), Eureka .....	6/0
Meade (L. T.), An Adventuress .....	6/0
Buchanan (Robert), Andromeda: an Idyll of the Great River .....	6/0
Tytler (Sarah), A Honeymoon's Eclipse .....	3/6
Tytler (Sarah), A Young Dragon .....	3/6
Thomas (Bertha), The Son of the House .....	6/0
Bindless (Harold), Ainslie's Ju-Ju .....	3/6
Speight (T. W.), The Web of Fate .....	3/6
Muddock (J. E.), The Golden Idol .....	3/6

NEW EDITIONS.

Dobson (A.), Thomas Bewick and His Pupils .....	3/6
Poe (E. A.), Choice Works: With Introduction by Charles Baudelaire .....	3/6
Taylor (Theodore), The Golden Treasury of Thought .....	3/6
Milne (James), The Romance of a Pro-Consul .....	6/0
Forbes (Archibald), The Life of Napoleon III. .....	6/0
Brand, Observations on Popular Antiquities .....	3/6
De Wiudt (Harry), Through the Gold-fields of Alaska to Bering Straits .....	6/0
Wilde (Lady), Ancient Legends, Mystic Charms, and Superstitions of Ireland .....	3/6
Harte (Bret), Tales of Trail and Town, &amp;c. Vol. X. of Collected Works .....	6/0

Clarendon Press.

Gwilliam (G. H.), The Peshitto Version of the Gospels ...
Burney (C. F.), Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Books of Kings .....
Redpath (H. A.), A Concordance of the Proper Names in the Septuagint, &amp;c. .....
Sanday (W.), Studia Biblica. Part V. .....
Cowley (A. E.), Samaritan Liturgies .....
Turner (C. H.), Latin Versions of the Canons of the Greek Councils of the Fourth and Fifth Centuries. Part II. .....
Rhys (John), Celtic Folklore: Welsh and Manx .....
Sedgefield (W. J.), A Translation into Modern English of King Alfred's O. E. Version of Boethius .....
Hall (Joseph), King Horn .....
Macaulay (G. C.), The Complete Works of John Gower. Vols. II.-IV. .....
Skeat (W. W.), The Canon of Chaucer .....
Ker (W. P.), Dryden's Critical Essays .....
Collins (J. Churton), Plays and Poems of Robert Greene .....
Boas (F. S.), The Works of Thomas Kyd .....
Jenkyns (Sir Henry), British Jurisdiction Outside the United Kingdom .....
Earle (John), The Alfred Jewel .....
Stevenson (W. H.), Asser's Life of Alfred .....
Payne (E. J.), Voyages of the Elizabethan Seamen. II. .....
Rogers (J. E. Thorold), History of Agriculture and Prices. Vols. VII. and VIII. .....
Airy (Osmund), Burnet's History of My Own Time. Vol. II. .....
Poole (R. L.), Historical Atlas of Modern Europe, from the Decline of the Roman Empire. Part XXVI. .....
The following texts are in preparation for the series of Oxford Classical Texts (Scriptorum Classicorum Bibliotheca Oxoniensis): Sidgwick (A.), Æschylus .—Seaton (R. C.), Apollonius Rhodius .—Geldart (W. M.) and Hall (F. W.), Aristophanes .—Du Pontet (R. L. A.), Cæsar .—Ellis (R.), Catullus .—Clark (A. C.), Owen (S. G.), and Fausset (W. Y.), Cicero .—Wilkins (A. S.), Cicero, Op. Rhet. —Reid (J. S.), Cicero, Op. Phil. —Purser (L. C.), Cicero, Epp. —Butcher (S. H.), Demosthenes .—Murray (G. G.), Euripides .—Richards (G. C.), Herodotus .—Monro (D. B.) and Allen (T. W.), Homer .—Wickham (E. C.), Horace .—Owen (S. G.), Juvenal and Persius .—Lindsay (W. M.), Martial .—Owen (S. G.), Ovid .—Hardie (W. R.), Pindar .—Lindsay (W. M.), Plautus .—Phillimore (J. S.), Propertius .—Cook (A. M.), Sallust .—Starkie (W. J. M.), Sophocles .—Tyrrell (R. Y.), Terence .—Postgate (J. P.), Tibullus .—Hirtzel (F. A.), Vergil .—Marchant (E. C.), Xenophon .....

Messrs. Duckworth &amp; Co.

Stephen (Leslie), The English Utilitarians. 3 vols. ...	25/0
Pixley (Francis W.), A History of the Baronetage .....	10/6
Ibsen (Henrik), Love's Comedy. Translated by Prof. C. H. Herford .....	3/6
Largent (Rev. Father), St. Jerome .....	3/0
Percival (John), Agricultural Botany, Theoretical and Practical .....	7/6
Jackson (Benjamin D.), A Glossary of Botanic Terms .....	7/6
Rogers (Rev. W. Moyle), A Handbook of British Rubi ...
The Queen's Garland: Lyrics of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth. Selected by Fitzroy Carrington .....	2/6
Adams (C. F.), The Life of Charles Francis Adams .....	7/6

Mr. Elkin Mathews.

- Skrine (Canon), The Queen's Highway. Part I. ....
 Dobell (Sydney), Home in War Time. Edited by W. G. Hutchinson .....
 Jackson (Holbrook), The Eternal Now, and Other Poems .....
 Chapman (E. R.), A Little Child's Wreath.....

Messrs. Gardner, Darton &amp; Co.

- Burn (J. H.), For Quiet Moments: Devotional Readings. From the Published and Unpublished Writings of the Right Rev. G. H. Wilkinson, D.D., Bishop of St. Andrews.....
 Dearmer (Rev. Percy), The Little Lives of the Saints.....
 Adderley (James), The Epistle of St. James. With Notes for General Readers.....
 Bourdillon (Rev. Francis), Handfuls, Plucked and Rubbed in Walking through the Field of the Word of God: being Short Meditations and Expositions designed both for Private Use and for Reading Aloud.....
 Hopkins (Ellice), The Power of Womanhood; or, Mothers and Sons: a Book for Parents and those in Loco Parentis. Second Edition.....

Messrs. Hutchinson &amp; Co.

- Wilkins (W. H.), The Love of an Uncrowned Queen: Sophia Dorothea Consort of George I., and her correspondence with Philip Christopher, Count Königsmarek.....
 Richardson (The late Sir Benjamin Ward), Disciples of Esculapius: Biographies of Leaders of Medicine.....
 Hutchinson (H. N.), and Others, The Living Races of Mankind: a Popular Account of the Customs, Habits, Pursuits, Ceremonies, &c., of the Races of Mankind Throughout the World.....
 Burton (Lady Isabel), The Passion Play at Ober-Ammergau.....
 Peters (Madison C.), Justice to the Jew.....
 Sanderson (Edgar), The Fight for the Flag in South Africa: a History of the War from the Boer Ultimatum to the Advance of Lord Roberts.....
 The Life of Mr. Henry Broadhurst, M.P., told by Himself "Thormanby," Kings of the Rod, the Rifle and the Gun Sanderson (Edgar), Hero-Patriots of the 19th Century...
 Melville (Lewis), Thackeray's Stray Papers.....
 Sanderson (Edgar), Historic Parallels to l'Affaire Dreyfus

FICTION.

- Fowler (Ellen Thorneycroft), The Farringdons.....
 "Rita," A Woman of Samaria.....
 Lynn-Linton (Mrs.), The Second Youth of Theodora Desanges.....
 Fraser (Mrs. Hugh), Marna's Mutiny.....
 "Iota," The Mixx.....
 Gallon (Tom), Kiddy.....
 Raine (Allen), Garthowen.....
 Brooke (Emma), The Engrafted Rose.....
 Hyne (Cutcliffe), The Lost Continent.....
 Meade (L. T.), The Temptation of Olive Latimer.....
 White (Percy), The Heart of the Dancer.....
 Kennard (Mrs. Arthur), The Second Lady Delcombe.....
 Rhys (Ernest), The Whistling Maid.....
 MacMahon (Ella), Fortune's Yellow.....
 Hayes (F. W.), A Kent Squire.....
 Kennard (Mrs. Edward), Tony Larkin.....
 Eversley (Wynton), The Dean of Darrendale.....
 Wedmore (Frederick), The Collapse of the Penitent.....
 Swan (Annie S.—Mrs. Burnett-Smith), The Burden Bearers.....
 Bird (M.), Lao-ti the Celestial.....

Messrs. Jarrold &amp; Sons.

- Gallet (Louis), Cyrano de Bergerac. English translation Jokai (Maurus), The Day of Wrath. Translated by R. Nisbet Bain .....
 Rodziewicz (Marya), Anima Vili.....
 Mikszath (Kalman), St. Peter's Umbrella.....
 Griffiths (Major A.), In Tight Places.....

Mr. John Lane.

- Churchill (Lady Randolph Spencer), The Anglo-Saxon Review: a Quarterly Miscellany Vol. IV. ....net 21/0
 Des Echerolles (Mdlle.), Sidelights on the Reign of Terror. Translated from the French by M. C. Balfour .....net 12/6
 Lane (Charles Henry), All about Dogs: a Book for Doggy People.....net 7/6
 Le Gallienne (Richard), George Meredith: Some Characteristics. New Revised Edition .....net 5/0
 "E. V. B.," Seven Gardens and a Palace.....net 5/0
 Le Gallienne (Richard), Sleeping Beauty, and Other Prose Fancies.....net 5/0
 Roberts (Harry), The Chronicles of a Cornish Garden...net 5/0
 Helps (Sir Arthur), The Spanish Conquest in America. New Edition. 4 vols. ....each 5/0
 Phillips (Stephen), Paolo and Francesca: a Play. Tenth Thousand .....net 4/6
 Le Gallienne (Richard), Rudyard Kipling: a Criticism .....net 3/6
 Holmes (Edmond), What is Poetry? an Essay .....net 3/6
 Money Coutts (F. B.), The Mystery of Godliness: Poems .....net 3/6
 Seaman (Owen), In Cap and Bells: a Book of Verse. Fourth Edition. ....net 3/6
 Benson (Arthur Christopher), The Professor, and Other Poems.....net 3/6
 Le Gallienne (Richard), The Worshipper of the Image: a Tragic Fairy Tale..... 3/6
 Street (G. S.), The Trials of the Bantocks ..... 3/6
Flowers of Parnassus (a Series of Famous Poems):
 I. Gray's Elegy in a Country Churchyard and Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College.—II. Browning (Robert), The Statue and the Bust.—III. Phillips (Stephen), Marpessa .....each, net 2/0

FICTION.

- King (Douglas), Ursula ..... 6/0
 Cobb (Thomas), Severance ..... 6/0
 Harland (Henry), The Cardinal's Snuff Box ..... 6/0
 Barry (John D.), The Acrobat ..... 6/0
 Roberts (C. G. D.), A Sister to Evangeline..... 6/0

Mr. John Long.

- Elson (George), The Last of the Climbing Boys ..... 6/0
 Grein (J. T.), Dramatic Criticism .....net 3/6
 Mann (Arthur M.), The Boer in Pesce and War. Illustrated ..... 1/0

FICTION.

- Roberts (Morley) and Montesole (Max), The Shadow of Allah ..... 6/0
 Fletcher (J. S.), The Harvesters ..... 6/0
 Besman (Emeric Hulme), The Experiment of Dr. Nevill... 6/0
 Tytler (Sarah), Logan's Loyalty ..... 6/0
 Walker (William S.), Native Born ..... 6/0
 Marsh (Richard), Ada Vernham, Actress..... 6/0
 Kernahan (Mrs. Coulson), Fruits of Frailty ..... 6/0
 Turner (Edgar), The Girl with Feet of Clay ..... 6/0
 Chatterton (G. G.), The Angel of Chance ..... 6/0
 Reardon (Richard), The Crowning of Gloria ..... 6/0
 Perkins (Rose), The House of Hardale ..... 6/0
 Dothie (W. P.), Paul the Optimist ..... 6/0
 Crommelin (May), Bettina ..... 6/0
 Anonymous, Merciless Love ..... 6/0
 Rodd (Ralph), A Fighter in Khaki ..... 3/6
 Hume (Fergus), The Bishop's Secret ..... 3/6
 Speight (T. W.), Juggling Fortune ..... 3/6
 Buchanan (Robert), Father Anthony. New Edition. Illustrated ..... 3/6
 Kernahan (Mrs. Coulson), Trewinnot of Guy's. New Edition ..... 3/6

Messrs. Longmans &amp; Co.

- Shaw (William A.), A History of the English Church during the Civil Wars and under the Commonwealth, 1640-1660. 2 vols. .... 36/0
 Corbett (Julian), The Successors of Drake.....

- Nansen (Fridtjof), The Norwegian North Polar Expedition, 1893-1896. Vol. I. With 41 plates and numerous illustrations in the text. Demy 4to. The whole work is estimated to form five or six quarto volumes, which it is hoped will be finished in the course of about two years. .... Vol. I., net 40/0
Hall (Right Rev. A. C. A.), Confirmation ..... 5/0
Pullan (Rev. Leighton), The History of the Book of Common Prayer .....
The Story of the Life of Dr. Pusey. By the Author of "Charles Lowder" .....
Celli (Angelo), Malaria, According to the New Researches Ordinale Conventus Caulium: the Rule of the Monastic Order of Val-des-Choux in Burgundy. From the Original MSS. preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, the Archives of Moulins-sur-Allier, &c. With an Introduction by W. De Gray Birch .....
MacKinnon (Dr. James), The History of Edward the Third ..... 16/0
Ingram (T. Dunbar), A Critical Examination of Irish History: being a Replacement of the False by the True. From the Elizabethan Conquest to the Legislative Union of 1800. ....
Stone (Rev. Darwell), Outlines of Christian Dogma. ....

FICTION.

- Haggard (H. Rider), Black Heart and White Heart, and Other Stories. .... 6/0
Weyman (Stanley J.), Sophia ..... 6/0

NEW EDITION.

- Puller (F. W.), The Primitive Saints and the See of Rome

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston &amp; Co.

- Maxwell (Sir Herbert), Life of Wellington: the Restoration of the Martial Power of Great Britain. 2 vols. Fourth Edition ..... net 36/0
Ferrars (Max and Bertha), Burma ..... net 30/0
Eardley-Wilmot (Capt. S.), Our Navy for a Thousand Years. Second Edition ..... 6/0
Devereux (Roy), Sidelights on South Africa. Third Edition ..... 6/0
Mahan (Captain A. T.), Lessons on the War with Spain net 10/6
Andrews (William), The Diuturnal Theory of the Earth; or, Nature's System of Constructing a Stratified Physical World ..... net 16/0
Wilson (H. W.), The Downfall of Spain. Second Edition net 14/0
Bryce (George), The Remarkable History of the Hudson's Bay Company ..... net 14/0
Conder (J.), The Floral Art of Japan ..... 45/0
Bowles (T. Gibson), The Declaration of Paris .....
Maclean (Edgar S.), History of the American Privateers Windeband (Dr.), History of Ancient Philosophy. Translated by Dr. H. E. Cushman .....
Palliser (Mrs. Bury), China Collector's Pocket Companion. Ninth Edition .....
Harrison (Mary), Guide to Modern Cookery ..... 3/6
Palgrave (Sir R. F. D.), Chairman's Handbook. Thirteenth Edition ..... 2/0
Johnston (Sir H. H.), The River Congo, from its Mouth to Bôlôbô. New Edition ..... 2/6

Messrs. Macmillan &amp; Co.

- Hort (The late Fenton John Anthony), Village Sermons in Outline .....
Daily News (Military Expert of), Notes on the War to the Relief of Ladysmith ..... 3/6
Keltie (J. Scott), The Statesman's Year Book: 1900 ..... 10/6
Bury (J. B.), A History of Greece .....
Desrmer (Percy), Highways and Byways in Normandy. With Illustrations by Joseph Pennell ..... 6/0
Hyslop (A. R. F.), Euripides: The Andromache ..... 2/6
Smyth (Herbert Weir), Greek Melic Poets ..... 6/0
Allchin (W. H.), A Manual of Medicine. ....
Jorgensen (Alfred), Micro-Organisms and Fermentation. Translated by Alex. E. Miller .....
Boyle (Sir Courtenay), Hints on the Conduct of Business, Public and Private .....

FICTION.

- Macmillan's Two-Shilling Library: Alexander (Mrs.), The Admiral's Ward, The Executor, The Freres, Look Before You Leap, Which Shall It Be?—Cholmondeley (Mary), Diana Tempest.—Fothergill (Jessie), From Moor Isles.—Riddell (Mrs.), Berna Boyle, George Geith of Fen Court, Susan Drummond.—Edwardes (Mrs.), A Ball Room Repentance, Ought We to Visit Her? ..... each 2/0

NEW EDITIONS.

- Macmillan's Library of English Classics: Boswell's Life of Johnson. 3 vols.—Carlyle's French Revolution. 2 vols.—Fielding's Tom Jones. 2 vols. .... each vol. 3/6

Messrs. Methuen.

- Keane (A. H.), The Boer States: a History and Description of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State ..... 6/0
The Story of the Boer War. With Maps, Plans, and Portraits. In Fortnightly Parts. .... each 1/0
Hackett (John), A History of the Church of Cyprus. .... net 12/6
Petrie (W. M. Flinders), A History of Egypt, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. 6 vols. .... each 6/0
Kennedy (James Houghton), St. Paul's Second and Third Epistles to the Corinthians. .... 6/0
Granger (F. S.), The Soul of a Christian. .... 6/0
The Churchman's Bible (Edited by J. H. Burn): Biggs (C. R. D.), The Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Philippians ..... net 1/6
Jevons (F. B.), Evolution ..... 3/6
Burnet (John), The Nicomachean Ethics of Aristotle. .... net 15/0
Lindsay (W. M.), The Captivi of Plautus. .... net 10/6
Oxford Classical Texts.—Messrs. Methuen are about to publish, in conjunction with the Clarendon Press, a series of classical texts edited by competent scholars from the best MSS. The first volumes are: Jones (H. Stuart), Thucydides Historiae, Libri I.-IV., 3/6.—Burnet (J.), Platonis Opera, Tom. I. (Tetralogiae I.-II.), 6/0.—Bailey (C.), Luereti Cari De Rerum Natvra, 3/0.—Furneaux (H.), Corneli Taciti Opera Minora, 2/0.—Sidgwick (A.), Aeschyl's Tragoediae Cum Fragmentis, 3/6.
Michell (E. B.), The Art and Practice of Hawking ..... 10/6
Masterman (Charles F. G.), Tennyson as a Religious Teacher ..... 6/0
Yeats (W. B.), An Anthology of Irish Verse ..... 3/6
Oxford (M. N.), A Handbook of Nursing ..... 3/6
Marr (J. E.), The Scientific Study of Scenery. .... 6/0
Ware (Fabian), Educational Reform ..... 2/6
Mellows (Emma S.), A Short Story of English Literature 3/6
Hare (A. T.), The Construction of Large Induction Coils 6/0
Hill (Miss), The Theory and Practice of Millinery ..... 2/6
French (W.), Experimental Chemistry ..... 1/6
Channer (C. C.) and Roberts (M. E.), Lace-Making in the Midlands, Past and Present ..... 2/6
Delbos (Leon), The Metric System ..... 2/0
Hill (Henry), A South African Arithmetic. .... 3/6
Botting (C. G.), A Key to Stedman's Easy Latin Exercises ..... net 3/0
The Novels of Charles Dickens (with Introductions by George Gissing, and Notes by F. G. Kitton): The Pickwick Papers. With Illustrations by E. H. New. 2 vols.—Nicholas Nickleby. With Illustrations by R. J. Williams. 2 vols.—Bleak House. With Illustrations by Beatrice Alcock. 2 vols.—Oliver Twist. With Illustrations by E. H. New. 1 vol. each 3/0

FICTION.

- Malet (Lucas), The Gateless Barrier. .... 6/0
Norris (W. E.), An Octave ..... 6/0
Roberts (Morley), The Plunderers. .... 6/0
Cobban (J. Maclaren), Cease Fire! ..... 3/6
Glanville (Ernest), The Despatch Rider ..... 6/0
Nisbet (Hume), For Right and England. .... 6/0
Marsh (Richard), Marvels and Mysteries. .... 6/0
Lorimer (Norma), Mirry-Ann ..... 6/0
Shipton (Helen), The Strong God Circumstance ..... 6/0
Stuart (Esmé), An Unknown Quantity ..... 6/0
Ridge (W. Pett), A Son of the State ..... 3/6
Glanville (Ernest), The Inca's Treasure ..... 3/6

The Novelist: a monthly series of new novels by popular authors at Sixpence. Each number is as long as the average Six-Shilling Novel. Numbers I. to VII. are now ready, and No. VIII. will be: Prisoners of War. By Boyson Weekes .....

NEW EDITIONS.

Collins (J. C.), The Early Poems of Alfred, Lord Tennyson	1/6
Beeching (H. C.), In Memoriam, by Alfred, Lord Tennyson	1/6
Wordsworth (Elizabeth), Mand, by Alfred, Lord Tennyson	1/6
A Little Book of English Lyrics .....	1/6
Lucas (E. V.), Pride and Prejudice, by Jane Austen. 2 vols.	1/6
Gwynn (S.), Pendennis, by W. M. Thackeray. 2 vols. ...	1/6
Kinglake (A. W.), Eothen .....	1/6
Lucas (E. V.), Cranford, by Mrs. Gaskell .....	1/6
Toynbee (Paget), The Inferno of Dante. Translated by H. F. Cary.....	1/6
Matheson (Annie), John Halifax, Gentleman, by Mrs. Craik. 2 vols. ....	1/6
Henderson (T. F.), A Little Book of Scottish Verse.....	1/6

Mr. Murray.

Beresford (Lord Charles), Our Naval Heroes. By Various Writers .....
Cecil, M.P. (Evelyn), On the Eve of the War: the Record of a Journey through Cape Colony, the Orange Free State, Transvaal, and Rhodesia, with Interviews with Presidents Kruger and Steyn, &c. ....	5/0
Cooke (C. Kinloch), A Memoir of Her Royal Highness Princess Mary Adelaide, Duchess of Teck. 2 vols. ...	32/0
Warburton (Col. Sir Robert), Eighteen Years in the Khyber, 1879-1898 .....	16/0
Byron (Lord), Letters, Vols. III. and IV.; Works, Vol. III.....each	6/0
Henson (Rev. H. H.), Church Problems: a View of Modern Anglicanism. By Various Authors.....
Ripon (Lord Bishop of), A Popular History of the Church of England.....	6/0
Milman (Arthur), Henry Hart Milman, D.D., late Dean of St. Paul's .....	16/0
Gore (Canon), An Exposition of the Epistle to the Romans. Vol. II. ....	3/6
Elworthy (F. T.), Horns of Honour .....	10/6
Denison (Right Hon. John Evelyn), (Viscount Ossington), Notes from My Journal when Speaker of the House of Commons, 1857-1882 .....	10/6
Grant-Duff (Right Hon. Sir M. E.), Notes from a Diary, 1866-1888. 2 vols. ....	18/0
Knight (Prof.), Lord Monboddo and Some of His Contemporaries .....
Longridge (Rev. George), A History of the Oxford Mission to Calcutta .....	7/6
Thruston (Major A. B.), African Incidents: Personal Experiences in Egypt and Unyoro .....	14/0
Beddard (F. E.), A Book of Whales.....	6/0
Thomson (J. Arthur), Heredity.....	6/0
Law Without Lawyers: an Epitome of the Laws of England for Practical Use. By Two Barristers-at-Law.....	6/0
Yule (Col. Sir Henry), The Book of Ser Marco Polo, the Venetian: Concerning the Kingdoms and Marvels of the East .....
White (Sir W. H.), A Manual of Naval Architecture, for the Use of Officers of the Royal Navy, Officers of the Mercantile Marine, Yachtsmen, Shipowners, and Shipbuilders.....net	24/0
Vincent (J. E.), A Memoir of John Nixon .....	10/6

NEW EDITIONS.

Lumsden (Sir Peter S.) and Elsmie (George R.), Lumsden of the Guides .....	7/6
Trotter (Captain L. J.), The Life of John Nicholson: Soldier and Administrator .....	7/6
Sir Robert Peel: The Life of. By Charles Stuart Parker. Vols. I. and II. 32/0; Vol. III. ....	16/0
Knapp (Prof.), New Edition of George Borrow's Works: The Bible in Spain; Lavengro; The Romany Rye each	6/0

Messrs. J. Nisbet &amp; Co.

Hobson (J. A.), The War in South Africa: Its Causes and Effects .....	7/6
Brodrick (Right Hon. G. C.), Memories and Impressions 16/0
London (Bishop of), and Others, The Church Past and Present: Essays on the Historical Position of the Church of England.....net	7/6
Bowen (Rev. the Hon. W. E.), The Dates of the Pastoral Epistles: an Essay in Criticism .....	2/6

Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.

Bookwalter (John W.), Siberia and Central Asia .....
Pemberton (T. Edgar), The Kendals .....
Glyde (John), Memoir of Edward Fitzgerald .....

FICTION.

Upward (Allen), The Accused Princess .....
Holland (Clive), Marcelle, of the Latin Quarter .....
Lee (Albert), The Gentleman Pensioner .....
Higgin (L.), Lyona Grimwood, Spinster.....
Downe (Walmer), A Daughter of Destiny .....

Mr. Grant Richards.

Shaftesbury (Rt. Hon. Anthony, Earl of), Characteristics of Men, Manners, Opinions, Times, &c. 2 vols.....net	12/0
Morris (W. O'Connor), The Campaign of 1815 .....	12/6
Munro (H. H.), The Rise of the Russian Empire .....	10/6
Dixon (W. S.), The Sport of Kings .....	6/0
Spencer (E.), The Great Game, and How it is Played .....	5/0
Spencer (E.), Cakes and Ale. New Edition .....	2/0
Begbie (Harold), The Struwwelpeter Alphabet. Illustrated by F. Carruthers Gould .....	3/6
Gluckstein (S. M.), Queen or President? An Indictment of Paul Kruger .....	2/6
Paston (George), Mrs. Delany (Mary Granville): a Memoir, 1700-1788 .....	7/6
Allen (Grant), A Memoir. By Edward Clodd .....	7/6
Belfort-Bax (E.), Marat: a Historical Study .....	10/6
Nisbet (J. F.), The Insanity of Genius, and the General Inequality of Human Faculty Physiologically Considered .....	6/0
Le Gallienne (Richard), Travels in England .....	6/0
Shore (Arabella), First and Last Poems.....net	5/0
Hiller (H. Croft), Heresies, or Agnostic Theism, Ethics, Sociology, and Metaphysics. Vol. II. ....	5/0
Taylor (Louis), Fellow Wayfarers: a Record .....	3/6
Hopper (Nora), Songs of the Morning .....	3/6
Brown (Horatio F.), Drift: Verses.....net	5/0
Housman (A. E.), A Shropshire Lad. New Edition ..net	3/0
Wynne (Charles Whitworth), Ad Astra: Poems .....	6/0
Warren (Henry), How to Deal with Your Banker .....	3/6
Sutro (A.), The Cave of Illusion, Drama in Four Acts: With Introduction by Maurice Maeterlinck.....net	3/6
Peacock (Wadham), The Story of the Inter-University Boat Race .....	2/0
Robertson (John M.), An Introduction to English Politics 10/6
Macdonald (J. F.), Paris of the Parisians .....	5/0
Farmer (J. S.), Regimental Records of the British Army net	10/6

FICTION.

Marsh (Richard), A Second Coming.....	6/0
Winter (John Strange), The Money Sense .....	6/0
Dunne (F. P.), Mr. Dooley in the Hearts of His Countrymen .....	3/6
Allen (Grant), Hilda Wade .....	6/0
Bowles (M.), Charlotte Layland .....	6/0
Morrow (W. C.), A Man: His Mark .....	3/6
Chambers (R. W.), Outsiders.....	6/0
Tarkington (Booth), The Gentleman from Indiana .....	6/0
Puxley (Francis L.), Maitland of Cortezia .....	6/0
Bramah (Ernest), The Wallet of Kai Lung .....	6/0
Lindsey (W.), Cindar-Path Tales .....	3/6
Norris (Frank), Blix: a Love Idyll .....	3/6
Cobb (Thomas), Scruples: a Novel .....	3/6
Mullholland (Rosa), Onora: a Novel .....	3/6

Messrs. Seeley &amp; Co.

Binyon (Laurence), Thomas Girtin: His Life and Works. With twenty reproductions in Autotype .....	42/0
Shand (Alexander Lanes), General John Jacob of the Scinde Light Horse .....	10/6
Marshall (Beatrice), Emma Marshall: a Memoir .....	6/0
Moule (Rev. H. C. G.), The Secret of the Presence, and other Sermons .....	3/6
Eardley-Wilmot (Captain S.), Our Fleet To-day and its Development during the last Sixty Years .....	5/0
Norris (W. E.), The Fight for the Crown. Cheaper Edition .....	3/6
Kerr (Richard), Wireless Telegraphy Popularly Explained. Fourth Edition. Revised .....	1/0

Messrs. Smith, Elder &amp; Co.

Bent (Theodore), Southern Arabia .....	18/0
Wilson (Beckles), The Great Company, 1667-1871: Being a History of the Honourable Company of Merchant Adventurers Trading in Hudson's Bay .....	18/0
Thackeray (Col. Sir Edward), Biographical Notices of Officers of the Royal Bengal Engineers .....	12/6
Molteno (P. A.), The Life and Times of Sir John Charles Molteno, K.C.M.G., First Premier of the Cape Colony .....	28/0
Martin (Benjamin Ellis) and Martin (Charlotte M.), The Stones of Paris, in History and Letters .....	18/0
Macnamara (N. C.), The Origin and Character of the British People .....	6/0
West (Sir Algernon), Recollections, 1832 to 1886. Second Edition .....	21/0
Kropotkin (Prince), Memoirs of a Revolutionist .....	21/0
Lee (Sidney), Life of William Shakespeare. Library Edition. Illustrated .....	16/0
Fitchett (W. H.), How England Saved Europe: The Story of the Great War, 1793-1815. Vol. I. From the Low Countries to Egypt.—Vol. II. The Struggle for the Sea.—Vol. III. The War in the Peninsula.—Vol. IV. Waterloo and St. Helena .....	6/0
Pitcairn (E. H.), Unwritten Laws and Ideals of Active Careers .....	7/6
Earle (Mrs. C. W.), More Pot-Pourri. Third Impression... ..	7/6
The Hawthorne Edition of the Life and Works of the Sisters Brontë. Introductions to the works are supplied by Mrs. Humphry Ward, and an Introduction and Notes to Mrs. Gaskell's "Life of Charlotte Brontë," by Mr. Clement K. Shorter. The following are published: Vol. I. Jane Eyre.—Vol. II. Shirley.—Vol. III. Villette.—Vol. IV. The Professor.—Vol. V. Wuthering Heights and Agnes Grey. The following will be ready on March 26: Vol. VI. The Tenant of Wildfell Hall, by Anne Brontë; and, on April 26, the final volume, Vol. VII. Life of Charlotte Brontë, by Mrs. Gaskell, each .....	6/0
Sidney (Lee), Dictionary of National Biography. Vol. LXII. The final volume will be published on July 1, 1900 .....	15/0

FICTION.

Phillipps-Wolley (Clive), The Chicamon Stone: a Legend of the Yukon Basin .....	6/0
Douglas (Theo.), Nemo .....	6/0
Hutchinson (Horace G.), Little Lady Mary, &c. ....	6/0
Doyle (Conan), The Green Flag, and other Tales of War and Sport .....	6/0
Crockett (S. R.), Little Anna Mark .....	6/0
Colmore (G.), The Marble Face .....	6/0
Hardy (Francis H.), To the Healing of the Sea .....	6/0
Birrell (Olive), Love in a Mist .....	6/0
Jewett (Sarah Orne), The Queen's Twin, and other Stories .....	5/0

Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein &amp; Co.

Meakin (Budgett), The Land of the Moors: a General Description .....	15/0
Penny (Mrs. Frank), Fort St. George, Madras .....	10/6
Tschudi (Clara), Eugénie, Empress of the French .....	7/6
Claviere (R. de Maulde la), The Women of the Renaissance .....
Hill (Alexander), A Run Round the Empire: Being the Log of Two Young People who Circumnavigated the Globe .....	3/6
ricker (Dr. Karl), The Antarctic .....	7/6

The Campaigns of the Derbyshire Regiment : Raines (Gen. Sir Julius), The 95th (The Derbyshire) Regiment in Central India.—Gosset (Major E. A. G.), The 2nd Battalion Derbyshire Regiment in the Egyptian Campaign of 1882.—Iggulden (Capt. H. A.), The 2nd Battalion Derbyshire Regiment in the Sikkim Expedition of 1888 .....	1/0
Social England Series (Edited by Kenelm Cotes): Cooke-Taylor (R. W.), Course of Industrial Empire.—Cornish (F. W.), Chivalry.—Brown (Prof. G. Baldwin), History of the Fine Arts.—Vinogradoff (Prof.), The English Manor.—Balfour (Henry), The Evolution of Household Implements.—Smith (Lucy Toulmin), Mysteries and Miracle Plays.—Smith (C. Fell), The Social Position of Women.—Clowes (W. Laird), The Navy .....	4/6
Bleek (Dr. W. H. J.), Specimens of Bushman Folklore ... ..
Dalbiac (Col. P. H.), A Dictionary of Foreign Quotations (French and Italian) .....	7/6
Carpenter (Edward), Eros and Psyche and the First Book of the Iliad of Homer .....	2/6
Ives (George), Eros' Throne: a Book of Verse .....	2/6
Marshall (William), Herbert: a Poem .....
Metchnik (D. Bridgman), Atlantis: The Book of the Angels .....
Carlsen (W.), War as It Is .....	1/6
The Public Schools Year Book, 1900. Edited by three Public School Men .....	2/6
Balmforth (Ramsden), Some Social and Political Pioneers of the Nineteenth Century .....	2/6
Millin (G. F.), Commerce and Christianity .....
Phipson (C. B.), The Science of Civilisation; or, The Principles of Agricultural, Industrial, and Commercial Prosperity .....	1/0
Smith (Alfred), The Housing Question .....
Mark (H. T.), The Sound and Sight Method of Teaching French .....
Pestalozzi (J. H.), How Gertrude Teaches Her Children... ..	3/6
McMillan (Margaret), Early Childhood .....	3/0
Mark (H. T.), An Outline of the History of Educational Theories in England .....	3/0

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.

Moore (George), The Bending of the Bough .....	3/6
Aberdeen (Countess of), The Transactions of the International Congress of Women. 7 vols. .... each, net	3/6
Wright (M. E. S.), Rhymes Old and New .....	3/6
Crampton (G. C.), A Story of an Estancia .....	3/6
Pike (G. Holden), Cromwell and His Times .....	3/6
Symons (Arthur), The Complete Works of Mathilde Blind .....	7/6
Yeld (George), Scrambles in the Eastern Gradans .....	7/6
Hannah (I. C.), A Brief History of Eastern Asia .....	7/6
Hardy (Rev. E. J.), Mr. Thomas Atkins .....	6/0
Bearne (Catherine A.), Pictures of the Old French Court .....	10/6
Story of the Nations Series : Orsi (Pietro), Modern Italy, 1748-1898. — Scott (Sir John), Modern Egypt. — Boyesen (Prof. Hjalmar H.), Norway .....	5/0
Caddick (Helen), A White Woman in Central Africa .....	6/0
Sports Library : Dale (T. F.), Riding, Driving, and Kindred Sports.—Fegan (B.), and Others, Football, Hockey, and Lacrosse .....	2/6
Harper (Ida Husted), Life and Work of Susan B. Anthony .....	32/0
Jones (David B.) and Rhys (John), The Welsh People: their Origin, Language, and History .....	16/0
Overseas Library : Gaggin (John), Among the Man-eaters.—Montagnac (Nöel de), Negro Nobodies: a Study of Life in Jamaica.—Bulfin (W.), Tales of the Pampas .....	2/0
How to Read War News: a Vade-Mecum of Notes and Hints to Readers of Despatches, &c. ....	1/0

FICTION.

Barry (William), Arden Massiter .....	6/0
Smith (Isabella), The Minister's Guest .....	6/0
McAulay (Allan), The Rhymer .....	6/0
Sutcliffe (Halliwell), Shameless Wayne .....	6/0
Alexander (Mrs.), Through Fire to Fortune .....	6/0
Barr (Amelia E.), Was it Right to Forgive? .....	6/0
"Onida," The Waters of Edera .....	6/0
Carman (A. R.), The Preparation of Ryerson Embury .....	6/0
Gingold (Hélène), The Chillingfield Chronicles .....	6/0
Jeb (Sema), Uncle Peter .....	6/0

FREDERICK WARNE & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

ANNE PRATT'S FLOWERING PLANTS, GRASSES, SEDGES, AND FERNS OF GREAT BRITAIN.

Is now Published Complete in 4 vols.

Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, £2 8s. net; in 4 vols., medium 8vo, half-morocco, gilt top, £3 net.

The Standard Work on the British Flora.

ANNE PRATT'S FLOWERING PLANTS, GRASSES, SEDGES, AND FERNS OF GREAT BRITAIN.

Edited and Revised by EDWARD STEP, F.L.S.

Illustrated with 319 Coloured Plates, accurately reproduced in the Natural Tints, and Four Black-and-White Diagrams.

Royal 8vo, with 1100 pp.

In 4 vols., medium 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, £3 net; ditto, half-morocco, gilt top, £3 12s. net.

FAVOURITE FLOWERS OF GARDEN AND GREENHOUSE.

By EDWARD STEP, F.L.S.

The Cultural Directions edited by WILLIAM WATSON, F.R.H.S., Assistant Curator of the Royal Gardens, Kew.

Illustrated with 318 superb Coloured Plates, Drawn and Coloured with minute care from the actual Living Plants.

Medium 8vo, over 700 pp.

The STANDARD says:—"The volumes are all alike in their interest. The pictures awaken many a pleasant memory of old times to those who have drifted into cities; they will be coveted by all and purchased by many."

The DAILY CHRONICLE says:—"We wish that everybody who takes pride in his garden could afford a copy of this beautiful work. So much disappointment would be avoided, so much labour saved, and so much greater in proportion would be the results."

THE ROMANCE OF WILD FLOWERS.

A Companion to the British Flora.

By EDWARD STEP, F.L.S.

With upwards of 200 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, 6s.

The PALL MALL GAZETTE says:—"No one is better qualified to write a popular book on the British flora than Mr. Edward Step. He is the guide, counsellor, and friend of every field club, and his knowledge, gained as it is from Nature herself rather than from the library or the class-room, is placed before the unsentimental reader in just such form as he or she can easily comprehend. Print, illustrations, and text are alike excellent, and this library should appeal to every lover of the country."

SERIES I. AND II.

In small fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, round corners, 7s. 6d. each; and in morocco, 10s. 6d. each.

WAYSIDE AND WOODLAND BLOSSOMS.

A Pocket Guide to British Wild Flowers.

By EDWARD STEP.

Each containing 136 Coloured and 16 Black-and-White Plates.

The First and Second Series of these Handbooks practically deal with the whole of the British Wild Flowers which come under the notice of the ordinary Botanist.

Large crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

J. D. HARDING'S ART MANUALS. LESSONS ON ART. By J. D.

HARDING. Containing 127 Lessons, 155 pages of Text, 48 Lithographic Plates, and 103 Outlines.

LESSONS ON TREES. By J. D. HARDING. Containing 63 Lessons on 63 Lithographic Plates, together with Descriptive Text to each Lesson.

The late Mr. RUSKIN wrote:—"They are deservedly praised, for they are the only works by a modern draughtsman which express in any wise the energy of trees and the law of growth, of which we have been speaking. There are no lithographic sketches which, for truth of general character, obtained with little cost of time, at all rival Harding's."

"MRS. BURNETT HAS NEVER WRITTEN BETTER THAN IN THIS STORY."—Vide Press.

Crown 8vo, 480 pp., cloth gilt, 6s.

IN CONNECTION WITH THE DE WILLOUGHBY CLAIM.

BY

FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT.

PRESS OPINIONS.

The DAILY TELEGRAPH, Nov. 29, 1899.

"We have no hesitation in saying that Mrs. Burnett's new work is one of the most moving novels of the year.....and it contains scenes of a most tender and pervading sweetness.....As is always the case in Mrs. Hodgson Burnett's best work, it is the loveliness of her characters which gives such charm to her pages.....To pass from scenes of keen pathos to others of such tender charm, from the piteous figure of Margery to that of the radiant Sheba, is an employment which, however affecting to our emotions, is very fascinating.....it is an exceedingly attractive novel."

The WEEKLY SUN, Dec. 2, 1899.

"The De Willoughby Claim' shows the gifted authoress at her best. The novel is one of the most human that has been published this year, and is full of that sweetness and pathos we have come to look for in Mrs. Hodgson Burnett's work. The characters are all lovable.....It is the biggest thing Mrs. Hodgson Burnett has attempted, and she has been rewarded with conspicuous success."

The MANCHESTER GUARDIAN, Dec. 5, 1899.

"Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett has never written anything better than this story."

The DAILY CHRONICLE, Dec. 8, 1899.

"Mrs. Burnett has never written better than in this story. She has never delineated character more delicately, more sympathetically, her pathos has never been truer, her humour more engaging. The book gives one the impression of having been written with great and worthy care. No writer, not the very ablest, who made a point of turning out, say, three novels a year, could possibly have done anything so good as 'The De Willoughby Claim.' The book is well worthy to be read, and will be read by the wise."

The EAST ANGLICAN DAILY TIMES, Dec. 7, 1899.

"Whatever Mrs. Burnett chooses to write is sure of an interested and eager welcome from the multitude of her admirers.....Felicia, Tom de Willoughby, and Margery are characters not easily to be forgotten, and the sterner figures are drawn with more power and sureness than Mrs. Burnett has anywhere else compassed. This is certainly the finest story Mrs. Burnett has given us—and that is saying a great deal."

The COURT JOURNAL, Dec. 9, 1899.

"We have had to wait for 'In Connection with the De Willoughby Claim' to find Mrs. Burnett at her best, or, we should say, perhaps, revealing qualities that were hardly suggested by her previous works. But it is futile to attempt to describe the charm of the book. It must be read to be appreciated, which may sound paradoxical, but is not."

The LIVERPOOL POST, Feb. 14, 1900.

"In working out this story Mrs. Burnett shows all the artistic skill, insight into human character, and literary power that were so conspicuous in 'Little Lord Fauntleroy'.....The novel is full of delightfully drawn pictures of life."

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, 3s. 6d.

JOHN RUSKIN: His Life and Teaching.

With Bibliography and Portrait.

By J. MARSHALL MATHER.

"It would be difficult to obtain a more lucid and comprehensive idea of John Ruskin and his life-work in a small compass than can be assured by a careful study of that admirable little monograph. 'In its revised and enlarged form,' says the SPECTATOR, 'the book is a most excellent aid to the understanding of the very nature of the great art critic and philosopher, as well as of the brilliant productions of his pen.' Mr. Mather only claims for his little volume that it is an outline of Ruskin's life and teaching intended for those who are purposing a careful and detailed study of his works, but it is so excellently done, with so firm a touch and so clear a perception of essentials, that to those who have no time for the detailed study referred to, it will give a most useful, interesting, and just idea of the great teacher and his work."

READY SHORTLY.

POPULAR EDITION, crown 8vo, sewed, 1s.

JOHN RUSKIN: His Life and Teaching.

By J. MARSHALL MATHER.

Reprint of the above well-known work, strongly bound, including the Bibliography, but omitting the Portrait.

CHEAP POPULAR ISSUE.

Crown 8vo, sewed, picture cover, 1s.

JOHN BULL & CO.

By MAX O'RELL.

The MANCHESTER GUARDIAN says: "This popular edition of the book in which Max O'Rell takes stock of Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa is very serviceable reading at the present time for all who are prepared for naked truths, pleasant and unpleasant, but always shrewd and interesting, from the one Frenchman who is at home with us and knows our qualities and defects."

Pocket Volume, bound in Khaki.

Small 24mo, cloth, red lettered, gilt top, 1s.

SOLDIER SONGS.

A NEW MILITARY SONG-BOOK.

Containing the latest Popular Songs, including

THE SOLDIERS of the QUEEN,

PRIVATE TOMMY	WHO CARRIES THE
ATKINS.	GUN.
THE DEATHLESS	THE UNION JACK.
ARMY.	TO THE FRONT.
THE OLD BRIGADE.	&c. &c.

To which are added the Collection Edited by J. E. CARPENTER.

THE ARMY AND NAVY BIRTHDAY BOOK.

By Lieut.-Col. SECCOMBE.

Neatly bound in khaki-coloured cloth, 1s. 6d., with Twelve Original Coloured Plates and Illustrations for every Day in the Year.

Also kept in Art binding, watered silk sides, inlaid panel, gilt edges, 2s. 6d. And in various leather bindings.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "SCARLET AND STEEL."

RED COAT ROMANCES

By E. LIVINGSTON PRESCOTT.

Illustrated by Richard Simkin.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, 3s. 6d.

The DAILY MAIL says: "There is humour and character as well as a touch of quiet pathos in these seven tales of garrison life. Among the best of them are 'Corporal by Purchase,' 'Judgment by Default,' 'The Blue-Eyed Babe,' and 'Poor Little Jacky.' All of them have heart, all of them show an intimate knowledge of Tommy Atkins, and all are worthy to be read."

A COMPLETE CATALOGUE may be had post free on application from the Publishers.

London: FREDERICK WARNE & CO., Chandos House, Bedford St., Strand, W.C., and New York

MESSRS. WM. BLACKWOOD & SONS' NEW PUBLICATIONS.

By G. W. STEEVENS,
Daily Mail War Correspondent.

SECOND IMPRESSION. NOW READY.

FROM CAPETOWN TO LADYSMITH.

By G. W. STEEVENS,
Author of "With Kitchener to Khartum," &c.
With Maps. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"MODERN ENGLISH WRITERS." JOHN RUSKIN.

By Mrs. MEYNELL.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

[Shortly.]

A HISTORY of SCOTLAND from the ROMAN OCCUPATION. By ANDREW LANG. In 2 vols., demy 8vo. Volume I. With a Photogravure Frontispiece and Four Maps. Price 15s. net. [Immediately.]

HURRAH for the LIFE of a SAILOR! Fifty Years in the ROYAL NAVY. By VICE-ADMIRAL SIR WILLIAM KENNEDY, K.C.B., Author of "Sport, Travel, and Adventure in Newfoundland and the West Indies." With numerous Illustrations from Sketches by the Author. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. [In April.]

FROM DOOR to DOOR. By Bernard Capes, Author of "Our Lady of Darkness," "Adventures of the Comte de la Muette," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, 6s. [In April.]

RECOLLECTIONS of MY LIFE. By Surgeon-GENERAL SIR JOSEPH FAYRER, BART., K.C.S.I., LL.D., M.D., F.R.S., Q.H.P., &c.; Honorary Physician to the Prince of Wales, Physician in Ordinary to the Duke of Edinburgh; late President of the Medical Board at the India Office; Foreign Member of the Academy of Medicine of Paris and other Foreign Societies. With Portraits and other Illustrations. In 1 vol., demy 8vo. [Shortly.]

THE KINGS of the EAST. A Romance of the NEAR FUTURE. By SYDNEY C. GRIER, Author of "Like Another Helen," "An Uncrowned King," "His Excellency's English Governess," "In Furthest Ind," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Shortly.]

TALKS with OLD ENGLISH CRICKETERS. By A. W. PULLIN. With numerous Portraits. In 1 vol., crown 8vo. [In April.]

THE SCOTTISH REFORMATION. Its Epochs, EPISODES, LEADERS, AND DISTINCTIVE CHARACTERISTICS. Being the Baird Lecture for 1899. By the late ALEXANDER F. MITCHELL, D.D., LL.D., Emeritus Professor of Church History in St. Andrew's University. Edited by D. HAY FLEMING, LL.D. With a Biographical Sketch of the Author by JAMES CHRISTIE, D.D. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SONGS of the GLENS of ANTRIM. By Moira O'NEILL. Artistically bound with gilt top. Second Impression. 3s. 6d.

ABERDEEN and BANFF. By William Watt, Editor of Aberdeen Daily Free Press. With Maps and Plan of Aberdeen in 1681 by Gordon of Rothiemay. Being the New Volume of "COUNTRY HISTORIES OF SCOTLAND." Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [Immediately.]

THE ROMANTIC TRIUMPH. By T. S. OMOND, late Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford. Being the New Volume of the "PERIODS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE." Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

CHURCH and FAITH. Being Essays on the TEACHING OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. By Dr. WACE, Dean FARRAR, Dr. WRIGHT, Rev. R. E. BARTLETT, Principal DRURY, Canon MEYRICK, Professor MOULE, Chancellor SMITH, MONTAGUE BARLOW, Sir RICHARD TEMPLE, Bart., E. H. BLAKENY, and J. T. TOMLINSON. With Introduction by the LORD BISHOP OF HEREFORD. Second Edition, Revised. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

NEW EDITION OF JOHN HILL BURTON'S TWO POPULAR BOOKS.

THE BOOK-HUNTER. By John Hill Burton, D.C.L., Author of "The History of Scotland." A New Edition, with specially designed Title-page and Cover by JOSEPH BROWN. Printed on antique laid paper. Post 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE SCOT ABROAD. By the same Author. Uniform with "The Book-Hunter." Post 8vo, 3s. 6d.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

TO BE PUBLISHED SHORTLY.

BURNET.—HISTORY of MY OWN TIME. Vol. II. New Edition. Edited by OSMUND AIRY, M.A. 12s. 6d. ALREADY PUBLISHED.—Vol. I., price 12s. 6d.

SAXON CHRONICLES. Two of the Saxon Chronicles Parallel; with Supplementary Extracts from the others. A Revised Text. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Appendices, and Glossary, by C. PLUMMER, M.A., and J. EARLE, M.A. Vol. I., Text, Appendices, and Glossary. 10s. 6d.—Vol. II., Introduction, Notes, and Index. 12s. 6d.

Vol. I. FRENCH WORKS. Backram, 16s.

THE COMPLETE WORKS of JOHN GOWER. Edited from the MSS., with Introductions, Notes, and Glossaries, by G. C. MACAULAY, M.A., formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Crown 8vo, cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

GLOSSARIAL INDEX to the WORKS of GEOFFREY CHAUCER. By the Rev. WALTER W. SKEAT, Litt.D.

JUST PUBLISHED.—THE LIBRARY EDITION.

Demy 6vo, pp. xvi-544, with 2 Collotypes of Handwriting, and 9 Facsimille Title-Pages, 7s. 6d.

THE POETICAL WORKS of JOHN MILTON. Edited, after the Original Texts, by the Rev. H. C. BEECHING, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford; Clark Lecturer at Trinity College, Cambridge.

May also be had, with Portrait and Facsimiles, in the following sizes:—

1. LARGE (Long Primer) TYPE, crown 8vo, 503 pp., cloth boards, gilt top, 3s. 6d.
2. THE SAME, printed upon Oxford India Paper, superfine cloth, gilt top, 6s.

(In these Editions the original Spelling and Punctuation are reproduced.)

Mr. HENRY FROWDE also publishes a MINIATURE EDITION, in ONE VOLUME, printed on Oxford India Paper, 32mo, 4½ by 2½ by 1½ inches, superfine cloth, 3s. 6d.

(In this case the Spelling and Punctuation are modern.)

* * * These Volumes may be had in a variety of superior leather bindings produced at the Oxford University Press Binding House.

NOW READY, pp. vi-558, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

LA DIVINA COMMEDIA di DANTE ALIGHIERI. Nuovamente riveduta nel testo dal Dr. E. MOORE, con indice dei nomi propri compilato da PAGET TOYNBEE, M.A.

STUDIES in DANTE. By E. Moore, D.D. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. net each.

Series I.—SCRIPTURAL and CLASSICAL AUTHORS in DANTE.
" II.—MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS.

NOW READY, in Three Sizes.

THE COMPLETE WORKS of MOLIERE.

- I. Crown 8vo, on Rag-made Paper, cloth, 5s.
- II. Crown 8vo, on Oxford India Paper, cloth, 9s. 6d.
- III. In Miniature, 32mo, 4 vols. in case, cloth, 14s.

* * * These Editions can now be had in a variety of superior bindings.

A HANDBOOK of ANATOMY for ART STUDENTS. With many Illustrations. By Prof. ARTHUR THOMSON, M.A. 8vo, backram, 16s. net.

AN INTRODUCTION to GREEK SCULPTURE. By L. E. UPCOTT, M.A. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

THE OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY on HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES. Founded mainly on the Materials collected by the Philological Society. Edited by Dr. JAMES A. H. MURRAY.

NEW DOUBLE SECTION. 5s.

GLASS-COACH—GRADED (Vol. IV.). By Henry Bradley, M.A.

NEW MONTHLY NUMBER, No. 9, 3s. 6d.

BATTER—BELT. By Dr. J. A. H. Murray.

Full Oxford University Press Catalogues Post Free on application.

London: HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Press Warehouse
Amen Corner, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates for Yearly Subscriptions ..... 20s. including postage.

American Agents for the ACADEMY: Brentano's, 31, Union-square, New York.

The Irish Literary Movement.*

Mr. Yeats as Shepherd.

At the present rate of events we shall all soon be claiming Irish descent. We have seen Mr. George Moore sob his way from London to Dublin with Art in his portmanteau. On Saturday thousands of Englishmen will be wearing clover leaves in honour of St. Patrick. In April the Queen's visit. It is all very pleasant and important; and now, to give the joy its crown of song, Mr. W. B. Yeats comes wandering by—with dreams in his eyes—telling us that Ireland's new poets are to "lead many that are sick with theories and trivial emotions to some sweet well-waters of primeval song." It is most true that many of us are sick with theorica; all the bolder then is Mr. Yeats when he advances another. It is not as though his chosen band of poets were living in Ireland, cultivating the Muse on a few potatoes. Mr. Yeats himself lives in London and has been seen in hansom cabs; and Mrs. Hinkson, Miss Nora Hopper, Mrs. Clement K. Shorter, and Mr. Lionel Johnson are all Londoners; several of them, indeed, have sung the praises of London with rapture. However, Mr. Yeats produces documents—an anthology of modern Irish verse and an introductory essay—in support of his message; the least we can do is to examine these.

At once we are captivated by Mr. Yeats's knowledge, his subdued fervour, and his golden phrases. He tells first how slowly and fitfully English-speaking Ireland found poets after the dissolution of the bardic order in the wars of the seventeenth century. Irish poets rose, but they were of little use to Ireland. Goldsmith came to London; Swift was, in Mr. Balfour's phrase, an Irishman only by the visitation of God, and against his will; Congreve turned gentleman at an early age; and Parnell, Denham, and Roscommon hardly count. Moore, with all his Irish melodies, was not very melodious. But at last a little band of translators arose who put old Gaelic verses into English; and then came a band of "Young Ireland" poets like George Darley and Samuel Lover and James Clarence Mangan and Edward Walsh. Most of these were too given to politics; "they had no time to listen to the voice of the insatiable artist, who stands erect, or lies asleep waiting until a breath arouses him, in the heart of every craftsman." Mangan—the laureate of the group—eschewed politics, but not opium. Mr. Yeats says of this unhappy poet: "Mangan knew nothing of the happiness of the outer man; and it was only when prolonging the tragic exultation of some dead bard that he knew the unearthly happiness which clouds the outer man with sorrow, and is the fountain of impassioned art." That explains "Dark Rosaleen," with its glorious energy that seems to outlive its last stanza, and go thrilling wordlessly through space and time. Undoubtedly, with Mangan we come to the 'osses. A little later came Samuel Ferguson, William Allingham, and Aubrey de Vere, working apart from politics, and turning an ear not only to the Gaelic bards, but to the poets of the big world. To Allingham Mr. Yeats awards this fine praise: "He is the poet of the melancholy peasantry of the West, and, as years go on, and voluminous histories and copious romances drop under the horizon, will take his place among those minor immortals who have put their souls into little songs to humble the proud." That is the criticism of a poet. But Mr. Yeats knows that these poets of Fenian days are not worthy of all imitation. From their successors of to-day a finer and more alluring craftsmanship is asked, in alliance with the old passion, the immemorial legends. A spell more potent and more delicate is needed to evoke poetry from a world full of cross-currents of noise and vulgar energy. Unfortunately, the world is much with the young Irishman, he goes to Trinity College, or to the English Universities, and the poet is worn out of him. "He loves the mortal arts which have given him a lure to take the hearts of men, and shrinks from the immortal, which could but divide him from his fellows." Still Mr. Yeats has his little flock of the faithful. Besides the London colony, there is the mysterious A. E., whose poetry "has a more disembodied ecstasy than any poetry of our time." By the way, A. E. is accounted the "chief poet of the school of Irish mystics which has shaped Mr. Charles Weekes." When Mr. Yeats talks like that we realise that we have not the wedding garment. For of Mr. Weekes we know nothing beyond the fact, mentioned with respect by Mr. Yeats, that he "published recently, but withdrew immediately, a curious and subtle book." Such fawn-like flight is surely far above three signed copies, and unobtainable vellum. Then there is Mr. John Eglinton, "best known for the orchestral harmonies of his Remnant," and behind these a pale wavering crowd of "young writers, who have thought the labours that bring the mystic vision more important than the labours of any craft." Is it possible that Mr. Yeats can at any moment lay his hands on a poet with mystic vision, and no visible means of support? If so, the Irish literary movement may indeed endure.

So much for the poets, what of their work? Criticism of individual poems is not needed. The questions to be answered are surely these: Do these poems, gathered from many hands in two centuries, seem to belong to each other; do they form a recognisable homogeneous body of verse about which general conclusions can be formed? Secondly, if they are homogeneous, have they qualities which entitle them to be accepted as good leaven? have we here an influence, and a valuable influence? To these questions our answer is "Yes." For setting aside all other and, as we think, minor considerations, we find in these poems a love of nature more intimate and spiritual than we think could be found in any collection of English or Scottish poems of the same, perhaps even of a higher, literary rank. The Irish heart has loved Nature not only with the love of a bruised patriot, but with the old indefinable temperamental love of the Celt for Mother Earth. These Irish poets do not seem to come to Nature with eyes, they seem to be dwelling with her in spirit; they love to be alone with her, not naming her trees and flowers, not curiously observant of detail, but deeply conscious of her large life and her warm permanent embrace of them in life or death. It recurs—this note—in many keys, many standards of expression, but it is the recurrent and magisterial note of all these poems. You have it in Sir Samuel Ferguson's ballad of "Aideen's Grave":

Here, far from camp and chase removed,
Apart in Nature's quiet room,
The music that alive she loved
Shall cheer her in the tomb.

The humming of the noontide bees,
The lark's loud carol all day long,
And, borne on evening's salted breeze,
The clanking sea-bird's song,

* A Book of Irish Verse. Selected from Modern Writers, by W. B. Yeats. (Methuen.)

Shall round her airy chamber float,
And with the whispering winds and streams,
Attune to Nature's tenderest note
The tenor of her dreams;

And oft, at tranquil eve's decline,
When full tides lip the Old Green Plain,
The lowing of Moyalty's kine
Shall round her breathe again.

You have it in Mr. Charles Weekes's "Think":

Think, the ragged turf-boy urges
O'er the dusty road his asses;
Think, on seashore far the lonely
Heron wings along the sand;

Think, in woodland under oak-boughs
Now the streaming sunbeam passes;
And bethink thee thou art servant
To the same all-moving hand.

You have it in alliance with fairy lore, in William Allingham's "Fairies":

High on the hill-top
The old King sits;
He is now so old and gray
He's nigh lost his wits.
With a bridge of white mist
Columkill he crosses,
On his stately journeys
From Sleeveleague to Rosses
Or going up with music
On cold starry nights,
To sup with the Queen
Of the gay Northern Lights.

You have it as the gift of memory—that childish memory whose lightest caprice is worth all the acquisitions of study:

Four ducks on a pond,
A grass-bank beyond,
A blue sky of spring,
White clouds on the wing:
What a little thing
To remember for years—
To remember with tears!

You have it as sheer description, which achieves more by what it selects than by what it says, in Mrs. Hinkson's "Children of Lir":

Dews are in the clear air, and the roselight paling,
Over sands and sedges shines the evening star,
And the moon's disk high in heaven is sailing,
Silvered all the spear-heads of the rushes are—
Housed warm are all things as the night grows colder,
Water-fowl and sky-fowl dreamless in the nest,
But the swans go drifting, drooping wings and shoulder,
Cleaving the still waters where the fishes rest.

You have it when no bird sings, the poet refusing all material help to his thought. Thus A. E.:

What of all the will to do?
It has vanished long ago,
For a dream-shaft pierced it through
From the Unknown Archer's bow.

What of all the soul to think?
Some one offered it a cup
Filled with a diviner drink,
And the flame has burned it up.

What of all the hope to climb?
Only in the self we grope
To the misty end of time:
Truth has put an end to hope.

What of all the heart to love?
Sadder than for will or soul,
No light lured it on above;
Love has found itself the whole.

Wherefore, if we came gingerly to this book, and did not at once put away the smile of incredulity, we lodge it on our shelves with gratitude and respect.

Things Seen.

The Lesson.

HE asked for a match, which should, in the fitness of things (common decency, even!), have been denied him severely, but was not denied him; and, for the little comedy that followed, there is one who, realising everything, bears his responsibility lightly, nor can find it in his heart to be other than grateful exceedingly (to himself by example—the condemned match his!) and most impenitently glad.

The cigaretted, but matchless, was seven, perhaps—perhaps eight; his smaller companion, six. The owner of the match that changed hands is—well, never mind . . . old enough to know better! The attenuation of the cigarette, maybe, influenced him. It was such a cigarette as in Piccadilly or Bond-street you may see in neat crimson boxes, labelled "Ladies'," and possibly "Scented": in less notable thoroughfares cigarettes of such narrow dimensions are to be seen in packets of six (is it ten?), in the windows of shops trading comprehensively in tobacco, sweets, newspapers (the like and unlike), at a penny a packet! Whatever the poison enwrapped in the meagre roll, its proportions were infinitesimal. So much excuse had the match-giver. . . . But excuse? . . . It was not the poison, but the principle—and, there! he hugs himself, making and seeking no excuse whatsoever. A favour was asked of him, he granted it regally—nay, more, giving quickly, he gave twice.

Seven, then, the asker, holding cigarette and match securely in one hand, took Six by the other, and led him to a doorway close by. Into the recess Seven pushed Six with some energy, and then, putting his head out, looked up and down the street. All was safe, it seemed. The giver of the match, as an accomplice, evidently "counted" no longer. Nothing was to be feared from him, it was plain—so do sinners commit themselves!—and he was suffered to look on undisturbed.

"Now," said Seven.

Six looked pale but determined—as one who has made up his mind and will see something through.

"Put it in y' mouth," said Seven. "Not that end, silly! Don'tch see the silver tip?"

"Aw-right," said Six.

Seven struck the match in a workmanlike way, shading the flame at once with his cupped hands. Oh, but Seven was experienced! And oh, but the match-giver was hardened, to have looked on unmoved—unmoving rather let us say—at the infamy!

"Draw," said Seven authoritatively.

"Draw?" said Six doubtfully.

"Yus, dror it, y' silly!"

Six drew.

"That's right," said Seven. "You'll do. Dror again. That's better. Now spit!"

The Flag.

WHEN midnight fell on the day of national rejoicing I turned from the garish streets still thronged with delirious crowds and went homewards. The shouts died away, glimmering lights took the place of the flaring illuminations, and so I came to a great Square silent save for the rustling of the tall trees. As I passed through it the door of one of the solemn houses opened, disclosing an old man with a letter in his hand. He paused a moment on the threshold, and then, reaching out, grasped a flag that had been stuck with others above the doorway, and descended the steps. A servant who came running up the stairs at that moment observed the incident and smiled. As the old man crossed the road to the pillar-box he shouldered the flag, squared his shoulders, and stepped out as if he were marching to music. He posted his letter, and returned across the roadway with the flag fluttering in the night breeze, and his chin tilted in the air. Now all the day and night I had been watching patriotism—patriotism inspired and encouraged by the contact with excited patriots, patriotism whose infection caught and carried London away in a whirl of enthusiasm. But here was a man—alone, at midnight, and old—doing a thing for its own sake, without onlookers, without encouragement: doing it secretly, and so bravely. His action seemed to me rather remarkable, and I said as much to the policeman at the corner. His manner was noncommittal; but he stalked a few steps nearer to the house, at the open door of which the servant stood waiting his master's return. As the old man ascended the steps and replaced the flag, the servant caught the policeman's eye, smiled, and winked.

The policeman turned to me, and remarked with the air of one who says a good thing:

"No man's a hero, sir, to his own valet."

"You know how Hegel explains that proverb," I said sharply.

He stuck his hands into his belt and shook his head. "Can't say as I do!"

"Not because the hero is no hero, but because the valet is only a valet."

"Well," said the constable as he turned on his heel, "there's room for all sorts in the world."

Mr. Kipling and Mark Twain.

THE interview with Mark Twain which Mr. Kipling enjoyed in 1889, and which is described in From Sea to Sea (reviewed elsewhere in this number), is in some respects the best interview that we have ever read. Historically the meeting was of the highest importance, for, as we have before remarked in the ACADEMY, Mark Twain was the greatest factor in the literary education of the younger man, and the younger man's homage suggests that he knew it.

The thing that struck me first was that he was an elderly man; yet, after a minute's thought, I perceived that it was otherwise, and in five minutes, the eyes looking at me, I saw that the grey hair was an accident of the most trivial. He was quite young. I was shaking his hand. I was smoking his cigar, and I was hearing him talk—this man I had learned to love and admire fourteen thousand miles away.

Reading his books, I had striven to get an idea of his personality, and all my preconceived notions were wrong and beneath the reality. Blessed is the man who finds no disillusion when he is brought face to face with a revered writer. That was a moment to be remembered; the landing of a twelve-pound salmon was nothing to it. I had hooked Mark Twain, and he was treating me as though under certain circumstances I might be an equal.

That was how Mr. Kipling felt. And he wrote to the Pioneer: "You are a contemptible lot, over yonder. Some of you are Commissioners, and some Lieutenant-Governors, and some have the V.C., and a few are privileged to walk about the Mall arm in arm with the Viceroy; but I have seen Mark Twain this golden morning, have shaken his hand, and smoked a cigar—no, two cigars—with him, and talked with him for more than two hours! Understand clearly that I do not despise you; indeed, I don't. I am only very sorry for you, from the Viceroy downward." It must sometimes occur to the author of this interview, not without sadness, that there is now no one of whom he can write like this. Youth has its compensations—and, indeed, hero-worship is by no means the least of them.

For a while copyright was the subject of talk. And then the younger man asked if Tom Sawyer married Judge

Thatcher's daughter. The question was not answered, but this is how Mark Twain spoke of that immortal boy:

"I have a notion of writing the sequel to Tom Sawyer in two ways. In one I would make him rise to great honour and go to Congress, and in the other I should hang him. Then the friends and enemies of the book could take their choice."

Here I lost my reverence completely, and protested against any theory of the sort, because, to me at least, Tom Sawyer was real.

"Oh, he is real," said Mark Twain. "He's all the boy that I have known or recollect; but that would be a good way of ending the book"; then, turning round, "because, when you come to think of it, neither religion, training, nor education avails anything against the force of circumstances that drive a man. Suppose we took the next four-and-twenty years of Tom Sawyer's life, and gave a little joggle to the circumstances that controlled him, he would, logically and according to the joggle, turn out a rip or an angel."

"Do you believe that, then?"

"I think so. Isn't it what you call Kismet?"

"Yes; but don't give him two joggles and show the result, because he isn't your property any more. He belongs to us."

Then came humorous words on autobiography, truth-telling, and conscience, and anon Mark Twain dropped into autobiography himself. Says his companion and observer:

He spoke always through his eyes, a light under the heavy eyebrows; anon crossing the room with a step as light as a girl's, to show me some book or other; then resuming his walk up and down the room, puffing at the cob pipe. I would have given much for nerve enough to demand the gift of that pipe—value, five cents when new. I understood why certain savage tribes ardently desired the liver of brave men slain in combat. That pipe would have given me, perhaps, a hint of his keen insight into the souls of men. But he never laid it aside within stealing reach.

Once, indeed, he put his hand on my shoulder. It was an investiture of the Star of India, blue silk, trumpets, and diamond-studded jewel, all complete. If hereafter, in the changes and chances of this mortal life, I fall to cureless ruin, I will tell the superintendent of the workhouse that Mark Twain once put his hand on my shoulder; and he shall give me a room to myself and a double allowance of paupers' tobacco.

So, to a large extent, may young men to-day feel also about Mr. Kipling, for if any man may be said to have succeeded Mark Twain, it is he. Not that Mark Twain's sway is done, by any means, nor that Mr. Kipling has given us a Huckleberry Finn; but the American is read less than he was a dozen years ago and the Anglo-Indian reigns at this moment over the male Anglo-Saxon intellect.

Correspondence.

Stevenson's Beginnings.

SIR,—Allow me to endorse Dr. Japp's letter in the ACADEMY, March 10, as the correct account of my connexion with the original publication of Treasure Island. Following Dr. Japp's letter, Stevenson's own account of the origin of Treasure Island would be timely and conclusive. Here is an extract from his article, entitled "My First Book—Treasure Island," which appeared in the Idler magazine, August, 1894:

"At Castleton of Braemar, on a chill September morning, by the cheek of a brisk fire, and the rain drumming on the window, I began The Sea Cook, for that was the original title. (It was Mr. Henderson who deleted the first title—The Sea Cook.) . . . Day by day, after lunch, I read aloud my morning's work to the family. It seemed to me original as sin; it seemed to belong to me like my right eye. I had counted on one boy; I found I had two in my audience. My father caught fire at once with all the romance and childishness of his original nature. His own stories, that every night of his life he put himself to sleep with, dealt perpetually with ships, roadside inns, robbers, old sailors, and commercial travellers before the era of steam. He never finished one of these romances; the lucky man did not require to! But in Treasure Island he recognised something kindred to his own imagination; it was his kind of picturesque: and he not only heard with delight the daily chapter, but set himself acting to collaborate. When the time came for Billy Bones's chest to be ransacked, he must have passed the better part of a day preparing, on the back of a legal envelope, an inventory of its contents, which I exactly followed; and the name of 'Flint's old ship'—the Walrus—was given at his particular request. And now who should come dropping in, ex machina, but Dr. Japp, like the disguised prince who is to bring down the curtain upon peace and happiness in the last act; for he carried in his pocket, not a horn or a talisman, but a publisher—ready, in fact, to unearth new writers for my now old friend, Mr. Henderson's Young Folks. Even the ruthlessness of a united family recoiled before the extreme measure of inflicting on our guest the mutilated members of The Sea Cook; at the same time, we would by no means stop our readings; and accordingly the tale was begun again at the beginning, and solemnly redelivered for the benefit of Dr. Japp. From that moment on I have thought highly of his critical faculty; for when he left us, he carried away the MS. in his portmanteau."

Before the story commenced (October 1, 1881) in Young Folks, Stevenson called on me, bringing the corrected proofs of the opening chapters, and it was at that interview—my first with him—I expressed my dislike to the title The Sea Cook, and suggested Treasure Island (the name of the "map"), which he readily agreed to. The latter part of the story was written at Davos, Switzerland.—I am, &c.,

JAMES HENDERSON.

Red Lion House, Red Lion Court, Fleet Street:
March 14, 1900.

A Revolution in Journalism.

SIR,—Referring to your most admirably written article called "A Revolution in Journalism," in this week's issue, may I enter a mild protest against the existing tendency in all serious journals to deprecate the class of papers represented by Tit-Bits?

Were such papers to consist exclusively of "snappy" paragraphs, bare of all useful information, the sneer would be justified. But this is not so.

In order to illustrate my contention I turn to a recent issue of Tit-Bits, and find among other things: (1) A detailed explanation of military journalism; (2) an account of the workings of the Meteorological Office; (3) a biographical account of Sir George White; (4) nearly 200 scientific facts; (5) a story which, although of minor literary merit, is possessed of a certain interest.

The above features alone should, in my opinion, redeem the paper from the charge of being made up of "snappy" paragraphs.

Further, I believe that papers of the Tit-Bits order build up a taste for serious reading—a taste which, in the absence of such papers, might never develop.

I have only expressed very briefly—and I feel very poorly—my opinion on this subject, and I sincerely trust that, with your usual impartiality, you will publish this letter as a kind of gentle counterblast to the article called "A Revolution in Journalism."—I am, &c.,

P. BEAUFOY.

Playgoers' Club, Strand, W.C.: March 9, 1900.

Obsolete English Words.

SIR,—If the fact that I live in partibus infidelibus (vide licit, United States) will excuse my belated letter, I would like to say how interested I have been in your lists of obsolete English words that your correspondents would restore. On reading them I took down my copy of a book which has attracted some attention over here among Shakespeare "cranks" (we Americans call all devotees "cranks"), A Study in the Warwickshire Dialect, in which Dr. Appleton Morgan (the President of the New York Shakespeare Society) claims to demonstrate the Shakespearean authorship of Shakespeare by discovering in every one of the plays an abundance of Warwickshire dialect words and pronunciations (i.e., that the puns in the plays would be unintelligible unless the vowels were pronounced as pronounced to this day in Warwickshire), and out of it alone I have taken a few words which (if I am not too belated, as aforesaid) I would like to call attention to as being, I think, picturesque, suggesting to the mind's eye something of what the act itself, if performed before us, might sound like, or seem to eye or ear to be:

- (1) Backfriend, meaning a surety, a backer.
- (2) Bibleback, meaning stout (the Bible of those days being a stout volume).
- (3) Brevet, meaning to flirt.
- (4) Burning daylight, meaning to procrastinate.
- (5) Cumber, meaning tribulation, anxiety.
- (6) Cold crowdings, meaning hard times (perhaps a scarcity of fuel as produced by res angusta domi) and huddling together to keep warm.
- (7) Mumblenews, meaning a talebearer or gossip.
- (8) Next, meaning immediately.
- (9) Stitchwhile, meaning an instant or moment of time.
- (10) Still (i.e., quiet), meaning respectable, gentlemanly, or ladylike.

Perhaps some of your ingenious readers will give us a narrative framed to contain these pictorial vocables.—I am, &c.,

IRA HOLMES HARRIS.

14, College-place, New York City: Feb. 25, 1900.

Our Weekly Prize Competitions.

Competition No. 25 (New Series).

IN response to our request for poems of not more than fourteen lines, celebrating the adventures of the elephant which escaped from the Crystal Palace, we have received a budget of sonnets and other verse. The best of these effusions is that which follows, contributed by Mrs. Guy Branson, 44, Sandon Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham:

He hatched a plot behind his twinkling eye,
He seized his chance—his longed-for liberty.
Free from his prison bars, his galling chain,
Free—and "My Lord the Elephant" again.
Alas! how brief a respite from his woes,
Fast round his hiding-places his captors close,
From Bromley Woods in hopeless trammels caught
Triumphantly he's back to Sydenham brought,
Once more the circus-ring, the gaslight flare,
The sea of faces and the music's blare—
The tricks and gambols he—a slave—must need
Perform to amuse this puny human breed.
Ah! sad, my Lord the Elephant, is he
Who—captive—knows the joy of being free!

Replies received also from T. C., Buxted; C., Redhill; F. H. B., Sutton; H. C. H., Oxford; P. C. F., Cambridge; R. F. M. C., Whitby; E. H. W., London; E. B. S., Ringwood; E. W. H., Streatham; R. W. D. N., London; C. L. E., Matlock; C. M. W., Huddersfield; S. T., Redhill; P. K., London; L. L., London; and "Sympathiser," Oxford.

Competition No. 26 (New Series).

A correspondent writes:—"This morning, as I was nearing the end of a journey in an omnibus, two elderly ladies got in, and at once continued a conversation which seemed to have been engaging them for some time. One said: 'Well, of course, it's her own affair; but what Peter's going to do I can't think. It isn't as if there was only Henry and the spaniel; there's Margaret as well.

And John is expected home at any minute. Poor John! 'Yes, indeed,' said the other. 'Poor John! and so fond of it all, too!' In the pause which followed, in which both ladies shook their heads solemnly, I had to alight. Might there not be the kernel of one of your interesting prize competitions in this fragment? We take our correspondent's hint, and offer a prize of a guinea to what seems to us the most reasonable answers to the questions which follow:

- (a) Who was "she," and what was her own affair?
- (b) Who was Peter, and why should her conduct put him out?
- (c) Who was Henry?
- (d) Who was Margaret?
- (e) Who was John, why should he be called "poor John," and what was it of which he was so fond?

Answers should be as brief as possible.

RULES.

Answers, addressed "Literary Competition, THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Tuesday, March 20. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found in the first column of p. 240, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. We wish to impress on competitors that the task of examining replies is much facilitated when one side only of the paper is written upon. It is also important that names and addresses should always be given. We cannot consider anonymous answers.

OUR SPECIAL PRIZE COMPETITIONS.

(For particulars see inside page of cover.)

Received during the week: Canadienne, Lethe, T. Lavicrep, Francesca, Inedito, Weyé Farrer, Bee-Bee, Endeavour, Kirodo, Klapa, Sirius, Mondelambe, Catfordian, Webspinner, Lamorra, Brynach, Dum Spiro Spero, Hathor, Whirlpool, Grellier, Florac, Woolhana, Dormie, Cecil Gray, Antique Mores, The Dingo, Maryomet, Kerma, Irene, Babie, Annonrylles, Ariel, Passionate Pilgrim, Catalle, Sarasvate, Noé, Rose Mortimer, Chasm, F. Luckett, Hermon, Memor.

New Books Received.

[These notes on some of the New Books of the week are preliminary to Reviews that may follow.]

RABELAIS. TRANSLATED BY SIR THOMAS URQUHART.

This is a most welcome edition to the Tudor Translations, and Mr. Whibley's introduction, running to nearly a hundred pages, puts the reader in possession of all the main facts about Rabelais and his translator. Mr. Whibley has some interesting remarks on Rabelais' contemporaries, whose freedom of expression seems to have rivalled his own. (Nutt.)

EDWARD THE THIRD (1327-1377). BY JAMES MACKINNON.

Some of the soundest historians have devoted their study to a single reign, and this method, which has many advantages, is carried out with great care by Mr. Mackinnon, who contends that a history of Edward III. required to be written. Official documents and the chronicles of the period form the basis of his narrative, which is by no means an apology for its hero. (Longmans, Green & Co. 18s.)

THE ART AND PRACTICE OF HAWKING.

BY E. B. MICHELL.

The modern revival of hawking has produced no book which, on a first glance, is more full and authoritative than this handsome treatise by a falconer of thirty years' experience. Every branch of the subject is treated. (Methuen. 10s. 6d.)

CHRONICLE OF THE YEAR'S
NEWS OF 1899.

COMPILED BY GEORGE
EYRE-TODD.

This is the second year of issue of this publication, and we find useful memoranda wherever we dip. How deeply the Dreyfus case coloured the year is shown by nearly one hundred and fifty entries under this head.

Owing to the exceptional pressure on our space other acknowledgments are held over.

W. THACKER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

AN EDITION DE LUXE OF THE WORKS OF

WHYTE-MELVILLE.

Edited by the Rt. Hon. SIR HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P.

Vols. 1 to 13, demy 8vo, gilt tops, £6 16s. 6d.

The volumes are printed from new type on hand-made paper, specially manufactured for this edition, and handsomely bound in buckram with gilt tops.

Coloured Frontispiece on Japanese Vellum and other Full-Page Illustrations by well-known Artists.

WITH SAMPSON THROUGH the WAR. By

W. A. M. GOODE. An Account of the Naval Operations of the North Atlantic Squadron during the Spanish War of 1898. With Chapters specially contributed by Rear-Admiral Sampson, U.S.N., Capt. R. D. Evans, U.S.N., and Commander O. C. Todd, U.S.N. With Portraits of Officers, Illustrations and Maps. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.
"A graphic account of what took place."—Engineer.
"A very admirable history of Admiral Sampson's doings."—Journal of Commerce.
"Extremely interesting right through, and very well illustrated."—Naval and Army.
"Perhaps one of the best of works on the war."—The Sketch.
"Seldom indeed have the technicalities of naval warfare been so popularly dealt with."—Nautical Magazine.

THE IMPERIAL RUSSIAN NAVY. By Fred T.

JANE, Author of "All the World's Fighting Ships." "The Torpedo in Peace and War." Inventor of the Jane Naval War Game (Naval Kriegspiel), &c., &c. With Maps, Plans, and 150 Illustrations from Sketches and Drawings by the Author and from Photographs. Royal 8vo, 30s. 6d.
"Mr. Jane's book is valuable, and it is certainly very instructive."—Army and Navy Gazette.
"Ce magnifique ouvrage édité avec un soin tout particulier."—Le Yacht.
"To naval students this volume will be of the utmost value."—Western Morning News.
"An up-to-date, well arranged, and concise Encyclopedia of the subject."—Daily News.
"Fills a distinct gap in our naval literature."—Daily Chronicle.

THE TORPEDO IN PEACE AND WAR. By Fred

T. JANE, Author of "Blake of the Rattlesnake," "All the World's Fighting Ships," Inventor of the Jane Naval War Game, &c., &c. With about 30 Full-Page and a great many smaller Illustrations, the greater part of which are reproductions of Sketches made at Sea on board Torpedo Craft by the Author. Oblong folio, cloth gilt, 10s. 6d.

THE CARLSBAD TREATMENT, and How to Carry It Out Anywhere. By LOUIS TARLETON YOUNG, M.D. New and Revised Edition with Illustrations. A valuable book of Reference for Doctors and Patients. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A SUMMER IN HIGH ASIA. A Summer Ramble

through Balistan and Ladakh. By Capt. F. E. S. ADAIR (late Rifle Brigade), Author of "Sport in Ladakh." With a Chapter on Central Asian Trade by Capt. S. H. Godfrey, late British Joint Commissioner at Leh. Illustrated by a series of beautiful Photographs and Drawings taken on the spot, and a Map of the route. Medium 8vo, cloth extra, 12s. 6d. net.
"There are few guides as good and as interesting."—Daily News.
"The record of big game will appeal forcibly to sportsmen."—Publishers' Circular.
"He gives striking pictures of scenes of grandeur."—Bradford Observer.
"A very readable book of sport and travel."—Spectator.
"The general reader and the naturalist will, scarcely less than the sportsman, find much in the book that is attractive or amusing."—Scotsman.
"We cordially commend it to all sportsmen."—The Asian Calcutta.

A JAUNT IN JAPAN; or, Ninety Days' Leave in the Far East. By Capt. S. C. F. JACKSON, D.S.O. the Hampshire Regt., D.A.A.G. Bombay. 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d. net.

BULLET and SHOT in INDIAN FOREST, PLAIN,

and HILL. With Hints to Beginners of Indian Shooting. By C. E. M. RUSSELL, late Senior Deputy Conservator of Forests, Mysore Service. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"A useful addition to Indian sporting literature."—Spectator.

THE ROD IN INDIA: being Hints how to obtain

Sport, with Remarks on the Natural History of Fish and their Culture. By H. S. THOMAS, F.L.S. Third Edition, Revised. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 15s.

USEFUL HINTS TO YOUNG SHIKARIS on the GUN and RIFLE. By "THE LITTLE OLD BEAR." Crown 8vo. Second Edition.

THE SPORTSMAN MANUAL IN QUEST of GAME

in KULJU, LAHOUL, and LADAKH, to the TWO MOHARI LAKES. With 9 Maps. By Lieut.-Colonel R. H. TRACKE, late H.M.'s 95th and 31st Regiments. Fcap. 8vo, 6s.

PHIL MAY'S ANNUAL, 1s. Humorous Sketches,

Powerful Stories.
"Abounds in comical sketches."—The Times.
"As bright and witty as ever."—Daily Graphic.
"Stronger and funnier than in any previous year."—Daily Mail.
"Up to the clever caricaturist's best form."—Glasgow Herald.
"Screamingly funny."—Literary World.

W. THACKER & CO., 2, Creed Lane, E.C.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY (LIMITED).

SUBSCRIPTIONS for 3 Months, 6 Months, and 12 Months
CAN BE ENTERED AT ANY DATE.
THE BEST and MOST POPULAR BOOKS of the SEASON
ARE NOW IN CIRCULATION.

Prospectuses of Terms free on application.

BOOK SALE DEPARTMENT.

Many Thousand Surplus Copies of Books always ON SALE
(Second-hand). Also a large Selection of
BOOKS IN LEATHER BINDINGS
SUITABLE FOR

BIRTHDAY AND WEDDING PRESENTS.

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; 48, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

LONDON;

And at 10-12, Barton Arcade, MANCHESTER.

CATALOGUES.

SOTHERAN'S PRICE CURRENT
OF LITERATURE.MONTHLY LIST OF FRESH PURCHASES
IN SECOND-HAND BOOKS.

No. 595, just published for MARCH, includes a collection of works on Australasia and the Pacific.

Post free from

HENRY SOTHERAN & CO., Booksellers,
140, Strand, W.C.; and 37, Piccadilly, W.WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick St.
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAB &amp; CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

WANTED, INQUIRIES FOR ESTIMATES
FOR PRINTING PERIODICALS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c., by a Firm of Printers in the Provinces (with direct communication with London). Equipped with Linos and plans for producing high-class work.—Address, "Publications," John Haddon & Co., Salisbury Square, E.C.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.
—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class
Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet
Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines
for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built
Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page
Journals at one operation.

Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence
New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices free. Advet-
tising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

High-Class Bookbinding.

Valuable Books and MS. Bound and Repaired with great care. Miscellaneous Books bound in any style or pattern.

JOHN FAZAKERLEY,
40, Paradise Street, LIVERPOOL

BOOKS, Rare and Out of Print, Supplied.
Please state wants. Catalogues free. Books bought for cash. Wanted, Bradley, Ethical Studies. 20s. offered.—
THE HOLLAND CO., Book Merchants, Birmingham.

PUBLISHERS and Editors decline MSS.,
but do not state the reason. By putting right what is wrong, well-known Author ensures the ultimate success of nearly every MS. passing through his hands. Fees very moderate.
Particular free.—A. H. BELMERE Road, Hayes Park, S.W.

STORIES, ARTICLES, &c., accurately Typed.
Punctuation and revision when desired. Absolute reliability. Highest references from London Editors and Authors.—Write Miss FRIEND, 62, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately
done. 10d. per 1,000 words. Samples and references.
Multi-Copies.—Address, Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TYPE-WRITER.—AUTHORS' MSS.
COPIED with accuracy and despatch. Carbon Duplicates.
Circulars, Examination Papers, &c.—Miss E. TIGAR,
25, Matfield Park Villas, Haverstock Hill, N.W.—Established 1884

TRAFALGAR LITERARY and TYPE-
WRITING BUREAU (DE MOMET & WALKER),
3, Trafalgar Buildings, Northumberland Avenue, W.C.—
Typing, Duplicating, Shorthand, Reporting, Translations
(all Languages). Literary Researches. Press Cuttings.

TYPE-WRITING, well and quickly done, at moderate charges.—Mrs. ANDERSON, 65, Warrender Park Road, Edinburgh.

TYPE-WRITING; TYPE-WRITING;
TYPE-WRITING.—NOVELS, PLAYS, ESSAYS carefully TYPED. Difficult MSS. receive special attention.
References to Authors.—Write for terms to E. GAHAM, 23,
Cockspur Street, Pall Mall, London.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman,
experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by
letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 151, Strand, London, W.C.

"THE ACADEMY" LITERARY COMPETITIONS.

New Series.—No. 26.

All readers attempting this week's
Competition (described fully on page
239) must cut out this Coupon
and enclose it with their reply.

M. R. SIDNEY LEE will deliver a LECTURE on "SHAKESPEARE and the ELIZA-BETHAN PLAYGOER," at the SPEYER HALL, at QUEEN'S COLLEGE, 43 and 45, Harley Street, W., on TUESDAY, March 20, at 5 p.m.
For tickets (price Half-a-crown) apply to the Lady Resident.

THE PRINCESS HELENA COLLEGE

EALING, W.

Established 1820. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1886.

President—H. R. H. THE PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.

High-class education for the DAUGHTERS of GENTLE-
MEN, as Resident or Day Pupils. Preparation for University and Art Examinations. Spacious grounds. Supervision in games.

Training department for kindergarten students in preparation for Froebel Union Examination for Teachers.

There is a Home in connection with the College for K.G.
Students and for a few children under ten years of age.

MARGARET WILLIAMSON, Lady Principal.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING
COLLEGE, Cooper's Hill, Staines.

The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for Employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40
Students will be admitted in September, 1900. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition—Twelve Appointments
as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphs Department, and One in the Accountants' Branch
P.W.D.—For particulars apply to SECRETARY, at College.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE SCHOOL,
GOWER STREET, W.C.

Headmaster—J. LEWIS PATON, M.A., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

SUMMER TERM commences MONDAY, April 30th.

The School is carried on in strict accordance with the principles laid down by the Founders of University College, and is organised as a first grade Modern and Classical School.

Examinations for Entrance Scholarships will be held on June 19th.

For Prospectus apply at the Office, Gower Street, W.C.

J. M. HORSBURGH, M.A., Secretary.

MASON UNIVERSITY COLLEGE,
BIRMINGHAM.ASSISTANT LECTURESHIP IN THE FRENCH
LANGUAGE.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the above appointment. Stipend £125 per annum.

Candidates must be Graduates of a University, above the French Bachelier standard, and speak fluent English. A knowledge of Spanish will be a recommendation.

Applications, accompanied by Testimonials, should be sent to the undersigned not later than Saturday, the 31st instant.

The Candidate selected will be required to enter upon his duties on April 23rd, 1900.

Further particulars may be obtained from

OEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL.

FRENCH LECTURESHIP.

APPLICATIONS are invited for the post of FRENCH
LECTURER at University College, Liverpool, to be forwarded not later than April 28th to the College Registrar, with twenty-five copies of testimonials. The Lecturer will be required to commence his duties on the 1st of October.

The appointment is for five years. Salary £250 a year, one-third of the Day Classes fees, and the whole of the Evening Classes fees.

For all particulars apply to the REGISTRAR.

LONDON LIBRARY,

ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

PATRON—H. R. H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.O.

PRESIDENT—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.

Vice-Presidents—The Right Hon. A. J. BALFOUR, M.P., the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP OF LONDON, HERBERT
SPENCER, Esq.; the Right Hon. W. E. H. LECKY, M.P., D.C.L.

Treasurers—Right Hon. Sir M. ORANT DUFF, Right Hon.
LORD AUBURY, F.R.S., Right Hon. EARL OF ROSE-BURY.

The Library contains about 200,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in Various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year; Life-Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country and Ten to Town Members. Reading Room Open from 10 till half-past 6. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, 1888, 2 vols., royal 8vo. price 21s.; to Members, 16s.

C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, LL.D., Secretary and Librarian.

ESTABLISHED 1881.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on
DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums
on deposit and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

JARROLD &amp; SONS' NEW LIST.

JUST PUBLISHED.—FIRST EDITION EXHAUSTED,
SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

THE ADVENTURES OF

CYRANO DE BERGERAC,

Entitled CAPTAIN SATAN. 6s.

From the French of LOUIS GILLET. With specially engraved Portrait of Cyrano de Bergerac.

"Plenty to entertain in the volume, the story is always in movement, and stirring incidents follow each other in inexhaustible succession."—Daily News.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

THE ADVENTURES OF

CYRANO DE BERGERAC,

Entitled CAPTAIN SATAN. 6s.

With specially engraved Portrait of Cyrano de Bergerac.
"Captain Satan" forms a romance d'adventure of a most exciting character, with the renowned Cyrano de Bergerac and his "heroic" nose for hero. Throughout the work we are brought closely in contact with Cyrano, and a vivid picture of the famous swashbuckler-poet is given.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "QUO VADIS."

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

IN THE NEW PROMISED LAND.

By HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ, Author of "Quo Vadis."
Translated from the original Polish by Count S. de SOISSONS. With a new Photographic Portrait of Henryk
Sienkiewicz. 2s. 6d.

"A vivid example of Henryk Sienkiewicz' talent. The simple history of two Polish peasants told with keen force and skill, so that their patient suffering instinct with pathos and eloquent in the extreme. A powerful narrative."
Daily Telegraph.

CURTIS YORKE'S LATEST POPULAR NOVEL

THIRD EDITION.

JOCELYN ERROLL. By Curtis

YORKE. With fine Photographs of the Author. Author of "That Little Girl," "Once," "A Romance of Modern London," &c. 6s.

"Will be read with interest. Pauline Etheridge is skilfully touching in."—Daily Chronicle.

THE LIFE-STORY OF MOZART.

A SOUL-STIRRING MUSICAL ROMANCE.

THE TONE KING. 6s. By Heribert

RAU. Translated by JULIA E. S. RAE. With Photographs after Jager's Portrait of Mozart. [Second Edition.]

"A lively story. Mr. Rau has lucidly and sympathetically chronicled the leading incidents in Mozart's life; and the narrative of his achievements as boy and man is delightful reading throughout."—Daily Telegraph.

LESLIE KEITH'S SUCCESSFUL NOVEL.

SECOND EDITION.

WAYFARERS ALL. 6s. By Leslie

KEITH, Author of "Lisbeth," "My Bonnie Lady," &c.
"An extremely entertaining and sympathetic romance. The Misses Green are masterly characterisations, and so are Ruth's fascinating children."—Daily Telegraph.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 & 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.

OLIPHANT'S NEW BOOKS.

FAMOUS SCOTS SERIES.—New Vol.

SIR DAVID WILKIE,

And the SCOTS SCHOOL OF PAINTERS. By EDWARD
PINNINGTON. Cloth, 1s. 6d.; extra gilt, 2s. 6d.

List of the Series post free on application.

VILLAGE LIFE IN CHINA:

A Study in Sociology. By ARTHUR H. SMITH, D.D., Author of "Chinese Characteristics." With 31 Illustrations from Photographs. Price 7s. 6d.

THE SIXTH THOUSAND IS NOW READY OF

CHINESE CHARACTERISTICS.

By the SAME AUTHOR. With 16 Illustrations. Price 5s.
"The best book on the Chinese people."—Examiner.

MISSIONS IN EDEN:

Glimpses of Life in the Valley of the Euphrates. By Mrs.
CROSBY H. WHEELER. With 9 Full-Page Illustrations. Price 3s. 6d.

West African Life and Adventure.

IN AFRIC'S FOREST and JUNGLE

Or, Six Years among the Yorubans. By R. H. STONE.
With 9 Full-page Illustrations. Price 3s. 6d.

PLAY THE MAN:

Talks with Boys on the Battle of Life. By HERBERT
REID. With Frontispiece by Mrs. Traquair. Price 2s. 6d., cloth extra, gilt edges.

DR. WHYTE'S BIBLE CHARAC-

TERS.—THE OLD TESTAMENT CHARACTERS.

By ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D. Complete in 3 vols.—
viz.,

ADAM to ACHAN. 3s. 6d.

GIDEON to ARSLOM. 3s. 6d.

ANITOPHEL to NEHEMIAH. 3s. 6d.

Of any Bookseller, or post free from the Publishers.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER,
21, Paternoster Square, E.C.; and Edinburgh.

SOUTH AFRICA AND THE WAR.—BOOKS TO READ.

PUBLISHED TO-DAY. TOWARDS PRETORIA. TOWARDS PRETORIA. By JULIAN RALPH.

Extra crown 8vo, bound in Khaki and Scarlet, price 6s.

A Record of the War to the Capture of Bloemfontein.

Among the many gifted correspondents at the seat of war, none has made a better name for the brilliance and vividness of his letters than Julian Ralph of the Daily Mail. He has made excellent use of the material gathered on the field of action and produced this fascinating story of the War.

C. ARTHUR PEARSON, Ltd., Henrietta Street, W.C.

A BOOK ABOUT THE BOER WAR OF 1881.

Cloth, crown 8vo, 2s.

With 8 Illustrations by R. Caton Woodville, after Sketches by Melton Prior.

MAJUBA: BRONKERSPRUIT, INGOGO, LANGS NEK, KRUGERSDORP. By HAMISH HENDRY.

Globe.—"The author has gone to the best, and his narratives have the qualities of conciseness and vividness which he claims for them. They are concentrated, they are picturesque; moreover, they are not without their lessons for the statesmen and soldiers of to-day."

Daily Graphic.—"...brief and brightly written....The description is extremely vivid, and will bring home to the mind of the reader the nature of South African warfare far more clearly than a more elaborately technical work could possibly do."

London: GRANT RICHARDS, 9, Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

SECOND LARGE EDITION READY.

THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA: Its Causes and Effects.

By J. A. HOBSON.

Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"His arguments are certainly worthy of consideration by those more impartial persons belonging to neither extreme camp who desire help in arriving at complete truth."—Athenaeum.

"It is possible to read with interest and with pleasure far into these pages without ceasing to lose faith in the author's impartiality and ability."—Daily News.

"A sound and careful study."—Speaker.

J. NISBET & CO., LTD., 21, Berners Street, W.

THIRD IMPRESSION NOW READY. FROM CAPETOWN TO LADYSMITH.

By G. W. STEEVENS.

With Maps. Crown 8vo, 3s 6d.

"At once graphic, pathetic, humorous, practical, and tells just what everybody wants to know."—Times.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

THE TRANSVAAL BOERS: A HISTORICAL SKETCH. By AFRICANUS.

Price 1s. net, paper covers; 2s. in cloth. Post free 3d. extra.

THE STORY OF SOUTH AFRICA By W. BASIL WORSFOLD.

Cloth bound, price 1s. 6d.

London: HORACE MARSHALL & SON.

THE BOOK OF THE HOUR. THIRD EDITION. OUR LIVING GENERALS.

By ARTHUR TEMPLE, Author of "The Making of the Empire."

Art vellum, gilt top, price 3s. 6d.

Biographical Sketches with fine Portraits of Twelve Generals, no fewer than ten of whom are now at the front.

"Pleasant and good reading."—Saturday Review.

"A capital book, breezily and brightly written."—St. James's Budget.

"The list is well chosen. Men of whom the nation is justly proud."
Naval and Military Record.

ANDREW MELROSE, 16, Pilgrim Street, London E.C.

SELECTIONS FROM ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD'S PUBLICATIONS.

WORKS BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 6s. each, post free.

THE BEATITUDES, and other Sermons.

"An excellent exposition of the Beatitudes.....full of thought and knowledge and power."

British Weekly.

CHRIST'S "MUSTS," and other Sermons.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"They show the same wonderful fertility of apt and beautiful illustrations, the same exquisite use of language, the same direct heart-searching power which we are accustomed to find in all Dr. Maclaren's works."—Christian World Pulpit.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other Sermons.

"The several sermons contained in this volume are replete with a keen spiritual insight, combined with an aptness of illustration and beauty of diction which cannot fail to both impress and charm the reader."

Methodist Times.

PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons.

"They are plain enough to be understood by the unlearned, and yet have sufficient richness and cogency to attract the most cultivated."

New York Observer.

THE HOLY of HOLIES. A Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John.

"No British preacher has unfolded this portion of Scripture in a more scholarly style."

North British Daily Mail.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"Distinguished by the finest scholarship and most exquisite literary finish."—Christian Leader.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 3s. 6d., post free.

ILLUSTRATIONS from the SERMONS of ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D. Edited and Selected by JAMES HENRY MARTYN. Containing over 500 beautiful and suggestive illustrations. With a Textual Index and Alphabetical List of Subjects.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"THINGS THAT ARE MADE." Devotional Meditations in the Haunts of Nature. By Rev. A. J. BAMFORD, B.A., of Royton.

The Freeman says: "Preschers and teachers will find in them many helpful suggestions."

The Glasgow Herald says: "They will probably interest and instruct many who would an ordinary sermon flee."

New Ready, Second Edition, crown 8vo, cloth boards 1s. 6d., post free.

THE CHARTER of the CHURCH. Lectures on the Scriptural Principle of Nonconformity. By P. T. FORSYTH, M.A., D.D.

"Explains the position of religious dissent with great force and eloquence."—Manchester Guardian.
"Nothing could be more timely than these learned and suggestive lectures."—Christian World.

Second Edition, crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 1s. 6d., post free.

THE CONDUCT of PUBLIC MEETINGS. By J. HUNT COOKE. A Clear and Concise Manual for all Public Speakers.

Twenty-first Thousand. Limp cloth, price 6d., post free.

OUR PRINCIPLES: a Congregationalist Church Manual. By G. B. JOHNSON.

Post 8vo, cloth, with Portraits, price 6s., post free.

WELSHMEN in ENGLISH PULPITS; or, Sermons by English Congregational Ministers from Wales. With Introduction by Rev. CHARLES A. BERRY, D.D. Edited by Rev. DANIEL WATERS.

The Expository Times says: "And here we have thirty excellent portraits of prominent and eloquent Congregational preachers, with their thirty sermons, and the price is but a few shillings."

Crown 8vo, Illustrated, price 2s. 6d. post free.

CONVICTED of HEROISM. A Tale of John Penry, Martyr, 1559—1593. By HERBERT M. WHITE, B.A. Illustrated by Frank H. Simpson.

"Excellent, unusual grasp of events, nobility of ideal, vividness, and grace of style."
Rev. ARCHIBALD DUFF, D.D.

Fcap. 8vo, price 1s. 6d., post free.

THE AMBITIONS of ST. PAUL. By Rev. W. GARRETT HORDER.

Contents: Concerning Ambition—Three, not One—The First Ambition—The Second Ambition—The Third Ambition.

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, LIMITED, 21 and 22, Farnival Street, Holborn, W.C.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

ON MONDAY NEXT. CHEAPER EDITION.

With 71 Portraits from Photographs.
Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

THE BOOK OF GOLF AND GOLFERS.

By HORACE G. HUTCHINSON.

With Contributions by Miss AMY PASCOE, H. H. HILTON, J. H. TAYLOR, H. J. WHIGHAM, and Messrs. SUTTON & SONS.

- CHAP. CONTENTS.
- I. HISTORICAL. By H. G. HUTCHINSON.
  - II. GOLF as a GAME. By H. H. HILTON.
  - III. APPROACHING. By H. J. TAYLOR.
  - IV. HOW TO PRACTISE. By H. G. HUTCHINSON.
  - V. A PORTRAIT GALLERY. By H. G. HUTCHINSON.
  - VI. GOLF in the UNITED STATES. By H. J. WHIGHAM.
  - VII. LADIES. By AMY DENNET PASCOE.
  - VIII. METHODS OF PLAY. By H. G. HUTCHINSON.
  - IX. PRACTICAL CLUB-MAKING. By J. H. TAYLOR.
  - X. CLUBS and BALLS. By H. G. HUTCHINSON.
  - XI. LAYING-OUT and UPKEEP of GREENS. By Messrs. SUTTON & SONS, of Reading.

INDEX.

A HISTORY of the ENGLISH CHURCH DURING the CIVIL WARS and UNDER the COMMONWEALTH, 1640-1660. By WILLIAM A. SHAW, LL.D., Editor of the "Calendar of Treasury Papers." 2 vols., 8vo, 36s.

A HISTORY of GREECE. By Evelyn ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D. Part III. From the Thirty Years' Peace to the Fall of the Thirty at Athens, 445-403 B.C. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE ANNUAL CHARITIES REGISTER and DIGEST for 1900. Being a Classified Register of Charities in or available in the Metropolis. With an Introduction by C. S. LOCH, Secretary to the Council of the Charity Organisation Society, London. 8vo, 4s.

THE OXFORD LIBRARY of PRACTICAL THEOLOGY.

Produced under the Editorship of the Rev. W. C. E. NEWBOLT, M.A., and the Rev. F. E. BRIGHTMAN, M.A.

TWO NEW VOLUMES.

CONFIRMATION. By the Right Rev. A. C. A. HALL, D.D., Bishop of Vermont. Crown 8vo, 5s. [Ready.]

THE HISTORY of the BOOK of COMMON PRAYER. By the Rev. LEIGHTON PULLAN, Fellow of St. John Baptist's College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 5s. [On Monday next.]

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

APRIL.—Price SIXPENCE.

ONE of OURSELVES. By L. E. WALFORD, Author of "Mr. Smith," &c. (Continued.)

THE WOMEN of the SALONS. By S. G. TALENTYRE, I. Madame du Deffaud.

KING OLAF'S SWORD. By WALTER HERRIES POLLOCK.

A RUSTIC ARGUS. By M. E. FRANCIS (Mrs. Francis Bloodell).

LITERARY DOGMA. By FRANK RITCHIE.

IN the NAME of a WOMAN. By ARTHUR W. MARCHMONT, Author of "By Right of Sword," "A Dash for a Throne," &c. Chapters I-IV.

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.,
London, New York, and Bombay.

NOW READY, demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d., post free.

Prospectus on application

THE SILVER MAP of the WORLD COMMEMORATIVE of DRAKE'S GREAT VOYAGE 1577-80.
A Geographical Essay.

By MILLER CHRISTY.

(With some Remarks on the Voyages of FROBISHER and the BROTHERS ZENO.)

Illustrated by 10 Facsimile Maps.

HENRY STEVENS, SON & STILES,

39, Great Russell Street, London, W.C.

Send for CATALOGUE (just out) of new and important HISTORICAL and GEOGRAPHICAL PUBLICATIONS.

LOVE, SPORT, and a DOUBLE EVENT.
By W. B. GILPIN, Author of "Ranchland," &c. London: THE LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, E.C. (Three-and-Sixpence.)

TOLSTOY'S LATEST WORK.

Crown 8vo, pp. xvi, 545. Art canvas, 6s. net.

RESURRECTION:

A Novel.

With 33 Illustrations by PASTERNAK. Translation by LOUISE MAUDE.

London:

FRANCIS RIDDELL HENDERSON,
26, Paternoster Square.

W. THACKER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

AN EDITION DE LUXE OF THE WORKS OF WHYTE-MELVILLE.

EDITED BY THE

Right Hon. SIR HERBERT MAXWELL,
Bart., M.P.

Vols. 1 to 13, demy 8vo, gilt tops, 46 10s. 6d.

The volumes are printed from new type on hand-made paper, specially manufactured for this edition, and handsomely bound in buckram with gilt tops.

Coloured Frontispiece on Japanese Vellum and other Full-Page Illustrations by well-known Artists.

WITH SAMPSON THROUGH the

WAR. By W. A. M. GOODE. An Account of the Naval Operations of the North Atlantic Squadron during the Spanish War of 1898. With Chapters specially contributed by Rear-Admiral Sampson, U.S.N., Capt. R. D. Evans, U.S.N., and Commander C. C. Todd, U.S.N. With Portraits of Officers. Illustrations and Maps. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 8d.

"A graphic account of what took place."—Engineer.

"A very admirable history of Admiral Sampson's doings."—Journal of Commerce.

"Extremely interesting right through, and very well illustrated."—Navy and Army.

"Perhaps one of the best of works on the war."—The Sketch.

"Seldom indeed have the technicalities of naval warfare been so popularly dealt with."—Nautical Magazine.

THE IMPERIAL RUSSIAN NAVY.

By FRED. T. JANE, Author of "All the World's Fighting Ships," "The Torpedo in Peace and War," "Terror of the Jane Naval War Game (Naval Kriegspiel)," &c., &c. With Maps, Plans, and 150 Illustrations from Sketches and Drawings by the Author and from Photographs. Royal 8vo, 30s. net.

"Mr. Jane's book is valuable, and it is certainly very instructive."—Army and Navy Gazette.

"Ce magnifique ouvrage édité avec un soin tout particulier."—La Yacht.

"To naval students this volume will be of the utmost value."—Western Morning News.

"An up-to-date, well arranged, and concise Encyclopædia of the subject."—Daily News.

"Fills a distinct gap in our naval literature."—Daily Chronicle.

THE TORPEDO in PEACE and

WAR. By FRED. T. JANE, Author of "Blake of the Rattlesnake," "All the World's Fighting Ships," "Terror of the Jane Naval War Game," &c. With about 30 Full-Page and a great many smaller Illustrations, the greater part of which are reproductions of Sketches made at Sea on board Torpedo Craft by the Author. Oblong folio, cloth gilt, 10s. 6d.

THE CARLSBAD TREATMENT,

and How to Carry It Out Anywhere. By LOUIS TARTLETON YOUNG, M.D. New and Revised Edition with Illustrations. A valuable book of reference for Doctors and Patients. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A SUMMER in HIGH ASIA. A

Summer Ramble through Balistan and Ladakh. By Capt. F. S. ADAIR (late Rifle Brigade), Author of "Sport in Ladakh." With a Chapter on Central Asian Trade by Capt. S. H. Godfrey, late British Joint Commissioner at Leh. Illustrated by a series of beautiful Photographs and Drawings taken on the spot, and a Map of the route. Medium 8vo, cloth extra, 12s. 6d. net.

"There are few guides as good and as interesting."—Daily News.

"This record of big game will appeal forcibly to sportsmen."—Publishers' Circular.

"He gives striking pictures of scenes of grandeur."—Bradford Observer.

"A very readable book of sport and travel."—Spectator.

"The general reader and the naturalist will, scarcely less than the sportsman, find much in the book that is attractive or amusing."—Scotsman.

"We cordially commend it to all sportsmen."—The Asian Collector.

A JAUNT in JAPAN; or, Ninety

Days' Leave in the Far East. By Capt. S. C. F. JACKSON, D.S.O., of the Hampshire Regt., D.A.A.G. Bombay. 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d. net.

BULLET and SHOT in INDIAN

FOREST, PLAIN, and HILL. With Hints to Beginners of Indian Shooting. By C. E. M. RUSSELL, late Senior Deputy Conservator of Forests, Mysore Service. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"A useful addition to Indian sporting literature."—Spectator.

THE ROD in INDIA: being Hints

how to obtain Sport, with Remarks on the Natural History of Fish and their Culture. By H. S. THOMAS, F.L.S. Third Edition, Revised. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 15s.

USEFUL HINTS to YOUNG

SHIKARIS on the GUN and RIFLE. By "THE LITTLE OLD BEAR." Crown 8vo. Second Edition.

THE SPORTSMAN MANUAL in

QUEST of GAME in KULLE, LAHOUL, and LADAK, to the TWO MOHARI LAKES. With 9 Maps. By Lieut. Colonel H. R. THACKER, late H.M.'s 95th and 34th Regiments. Fcap. 8vo, 6s.

PHIL MAY'S ANNUAL, 1s.

Humorous Sketches, Powerful Stories.

"Abounds in comical sketches."—The Times.

"As bright and witty as ever."—Daily Graphic.

"Stronger and funnier than in any previous year."—Daily Mail.

"Up to the clever caricaturist's best form."—Glasgow Herald.

"Screamingly funny."—Literary World.

W. THACKER & CO., 2, Creed Lane, E.C.

FROM WALTER SCOTT'S LIST

THE CANTERBURY POETS.

Square 8vo, cut and uncut edges, 1s. per vol.; also "Gravure" Edition, in art linen binding, each Volume with Frontispiece in Photogravure, 2s. per Volume.

NEW VOLUME.

War Songs and Ballads of Martial Life.

SELECTED, with an INTRODUCTORY NOTE,

By JOHN MACLEAY.

RECENT VOLUME.

NAVAL SONGS, and other

SONGS and BALLADS of SEA LIFE. Selected, with an Introductory Note, by FRANK RINDER.

THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

Edited by HAVELOCK ELLIS.

NEW VOLUMES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. With Illustrations.

The HISTORY of the EURO-

PEAN FAUNA. By R. F. SCHARFF, B.Sc., Ph.D., F.Z.S.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. With about 200

Illustrations.

THE RACES of MAN: a

Sketch of Ethnography and Anthropology. By J. DENIKER.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. With Diagrams.

THE PSYCHOLOGY of RE-

LIGION. By Prof. STARBUCK, Stanford University, California. With an Introduction by Prof. WILLIAM JAMES, of Harvard University.

The author of this book deals for the first time in a scientific (though sympathetic) manner with the facts of religious life. He shows that conversion and the other stages of religious development may be brought into line with the biological facts of life. His work is founded on precise information derived from a large number of people, and is of special interest to teachers and ministers of religion.

NEW VOLUMES IN THE "EMERALD,"

"OXFORD," and other crown 8vo LIBRARIES

HARRY COVERDALE'S

COURTSHIP. By FRANK SMEDLEY. Illustrated. Price 2s.

THE BIBLE in SPAIN. By

GEORGE BORROW. With Frontispiece. Price 2s.

Demy 8vo, 157 pp., printed on antique laid paper, bound in art linen, price 5s. net.

SOME RECORDS of a CIS-

TERCIAN ABBEY: Holm Cultram, Cumberland. By Rev. G. E. GILBANKS, M.A. With 18 Illustrations by Major F. H. Oldfield, R.E., and others.

Complete Lists of any of the above Series post free on application.

London: WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED,
Paternoster Square, E.C.

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1455. Established 1869.

24 March, 1900.

Price Threepence.

[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

MARCH 31 is the latest date for receiving MSS. for our Special Prize Competition, particulars of which will be found on page 2 of the cover of this number. Judging by the number of MSS. we have already received, the task of selecting the winners will be a heavy one. The awards will be made in our issue of April 21, on which occasion a Special Double Number of the ACADEMY will be issued.

THOSE who indulge in the mild excitement of our Weekly Competition will observe that this week it takes the form of the best Book Tea suggestion. Here is one which gained a prize at a recent gathering. A lady appeared with a war telegram pinned to her dress, giving the speech of a distinguished general to the children who had endured the siege of Ladysmith. He looked at the wasted forms and pallid faces, and as he looked tears came into his eyes, and he said in a broken voice: "It will be all right now, children. You shall have a long holiday and plenty of bread and jam." Answer: "The Woman in White."

WE who follow the trend of modern fiction are aware of three very plainly marked characteristics: (1) That women are increasingly active in this branch of literature; (2) That much of the best modern fiction comes from America; (3) That far and away the most popular form of fiction in America is the historical novel. Take, for example, Miss Mary Johnstone's By Order of the Company, which we review elsewhere in this number. It is a remarkable performance when we consider that the authoress is not yet twenty-nine years of age. The Book Buyer, from which we reproduce the accompanying portrait of Miss Johnstone, states that this novel raised the circulation of the Atlantic Monthly during its serial publication by 50,000 copies. Miss Johnstone is a Virginian by birth and ancestry.

MISS MARY JOHNSTONE.

THE Dictionary of National Biography will be completed in June. It is announced that the Lord Mayor will signalise the publication of the last volume of Mr. George Smith's heroic enterprise by giving a "literary entertainment." Lord Rosebery, Mr. John Morley, and the Bishop of London are expected to be present on the occasion.

THE articles on village life which have appeared from time to time in the Outlook above the pseudonym "Clarissa" are to be published in volume form. The dedication of the book will run: "To my brother, George Wyndham."

WE regret to learn that there is no improvement in the condition of M. Edmond Rostand, who is suffering from congestion of the lungs. A chill caught at the rehearsals of "L'Aiglon" was the beginning of the illness.

MR. GOLDWIN SMITH has been on the old quest of trying to trace the personality of Shakespeare in the plays. The result will be contained in a short book, Shakespeare: the Man, soon to be published.

MR. GILBERT MURRAY, who wrote a scholarly History of Ancient Greek Literature three years ago, has attempted to recapture Greek life and feeling through the more literary medium of an original play, entitled "Andromache." Mr. Murray dedicates his effort to Mr. William Archer in the following interesting terms:

MY DEAR ARCHER,—The germ of this play sprang into existence on a certain April day in 1896 which you and I spent chiefly in dragging our reluctant bicycles up the great hills that surround Riveaux Abbey, and discussing, so far as the blinding rain allowed us, the questions whether all sincere comedies are of necessity cynical, and how often we had had tea since the morning, and how far it would be possible to treat a historical subject loyally and unconventionally on a modern stage. Then we struck (as, I fear, is too often the fate of those who converse with me) on the subject of the lost plays of the Greek tragedians. We talked of the extraordinary variety of plot that the Greek dramatist found in his historical tradition, the force, the fire, the depth and richness of character-play. We thought of the marvellous dramatic possibilities of an age in which actual and living heroes and sages were to be seen moving against a background of primitive superstition and blank savagery; in which the soul of man walked more free from trappings than seems ever to have been permitted to it since. But I must stop; I see that I am approaching the common pitfall of playwrights who venture upon prefaces, and am beginning to prove how good my play ought to be! . . . We agreed that a simple historical play, with as little convention as possible, placed in the Greek Heroic Age, and dealing with one of the ordinary heroic stories, ought to be, well, an interesting experiment.

The "experiment" is issued at a price which would have commended itself to the democratic Athenian citizens—eightpence.

In the past week there has been a bad outbreak of politics among the leaders of the Irish Literary Movement. Mr. Edward Martyn, the author of "Maevé," has resigned his office of Deputy Lieutenant and Justice of the Peace for co. Galway after certain correspondence had passed between him and the Lord Chancellor. Mr. Martyn had not, it is stated, favoured the singing of the National Anthem at his residence on the occasion of a meeting held there to promote the Irish Soldiers' Fund. Are we to believe that Mr. Martyn could act as the representative of the Queen in dispensing justice to her subjects, and yet refuse those subjects permission to acknowledge her sovereignty in the usual way? We hesitate to believe it. Meanwhile, Mr. Yeats has forewarned gentleness, and wishes to call a meeting, under the presidency of Mr. John O'Leary, to dissociate Ireland from the welcome to be given to the Queen in Dublin. Mr. Yeats says the advisers of the Queen have sent her to Ireland out of "national hatred—hatred of our individual national life." Mr. George Moore attributes the Queen's visit to the "necessities of empire." We are sorry these young men have such thoughts, but, particularly, we wish they would not talk about Art one week, and hatred the next; offer first to lead us to "well-waters of primeval poetry," and then brandish the shillelagh of primeval politics.

A WRITER in the Atlantic Monthly gives an amusing new view of Stevenson, gathered from the speeches delivered at an essay-meeting held in an American puritanical circle. The best of it is that this view of Stevenson is quite logical—given a certain class of minds. Thus:

The evening's programme began with a biographical sketch of Stevenson, given by an elderly woman, who said that she had never had any esteem or liking for him, but she felt bound in fairness to admit that, on looking up the facts in his life, she had become convinced that there must have been something attractive about his personality to make so many people speak well of him. . . . It devolved upon another elderly woman to give her opinion of The Master of Ballantrae. She declared that the book did not contain a single pleasant paragraph. It was the sort of thing, she thought, which perhaps would interest boys. . . . A retired school teacher, who had been asked to give her impression of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, said she had found the literary style of the book very faulty in some respects. Many of the sentences ended with prepositions. With regard to the story considered simply as a story, she hardly knew what to say. It was a very disagreeable book. It might be that Stevenson had had a purpose in writing it. In that case, possibly it might do good. . . . An editor read a paper, in which he spoke in the customary strain of admiration of both Stevenson and his books. At the close of his eulogy, which was rather coldly received, the widow of a Baptist minister asked in a significant tone, "What were Stevenson's religious opinions?" The manner of the question clearly implied, "I am sure nothing satisfactory can be said of them." This was evidently, to many present, hitting the nail squarely on the head. . . . A returned missionary from some of the heathen islands of the Pacific said she had never met Stevenson, although his boat, the Equator, lay for some weeks at the island where she was. She had heard too much of him to wish to see him. . . . When pressed for details, she said that Stevenson's influence over the natives was pernicious, and the example he set them greatly to be deplored. By appearing in the native dress on certain occasions, he counteracted the efforts of the missionaries to make their converts wear the garb of civilisation and cease to go barefooted. He also smoked cigarettes in the sight of the islanders. . . . When the meeting adjourned, there seemed a disposition on the part of the members to regard the author of The Master of Ballantrae with charity.

THE battle of Open Access sways this way and that in the Library world. We are sending no war correspondent into the fray, but we hear the shouting of the captains. Mr. Edward Foscett sends us a pamphlet on the subject.

Asked by the editor of the Library to reply to a paper which that magazine had printed in favour of open access, Mr. Foscett wrote a caustic article against open access which the editor declined to print without considerable alteration. Mr. Foscett has now printed his article in pamphlet form. In it he insists that the evils of open access are manifold, and that they include serious loss by theft, damage by wind and dust, wearing out of bindings, and bewilderment to the poor "ignorant reader" to whom open access is supposed to be a blessing. Mr. Foscett watched a boy who came for "somethin' interestin', mister," exploring the shelves of a public library.

He climbed up the shelves, and in many odd positions handled books of all sorts and sizes up to a total of nineteen volumes. I have no note of his misplacements; but he was twenty-seven minutes at the shelves, and finally, in apparent bewilderment, he took a technical book on art in mistake for "somethin' interestin', mister," in the travel or tiger-hunting line. I found this out as he was leaving, and he said he should "bring the book back ter-morrer." . . . Now what that boy wanted was a little personal guidance and help. Such ignorant, yet deserving aspirants are increasingly getting aid in the most efficiently served libraries, and it is in this direction that development is eminently desirable.

In short, Mr. Foscett considers that where the indicator system is supplemented by personal advice, the best results and the least mischief are achieved. In such libraries "a reader, not knowing precisely what he wants, has only to give a hint, and all the likely books (except fiction) are actually brought to a table for him, where he can leisurely examine and choose the book for his home-reading." Meanwhile, the Library for March prints an article admitting that "unless open access is thoroughly safeguarded it must infallibly lead to anarchy and waste." For "safeguards" Mr. Foscett reads detectives, and on the whole he seems to have the best of the argument.

Les Jeunes—a new American monthly magazinette—is redolent of new art and vague ideals. The cover is of brown paper, and the letterpress and illustrations are printed in a bricky red. We really do not know what Les Jeunes is bent on doing, except to write Art with a capital A. It is lurid and languishing, or both. Sings a poetess:

I wish my lover were a tear,
That I might drink with burning lip;
Can there be rarer volupcy,
Than all his life and love to sip,
With passion-trembling lip?

We must find time to run over our list of volupcies before we answer this.

MR. A. E. FLETCHER writes on "The Ideal Newspaper" in the April Young Man. He tilts at capitalists who run newspapers, and editors who play up for baronetries or knighthoods. His general charge against present-day journalism is that it records what is least worth knowing, and forces upon the public information which had best be forgotten. On the literary side of journalism Mr. Fletcher has special right to speak, for it was under his editorship that the Daily Chronicle introduced a daily treatment of literature into the newspapers. Mr. Fletcher stoutly maintains that journalism ought to be literature, and says:

If the newspaper is to be the Englishman's Bible of the future, let us take care that it models its style on that of the sacred books from which all our best writers, poets, and orators have caught their inspiration. You can only have a great literature in great language—the strong and simple language of great men. The language of journalism compares, I think, badly with that of our best writers. I would earnestly urge young men and women who may be thinking about choosing journalism for their life work to think over the mischief they will do if, instead of going back to the great masters for their style, they carry on the journalistic tradition that the language of dandies and nincompoops is rather to be chosen than "the tongue that Shakespeare spake."

WE have received from Mr. David Nutt a handsomely produced volume containing facsimiles of all the signatures to the international petition presented last year to the Czar on behalf of the liberties of Finland. The interest of the volume centres in the English section, where we find the characteristic signatures of Mr. Herbert Spencer, Mr. George Meredith, Mr. Thomas Hardy, Mr. Leslie Stephen, Prof. Sully, and many others. In the French section we find on one page the signatures of M. Zola and M. Anatole France, &c.

MR. H. HEATHCOTE STRATHAM makes an amusing point about Ruskin in the Fortnightly when he says:

It is one of the most curious among the many paradoxes connected with him that, while he once emphatically declared that a man can hardly draw anything without benefiting himself and others, and can hardly write anything without doing mischief, he should nevertheless have chosen to comparatively neglect his artistic capabilities in order to become one of the most voluminous writers of his age.

THE original MS. of Sir Walter Scott's St. Ronan's Well, which Mr. Ruskin bought from Scott's publisher, has just passed into the hands of Mr. William Brown, of Edinburgh. The MS. is said to differ somewhat from the text.

MR. JUSTIN MCCARTHY names the following as "Disappearing Authors," in an article bearing that title in the North American Review:

Charles Kingsley.
Anthony Trollope.
Charles Reade.
Charles Lever.

Broadly speaking, we suppose that Mr. McCarthy is right, though it is, perhaps, too soon to say that Trollope's fate is sealed, since his claims have recently been urged in more than one quarter, and a new edition of his works is in prospect. Mr. W. D. Howells has added his voice to those raised on Trollope's behalf in England, and the New York Literary World recently opined that Trollope's best novels deserve a place on the same shelf as Dickens and Thackeray, if not between them. Mr. McCarthy justly distinguishes between authors who really disappear and authors of the revolving light order who blaze, fade, and blaze again. In this class he places Macaulay and George Eliot, Tennyson, and Browning, all of whom will grip the public again more thoroughly than they do at the present time. But Mr. McCarthy is surely wrong when he says that the modern reader, as we know him, "has never troubled himself even with an attempt to read Jane Austen's novels." An appreciable part of the work done in this office in the last three years has been that of entering, reviewing, and comparing new editions of Jane Austen's novels; and we happen to know that our work in this field is not yet completed. Is it all lost labour?

"My Favourite Novelist and His Best Book" is the general title of a series of articles in Munsey's Magazine to which English writers are making contributions. This month it is Dr. Conan Doyle's turn. The gist of his article is contained in the head-lines placed over it by the editor. "Dr. Conan Doyle finds something admirable in almost every school of fiction, but names as his special favourites the romances of Sir Walter Scott, and Charles Reade's great historical novel, The Cloister and the Hearth." Charles Reade, it will be noticed, is among the "disappearing authors" named by Mr. Justin McCarthy.

LAST month Mr. Henley, writing of Robert Burns in his Pall Mall causerie, employed asterisks to disguise the poet's name. This month he writes it in full. The reason is that the Twenty-fifth of January has passed since he last wrote. "The 'Immortal Memory' has been drunk all over Scotland; and, as far as I know, only once have I been referred to as a 'body snatcher.'"

IN last week's Notes and Queries Mr. W. F. Prideaux began a series of "Notes for a Bibliography of Edward FitzGerald," which promises to be useful and interesting. The preoccupation of the public with FitzGerald's rendering of the "Rubáiyát" of Omar Kháyyám has involved the neglect of his other works in which, as Mr. Prideaux points out, even the devotees of Omar may find much to interest them. It would be strange, indeed, if this were not so, seeing that FitzGerald brought nearly as much to the "Rubáiyát" as he found in it. In his "Agamemnon," for instance, we find lines which bear a striking affinity to the "Rubáiyát" translation. Thus:

Call not on death, old man, that, call'd or no,
Comes quick; nor spend your ebbing breath on me,
Nor Helena, who hit as arrows be Shot by the hidden hand behind the bow.

And, again:

But thus it is; All bides the destined Hour;
And Man, albeit with Justice at his side,
Fights in the dark against a secret Power
Not to be conquer'd—and how pacified?

Mr. Prideaux finds another reason for the neglect of FitzGerald's less known works in the fact that they appeared in very small editions. When, in 1868, Prof. Cowell wrote begging a copy of Euphranor FitzGerald replied:

Oh, yes! I have a Lot of them: returned from Parker's when they were going to dissolve their House; I would not be at the Bother of any further negociation with any other Bookseller, about half-a-dozen little Books which so few wanted: so had them all sent here. I will therefore send you six copies.

A DRAMATISED version of Mr. Hewlett's The Forest Lovers is about to be produced by Mr. Frohman in New York. Should the play prove a success it will be seen upon London boards.

By a slip we last week attributed Moore's "Minstrel Boy" to Sir Walter Scott. We had certainly no intention to do Ireland another injustice, or (to use the expression of a correspondent) place "a fly in the ointment of a nation's grateful joy." Several correspondents have sent us facetious letters on the subject.

DURING the four months' siege of Kimberley the Diamond Fields Advertiser appeared daily until within four or five days of the relief, when it was stopped by the authorities for military and administrative reasons. A London journalist, who was in the besieged town, thus describes the efforts of the editor and his staff to maintain the semblance of a newspaper:

On many days the journal was a newspaper in name only—a composition of cuttings from many old numbers of Tit-Bits and other periodicals. Recourse, too, was had to the Kimberley library, and the history of the previous Transvaal war and sieges was re-written and re-served. Contributions were invited from residents, and we had some wonderful effusions in prose and verse, the latter being the most remarkable. However, the inhabitants paid their 3d. and got their paper—such as it was. Now and again we did obtain some interesting news, as, when a dispatch rider brought in a fairly recent copy of the Cape Times, for which, I believe, as much as £5 was paid. Then it was quite amusing to see the editor, sub-editor, and reporters eagerly scanning the paper, with breathless interest; and, needless to state, scissors and paste were quickly en évidence, and the readers of the Diamond Fields Advertiser considered they had an excellent paper the next morning. Of course the paper was reduced in size.

Copies of this paper and of the Ladysmith Lyre should be valuable now.

WE notice this week the new Oxford edition of the Complete Works of Molière. In his interesting quarterly Periodical Mr. Frowde gives a list of quotations from Molière's plays which may be said to have passed into use in England, either in their French form or in translations. The list is not so long as one might have expected it to be, but it is of sufficient interest to quote.

"Le monde, chère Agnès, est une étrange chose."

L'École des Femmes, Act ii., Sc. 5.

"Ah! pour être dévot, je n'en suis pas moins homme."

Le Tartuffe ou L'Imposteur, Act iii., Sc. 3.

"Il y a fagots et fagots."

Le Médecin malgré Lui, Act i., Sc. 5.

"Nous avons changé tout cela."—Ib., Act ii., Sc. 4.

"Le véritable Amphitryon

Est l'Amphitryon où l'on dîne."

Amphitryon, Act iii., Sc. 5.

"Je parle à mon bonnet."—L'Avare, Act i., Sc. 1.

"Les beaux yeux de ma cassette."—Ib., Act v., Sc. 4.

"Par ma foi! il y a plus de quarante ans que je dis de la prose sans que j'en susse rien."

Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, Act ii., Sc. 4.

"Entre lui, vous et moi, jurons, jurons, ma belle, Une ardeur éternelle."

Ib., Act iv., Sc. 1.

"Je le soutiendrai devant tout le monde."

Ib., Act iv., Sc. 3.

"Que diable alloit-il faire dans cette galère?"

Les Fourberies de Scapin, Act ii., Sc. 7.

"La grammaire, qui sait régenter jusqu'aux rois."

Les Femmes Savantes, Act ii., Sc. 6.

"Ah! il n'y a plus d'enfants."

Le Malade Imaginaire, Act ii., Sc. 8.

Bibliographical.

I DID not think that I should live to accord entire approval to any utterance by the late Mr. W. E. Gladstone; but the thing has happened. Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. are good enough to circulate monthly a publication which they call The Book Lover, and in which they give a disinterested account of the various works which they have just issued, or are about to issue. In The Book Lover for March there is an interview with Mr. W. H. Wilkins, who is going to publish with them a biography of Sophie Dorothea of Celle. It appears that Mr. Wilkins, who put forth, eight years ago, a novel called St. Michael's Eve, was so fortunate as to include Mr. Gladstone among his readers. Of course, Mr. Gladstone wrote to Mr. Wilkins on the subject, and these were the golden words he used: "It seems to me that with us at the present day talent is running overmuch into the field of invention; and that, setting apart the few cases where an author is conscious of strong creative power, other fields of history and research are more fruitful." Mr. Wilkins says that he has acted on this hint. Now, if all good Gladstonians would accept the suggestion of the Master, and cease writing novels—unless "conscious of strong creative power"—what a much brighter universe this would be.

As a bibliographer, I have a sense of personal indebtedness to the gentleman who has just published a novel called The Dean of Darrendale. He says he has not put his real name on the title-page because it happens to be identical with that of a novelist already well-known. He therefore calls himself "Wynton Eversley." He is wise. He is also fair, for obviously a new "Thomas Hardy" (to take an example at random) ought not, at this time of day, to take advantage of the popularity and fame achieved by the author of Tess of the D'Urbervilles. Moreover, if a new "Thomas Hardy" had any ambition to become popular and famous, he could not do worse for himself than produce books which (if really admirable) would almost certainly be attributed to the earlier comer. My own interest in the matter is purely bibliographical, and that is why I am sorry that there is an English and an American Robert Bridges, and an American and an English Winston Churchill. It is not right that the difficulties of the unhappy bibliographer should thus be complicated. The American Robert Bridges, coming after the English, ought to have called himself Robert Bridges the Second. That would have established his identity, and made everything pleasant.

Let us hope that it will never be considered the duty of a bibliographer to trace, for the benefit of the public, the wanderings of fictitious characters from novel to novel. One does not complain when the Mark Antony of "Julius Caesar" turns up in "Antony and Cleopatra," and the Bolingbroke of "Richard II." reappears in "Henry IV.," because these were historical characters, and reappear legitimately; but when it comes to authors of pure fiction, whether of plays or novels, carrying their creations from one work to another, it is time to protest against the strain upon the memory and the recording pen. We know that the Sir Novelty Fashion of Cibber's Love's Last Shift reappears in Vanbrugh's Relapse as Lord Foppington; but the system is not to be encouraged, though Thackeray and Trollope used it. We are now told that some of the characters in Miss Fowler's Isabel Carnaby and (I think) A Double Thread are to reappear in her next novel, The Furringdons. It is just possible that some of us may not recognise them. The creations of the modern storyteller do not always make a marked impression upon the mind.

I am beginning to think that I am in my way a first-class prophet. Only the other day I suggested that Sydney Dobell's war poems might well receive attention, and lo and behold comes a brief announcement that they are shortly to be reproduced. Not very long ago, too, a correspondent wrote to ask me whether William Penn's Fruits of Solitude could be obtained in England. R. L. Stevenson had referred to the work in one of his letters, and that had given it a new lease of life. I told my correspondent that there had been comparatively recent reprints of the Fruits, but that I could not be sure any one of them was "in the market." I suggested that some publisher might find it worth his while to reprint the said Fruits. And now I read that the work is to be reprinted soon under the editorship of Mr. Edmund Gosse, whose labours at the Board of Trade happily are not so exhausting as to prevent his engaging in such literary enterprises.

"The Cave of Illusion, a drama by Alfred Sutro, with an introduction by Maurice Maeterlinck"—nothing could be more appropriate. It is a sort of quid pro quo. Did not Mr. Sutro translate into English M. Maeterlinck's Alladine and Palomides, and also his Treasure of the Humble? The least that M. Maeterlinck could do after this was to "introduce" a drama by his English translator.

Ought Mr. A. C. Benson to have christened his forthcoming book The Professor, and Other Poems? Somehow or other, that title, The Professor, seems sacred to Charlotte Brontë, though Heaven knows why. There ought to be no monopoly in literature. Professors, nowadays, are as numerous as blackberries. You remember with what admirable tact and irony Matthew Arnold deprecated the title.

THE BOOKWORM.

Reviews.

A New-Old Movement.

The Symbolist Movement in Literature. By Arthur Symons. (Heinemann. 6s.)

IN this grave and admirably-written volume Mr. Symons has a subject which suits his idiosyncrasy; and the work is, in most respects, better—more spontaneous, more sympathetic, more constructive, and more homogeneous—than any section of Studies in Two Literatures. He has always had a tendency towards the exotic, the mysterious (if not the vague), the Un-obvious; and he has always shivered away from contact with that positivity of daily common facts, that hard Britannic physicoalism (cult of the cold tub), toute cette vieille Extériorité inflexible, which characterise so deeply our nineteenth-century poetry and prose. Here, in this movement which found its most child-like exponent in Verlaine, its most brilliant in Mallarmé, and its loftiest in Maeterlinck, there is nothing to dismay, and everything to enhearten, a spectator of life and letters such as Mr. Symons. It is only natural, then, that he should be at his best. And his best is really something quite distinguished. Mr. Symons has nursed and watched over his critical talent with an almost maternal care and conscientiousness. We have seen it grow, during some ten years now, not only in strength, but in fineness and beauty. Essentially Gallic in literary temperament, Mr. Symons yet owes more to Walter Pater than to any other. His highly-wrought style possesses, in a measure, every quality of Pater's except the crowning quality of wistfulness. It is a notable style, elaborately perfected, ardent in its "chimerical search after the virginity of language," reverent in its attitude towards words, precise without being hard, and musical without affectation. As a critic Mr. Symons perceives gradually rather than by instant intuition. Instead of flashing the limelight into the cave, he examines it with a tinted lantern, showing you this and that, and ultimately directing an illuminating final ray upon the most secret arcanum of the grot. Take this, of Verlaine: "From the moment when his inner life may be said to have begun, he was occupied with the task of unceasing confession, in which one seems to overhear him talking to himself, in that vague, preoccupied way he often had."

In the art of personal portraiture—a valuable and legitimate, if somewhat modern, adjunct of criticism—Mr. Symons specially excels. There are several examples which might be quoted. We will give his picture of Joris Karl Huysmans at the house of "the bizarre Madame X.":

He leans back on the sofa, rolling a cigarette between his thin, expressive fingers, looking at no one and at nothing, while Madame X. moves about with solid vivacity in the midst of her extraordinary menagerie of bric-à-brac. The spoils of all the world are there in that incredibly tiny salon; they lie underfoot, they climb up walls, they cling to screens, brackets, and tables; one of your elbows menaces a Japanese toy, the other a Dresden china shepherdess; all the colours of the rainbow crash in a barbaric discord of notes; and in a corner of this fantastic room Huysmans lies back indifferently on the sofa, with the air of one perfectly resigned to the boredom of life. Something is said by my learned friend who is to write for the new periodical, or perhaps it is the young editor of the new periodical who speaks . . . ; and Huysmans, without looking up, and without taking the trouble to speak very distinctly, picks up the phrase, transforms it (more likely transpires it) in a perfectly turned sentence, a phrase of impromptu elaboration. Perhaps it is only a stupid book that someone has mentioned, or a stupid woman; as he speaks the book looms up before one, becomes monstrous in its dullness, a masterpiece and miracle of imbecility; the unimportant little woman grows into a slow horror before your eyes. It is always the unpleasant aspect of things that he seizes; but the intensity of his revolt from that unpleasantness brings a touch of the sublime into the very expression of his disgust. Every sentence is an epigram, and every epigram slaughters a reputation or an idea. He speaks with an accent as of pained surprise, an amused look of contempt, so profound that it becomes almost pity for human imbecility.

Regarding the "Symbolist movement in literature" (Mr. Symons should have said "in French literature," for he deals with nothing else), it appears to us that there is no Symbolist movement. There is a movement, but it is not Symbolist. Or, rather, it is no more symbolist than all poetry is symbolist. Mr. Symons fails, brilliantly, to justify the term. He quotes Sartor to the effect that in the Symbol there is "some embodiment and revelation of the Infinite—the Infinite is made to blend itself with the Finite, to stand visible, and, as it were, attainable there." And he adds that it is in this sense that the epithet is applied to the now famous French school. But is it? In order to arrive at the Infinite via a Symbol you must first have the Symbol. And it does not seem that the Symbolist work is rich in symbols. Mallarmé, who is the self-conscious artist of the movement, its authoritative expounder, lays stress on Suggestion, not on Symbolism. "To name is to destroy; to suggest is to create." There lies the formula, and Mr. Symons's chosen extracts (exquisitely translated, by the way) support it. Where, in any but the usual degree common to every true poet, is the Symbolism of Mallarmé's "Sigh" or his "Sea-wind"? The fact is, this movement ought to have been called the "Evocative" movement. (It never will be, but it should have been.) "To evoke, by some elaborate, instantaneous magic of language, without the formality of an after all impossible description; to be, rather than to express." That was the aim of the fine flower of this school. The miracle was to be immediate, not wrought by an apparatus either of Symbolism or any other ism.

There had been "evocatives" long before Arthur Rimbaud roused the wondering enthusiasm of Verlaine. Scores of examples of "creative suggestion"—conceived in the very spirit of our French Symbolists—exist in Elizabethan literature. Provided he had not read Shakespeare, would any cautious person be prepared to deny that the last line of the following description of a nun's life (note the second word particularly) was not translated from Mallarmé?

For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd . . .

Chanting faint hymns to the cold, fruitless moon.

Mr. Symons finds Symbolism (let us yield to the word) first in Gérard de Nerval, and he traces its course onwards through de l'Isle Adam, Rimbaud, and Laforgue, to Verlaine, Mallarmé, and Maeterlinck. And though, as we take it link by link, we see no flaw in the chain, it is ultimately clear that the Symbolism of Mallarmé was an essentially different thing from that of de Nerval. The movement might almost be divided into two halves, partly concurrent: the first consisting of de Nerval, Rimbaud, and Verlaine; and the second of de l'Isle Adam, Laforgue, Mallarmé, and Maeterlinck. The former were children of Nature, singing they knew not how nor why; the latter were children of Art, subservient to theories of almost scientific precision.

The essay on Mallarmé is the most brilliant in the whole volume; it stands unequalled among all Mr. Symons's critical work, with the possible exception of his appreciation of Aubrey Beardsley. It belongs, indeed, to a very high order of criticism. The subject is one of intense and complicated difficulty; but Mr. Symons has treated it with a delicacy and a sureness of perception, an instinct for clarity, which can scarcely be overpraised, and which nearly make plain some of the abstrusest "divagations" of Mallarmé's decadence. His courage in advancing a theory of the way in which Mallarmé wrote verse and the reasons for Mallarmé's later unintelligibility is only surpassed by the persuasive convincingness of the theory.

The Jowett Lectures.

A Critical History of a Future Life in Israel Judaism and in Christianity. By R. H. Charles, D.D. (Adam & Charles Black.)

DR. CHARLES was for some years a curate of the Church of England at Whitechapel, Kensington, and Kennington successively, and is now Professor of Biblical Greek at that most Protestant of Protestant institutions, Trinity College, Dublin. He is also well known to science as the translator from the Ethiopic and the Syriac of the Book of Enoch, the Book of Jubilees, and other of the lesser known Apocrypha, and is, perhaps, since the death of Dillmann, the greatest living authority on Apocalyptic literature. He is, therefore, thoroughly well equipped for the task he has here set himself, and the trustees of the Jowett Lecture Fund may be congratulated upon having chosen him to deliver the lectures for 1898-1899, of which this book is a reprint. They could hardly have found anyone with better credentials either for learning or for orthodoxy.

Of the pre-Exilic or, as he prefers to call it, the Hebrew notions of a future life Dr. Charles has not very much to say. Passing by without mention the older view of Warburton that the Jews in the time of Moses had no conception of a future life at all, he tells us that their conception of a life after death was not wholly independent of "Yahwism," but actually opposed to it, being, in fact, itself a survival from heathen times. Following Stade and others, he regards the main body of the Israelites as given up to the worship of their ancestors, of whom he considers the teraphim to have been the images, and it is by this that he explains the law of the levirate, or the "raising-up of seed" to a deceased brother. Hence it is not to be wondered at that they looked upon the dead as having vague powers of annoyance towards the living that could only be propitiated by sacrifices, and considered their Sheol as a dreary abode quite outside the sphere of "Yahwe's" rule. These views he thinks go back to the period when "the Hebrew clans lived in the valley of the Euphrates, and shared this and other beliefs with the Babylonians of that time"; and, although they received some modification as the worship of Yahwe became more prominent, they were not abandoned till a very late date. "Down to the Exile, and later, the beliefs of Israel with reference to a future life were heathen to the core, and irreconcilable with any intelligible belief in a sole and supreme God," and these beliefs, he says later, found their final expression in Sadduceeism. It was the prophets, he thinks, and especially Isaiah, who first taught that the righteous should after death be restored to "communion with God and with the righteous community"; and it was this belief, strengthened, no doubt, by contact with Persian thought in Babylon, that led to the faith in the resurrection which filtered down through sects like the Chasidim until it reached its fullest development among the Pharisees. But it may be noticed that the blessedness of the dead was never held to extend to the Gentiles. Some of the larger-minded prophets thought that the Gentiles might in the last days be raised again to be servants of Israel; but Ezekiel—of whom Dr. Charles seems to have a particular detestation—Haggai, Zechariah, Nahum, Habbakuk, and Daniel all prophesy their total destruction. By the time the author gets to his Book of Enoch (say 170 B.C.) he finds that the punishments of God, which for the Jews are corrective, are towards the Gentiles merely vindictive. "In no case," he says, speaking of the literature of the immediately pre-Christian period, "does it appear that the Gentiles could attain to a blessed resurrection."

Meanwhile, an idea destined to exercise a yet greater effect in the future of the nation was gradually taking the leading place in Jewish thought. This was the theory of a miraculous personage who should lead the Jews to the subjugation of the whole earth. This idea was not fully developed, according to Dr. Charles, until after the Exile, as he considers that "the Branch" foretold by Jeremiah is not an individual, but a dynasty. "Most of the passages in Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, and Micah which promise the advent of the Messianic kingdom and of the Messiah" are, he considers, later interpolations, but during the Exile the idea took definite shape, and thereafter "the day of Yahwe," as it was called, was looked forward to as the period when the sceptre of the world should be given to Israel, leaving the Gentiles either to exist as slaves to the chosen race or to be totally destroyed. In the formation of this idea he again assigns the initiative to Ezekiel, although he points out that that part of the Book of Enoch which is known as the Similitudes is the first writing in which the Messiah is looked upon as a superhuman being. From that time onward the expectation of a supernatural leader who should enable the Jews to oppress the Gentiles never ceased to occupy their minds until it brought about their final rebellion and consequent extinction as a nation under Hadrian. This idea Dr. Charles traces with great distinctness throughout the whole range of Apocryphal and Apocalyptic literature. He does not tell us very much as to its ultimate origin, although he points out the influence of Parsism upon certain writers such as the pseudo-Daniel. But an unbiased student might perhaps see in it the racial fondness for a "holy war" which has so often led Semitic nations to dream not altogether fruitlessly of an orgie of blood and plunder brought about by supernatural aid. The rôle of the Mahdists in the Soudan, now happily extinguished, is but the last as well as the most familiar instance of this.

There remains the eschatology of the early Christian Church, as to which Dr. Charles speaks with no uncertain sound. At the outset of the ministry of Jesus, he tells us, "He had, we can hardly doubt, hoped to witness the consummation of" the Messianic kingdom "without passing through the gates of death." That, later, He expected to return during the then existing generation he holds, too, to be proved beyond question, and to this faith the early Church were committed. He thinks, too, that Jesus plainly taught that only the righteous would rise again, although this doctrine was modified—as he thinks, wrongly—in the Gospel of St. Luke. The idea of "the Millennium, or the reign of Christ for 1,000 years on the present earth, or any other form of the temporary Messianic kingdom, cannot be said to belong to the sphere of Christian doctrine"; while the doctrine of eternal damnation is "a Judaistic survival of grossly immoral character." Finally, he considers the eschatology of St. Paul points "either to the final redemption of all created personal beings or—and this seems the true alternative—to the destruction of the finally impenitent." "This destruction," he says cryptically, "would not be of the nature of an external punishment, but subjective and self-executed."

Dr. Charles always writes with clearness and point, and the full references to authorities that he gives will enable scholars to check his conclusions for themselves. For our own part, we fancy that, like most clerical writers, he is rather too much inclined to look upon both the Jewish and the Christian religions as things to be considered apart from all other faiths, and to attach too little weight to the influence that the nations among whom the Jews were cast may have had in matters like eschatology. Thus, the theory that the world would finally be destroyed by fire was a favourite with the Stoics, and was publicly taught by them about the time when the Jewish ideas of a final cataclysm began to take shape. So, too, the idea of a superhuman being leading his own worshippers to the conquest of other nations, was familiar enough at the same period to the Greek worshippers of Bacchus, or of his prototype the Egyptian Osiris; while the likeness of the Johannine Apocalypse to the Persian book of Arda-Viraf has been often pointed out. But such points fall into the background when we consider the manner in which Dr. Charles treats the Bible, which formerly was looked upon as the very mainstay and sheet-anchor of Protestantism. According to Dr. Charles, it was the non-fulfilment of prophecies which was "one of the main sources" of the numerous Apocalypses which profess to give an account of "the last things," and he uses those among them which are uncanonical as if they were on a perfect equality with those in the Canon. Ezekiel's views on many points he holds to be "demonstrably false," while he finds many incongruities and inconsistencies in the eschatology of the New Testament. He even thinks it "easily conceivable" that "some ideas morally irreconcilable should exist in the same [inspired] writer." As for the text, he treats it in the way that the higher critics have already made familiar to us. It has before been said that most of the Messianic passages in the early prophets are treated as interpolations; and the same treatment is extended to the statement in John v. 28, 29, that they have done good shall come forth from their graves "unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." This passage, says Dr. Charles, is so plainly inconsistent with its context that it must be cut out, and he would deal in the same way with the words "at the last day" where they occur in the following chapter. We do not pretend to take up the cudgels for the Protestant faith against one so well qualified to speak on its behalf as Dr. Charles, but if this is its last word on Biblical inspiration, we should like to know the sanction for the rest of its dogmas.

Molière.

Œuvres Complètes de Molière. (Oxford: Clarendon Press. 5s.; India Paper, 9s. 6d. Miniature Edition, 4 vols., 14s.)

IN these days, when farcical comedy (not always of the most laughter-moving quality) overflows our theatres, it is worth while to turn to the greatest master of laughter that has yet appeared, and realise how far we are degenerate. One could not do so in a better or handier little edition than that just issued by the Oxford Press. It will give all who wish to renew their acquaintance with Molière an opportunity of doing so with pleasure, and, it may be hoped, tempt to him many new readers. There is nothing in our own literature to expound the comedy of Molière; it is altogether French. It is not the witty comedy of our Restoration dramatists, with its glitter of epigram, antithesis, and ludicrous simile, couched in exquisitely turned and easy form. Still less is it Eliza bethan comedy. In fact, it is not comedy at all, but the sublimation of farce. There are exceptions: The Misanthrope rises to serious comedy; while Tartuffe, in construction and execution one of Molière's masterpieces, in conception is sombre and almost virulent to a repellent degree. The central character is so loathsome, that we are unable to abandon ourselves to the spirit of mirth; we feel ourselves in the hands of a serious and mortal-wounding satirist; and the delineation is carried through unflinchingly to the odious last, no detail of blasphemous hypocrisy spared us. It moves to hatred and indignation, which is not the function of comedy.

But this is by the way. What we have said holds true with regard to the bulk of Molière's work: it depends on broadly humorous situation and exquisite fooling, a constant succession of the most fertile and unexpected absurdities, put into the mouths of conscious or unconscious buffoons. The characters are nought, well-thumbed stage types which do not count, handed down from the old Italian comedy: the miser, the credulous old pantaloon, the clown, the brace of lovers (otherwise harlequin and columbine), the heroine's maid and confidante, who makes comic love with the clown, ultimately crystallising into the soubrette of French comedy—these, with trimmings, provide the bill of fare in play after play. Congreve could remark even of the rich English stage that the characters available for comedy were really very few, and had a tendency to revolve round certain fixed types; but it is far more the case with the French stage of this period. Even when a new character seems to present himself in Molière, he presently proves to be one of the old lay-figures in an up-to-date dress. M. Jourdain, the rich bourgeois with an incurable wish to make himself a gentleman on the "while you wait" principle of refashioning, in point of character, is our old friend the pantaloon in a new situation. Molière does not attempt to draw you a French bourgeois as he lived, moved, and had his being, as Shakespeare would have done in like circumstances. He is content to have put his credulous old man into a new position, which affords endless variety for his capacity of blundering. It is on that capacity that the play turns: Jourdain is the unconscious buffoon, as in another play Sganarelle is the conscious one. Molière, being himself an actor, carries the element of farce as far as the most downright stage-tricks. In Le Médecin Malgré Lui there is a venerable bit of business about Sganarelle's bottle, which he passes from side to side, and finally hugs to his stomach, under the belief that his interlocutors are going to take it from him, which gestures, as the original remarks with delightful naïveté, "font un grand jeu de théâtre," make a fine stage trick indeed. Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme in its final scenes adventures joyously upon wild farce; the egregious M. Jourdain seated solemnly in his chair, dressed as a Turk, while the rest of the characters, in similar masquerade, dance round him singing burlesque verses in lingua franca, and cudgel him, under pretext of making him a Turkish dignitary.

But individualised character, as it is outside Molière's design, so also it is not missed by reader or spectator. You do not even think of it while his personages are pouring forth their rich follies. His spirit of drollery is inexhaustible, and would cover the sins of a score of ordinary playwrights. He is an artist, of course, like all Frenchmen; his plays are skilfully constructed; and he is fertile in invention of comic situation. But the wonderful endowment of his animal spirits; the opulent flow of humour, saturating everything; the sheer mirth of the man—this is the prominent and unrivalled gift which carries us away. Fully half of the play to which we lately referred, Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, consists of nothing but M. Jourdain's interviews with his various teachers; there is no plot going forward, no action. But the mere procession of the bourgeois' absurdities is irresistible. The best of these have passed into proverbs, such as the famous: "For forty years I have been speaking prose without having the least idea of it, and I am most infinitely obliged to you for having told me so." But the whole of the scene with the Philosophical Master, in which this occurs, is admirable humour:

PHIL. MASTER. The vowel O is formed by opening the jaws, and approaching the lips by the two extremities, the upper and the lower: O.

M. JOURDAIN. O, O. Nothing could be more just. A, E, I, O, I, O. This is admirable. I, O, I, O.

PHIL. MAS. The opening of the mouth makes exactly as it were a little circle, which represents an O.

M. JOUR. O, O, O. You are right; O. Ah, what a fine thing it is to know something!

The surprise and infantile delight with which the bourgeois receives and airs the most elementary scraps of knowledge is deliciously rendered. There is about the drollery in these scenes something of the bon enfant which is characteristically French; perhaps we might say characteristically southern! For there is a childlike easiness of unbending in southern fooling which northern fooling lacks, and whereby it escapes the jack-pudding offensiveness to which Teutonic farce is liable. If the Teuton can touch greater heights than the man of Latin race (as seems probable from a comparison of literatures), it must be confessed he is very much less happy in coming down from them. Southern humour is gay; and it is this gaiety of humour, radiating through Molière, this ebullient laughter, which makes him the greatest of modern comic dramatists. Not Shakespeare has it in such wealth, though here and there he may touch a note of purer humour. Yet occasionally we find ourselves reminded of Shakespeare in reading Molière. For example, in the very play from which we have just quoted, 'M. Jourdain's ridiculous contest of politeness with Doranto recalls Slender's similar contest with Page in the Merry Wives; while the absurdity with which he closes it, "J'aime mieux être incivil qu' importun," is a literal translation of Slender's final sentence, "I will rather be unmannerly than troublesome." Yet Molière had never read Shakespeare! One likes to find such incidental coincidences and resemblances between the two great masters—both actors and both dramatists. If, however, as we have said, Molière has nothing of that character-drawing which, in Shakespeare, makes Sir Andrew Aguecheek totally distinct from every other Shakespearean fool, and Sir Toby Belch quite unlike Falstaff (whom in any other hands he would certainly have resembled), it would be a mistake to think that we get from Molière no picture of his age. On the contrary, he comprehensively reflects the France of his time. But that is dependent on other things than character-drawing. He did not so much set himself to paint manners as to seize on what he found ridiculous and laughter-worthy in the France of his day. Accordingly he must remain, perhaps, without influence on the modern stage, which is above all closely realistic. Yet our writers of farcical comedy might learn from him the secret of that fountain of laughter which was his above all men's. Perhaps, however, it cannot be transferred to our stage; and the history of adaptations from him would tend to prove so. For in all the spirit has evaporated. We must be content with our Molière in the pretty little volumes which the Clarendon Press has given us.

An Industrious Singer.

Songs of the Morning. By Nora Hopper. (Grant Richards.)

MISS HOPPER has her place among the band of Irish poets that constitute what is called the Celtic renaissance. They are a band whose claims to recognition it is impossible to ignore, as is shown by the specimens of their work collected in Mr. Yeats's Book of Irish Verse. Mr. Yeats himself, Mrs. Hinkson, Dr. Douglas Hyde (in his translations from the Gaelic), Mr. John Eglington, and the exceedingly strange and subtle writer signing himself "A. E.," can show a body of verse which makes high claim for the advances of the sister isle. Miss Hopper in this volume does not suffer us to forget that she belongs to the Celtic band. Yet it is hardly because of the poems which insist on their Irish birthright that we hail the present book as a gain upon her previous achievement. Those poems seem to us among the least original in the collection: they belong distinctly to a brand of poetry for which many writers seem to have the recipe, and are neither better nor worse than others in this particular "line" of goods. We know the substratum of Irish legend, the edifice of sentiment as cheap in Ireland as in England, and wearily common to both, the Irish phrases interspersed at due intervals in the composition like raisins. This kind of national sentiment is a flavouring essence, which can be applied to any poem with guaranteed effect. The spice of Gaelic names cannot render novel to English readers the mechanical picturesqueness of such ballads.

Nor yet do we care specially for Miss Hopper in another class of poems, which forego the deliberate consciousness of nationality, and essay that sensuous picturing of nature and glow of external colour which a whole school of writers have caught—directly or indirectly—from Rossetti. A profusion of words like stained glass characterise work of this order; and the words are all there in Miss Hopper's verse. But the glittering diction is not inevitable, seizes us by no magic; we can see (as it were) how the thing is done. Once or so she deliberately tries her verbal gift in an impression—"On the Embankment"; but she fails to endue her words with nervous organisation, they are but paints. The final stanza directly remembers Rossetti:

Of gifts it makes to days and nights
I took three memories away:
The scent of leaves that rotting lay,
The pigeon's call, the wandering lights.

The Pre-Raphaelite master sang:

From perfect grief there need not be
Wisdom or even memory:
One thing alone is left to me—
The wood-spurge hath a cup of three.

That is a slight matter; more serious is it to speculate what Miss Hopper means in "Kew Gardens" by:

The peonies stand
Like purpled flames on either hand.

The locus classicus for the word is the passage where Milton speaks of Iris' "purpled scarf." One cannot help a dark suspicion that Miss Hopper supposed it to be a form of "purpled." Only so can we explain its application to peonies. But the poem (in spite of the cuckoos' "drawling voices sad and soft"—a luckless phrase) has a fine close:

The wild-fowl by the water-side
Cry as if man's first day had died,
And Adam, naked, stood alone
'Neath the first darkness he had known.

Miss Hopper, this would show, is capable of better things than "word-painting." She is capable of very good things indeed; and the best of them occur when she shuts one thought in a lyric closed like a lantern and complete. The lyric germinates from the single idea (to use another image) and ceases with the full unfolding of it. Of all this class, in which Miss Hopper most truly comes to her own, the finest is "Southernwood," to which we referred when it appeared in the Pall Mall Gazette; a very beautiful poem, in which intimate feeling shelters its self-betrayal under gracious veils:

So I have harvested my womanhood
Into one tall green bush of southernwood;
And if the leaves are green about your feet,
And if my fragrance on a day should meet
And brace your weariness, why, not in vain
Shall I have husbanded from sun and rain
My spices if you chance to find them sweet.

I have grown up beneath the sheltering shade
Of roses: roses' poignant scents have made
My sharp spice sweeter than 'twas wont to be.
Therefore if any vagrant gather me
And wear me in his bosom, I will give Him dreams of roses; he shall dream and live,
And wake to find the rose a verity.

Gather me, gather. I have dreams to sell.
The sea is not by any fluted shell
More faithfully remembered than I keep
My thought of roses, through beguiling sleep
And the bewildering day. I'll give to him
Who gathers me more sweetness than he'd dream
Without me—more than any lily could;
I that am flowerless, being southernwood.

Charming, in a lighter and impersonal vein, is the poem called "Monday," with its dainty and appropriate fancy.

Miss Hopper, indeed, frequently has happy lights of fancy, as:

The moon is a vampire to-night. She has sucked from the stars

Their splendour of silver: they lean to us weary and white
Like prisoners' faces pressed pale against window-bars.

Altogether, we may perhaps say that the thing in which Miss Hopper shows most distinct advance is the personal lyric. Her work is always accomplished, but in such poems as "Southernwood" it touches a higher mood and a more unquestionable inspiration. It is distinguished poetry indeed.

"The Great Clerk Grostest."

Robert Grosseteste, Bishop of Lincoln. By F. S. Stevenson, M.P. (Macmillan.)

ROBERT GROSSETESTE—"Seynt Roberd," as men loved to call him—stands side by side with his friend Simon de Montfort among the leaders of thirteenth century England. Eminent in letters and philosophy, he left the calm ways of academic life for the thorny thickets of political and ecclesiastical warfare. His life was written by Richard, a monk of Bardney, early in the sixteenth century, and by Samuel Pegge late in the eighteenth, and has now been re-written by Mr. Stevenson with sufficient learning, industry, and sympathy, and perhaps with an imperfect feeling for the vigorous and picturesque in biographical narrative. A man of Suffolk by birth, Grosseteste was trained at Oxford, migrated to Paris, and back again to Oxford, where he is believed to have become the first Chancellor of the growing University. He had rare learning for his age both in Greek and Hebrew, wrote on theology, philosophy, mathematics, and natural science, and earned from the erudite and critical Roger Bacon a commendation denied to Alexander de Hales, Albertus Magnus, and Thomas Aquinas. Bacon, indeed, put him on a level with Solomon, Aristotle, and Avicenna. Wycliffe even thought him greater than Aristotle. In 1235 Grosseteste succeeded Hugh de Wells as Bishop of Lincoln. He rapidly rose to a real, if not a formal, primacy in the English Church, and for the rest of his life championed Anglican independence alike against the secular power and against the extravagant pretensions of the See of Rome. He wrestled with the Pope on the claim of presentation to English benefices and threw him. Within the borders of the Church itself he was a reformer, somewhat austere. His visitations were a terror to the laxer chapters and monastic houses. The secular clergy he compelled to observe sumptuary regulations long disregarded. He thundered against fairs in churchyards, the drinking bouts known as "Scotates," the Feast of Fools, and even, like the Puritans after him, the harmless ritual of the King and Queen of May. He was one of the first to welcome the Dominican and Franciscan friars when they landed in England, and he acted as theological lecturer to the school which the Franciscans set up in their cell at Oxford. Nor did his pastoral duties draw him wholly from humaner studies. He brought Greeks to teach in England, translated St. Ignatius, St. John of Damascus, and Dionysius the Areopagite, made an English version of Walter of Henley's Treatise on Husbandry, and wrote Les Reules Seynt Robert, not for monks or recluses, but for the management of a great estate.

At last he won his way, as Herodotus has it, "to the mythical." Matthew Paris narrates the mystery of his death:

On the same night also certain Minorites, who were journeying in haste towards Buckden, where Robert, Bishop of Lincoln, then was—for he was a comforter and father to the Franciscans and Dominicans—lost their way in the royal forest of Wauberge, and, while wandering about, heard in the air a sound as of bells, amongst which they clearly distinguished one bell of sweeter note than any they had heard before. When the dawn appeared they met some foresters, of whom, after obtaining directions to enable them to regain the right road, they inquired what meant that solemn peal of bells which they had heard in the direction of Buckden, to which the foresters replied that they had not heard, and did not then hear anything, though the sound still greatly filled the air. Greatly wondering, the brethren made their way to Buckden, and were told that at the very time of night when they had heard those melodious sounds the Bishop of Lincoln had breathed forth his happy spirit.

As has been said, he received a local cult, and miracles are alleged to have been wrought at his tomb in Lincoln Cathedral. This tomb Leland saw, "a goodly one of marble, with an image of brass over it"; but it fell before the Puritan iconoclasts of the Civil Wars. Fifty years after his death, formal application was made for his canonisation by the Deans and Chapters of Lincoln and St. Paul's, the Abbot and Convent of Osney, King Edward the First, the Archbishop of York, and the University of Oxford. But the memory of Grosseteste's resistance to papal aggression still lingered at Rome, and his shade had to remain content with the lesser "seynt-ship" of popular acclamation.

Other New Books.

PASSAGES IN A WANDERING LIFE. BY THOMAS ARNOLD.

Mr. Arnold is the second son of Dr. Arnold of Rugby, and the father of Mrs. Humphry Ward, and among his other justifications for venturing upon autobiography were his intimacy with Cardinal Newman and some interesting pioneer experiences in New Zealand in the forties. Mr. Arnold was born at Laleham, where his brother Matthew is buried, in 1823, and was educated at Winchester, Rugby, and Oxford. Among his schoolfellows were the author of Tom Brown's School-days and Hodson of Hodson's Horse. Mr. Arnold's Fox-How recollections include a meeting with Southey—"So now you've seen a real live poet!" said he to the boy; and Hartley Coleridge, Wordsworth, and Christopher North flit across these pages. Of Wordsworth he says: "The poet's ordinary dress was a loose brown frockcoat, trousers of shepherd's plaid, a loose black handkerchief for a necktie, a green-and-black plaid shawl round the shoulders, and a wide-awake or straw hat, often with a blue veil attached to it." One would like a description of his extraordinary dress. Hartley Coleridge reminded Mr. Arnold of Scott's "Black Dwarf." He says of him: "He was a melancholy ruin; when he was in the vein he would talk in an eloquent and richly imaginative strain, walking about the room all the time." Of Derwent Coleridge and Hartley he says: "They were both short, thick-set men, and to see the head of St. Mark's College, Chelsea, the respectable divine, walking side by side with the incorrigible Bohemian, his brother, suggested a perplexing subject for meditation." We find Matthew in the Oxford chapter:

From the autumn of 1842 to the end of 1846 my time, and my brother's also, was chiefly spent at Oxford. He was cultivating his poetic gift carefully, but his exuberant, versatile nature claimed other satisfactions; his keen, bantering talk made him something of a social lion among Oxford men; he even began to dress fashionably. Goethe displaced Byron in his poetical allegiance; the transcendental spells of Emerson wove themselves around him; the charm of an exquisite style made him, and long kept him, a votary of George Sand. The perfect handling of words, joined to the delicate presentation of ideas, attracted him powerfully to John Henry Newman, whose afternoon Sunday sermons at St. Mary's he for a long time regularly attended. But, so far as I know, Newman's teaching never made an impression upon him.

After leaving Oxford Mr. Arnold went out to New Zealand, where he roughed it and met Alfred Domett—Browning's "Waring"; then he became a school inspector in Tasmania, married, and joined the Roman Catholic Church. His next move was to Dublin, where he met Newman, and soon after was established in a position in the Oratory school at Edgbaston. Thereafter the story loses interest to the ordinary reader, being much taken up with religious inquietude. There is, however, a record of Continental travel. Mr. Arnold is now, and has been for some years, a Fellow of the Royal University of Ireland and Examiner in English Language and Literature. His is the candid narrative of a scrupulous and highly cultured mind, and as such it has value apart from the further light which it throws upon a great family. (Arnold. 12s. 6d.)

AMONG HORSES IN SOUTH AFRICA. BY M. H. HAYES.

"I have seen Hayes argue with a tough horse," says Mr. Kipling in one of his "Plain Tales," but he will probably never see a critic argue with Mr. Hayes. A thorough master of horsemanship and horse-breaking, Mr. Hayes can be argued with only by the most expert of his own class, and then who is to deliver judgment? Mr. Hayes also plies an easy pen. His books on the Horse, which are many, might be cited in a discussion on the relations between matter and style as examples of the charm of mere matter. The good horseman is always a man of the world; in studying horses he has to study men, and the odds are that he will talk or write about both with grip and picturesqueness. Mr. Hayes does; and we do not know when we like him best—in his horse passages or his man passages. Here is one of the former:

The way in which horses are broken to saddle in South Africa is one which I have never seen practised in any other country. It is charmingly simple, and has its good points as well as its bad ones. It consists of tying the head of the neophyte close up to that of a steady horse by means of a cord connecting the respective headstalls worn by these animals. After they have both been saddled and bridled, the "school-master" is first mounted, and then another man gets on the young one, who is powerless to buck, rear, or run away, on account of his head being fixed. Besides this, the fact of his being alongside another horse gives him confidence, and no matter how wild he may be, he will learn in a short time to carry his burden and regulate his pace according to that of his companion. As he settles down quietly to work, the connecting cord may be gradually loosened out, until at last it can be taken off altogether. This is a capital plan if one has a good break horse, and if one knows no better way. Its great fault is its tendency to make a horse unwilling to go alone. Of course, it has no pretensions to giving a horse a good mouth.

Mrs. Hayes is hardly less the master of a tough horse than her husband, and Mr. Hayes's stories of her exploits add to the charm of a manly, horsey book. (Everett & Co.)

PEPYS'S GHOST. BY EDWIN EMERSON, JUNIOR.

This is a jest of a not unfamiliar type, but hailing from New York and carried out with great elaboration. Mr. Emerson resurrects Mr. Pepys and lends him his own autobiography. He describes the social and Bohemian life of "Greater Gotham," which is New York itself, likewise his adventures (as a special correspondent) in the Spanish War, and "His Minor Exploits in the Field of Love and Fashion with his Thoughts thereon." The fooling is sprightly and well sustained, although perhaps it is continued rather long, and the Pepysian manner and temper, which Mr. Emerson catches admirably, are better suited to the urban business than to the soldiering. A few examples of this ingenious chronicle of small beer will not be amiss. Mr. Emerson takes the trouble to explain his topical and personal allusions in footnotes, which we omit:

Twelfthnight. Lay long in bed to persuade my wife how we must spend our substance less lightly, my new great coate and the silken whisp that I did give her for Christmas of last year indeed costing out of all countenance, but she, poor wretch, doth so complayne of her dull lot that I in pity promise her to go to Mr. Daly his playhouse once more to see Mistress Rehan act her part, I thinking that it must needs be the play Twelfth Night, that merry comedy Jack Wendell did delight me in, when we ate basty pudding together at coledge. So, after dinner, took coach, and thither, but were astonied to see her take the part of Rosalind in As You Like It, that pastoral play so cried up by Mlle. de Maupin. There saw we Will Winter and John Corbin, the pamphleteer who helpeth Mr. Alden in his office on Franklin Square, standing up right in the foremost pit, but I accosted him not espying Polly close by him, yet knew not one another, and I highly contented thereat, and glad withal to behold her smooth neck turning now this way, now that, as if for to vex me, albeit she feigned not to see me, because of my wife.

Mr. Pepys attempts to learn the bicycle:

In comes my cozen James, and he must have it for me to ride on his new-fashioned machine made of two wheels all a-tilt and saddled. Then he sustaining and I bestriding the pesky thing did we venture forth on the high road, I sweating over my whole body and pulling now this leg, now that, till he with a loud outcry overturned me where the road was most dirty. So vexed I was, that forgetting our kinship I out and called him a fool and like hard names, kicking the traitorous engine with my foot; but he not minding my choler, persuadeth me to mount agayn only to suffer a worser fall. Then became I as one furious mad, for my camelott suit was all ripped and seyled, and my new hatte, bought of Knox, the hatter, dimpled in shamefully, with no rewards for my payns but mocks and laughs, so I did sweare an oath to bestride none but horses and soft carriages if God help me out of this adventure.

Mr. and Mrs. Pepys go to a Horse Show:

I in my white waist-coat and glossed beaver and shoen of the fashion that pleases me well, my wife in her new gowne and purple petticoat, very pretty. At the show we were nigh crushed unto death, the gentlemen and ladies stepping around the hall like ye hands on a poke dial with no regard to the horses, but to the many persons of quality in the stalls. All were gaping at the Duke of Savoy, late arrived, making him more uneasy in his place, till he up and out to avoid them. And so much finery and pretty laces and handsome smocks with silken sarcenets I never did behold, no not in former times, when the Duke of Marlborough brought his bride, but my wife thought it a shame to have all the frocks spoiled by a stench of stables.

(Boston: Badger & Co.)

ALFRED AND THE CHRONICLERS.

BY EDWARD CONYBEARE, M.A.

Another instalment of "Millenary" literature. Mr. Conybeare opens with a "popular and readable" sketch of Alfred's life, with some interesting extracts from his own proverbs, prefaces, and translations. Thus, or nearly thus, Alfred "expands and Christianises" the fine quatrain of Boethius:

Felix, qui potuit boni
Fontem visere lucidam;
Felix qui potuit gravis
Terrae solvere vincula.

In Mr. Conybeare's rendering of the Anglo-Saxon this becomes:

Lo! of all upon earth
Is the happiest he
Who hath heart to behold
That clearest of waters
That wellet in heaven
With light from the Highest:
Who eke from himself
All swartness, all mist,
All the murk of his mood,
To scatter hath might.

With God and His grace
By tales of old time
Thy thought will we teach,
Till thou readest aright
The highway to heaven,
That loved native land,
Own home of our souls.

The rest of the book consists of translations from the more or less "original" authorities for the history of Alfred, and in particular of the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle and of Asser's De Ælfredi rebus gestis. The latter, at least, might have been done as a whole. Mr. Conybeare's work is "popular and readable," which is all he claims for it. It is not very scholarly, and he does not appear to have taken the trouble to acquaint himself with the latest literature on his subject. He does not seem to be aware that Petrie and Hardy's edition of the "Anglo-Saxon Chronicle" has been superseded by Mr. Plummer's, and some, at least, of his other texts by those in the "Rolls" series. (Elliot Stock.)

LAW WITHOUT LAWYERS. BY TWO BARRISTERS-AT-LAW.

This bulky volume of over seven hundred pages fails to disclose on its title-page the names of its authors, beyond the fact that they are two members of the Bar, and we gather from the preface that part of the work is due to a third gentleman of the long robe, hailing from Lincoln's Inn. While the work cannot for a moment be taken as seriously doing what it purports to do, it is not without a certain interest and value—though mainly to a lawyer. Its defects as a popular work are many, some of them almost inevitable, such as the constant use of legal terms and phrases not to be found explained within its covers; and certain of the attempts made at definition are not very happy, notoriously the attempt to define a tort. But the great defect of the work lies in its style and want of proper plan of arrangement under each topic. Important fundamental practical points ought to be kept together, and not to be scattered anyhow under the particular head. Thus what is said in regard to wills is so put that we defy any lay person to draw one up from the information given, and such an important matter as gifts to attesting witnesses is so placed as quite possibly to escape attention altogether. The authors would have done well to translate the Latin phrases they employ. We never expected to find a single woman masquerading under the style of feme sole in such a work as this. The volume displays evidence of considerable industry, and is really a fairly comprehensive, though ill-balanced, survey of the law. But for a work of this kind to be of much value there is required a legal knowledge and a power of expression in simple and lucid English that we fear is not possessed by these authors; and mere industrious compilation will never prove an equivalent, for judges deliver their judgments in the language of the law; and statutes, even when well drafted, are not to be fully comprehended by the lay mind. (John Murray.)

THE DERBYSHIRE CAMPAIGN SERIES.

BY OFFICERS OF THE REGIMENT.

Two volumes of this excellent little series are before us—No. 2, Central India, and No. 5, Tirah Campaign—the first written by General Sir Julius Raines, and the second by Captain A. K. Slessor. In 1858-1859 the 95th, as they then were, took part in the Central India Campaign, and for eighteen months marched and fought through Cutch, Rajputana, and Central India, and took Gwalior on the day after Waterloo Day, 1858. After taking part in the Egyptian Campaign of 1882, and the Sikkim Expedition of 1888, the 95th, now the 2nd Battalion Derbyshire Regiment, went through the Tirah Campaign of 1897-1898. They were at Dargai and the Arhanga Pass, and the other battles of the war. The Derbyshire Regiment is to be congratulated on these little books, which bear the appropriate motto, "Lest we forget." (Sonnenschein)

Fiction.

By Order of the Company. By Mary Johnstone.
(Constable. 6s.)

THIS is one of the best historical novels we have read for a long time. Miss Johnstone can write, and she can re-create a period. Particularly, she knows the spirit of the American virgin forest. Perhaps it is the sense of that encompassing beauty and terror which gives so pronounced an individuality to her books, and saves them, despite their lavish and often startling use of incident, from the taint of sensationalism.

The present romance is a clear advance in conception and execution on her earlier work, The Old Dominion, itself a fine achievement. There is the same Virginian setting, but the period, in this case the reign of James I., is more closely realised and more vividly presented, giving, indeed, an admirable study of Colonial life with some strong characterisation. Once launched on the story, we are swept on from adventure to adventure. Yet it is possible that had the author held in check that daring imagination of incident which is at once her great power and her besetting temptation, she would have given us a subtle as well as a strong study of character. There is demand for both qualities in the situation to which she introduces us. The Lady Jocelyn Leigh, a ward of the king, has fled over-seas disguised as a serving-maid, to escape the suit of Lord Carnal, the king's all-powerful favourite. When the men of the colony go out to choose their mates from the ship's cargo of women, Jocelyn, assailed by an insolent wooer, turns for refuge to Captain Ralph Percy, whose wife she becomes. But though she has accepted a husband's protection, she has no thought of yielding him more than the coldest dutifulness. Thenceforth Percy has two aims in life: to win the heart of the woman whose hand he has won, and to shield her from Lord Carnal, who has tracked her and appears in Jamestown in all his dangerous pomp and power. The duel between the two men is deadly, for Carnal is ready to use as weapons law or the king's whim, or, at need, the scalping knives of the Indians or the poisons of his Italian physician. Exciting episode is crowded on episode—plot there is practically none—and the perils and escapes would grow incredible were they one whit less vigorously related. As it is, there is but one part of the book, the capture of the pirate ship, where belief and attention are somewhat strained. The sea is not Miss Johnstone's element; she gathers strength in the gathering shadow of the woods. Unfortunately—at least, in one reader's judgment—the author, in the thronging external interest, has wearied of the spiritual drama. Avowed love succeeds too soon to the fascinating contradictions of gratitude and defiance with which Jocelyn met her husband, and we have thereafter only their outward fates to follow. But these are enthralling. Percy's flight from the Indians to whom Carnal betrayed him, bearing to Jamestown the message which is to save the colony, is a masterly piece of work, and Nautaquas, the Indian chief who turns traitor to his race to warn the English, his friends, stands forth an imposing figure.

The end of the book, where wrongs are righted and peace achieved, suffers from a comparison with the haunting close of The Old Dominion, with its spaces of desolation and of love. The happy ending, which is never a real ending, cannot be so impressive as the sorrow which may be ultimate. So the true climax of By Order of the Company is not in its final love passage, with its regrettable touch of prettiness, but in the farewell to Lord Carnal. Broken and baffled, scarred out of that beauty which had been his power, Carnal rises into a dignity of defeat. In that scene Miss Johnstone learns the restraint which is her chief need, and there is a memorable ring in the dying favourite's simple confession of failure: "The stakes were heavy, and I have not wherewithal to play again."

Andromeda: an Idyll of the Great River. By Robert Buchanan. (Chatto & Windus. 6s.)

THE right of dramatising this story its author has done well to reserve; for whatever may be thought of the book as a novel, it offers material for a hopeful melodrama. The entry of the heroine might tax the ingenuity of the stage-manager, but should immensely well repay it. Somerset, an artist studying Turnerian effects on the lowlands where Thames flows into the German Ocean, strolled out at night and longed to be a Greek.

Suddenly his heart leapt within him, and he started in surprise, almost in terror.

Under the sea-wall on the side on which he had stretched himself, lay a creek of moonlit water; across it, almost fifty yards away, rose a grass-covered slope leading to shadowy sea-meadows; and suddenly, moving rapidly in the water below him, and floating up the creek, he saw—what? Did his eyes deceive him? Was he mad or dreaming? Of course it was impossible, but it seemed to his excited vision like the form of some human being! Something white like marble! Arms stretched out softly and oaring the still stream; a form submerged, yet dimly shining through the water as it swam along; and above the moonlight shining down upon it, a face set in black hair, which fell like seaweed over ivory shoulders!

To Mr. Buchanan, we remark in passing, must be assigned the honour of having discovered the extraordinary luminosity of the Essex moon. But we are soon snatched up to Bloomsbury; and there "Annedromedy," having inherited wealth from her husband overseas, drops into an engagement with Somerset. The arrival of the Monster, the husband, at this point will fill the least experienced nursemaid with a delicious sense of verified prognosis. Perseus has his chance and—not to put too fine a point upon it—funks; and the Monster, after knifing his "lily-fingered" rival, behaves handsomely. Here lurks Mr. Buchanan's little surprise: "A new turn to the fable, isn't it? This time Andromeda is a modern missie, our friend Perseus a bit of a prig, and the Monster has turned out to be a man."

Only he had not, except in the intention of the author. For the fact is that, not in his case alone, the "character-drawing" is smudgy and unconvincing. Nor can we discern any serious effort to preserve the atmosphere of the fifties on which in his first page the author picturesquely insists. To be the work of a man who has done better, this is bad work—that promises worse.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

THE REBEL.

BY H. B. MARRIOTT WATSON.

A new historical romance by the author of Gallopings Dick. Sub-title: "Being a Memoir of Anthony, fourth Earl of Cherwell, including an Account of the Rising at Taunton in 1684, compiled and set forth by his cousin, Sir Hilary Mace, Bart., Custos Rotulorum for the County of Wilts." Mr. Marriott Watson takes full advantage of the conversational opportunities of Stuart times. Charles the Second is among the characters. (Heinemann. 6s.)

HEARTS IMPORTUNATE.

BY EVELYN DICKINSON.

A story of New South Wales and colonial emotions. The principal hearts are those belonging to Ralph Hazell and Avis Fletcher. "She shrank back quicker yet. 'You don't understand. Why do you make it so hard for me? The world was right. I ought to have been someone else's wife . . .' His eyes flamed. He stood a minute weighing her words, then: 'What do I care for that? I have been someone else's husband.'" (Heinemann. 6s.)

THE GENTLEMAN FROM INDIANA.

BY BOOTH TARKINGTON.

An American story by a new author. The hero is an editor, who, coming to a town where corruption is rife, vows to cleanse it, and at his personal risk does so. The chief menace to the community is a lawless band known as the White Caps, between whom and the editor there is a deadly feud. The end is peace, but there are shooting-irons on the way. (Richards. 6s.)

A KENT SQUIRE.

BY F. W. HAYES.

Another historical romance ("One warm afternoon towards the middle of October, 1711") of prodigious length. To some extent the story is true, the hero being Ambrose Gwynett of Thornhaugh, who is not unknown to by-way historians. The scene is laid alternately in France and England, and the author not only supplies his own illustrations but announces that the sequel, The Further Adventures of a Kent Squire, is in the press. (Hutchinson. 6s.)

THE WALLET OF KAI-LUNG.

BY ERNEST BRAMAH.

The best way to describe this very novel book is to say that if Pooh-Bah of "The Mikado" were to set out to write stories, he would write much as Mr. Bramah does. The floweriness and dignity of his diction, and much of his humour, distinguish these pages. Kai-Lung is a wandering romancer. (Richards. 6s.)

LOVE, SPORT, AND A DOUBLE EVENT.

BY W. B. GILPIN.

A story with an equine hero. "Bogside's" racing performances are described in great detail, and the author's last words of farewell are given to "Bogside." Incidentally, Hugh Carlton and Leslie and Nora McBride make love. (Leadenhall Press. 3s. 6d.)

THE LOVE OF PARSON LORD, AND OTHER STORIES.

BY MARY E. WILKINS.

Five short stories of New England life, very characteristic of their author, whose portrait is given as frontispiece. "Three Old Sisters and One Beau" is a charming little sketch, ending thus: "The old Bride passed up the aisle with her old Bridegroom, and a smile of youth, that triumphed over age and memory, shone on her old face through her white veil, and no one ever knew whether she wore her own or her sister's wedding-gown, or had wedded her own or her sister's old Beau." (Harpers. 6s.)

THE ACROBAT.

BY JOHN D. BARRY.

"What's at the Cirque Parisien?"—"At the Cirque Parisien? There's Mademoiselle Blanche, the acrobat. They say she's a marvel, monsieur—and beautiful—the most beautiful woman in Paris. She dives from the top of the building backwards—hundreds of feet." This is the story of Blanche's dives, of her English rival Miss Lottie King, and of her lover Jules. (John Long. 6s.)

CHRYSTALLA.

BY ESMÉ STUART.

A pleasant village-life novel with a few quiet characters, including an historian, who is in the midst of a work on the Saxon kings when he receives a legacy. The legacy is Chrystalla. Chrystalla's story and the Saxon kings mingle pleasantly in this flowing, unexciting story. (Methuen. 6s.)

GARTHOWEN.

BY ALLEN RAINE.

Mr. Raine is the novelist of Wales, and here, as in A Welsh Singer and By Berwen Banks, he gives us a romantic idyll full of fresh air and sea-murmur, quaint character, folk-lore, and piety. (Hutchinson. 6s.)

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates for Yearly Subscriptions ..... 20s. including postage.

American Agents for the ACADEMY: Brentano's, 31, Union-square, New York.

The Eaglet.

I.—M. Rostand, Sarah, and Paris.

M. EDMOND ROSTAND, at thirty, found himself last week on the pinnacle of glory. True, Victor Hugo was there already at twenty-one; but M. Rostand is not by any means a Victor Hugo. Two years ago "Cyrano de Bergerac"—a "masterpiece" of superficial brilliance, of no solid literary or dramatic value whatever, but with a taking "go" and swing in measure and sentiments calculated to carry popular applause—made him famous. The success of "Cyrano" won him the grateful admiration of the College Stanislas, which in earlier days had expelled him; and on the occasion of a visit of the entire school to the theatre to applaud the ancient black sheep's genius, M. Rostand addressed it in lines composed expressly for the occasion, in which the youth of to-day was lyrically adjured to sport on all and every occasion la panache.

"L'Aiglon" is the Napoleonic panache worn with ineffectual fervour. From the dramatic, intellectual, and psychological points of view, the new play is a long step in advance of "Cyrano." It is more mature, and here and there may be detected a ringing echo of Hugo in his great hours. It is packed with vibrating lines that touch the chord of the French heart. There can be no doubt that as a play the piece, during the first four acts, is superb. This admitted, your attitude towards it will be intensified or modified by your sentiment with regard to the Napoleonic legend. Personally, I regard that legend as the hugest horror of history, and Bonaparte as a monster befitting a tale of Gehenna. And so all these magnificent lines about the tricolour flag of the Emperor washed above in star-dew and drenched below in blood, these frantic reminiscences of iniquitous victories, these French sentimentalities about the "Old Guard" and "The Little Hat," the Eagle and the Eaglet, leave me unmoved, with a feeling of lassitude and dismay before such a futile expenditure of emotion and generous sentiment. Besides, I find the moment ill-advised for the panache, with England and France showing their teeth to one another and rumours of war in the air. These exceptions made to the value of the play as a whole, Paris, M. Rostand, and his great interpreter, Sarah, have equal reason to congratulate themselves. Paris has a thrilling experience to register, and the triumphs of dramatist and actress are equally great. Sarah Bernhardt is incomparable as the Duke of Reichstadt. I went to see her with some misgiving, I will own, after my recent deception in her Hamlet. Here, too, she sometimes strikes the hysterical note of Hamlet, but here it shocks less. I would she did not scream or yell so much in her emotional crises; but, apart from this touch of dramatic charlatanism inseparable from her triumphant genius, her new rôle is undoubtedly one of the best I have seen her in. After the brutal disfigurement of Hamlet it comes as a refreshment and a wonder. She looks so young and charming, as if she really were at life's aurora and not at its wane; she makes such a slim, graceful, delicate young prince, with the touch of early blight upon a pallid visage, that it surpasses the belief of man that it is an old woman who has evoked for us this boyish silhouette of history.

I have said that the earlier acts of "L'Aiglon" are the best, and I will accentuate this statement by the assertion that the sixth act is a grotesque and hideous blot upon a really fine work. It is an accepted fact that Sarah must die in every piece, since she started by dying so well in "La Dame aux Camellias" and "Frou-Frou." And so, to afford her a new occasion to break her audience's heart by the moving sight of another consumptive death, M. Rostand had to compel us to assist at the last moments of his Franco-Austrian Hamlet. The whole scene is absurd and offensive; in the worst of taste and of a maudlin bathos—intended for pathos. I own my sympathies were altogether with Metternich, who seemed heartily sick of the dying Duke's tirades, his monologue, and the attitude of all the weeping women about him, and who cynically cried, the instant the long-drawn last breath left the Duke's body: "You will put on his white uniform." There is not an effect in this act that is not supremely ridiculous—from the first, when the Archduchess, the aunt who is in love with her eaglet of a nephew, begs him to communicate with her alone, the plot being that all the Imperial family shall assist at the Viaticum, as Austrian Court etiquette demands, unseen by the dying lad. Where was the necessity of this burlesque of religion, with its tawdry and ignoble sentiment. The Duke, who is not thinking of God or hereafter, but only of his missed fortune and his father's blood-washed glory, goes off in his dressing gown to receive the last sacrament, and a very motley, unimposing crowd of women pour in behind him and kneel down. The usual effaced evocation of la Vallière is there, who screams with emotion; and the Duke, turning, discovers the domestic plot. He is, I know not why, frightfully angry to find that he has been "robbed of his death," and hastens to make good the larceny by dying with all the proper amount of sentimentality and self-consciousness worthy of the son of Napoleon. He calls for the cradle presented to the King of Rome by Paris, and begins to rock it; and everyone weeps when he pathetically says that it is the Duke of Reichstadt who is rocking the King of Rome. Is it possible to conceive a more idiotic climax of a really striking play? Again, Marie Louise kneels to beg his forgiveness. Forgiveness of what? That she hastened to forget a brutal parvenu whom she never loved, and whom she was forced to marry to cover her father's humiliation? As an Austrian and a princess nothing could be more natural than her attitude to her exiled husband; and yet M. Rostand makes her son weep for the embraces and sympathy of Josephine, and heap curses on his mother's head because she could forget that she had been the wife of a hero. But Bonaparte was no hero for Marie Therese. He was the hard conqueror of her people, the price of whose conquest she was. It would have been more subtle, if less French, to have presented us with a Duke of Reichstadt with a complex mingling of sympathies on the Austrian side along with those of his father's race. Is it possible to believe that there was nothing of the archdukes in Marie Louise's son, the Emperor Franz' grandson, and that only the blood of the Corsican soldier prevailed?

One more criticism, and all the rest is praise. The evocation of the battle of Wagram is an ingenious and original scene, but the Prince is too hysterical, his monologue is spoiled by being made too long and "stringy," and his emotion, as is inevitably the case when Sarah's nerves are strained, is too violent and boisterous. The most effective and touching incident of the act is the death of the brave and sympathetic Flambeau, one of the Old Guard, excellently acted by M. Guitry, who dies on the field of Wagram believing himself back on the great day of battle. The Prince, holding him in his arms, faus the fires of delirium. "What is the Archduke doing?" he shouts. The Prince, with a splendid vigour and verve, describes the movement of the Archduke. "Ho has dished himself," shouts the dying soldier in the slang of the boulevards. "And what is the Emperor doing?" The Emperor makes a gesture and says—"Victory," shouts the Grenadier, and falls back dead. The Prince's monologue which follows is in parts singularly impressive, and the wave-like wail of the souls that haunt the field of Wagram is of a marvellous and poetic originality upon the stage. It is reverie that takes on corporeal shape when the voices of a sickly and imaginative boy's soul roar round him and fill him with the fatal significance of the past. May it not be, he asks himself with anguish, that he was destined as the expiatory victim of his father's glory? More concision and restraint would make this monologue worthy to take its place beside the great monologues of drama.

In the scene with the Emperor Franz, the Duke of Reichstadt is at first irresistibly charming, and, in his explosion of rage afterwards, superbly convincing. All the effects of this act are thrillingly dramatic—the apostrophe, full of concentrated hate, that Metternich addresses to Napoleon's hat; the scene with the Grenadier in his French uniform, who terrifies the Chancellor as a spectre of an abhorred past; the admirable climax of the mirror, when the unhappy and doubting Prince is confronted with his weak Spanish-Austrian countenance, in which lies no hint of paternal force and genius. "L'Aiglon" should end with the arrest of the Duke of Reichstadt on the field of Wagram. For all that precedes it, from the bright and effective opening, is a triumph of dramatic art. The play is full of lines that will be remembered, even after its vogue will have passed. Who will forget the Prince's scornful dissertation on the "but," the fatal limit of his freedom? or Flambeau's admirable description of the Old Guard's undying sources of enthusiasm? or the laconic bitterness and cynicism of the Prince's reply when asked what he wanted more than the space of the park of Schoenbrunn to ride in—"Europe"? One understands why "The Eaglet" should be something more than a new play for Paris—a sensation.

H. L.

II.—Which—the King of Rome, or Master Lambton?

It is naturally on the psychological side of the Duke of Reichstadt's character that M. Rostand has fixed his attention. The wonder is that the theme, with all its possibilities, has been left for so late a dramatist to seize. And the wonder grows when we learn the precise source of M. Rostand's inspiration, as communicated by himself to an interviewer representing the Westminster Gazette. We will quote his statement in full before making any comment:

The idea of placing on the stage the Duke of Reichstadt, or the "Son of the Man," as he was called (said the dramatist), was suggested to me by an aqua-forte reproduction of a picture by Sir Thomas Lawrence, representing the young Prince, at the age of twelve or fourteen, draped in the folds of a long mantle, and standing in a rocky and mountainous landscape. When still a child the portrait had been placed in my bedroom at Marseilles, and appealed to my youthful imagination by the expression of infinite melancholy and dreaminess which the English artist had imparted to it. In a like manner the reading of the marvellous adventures of Cyrano de Bergerac during my school days prompted me later on to depict on the stage the career of the Gascon hero.

The work of Sir Thomas Lawrence I allude to (continued M. Rostand) must not be confused with another portrait of the Duke of Reichstadt, painted by him at Vienna in 1818. My aqua-forte, which I have, unfortunately, lost since, was a reproduction of a full-length portrait, painted in 1827, and which, I understand, is now the property of the Marchioness of Lavalette, in London.

There is surely a strange irony in the fact that M. Rostand's interest in the son of Napoleon the First was awakened by an English artist's portrait. The head of that son, here represented, is from an engraved copy of the drawing of the Duke of Reichstadt made by Sir

THE KING OF ROME.

Drawn at Vienna by Sir Thomas Lawrence, P.R.A.

Thomas Lawrence at Vienna, about 1825. Our reproduction shows the upper portion of the "long mantle" mentioned by M. Rostand. But this mantle is really the only point in which M. Rostand's careful description agrees with Lawrence's drawing. For in the drawing there is no background of mountains, nor is the expression of the face one of "infinite melancholy or dreaminess." Moreover, no such portrait as M. Rostand describes is catalogued by Lord Ronald Gower in his exhaustive list of Sir Thomas Lawrence's works, nor does the Print Room of the British Museum help us to an identification. M. Rostand's belief that the original of his aqua-forte is in the possession of the Marchioness of Lavalette, in London, seems founded on another misconception. We believe there is no Marchioness of Lavalette now resident in London, though there was a Comtesse de Lavalette many years ago. Moreover, it is incredible that a painted portrait by Sir Thomas Lawrence of the second Napoleon should have escaped notice. Baffled by these difficulties, the present writer sought the help of Mr. Algernon Graves, of Pall Mall, who assisted in compiling Lord Ronald Gower's catalogue, issued with superb illustrations by the Goupil Company. Mr. Graves felt positive that no such portrait as M. Rostand describes is in existence. He also made a suggestion which is startling and whimsical, but which it is difficult to reject entirely. It was that M. Rostand had either been looking all the time at Sir Thomas Lawrence's well-known portrait of Master Lambton, or had hopelessly mixed up his impressions of two pictures—the Master Lambton and the simple drawing of the Duke of Reichstadt, from which our reproduction is taken. In the former portrait young Lambton is represented in the midst of a "rocky and mountainous landscape," and his expression can be accurately described as "one of infinite melancholy and dreaminess." It would be singular if M. Rostand had been inspired to dramatise the life of Napoleon's son by his vague recollection of the portrait of a young scion of English nobility. Yet the suggestion is not unnatural under the circumstances.

The idea of dramatising the short life of Napoleon's son, known variously as Napoleon II., King of Rome, and Duke of Reichstadt, was an inspiration. Many people have almost forgotten that this unhappy young Prince ever existed. They have rarely, if ever, realised that, while Napoleon was meditating on his shattered life on St. Helena, his heir, for whose birth he had moved heaven and earth, was living a life of tame splendour in the Court of Vienna—oppressed by the shadow of his father. The prince's entry into the world had been so difficult that Napoleon, to hearten the unnerved doctors, told them to treat his Queen "as you would a bourgeoisie in the Rue St. Denis"; and when at last they asked him which life they should spare, he answered, with a justice which in his case had more than usual significance: "The mother's, it is her right." In the end all went well. The child uttered a feeble cry, and Napoleon, entering the ante-chamber in which the high functionaries were assembled, announced the event in these words: "It is a King of Rome."

The child was never King of Rome, except in a sense as hollow and titular as he was Emperor of France. Delightful stories are told of Napoleon's affection for his boy, how he would upset his toys in sport, or give him claret by dipping his finger in a wine-glass, and allowing him to lick it. When the crash came the young Prince was taken by his mother to Vienna, where he lived out his short perplexed life of twenty-one years.

---

Things Seen.

The Man with Mercy.

HE literally carried it about with him. It was a newspaper: what, I suppose, would be called a new journalistic venture. There are many; but this peculiarly was his. He must, I fancy, have been proprietor, editor, staff, and everything else. Through the autumn and winter, in all sorts of weather, I have seen him on the Parade holding Mercy by the hand. I thought at first it was his favourite paper, and that, in the preoccupied way of enthusiasts, he had forgotten to put it in his pocket. Then I began to notice that he always held it precisely in the same way, with proud diffidence at arm's length: always so that the title was left conspicuous. He was a serious man; there was a kind of forlorn dignity about him. When he chanced to be gazing dreamily across the sea (and he was invariably doing this when the sea was calm) I would peer at the folded sheet: "Mercy, a Journal for—" That was as much as he would give away for nothing. He walked more resolutely on stormy days, in the manner of one making for a definite goal. I inquired at several newsagents', but no one seemed to have heard of Mercy. Then I began to feel shy as he approached me with his perpetual signal; the pathos of it grew upon me, and in nervous moments I would cross the road or bolt down to the lower esplanade to avoid him. Yet he seemed an exceeding gentle man. Once, however, I saw a flash of indignation in his eyes. This was when a florid parson, strutting patronage of the English Channel, in company with a brilliant young woman, smiled ironically and said something to her.

He is still keeping it up. I saw him again to-day. It was bitterly cold, and he had a benumbed look and walked with an unaccustomed weariness, as though the east wind had lowered his circulation and he was in despair of getting it up again. His hand was blue, and his nose was blue, and poor Mercy looked rather blue too. There were few passers-by, and none to care. The fashionable world, cosy in furs, rolled to and fro in its carriages. The sea had a great hungry roar.

Shadows.

A RAMSHACKLE conveyance awaited my arrival at the way-side station. The steed was a feeble-looking animal, the driver decidedly bucolic, and I prepared for a tedious and uninteresting drive with as much resignation as I could muster.

We rumbled off through the sleepy little Devonshire village, and out into the lanes beyond, at a pace that somewhat belied the mild incapacity of the grey mare's appearance.

I tried to draw my companion into conversation, but gave up the attempt, for I could elicit no more response than a laconic "Ees fay" or "I worn zo" to my most brilliant efforts.

It was a long drive, and a faint white mist lay close about the meadows, rising to the upland, and shrouding banks and hedgerows alike, until they stood shadowy, wraith-like phantoms on our way.

As I watched the change creeping swiftly over the landscape, a weird fancy stole into my brain, a thought of all the human life that through the ages had clustered about this country side. Long lines, generation after generation, stretching far back into history, of sturdy peasants and herdsmen, who had dug and planted, sown and reaped, and then had sunk themselves back to the earth they had known so well.

They seemed to throng the meadows, curious primitive folk, long since forgotten, voiceless multitudes of the past, dull bovine creatures, dumb almost as the beasts they had tended, they pressed about me in the eerie dusk. I had never given them a thought before, but now their ghostly hands constrained me; and a realisation of their hard lives, of their unilluminated toil, of the oblivion that had wiped away even their names, rushed over me, compelling me to understand.

As I stepped from the chill and darkness into the warmth and welcome within, and felt the clasp of friendly hands upon my own, there still lingered in my mind the thought of those cottage hearthstones cold for centuries, and simple homesteads long since bare and open to the winds of heaven.

---

A Fine Elegy.

IN reviewing Mr. J. C. Bailey's collection of English Elegies a little while ago, we quoted two stanzas from Mr. J. W. Mackail's beautiful poem, "On the Death of Arnold Toynbee." Since then we have been asked by several correspondents to print this poem, which we give below. It is taken from Love's Looking-Glass, published for Mr. J. W. Mackail, Mr. H. C. Beeching, and Mr. J. B. B. Nichols by Messrs. Percival & Co. in 1891.

ON THE DEATH OF ARNOLD TOYNBEE.

(March 10, 1883.)

Good-bye; no tears nor cries
Are fitting here, and long lament were vain.
Only the last low words be softly said,
And the last greeting given above the dead;
For soul more pure and beautiful our eyes
Never shall see again.

Alas! what help is it,
What consolation in this heavy chance,
That to the blameless life so soon laid low
This was the end appointed long ago,
This the allotted space, the measure fit
Of endless ordinance?

Thus were the ancient days
Made like our own monotonous with grief;
From unassuaged lips even thus hath flown
Perpetually the immemorial moan
Of those that weeping went on desolate ways,
Nor found in tears relief.

For faces yet grow pale,
Tears rise at fortune, and true hearts take fire
In all who hear, with quickening pulse's stroke,
That cry that from the infinite people broke,
When third among them Helen led the wail
At Hector's funeral pyre.

And by the Latin beach
At rise of dawn such piteous tears were shed,
When Troy and Arcady in long array
Followed the princely body on its way,
And Lord Aeneas spoke the last sad speech
Above young Pallas dead.

Even in this English clime
The same sweet cry no circling seas can drown,
In melancholy cadence rose to swell
Some dirge of Lycidas or Astrophel
When lovely souls and pure before their time
Into the dusk went down.

These Earth, the bounteous nurse,
Hath long ago lapped in deep peace divine.
Lips that made musical their old-world woe
Themselves have gone to silence long ago,
And left a weaker voice and wearier verse,
O royal soul, for thine.

Beyond our life how far
Soars his new life through radiant orb and zone,
While we in impotency of the night
Walk dumbly, and the path is hard, and light
Fails, and for sun and moon the single star
Honour is left alone.

The star that knows no set,
But circles ever with a fixed desire,
Watching Orion's armour all of gold;
Watching and wearying not, till pale and cold
Dawn breaks, and the first shafts of morning fret
The east with lines of fire.

But on the broad low plain
When night is clear and windy, with hard frost,
Such as had once the morning in their eyes,
Watching and wearying, gaze upon the skies,
And cannot see that star for their great pain
Because the sun is lost.

Alas! how all our love
Is scant at best to fill so ample room!
Image and influence fall too fast away
And fading memory cries at dusk of day
*Deem'st thou the dust reck ought at all thereof,
The ghost within the tomb?*

For even o'er lives like his
The slumberous river washes soft and slow;
The lapping water rises wearily,
Numbing the nerve and will to sleep; and we
Before the goal and crown of mysteries
Fall back, and dare not know.

Only at times we know,
In gyves convolved and luminous orbits whirled
The soul beyond her knowing seems to sweep
Out of the deep, fire-winged, into the deep;
As two, who loved each other here below
Better than all the world,

Yet ever held apart,
And never knew their own heart's deepest things,
After long lapse of periods, wandering far
Beyond the pathways of the furthest star,
Into communicable space might dart
With tremor of thunderous wings;

Across the void might call
Each unto each past worlds that raced and ran,
And flash through galaxies, and clasp and kiss
In some slant chasm and infinite abyss
Far in the faint sidereal interval
Between the Lyte and Swan.

Correspondence.

Mr. Barrie's "Better Dead."

SIR,—Our attention has been called to your paragraph in your issue of 3rd inst. relating to Mr. J. M. Barrie's Better Dead. The book has never been out of print, and several editions have from time to time been printed. The book, moreover, was included, with our consent, in the author's "Collected Works," published in America by Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons and here by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—We are, &c.,

SWAN SONNENSCHIEIN & CO., LTD.

The Italian Affirmative.

SIR,—Mr. Le Queux is scarcely correct in his somewhat sweeping assertion upon the Italian affirmative. The Italian language is sometimes spoken of as "la lingua del sì," and "sì" is the grammatical expression employed in polite conversation. No doubt, colloquially, "gia" is used very much to express emphatic assent; but English writers scarcely display ignorance in adopting "sì," considering that it is employed almost exclusively in d'Annunzio's romances, "gia" being seldom made use of by the writer.—I am, &c., F. H. PICTON.

Applegarth, Maidencombe: March 19, 1900.

New Books Received.

[These notes on some of the New Books of the week are preliminary to Reviews that may follow.]

A HISTORY OF THE
ENGLISH CHURCH, 1640-1660. BY WILLIAM A. SHAW.

Mr. Shaw tackles the very difficult period in the history of the Church of England created by the Civil War, when there took place the most complete and drastic revolution which that Church has ever undergone; when, in short, its whole structure was temporarily demolished. Incidentally, in his preface Mr. Shaw denounces the system under which parish registers are left in the keeping of incumbents, holding that all such precious muniments earlier than the present reign should be instantly removed to a specially organised department of the British Museum. (Longmans. 2 vols. 36s.)

A LIST OF ENGLISH PLAYS
WRITTEN BEFORE 1643
AND PRINTED BEFORE 1700. BY WALTER WILSON GREG.

A bibliographical work with an excellent aim. For the convenience of students the British Museum press-marks are appended to all the editions preserved in the national library. The book has been printed for the Bibliographical Society. (Blades, East & Blades.)

OUTLINES OF THE HISTORY OF RELIGION.
BY JOHN K. INGRAM.

The "outlines" are those recognised by Comte, and the author's aim is to give the quintessence of Comte's system of religion in a form which will allure his readers to go direct to Comte's bulkier works. (Black. 3s. 6d.)

PINK AND SCARLET.
BY BREVET LIEUT.-COLONEL
E. A. H. ALDERSON.

The device on the red cover of this handsome book consists of a sword and riding-whip crossed, with an inner cross formed by an army revolver and a hunting horn. As the tools of war and hunting are blent in the device, so the author's aim is to show how a young soldier can make his hunting "the very best of instruction in his profession." Lieut.-Col. Alderson mentions that he has had to conclude his book hurriedly owing to his receipt of orders to proceed on active service. (Heinemann.)

In addition to the foregoing, we have received :

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

- Bourdillon (Rev. Francis), Handfuls Plucked and Rubbed in Walking Through the Field of the Word of God ..... (Wells Gardner) 2/6
 Ivorach (James), Theism in the Light of Present Science and Philosophy ..... (Hodder & Stoughton)
 Costelloe (B. F. C.), The Gospel Story ..... (Sands & Co.)

POETRY, CRITICISM, AND BELLES LETTRES.

- Sargeant (W. D.), The Banks of Nens: Songs and Sonnets ..... (Bozest Vicarage) 1/1
 Robinson (Lilian), Rosemary Songs and Sonnets (Horace Marshall & Son)
 Mackay (John), War Songs and Songs and Ballads of Martial Life (Scott)
 How (Frederick Douglas), Lighter Moments from the Notebook of Bishop
 Walsham How ..... (Isbister) 2/6
 Whitaker (Joseph), All in a Life: Poems ..... (Spring, St. Anne's-on-Sea)
 Fokett (Edward), Hugh Trebarwith: a Cornish Romance ..... (Unwin) net 2/6

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

- Iggulden (Capt. H. A.), The 2nd Battalion Derbyshire Regiment in the Sikkim Expedition of 1893 ..... (Swan Sonnenschein) net 1/6
 Cutts (Rev. Edward L.), A Handy Book of the Church of England ..... (S.P.C.K.)
 Brinton (Selwyn), Correggio ..... (Bell & Sons) net 5/0
 Gardiner (Samuel Rawson), Letters and Papers Relating to the First Dutch War, 1652-1654. Vol. II. ..... (Navy Records Society)
 Shaw (William A.), A History of the Church of England During the Civil Wars and under the Commonwealth, 1640-1660. 2 vols. ..... (Longmans)
 Christy (Miller), The Silver Map of the World: A Contemporary Medalion Commemorative of Drake's Great Voyage (1577-80) ..... (Stevens)
 Jenks (Edward), A History of Politics ..... (Dent) net 1/0
 Eley (C. King), The Cathedral Church of Carlisle ..... (Bell & Sons) 1/6

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- Burnet (John), The Ethics of Aristotle ..... (Methuen)
 Warner (Francis), The Nervous System of the Child ..... (Macmillan) net 4/6
 Jones (Harry C.), The Theory of Electrolytic Dissociation, and Some of its Applications ..... (Macmillan) net 7/0

EDUCATIONAL.

- Rippmann (Walter), Der Scheik von Alesandria und Seine Sklaven von Wilhelm Hauff ..... (Camb. Univ. Press) 2/6
 Johnson (R. Brimley), .....
 Ryland (Frederick), Pope's Essay on Criticism ..... (Blackie) 1/6
 Lamb (W. Cecil), Entropius ..... (Blackie) 1/6
 Lysias, Eratothenes and Agoratus ..... (Clive) 2/6
 Chrystal (G.), Algebra: An Elementary Text Book. Part II. Second Edition ..... (Black) 12/6
 Cookson (George), English Poetry for Schools. Book II.: Secondary ..... (Macmillan) 3/6
 Harris (Charles), Goethe's Poems ..... (Isbister) 3/6

MISCELLANEOUS.

- C. H. B., Thoughts for Nurses: Their Life and Work, Difficulties and Encouragements ..... (S.P.C.K.)
 Peacock (Wadham), The Story of the Inter-University Boat Race ..... (Grant Richards) 2/0
 Brücke (Ernst), The Human Figure: Its Beauties and Defects ..... (Gravel & Co.)
 Hayes (M. H.), Among Horses in South Africa ..... (Everett) 5/0

* * New Novels are acknowledged elsewhere.

Our Weekly Prize Competitions.

Result of No. 26 (New Series).

THE terms of this competition were set in the following way:—

A correspondent writes:—"This morning, as I was nearing the end of a journey in an omnibus, two elderly ladies got in, and at once continued a conversation which seemed to have been engaging them for some time. One said: 'Well, of course, it's her own affair; but what Peter's going to do I can't think. It isn't as if there was only Henry and the spaniel; there's Margaret as well. And John is expected home at any minute. Poor John!' 'Yes, indeed,' said the other, 'Poor John! and so fond of it all, too!' In the pause which followed, in which both ladies shook their heads solemnly, I had to alight. Might there not be the kernel of one of your interesting prize competitions in this fragment?" We take our correspondent's hint, and offer a prize of a guinea to what seems to us the most reasonable answers to the questions which follow:

- Who was "she," and what was her own affair?
- Who was Peter, and why should her conduct put him out?
- Who was Henry?
- Who was Margaret?
- Who was John, why should he be called "poor John," and what was it of which he was so fond?

Answers should be as brief as possible.

Many ingenious theories have reached us, and we have decided to divide the prize between two competitors: Miss M. A. Woods, 17, Gower-street, W.C., who sends this:

"She" is a well-to-do widow, who is about to contract what her friends consider an imprudent second marriage, taking with her her little boy, pet dog, and younger sister.

"Peter" is the widow's impecunious barrister brother, in whose house she has hitherto lived, and whose resources will be seriously diminished by the loss of the liberal boarding-fees she has paid for herself and her establishment.

"Henry" is the widow's little boy.

"Margery" is the younger sister, the sunshine of the home and darling of her brothers, but pecuniarily dependent on her sister, and obliged to fall in with her plans.

"John" is another brother, who is returning invalided from South Africa, and is pronounced "poor" both on this account and because of the disappointment awaiting him in the dispersion of a household to the members of which—especially to his little nephew and to Margery—he is greatly attached.

and Miss Boddington, 21, St. Petersburg-place, London, W., who sends this:

"She" was a lady with some small amount of money of her own, who looked after her brother "Peter's" children and superintended the management of his house, besides contributing something towards the maintenance of himself and family. Now she was going to be married, and Peter, a widower, holding a position as clerk, would not have sufficient means alone to keep up his home. "Henry" was his son, and was not yet old enough to earn anything. He had a spaniel of which he was very fond. "Margaret" was Peter's invalid daughter. "John" was an admirer of Peter's sister, but she did not return his affection. He was in the army and a connexion of Peter and his sister, and when in England lived with them. He had now been invalided home, and would return to find the inmates of the household, of which he was so fond, about to separate.

Replies received also from: K. E. B., Birmingham; C. L. E., Matlock; B. C. H., London; G. N., Bristol; B. G., Barnsley; A. B., Isleworth; Miss C., Ipswich; B. C., Ealing; C. B. F., Bagshot; F. A. A., Windermere; E. M. B. U., London; E. A., Ilfracombe; R. K. R., Glasgow; "Lingardia," Colwich; L. K., Highgate; E. S. H., Idle; H. G. H., Whitby; E. M. L., London; K. G. W., Slough; E. M. S., London; M. B. Matlock; C. L. P., Ross; G. M., Bedford; H. L. B., Groningen; L. L., Ramsgate; N. A., Beckenham; J. E. Y., London; A. S. H., Dalkeith; Mrs. M., Montrose; H. S. U., Chesham; A. W., London; C. C., London; E. M. L., Burton; B. R., London; S. E. M., Edinburgh; H. W., Farnborough; S. T., Abingdon; M. W., Hull; D. A. L., London; P. K., London; Mrs. C., London; F. T., London; E. H., London.

Competition No. 27 (New Series).

Book-teas have now been in fashion in the suburbs for some time, but society seems only just to be awakening to their fascinating possibilities. In the book-tea each guest has to come provided with a symbolic book title. Thus if the book chosen is As a Man Sows, a button loosely hanging by one or two threads will be displayed; if Hazell's Annual, there will be a bunch of catkins or nuts in the button hole. Another good instance is referred to on our first page—an effort of imagination which Mr. Arthur Symonds ought to note for the second edition of his work on Symbolism. We offer this week a prize of a guinea for the best book-tea title. Competitors may send as many examples as they like, but in judging we shall prefer those that are new to us to those that are familiar.

RULES.

Answers, addressed "Literary Competition, THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Tuesday, March 27. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found in the first column of p. 260, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. We wish to impress on competitors that the task of examining replies is much facilitated when one side only of the paper is written upon. It is also important that names and addresses should always be given. We cannot consider anonymous answers.

OUR SPECIAL PRIZE COMPETITIONS.

(For particulars see inside page of cover.)

Received during the week: Salitella, Rumpelstiltskin, John More, Hilda Marow, Hearthstone, Dum Spiro Spero, Shrewberian, Sudo, Hamerton Yorke, W. B. W., Rhymer, Ego, Glendower, Soho, Fern Seed, Miriam Forester, "The Boy Guessed Right," Blackwater, Fác-a-ballah, Michael Jones, Geo. Cusack, Rab, Kaye, Zodiac, G. J., T. C., Chytton, Chance, Scot, Moidore, Opal, Ostarg, Ex-Coloniis, Nuneaton, Ladore, Urbana, Baddesley, Semibreve, Eight Forty-One, Mig, Lois, Phintias, Manprat, Spero, Una, Veronica Lancaster, Shehallion, Thurlow, Sextus, Natura, H. T. S. S. A., Ethelon, Silencieux, Lybian, M. Leigh, M. C. B., Iota, Rusticus, Celia May, Kenna, Imperia, Claymore, Old Pard, Jarno, Scriptor, Canadienne, Iris, Citizen D., Ualo, Teotric, Speranza, Criterion.

CATALOGUES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick St.
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed CATALOGUE sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

WANTED. INQUIRIES for ESTIMATES
for PRINTING PERIODICALS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c., by a Firm of Printers in the Province (with direct communication with London). Equipped with Linos and plans for producing high-class work.—Address, "Publications," John Haddon & Co., Salisbury Square, E.C.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.
—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class
Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet
Street, E.C., have especially built Rotary and other fast Machines
for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built
Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page
Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence
New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

High-Class Bookbinding.

Valuable Books and MS. Bound and Repaired with great care. Miscellaneous Books bound in any style or pattern.

JOHN FAZAKERLEY,
40, Paradise Street, LIVERPOOL

PUBLISHERS and Editors decline MSS.,
but do not state the reason. By putting right what is wrong, well-known Author ensure the ultimate success of nearly every MS. passing through his hands. Fees very moderate.
Particulars free.—A., 11, Delamere Road, Raynes Park, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately
done. 10d. per 1,000 words. Samples and references.
Multi-Copies.—Address, Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TYPE-WRITING; TYPE-WRITING;
TYPE-WRITING.—NOVELS, PLAYS, ESSAYS carefully TYPED. Difficult MSS. receive special attention.
References to Authors.—Write for terms to E. GRAHAM, 23,
Cockspur Street, Pall Mall, London.

TO AUTHORS.—MSS., SCIENTIFIC and
LEGAL DOCUMENTS, PLAYS, &c., promptly TYPE-
WRITTEN. New first-class Machinery. Moderate terms.—
L. MILLS, 31, Cauldwell Street, Bedford.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman,
experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by
letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 151, Strand, London, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Benthampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on
DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums
on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

"THE ACADEMY"
LITERARY COMPETITIONS.
New Series.—No. 27.

All readers attempting this week's
Competition (described fully on page
259) must cut out this Coupon
and enclose it with their reply.

THE PRINCESS HELENA COLLEGE

EALING, W.
Established 1820. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1884.
President—H. R. H. THE PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.
High-class education for the DAUGHTERS of GENTLE-
MEN, as Resident or Day Pupils. Preparation for University and Art Examinations. Spacious grounds. Supervision in games.
Training department for kindergarten students in preparation for Froebel Union Examination for Teachers.
There is a Home in connection with the College for K.G.
Students and for a few children under ten years of age.
MARGARET WILLIAMSON, Lady Principal.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING

COLLEGE, Cooper's Hill, Staines.
The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for Employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40
Students will be admitted in September, 1900. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition—Twelve Appointments
as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphs Department, and One in the Accountants' Branch
P.W.D.—For particulars apply to SECRETARY, at College.

MASON UNIVERSITY COLLEGE,

BIRMINGHAM.
ASSISTANT LECTURESHIP IN THE FRENCH
LANGUAGE.
The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the above appointment. Stipend £125 per annum.
Candidates must be Graduates of a University, above the French Bachelier standard, and speak fluent English. A knowledge of Spanish will be a recommendation.
Applications, accompanied by Testimonials, should be sent to the undersigned not later than Saturday, the 31st inst. at.
The Candidate elected will be required to enter upon his duties on April 23rd, 1900.
Further particulars may be obtained from
GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

WIMBLEDON HIGH SCHOOL.—Mrs.
J. T. TRENCH receives GIRLS as BOARDERS at Lyndhurst, Woodside, Wimbledon. Reference permitted to Miss Hastings, Head Mistress, the Marquis and Marchioness
of Lansdowne, Bishop and Mrs. Barry, Col. and Mrs. Chenevix
Trench, and others.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY

(LIMITED).

ENLARGED AND CLASSIFIED CATALOGUE

(Over 500 pages, 8vo, bound in green cloth).

All the Principal Works in Circulation at
the Library

ARRANGED under SUBJECTS.

Forming a Comprehensive Guide to Notable
Publications in most Branches of Literature.

Books of Permanent Interest on POLITICAL and SOCIAL TOPICS, the ARMY, NAVY,
ARTS, SCIENCE, PHILOSOPHY, SPORT,
THEOLOGY, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, and
FICTION. Price 1s. 6d.

Also a FOREIGN CATALOGUE, containing BOOKS in FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN,
RUSSIAN, and SPANISH.

READY JANUARY, 1900.

Price 1s. 6d.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY,

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET;
241, Brompton Road; and
48, Queen Victoria Street, London.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO

"THE ACADEMY."

Consisting of Thirty-seven Portraits of Old and New Celebrities in Literature, may still be obtained, singly, or in complete sets for 3s. 6d., on application to the Office, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

A CHARMING GIFT BOOK!

6s., claret roan, gilt, Illustrated.

LONDON IN THE TIME OF THE DIAMOND JUBILEE

London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Llangollen: Darlington & Co.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S. Maps by BARTHOLOMEW.
Fcap. 8vo. ONE SHILLING EACH. Illustrated.

THE VALE of LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J.
PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING;
A. W. KINGLAKE, and Sir THEODORE MARTIN K.C.B.

BOURNEMOUTH and NEW FOREST.	THE CHANNEL ISLANDS.
THE NORTH WALES COAST.	THE ISLE OF WIGHT.
BRECON and its BEACONS.	THE WYE VALLEY.
ROSS, TINTERN, and CHEPSTOW.	THE SEVERN VALLEY.
BRISTOL, BATH, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.
BRIGHTON, EASTBOURNE, HASTINGS, and ST. LEONARDS.
LLANDUDNO, RHYL, BANGOR, BETTWSYCOED, and SNOWDON.
ABERYSTWYTH, BARMOUTH, MACHYNLETH, and ABERDOVEY.
BARMOUTH, DOLGELLY, HARLECH, ORICCIETH, and PWLLHELL.
MALVERN, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, GLOUCESTER, and CHELTENHAM.
LLANDRINDOD WELLS and the SPAS of MID-WALES.

1s.—THE HOTELS of the WORLD. A Handbook to the leading hotels throughout the world.

"What would not the intelligent tourist in Paris or Rome give for such a guide-book as this, which teaches so much that is outside the usual scope of such volumes!"—The Times.
"The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.

SECOND EDITION, ENLARGED, 6s.—60 Illustrations, 24 Maps and Plans.

LONDON AND ENVIRONS

By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.

With an additional Index of 4,500 References to all Streets and Places of Interest.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & CO.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Ltd., The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers

JOHN LANE'S LIST.

Volume IV. Now Ready.

THE ANGLO-SAXON REVIEW

A QUARTERLY MISCELLANY

EDITED BY

LADY RANDOLPH SPENCER CHURCHILL.

Small folio, bound in Leather. Price 21s. net.

CONTENTS.

On the Binding of this Volume ... ..	CYRIL DAVENPORT, F.S.A.
Humblebee ... ..	GEORGE GISSINO.
Angling Reminiscences in England and the Tropics ... ..	SUSAN, COUNTESS OF MALMENBURY.
Sigurd ... ..	MAURICE BARINO.
The Likeness of the Night ... ..	MRS. W. K. CLIFFORD.
On a Portrait of Edgar Allan Poe ... ..	FRANCIS HOWARD.
The Crimea and the Cape: Parallel and Contrast ... ..	MAJOR ARTHUR GRIFFITHS.
Macanlay and his Critice ... ..	HERBERT PAUL.
A Note on Ruskin ... ..	FREDERICK WEDMORE.
Some Letters and Recollections of Lord Beaconsfield and Others ... ..	LADY DOROTHY NEVILL.
Between the Red Moon and the Moor ... ..	DORA GREENWELL MCCHESENEY.
A Famous French Château ... ..	V. HUSSET-WALSH.
The Latter-Day Fighting Animal ... ..	POULTNEY BIGELOW.
Pretoria ... ..	C. W. BOYD.
A Century of Women ... ..	LADY JEUNE.
Caterina Cornaro ... ..	ALEYREA WIEL.
What Can be Done for the Drama? ... ..	WILLIAM ARCHER.
The Master of the Game ... ..	W. A. BAILLIE GROHMAN.
Impressions and Opinions ... ..
Notes on the Portraits ... ..	LIONEL CUST, F.S.A.

With 7 Illustrations in Photogravure.

NEW NOVELS.

THE TRIALS of the BANTOCKS. By G. S. Street, Author of "The Autobiography of a Boy," &c. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.
[Just out.]

A SISTER to EVANGELINE. By Charles G. D.
ROBERTS, Author of "The Forge in the Forest," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.
[Just out.]

THE ACROBAT. By John D. Barry. Crown 8vo, 6s.
[Just out.]

ONE QUEEN TRIUMPHANT. By Frank Mathew,
Author of "Defender of the Faith," "Spanish Wine," &c. Crown
8vo, 6s.

THE WHITE DOVE. By W. J. Locke, Author of "Idols," "Derelicts," "Study in Shadows," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.
[Second Edition.]

THE JUDGMENT of HELEN. By Thomas Cobb,
Author of "Carpet Courtship," "Mr. Passingham," &c. Crown 8vo,
cloth, 6s.

THE REALIST. By Herbert Flowerdew, Author of "A Cellmate's Wife." Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE WORSHIPPER of the IMAGE. By Richard
LE GALLIENNE, Author of "Quest of the Golden Girl," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
[Just out.]

READY NEXT WEEK.

RUDYARD KIPLING: a Criticism. By Richard
LE GALLIENNE. With a Bibliography. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

JOHN LANE, Publisher, London and New York.

*The Best and Cheapest Dictionary.*THE CONCISE ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

BY

CHARLES ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D.,

Editor of the "Imperial Dictionary."

NEW EDITION, CONTAINING OVER 100,000 ENTRIES.

Fcap. 4to, 864 pages, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Also, in half-persian, 5s. 6d ; half-morocco, 7s. 6d.

ANNANDALE'S CONCISE DICTIONARY has, since its first publication, held a pre-eminent place among One-Volume English Dictionaries. It is now issued, in an extended form, at so low a price as to bring it within the reach of everybody.

The CONCISE DICTIONARY contains more printed matter than any Dictionary of similar price.

A computation shows that the matter in this Dictionary comprises 1,755,000 words, while that in a rival Dictionary is only 1,000,000 words.

The General Vocabulary is very ample. All important modern terms pertaining to Science, Technology, and the Arts are clearly and accurately explained.

The Definitions and Explanations are exceptionally full and detailed, giving so much information that this Dictionary may justly claim the character of a Concise Cyclopædia.

The Etymology shows results obtained by the most recent investigators, and the correct pronunciation of the words is given on an exceedingly simple system.

The Appendices comprise full Pronouncing Lists of—Greek, Latin, Scriptural, and other Ancient Names.
Modern Geographical Names.
Modern Biographical Names.

ALSO—

Key to noted Names in Fiction, Mythology, &c.
Alphabetical List of prominent English Writers, with Dates of Birth and Death.
Words, Phrases, and Noteworthy Sayings, from the Latin, Greek, and Modern Languages, met with in Current English.
Abbreviations and Contractions used in Writing and Printing.
Forms of Address in Ceremonious Communications with Persons of Title and Official Position.
Principal Moneys of the World, and their Equivalents in English Currency.

SOME OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"We can heartily recommend this neat and handy volume to all who want a copious and trustworthy English dictionary of reasonable dimensions."
Athenæum.

"Stands towards other dictionaries of the smaller character in the relation of the 'Imperial' to rival lexicons—in other words, it holds the 'premier' place."—Spectator.

"The Concise Dictionary stands first—and by a long interval—among all the one-volume English dictionaries."—Academy.

"In clearness of type, in size, shape, and arrangement, the volume leaves nothing to be desired. Till Dr. Murray's great work is completed, it is not likely to be superseded."—Journal of Education.

London: BLACKIE &amp; SON, LIMITED, 50, Old Bailey.

MESSRS.

WM. BLACKWOOD & SONS' LIST.

ANDREW LANG'S HISTORY OF SCOTLAND.
THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED, VOL. I.

A HISTORY of SCOTLAND from the ROMAN OCCUPATION.

By ANDREW LANG.

Demy 8vo, with Photogravure Frontispiece and 4 Maps, 15s. net.

NEW NOVEL BY SYDNEY C. GRIER.

